Art museum head quits

Neither university officials nor Howard Collinson give a reason for his abrupt resignation.

By Kurtis Hiatt
THE DAILY IOWAN

Director of the UI Museum of Art Howard Collinson has voluntarily resigned, a separation agreement obtained Tuesday shows.

Collinson, who served for more than eight years in the position, announced his resignation Monday, though he signed a separation agreement with university officials May 2. The separation agreement documents don't cite any reason for Collinson's seemingly abrupt departure, and UI spokesman Steve Parrott said officials cannot comment any further outside of that agreement, which was obtained under Iowa's Freedom of Information Act.

Parrott also said he couldn't comment about whether Collinson was asked to resign. According to the agreement, Collinson will receive four months' salary, benefits, retirement contributions, and accrued vacation, totaling $71,398.15. The interim director for the museum will be Pamela White, the director of UI Pentacrest Museums, interim Provost Lola Lopes said in a statement. Previously, White has been the UI Museum of Art's curator of painting and sculpture. She has a juris doctorate and a Ph.D. in art history. A man who answered the telephone at Collinson's Lee Street residence said, "I don't really have anything to say. Thanks so much."

Getting their goats

Goat farmers cite a rising number of immigrants in Midwest as a main factor in the growing demand for goat meat.

Beth Skogen/The Daily Iowan

Iowa City resident Myron Smalley stands by his meat goats Wednesday. Smalley is a member of the Iowa Meat Goat Association, which comprises approximately 120 farms.

By Brian Stewart
THE DAILY IOWAN

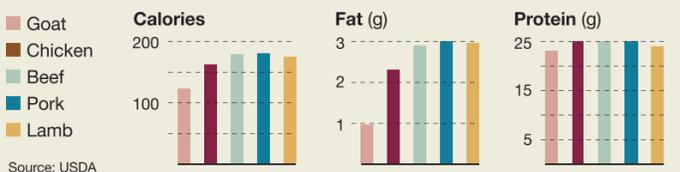

An increasing number of Iowans are turning their backs on the common beef patties or grilled chicken breasts in favor of a different protein — goat meat.

"[The goat-meat industry] has grown tremendously," Storm Lake goat farmer Brian Sievers said. "When I started, people thought I was a little strange, and now there are getting to be quite a few people who are starting to eat goat meat. If they try it, I know they'll like it."

Sievers, who has been farming his whole life, added goats to the picture around 10 years ago.

Know your cuts of meat

Iowa has recently seen a rise in the demand for goat meat, which is actually healthier than other popular meats. (portion size: 3 oz.)

Jacqueline Cieslak/The Daily Iowan

And he's not alone. Membership in the Iowa Meat Goat Association tops 120 farms, including Iowa City native Myron Smalley's family operation.

"Five years ago, I'd been hearing about meat goats, so we decided to diversify our operation and get into meat goats," he said.

Learn about 'real' Iran, speaker urges

Fatemeh Keshavarz says an increased exchange of information between United States and Iran would decrease negative sentiment.

By Patrick Futtner
THE DAILY IOWAN

In the eyes of Professor Fatemeh Keshavarz, we all must discover new ways in which to examine the diversity of other cultures, especially regarding her home country of Iran.

In a speech on Monday titled "The Iran the Smiles," she said we cannot rely on an interpretation given to us through the media. Rather, we need to question what is being discussed, what isn't discussed, and what should be discussed.

In this "sound-bite mentality" in which information is quickly thrown to the public using forceful language such as "danger," people are not able to experience, just absorb, she said.

But why "The Iran the Smiles?"

"Laughter and smiling are so human ... It is a very humanizing process," Keshavarz said. "When someone tells a joke, you cannot view them as fanatic."

Keshavarz was born and raised in Shiraz, Iran, and she is a published author and poet in both Persian and English along with being the head of the department of Asian and Near Eastern language and literature at Washington University in St. Louis. She was also invited to speak at the U.N. General Assembly in 2007.

Keshavarz said that Iran is not the country the United States publicizes it as being.

President Bush and many administration officials have said that Iran is a threat to world peace.

The high cost of OWI

UI law experts disagree on actual OWI costs but agree that long-lasting consequences are dire.

By Carla Keppler
THE DAILY IOWAN

For students, May signifies graduation and the beginning of a stress-free summer, but for communities across the nation, it also means a spike in drunk-driving tickets and sky-high financial and personal expenses for lawbreakers.

UI law student Lanny Ziemann's personal curiosity in the practical side of law and his internship at UI Student Legal Services led him to an investigation last month looking into the overall cost of an OWI — operating while intoxicated — arrest.

His researched delved into the criminal, administrative, and personal price tags attached to the fine.

Though many components play into the amount each individual must pay, Ziemann estimated financial costs between $2,500 and $5,000 but noted additional sanctions in terms of career and social life.

Ziemann estimated that, with all costs included, the average OWI would set someone from the Iowa City area back around $4,000-$5,000.

UISG OKs priority 3 $

UI Student Government brings year to a close.

By Carla Keppler
THE DAILY IOWAN

In its last meeting of the year on Tuesday night, the UI Student Government approved the budget for priority-three organizational funding. Following a brief delay because of failure to make quorum, the group allocated $9,031.25 to student groups — a number drastically lower than the typical $40,000 UISG deals out. Michael Currie, the head of the Student Assembly Budgeting and Allocating Committee, said the decrease was due to an incorrectly submitted request of $20,000 by Student Legal Services earlier this year. Funding decisions led three student groups to appeal to UISG Tuesday night. The most contentious of them — the Delta Sigma Pi business fraternity — requested additional funding for a professional development event for UI students. Representative Michael Crowley said the event has the entire university in mind with the ultimate goal “to increase marketability of students at the university.” Though Vice President Bridget Szeluga advised the senate to give the request consideration, Currie continually reminded senators of the tight budget.

“We only have $9,000, and I believe we deliberated fairly and allocated generously,” he said. “If we’re going to just spend it because we have it, we’re going to be in trouble all next year. I highly recommend against it.” But after back-and-forth debate from a divided senate, UISG voted in favor of providing the group with $150 of discretionary funding. After a medical-research group made a case against its zero-funded budget, the senate agreed to allot the organization $150 for printing purposes. Though this amount is quite a bit higher than is normally given to support printing costs, several senators gave the group credit for attending the meeting and better explaining its needs. The UI Swing Dance Club requested advance funding for an event in the fall which requires the early booking of nationally and internationally known dance instructors. An amendment to allocate $300 in discretionary funding received unanimous consent. The meeting brought UISG’s official work to a close, though the organization will continue to work over the summer. # Obama triumphs in N.C.; Indiana too close to call

By David Espo and Liz Sidoti
ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Barack Obama swept to victory in the North Carolina primary Tuesday night and declared he was closing in on the Democratic presidential nomination. Hillary Rodham Clinton clung to a narrow Indiana lead, struggling to halt her rival’s march into history. “Tonight, we stand fewer than 200 delegates away from securing the Democratic nomination for president of the United States,” Obama told a raucous rally in Raleigh, N.C. — and left no doubt he intended to claim the prize. Rodham Clinton and Obama both said the former first lady would win Indiana. Yet thousands of votes were yet to be counted, principally in Lake County, not far from Obama’s home city of Chicago. She told cheering supporters in Indianapolis, “Thanks to you, it’s full speed on to the White House,” signaling her determination to fight on in a campaign already waged across more than 15 months and nearly all 50 states. Returns from 99 percent of North Carolina precincts showed Obama winning 56 percent of the vote to 42 percent for Rodham Clinton, a triumph that mirrored his earlier wins in Southern states with large black populations. That made Indiana a virtual must-win Midwestern contest for the former first lady, who was hoping to counter Obama’s persistent delegate advantage with a strong run through the late primaries. Returns from 92 percent of the state’s precincts showed Rodham Clinton with 51 percent of the vote to 49 percent for Obama. Obama won at least 69 delegates and Rodham Clinton at least 63 in the two states combined, with 55 still to be awarded. Voters in both states fell along ethnic lines long since established in a marathon race between the nation’s strongest-ever black presidential candidate and its most formidable female challenger for the White House. The economy was the top issue by far in both states, according to interviews with voters as they left their polling places. Two weeks after a decisive defeat in Pennsylvania, Obama sounded increasingly like he was looking forward to the fall campaign. “This primary season may not be over, but when it is, we will have to remember who we are as Democrats ... because we all agree that at this defining moment in history — a moment when we’re facing two wars, an economy in turmoil, a planet in peril — we can’t afford to give John McCain the chance to serve out George Bush’s third term.” AP writers Tom Raum and Libby Quaid contributed to this report.

Eugenides to read

Jeffrey Eugenides, a Pulitzer-Prize-winning fiction writer, will read today at 8 p.m. in Van Allen Hall’s Lecture Room 2. The reading will be free and open to the public and hosted by the Iowa Writers’ Workshop. Eugenides won the 2002 Pulitzer for his novel Middlesex, which told the story of a hermaphroditic Greek-American immigrant. He initially gained renown for his 1993 novel The Virgin Suicides, a story set in the 1970s detailing the events around a mass suicide of sisters that was later adapted into a film directed by Sofia Coppola. In addition to his two most well-known novels, Eugenides has also penned a number of short stories, included in The New Yorker as well as a Best American Short Stories anthology. He has also worked as an editor, most recently for My Mistress’s Sparrow is Dead: Great Love Stories from Chekov to Munro. “I have a tragic-comic sensibility, I guess,” Eugenides said about his writing style in an interview with Powells.com. “I can’t imagine writing something devoid of humor, yet I don’t like slapstick that doesn’t admit tragedy. I blend them. It’s just central to the way I see things.” — by Anna Wiegenstein

2nd person arrested in drug bust

Iowa City police arrested a second person after a Feb. 10 narcotics investigation. Brittany Hobart, 22, address unknown, was charged Feb. 26 with keeping a drug house, possession of a marijuana with intent to deliver, and possession of cocaine. As of Tuesday, Hobart was being held at the $22,500 cash-only bond. According to reports, officers executed a search warrant at 220 Lafayette St. Apt. 206 on Feb. 10 during a narcotics investigation. During the search, officers allegedly located quantities of cocaine throughout the residence along with paraphernalia used to ingest the drug. The also reportedly found a large bag of marijuana, packaging materials, and a scale. Troy Patrick, 31, address unknown, was also charged after the investigation. He was charged with possession of marijuana with the intent to deliver, according to police. More investigation into the incident showed Hobart and Patrick allegedly brought the marijuana from out of the state to sell the drug in Iowa. Possession of a schedule I controlled substance with intent to deliver is a Class D felony, punishable by up to five years in prison and a fine of up to $7,500. Possession of a schedule II controlled substance is a serious misdemeanor, punishable by up to one year in jail and a fine of up to $1,875. Keeping a drug house is an aggravated misdemeanor, punishable by up to two years in prison and a fine of up to $6,250. — by Clara Hogan

Man charged with abuse

With help of the police dog Naton, a man was arrested for allegedly breaking into his ex-girlfriend’s apartment and assaulting her. Kiwane Williams, 33, address unknown, was charged Monday with first-degree burglary — a felony — and domestic assault causing injury. As of Tuesday, Williams was being held at the Johnson County jail on a $60,000 cash-only bond. According to police reports, officers were called to 656 Roberts

Road when a female subject reported that someone was going to kill her. Police allege that Williams tried to break into an apartment around 11 p.m. He had reportedly had a relationship with the woman who lived at the apartment and lived with her three months prior. When Williams was successful in breaking down the door, he allegedly started pummeling the woman. He reportedly struck her in the head above the right eye, causing a bump to form. He also allegedly kicked the victim as she was lying on the ground in the hallway of her apartment. When her 6-year-old daughter tried to intervene, Williams allegedly shoved the girl across the room. After Williams fled the scene, he was apprehended by Naton. The dog joined the department in 2005 and is handled by Iowa City police Officer Kevin Burg. First-degree burglary is a Class B felony, punishable by up to 25 years in prison. Domestic-abuse assault causing injury is a series misdemeanor, punishable by up to one year in jail and a fine of up to $1,875. — by Clara Hogan

OWIs quite costly

OWI COSTS

"It depends on each person, so we can't tell an exact number," he said. "There are too many different factors."

UI Student Legal Services attorney Greg Bal agreed, saying a $2,000 fee would be the minimum cost.

A major roadblock in the way of Ziemann's research was the dependency of costs upon alcohol or drug content in the wrongdoer's system, property damage or personal injury caused by the inebriated driving, past record, and eligibility for deferred judgment.

"Students in general don't understand very much about [OWIs]," Ziemann said. "I think they know it's serious and has serious effects, but I don't think they understand the $5,000 and stress associated with it."

The third-year law student specifically cited potential condemnation from future employers or marred chances of acceptance into graduate school that UI students face if charged.

Bal noted that "it's not just the financial consequences but [also] the consequences of having it on your permanent record. Essentially every job

'Students in general don't understand very much about [OWIs]. I think they know it's serious and has serious effects, but I don't think they understand the $5,000 and stress associated with it.'

— Lanny Ziemann, UI law student application now asks you for that stuff. An OWI really does have a stigma attached to it."

UI clinical law Professor John Whiston said Student Legal Service's penalty assessments were adequately researched and complied but are likely underestimated.

"Costs in court are pretty much defined," he said, "But there are a whole bunch of ifs, ands, and buts out there. There's a long list of things that are going to be specific to each person arrested for an OWI."

Whiston said a range of $5,000-$10,000 more accurately reflect total costs.

Under the Iowa Code, a first-offense OWI is considered a simple misdemeanor, for which a lawbreaker must pay a minimum fine of $1,250 and a $400 surcharge. Individuals may also be jailed from two days to one year and have their driver's license revoked for at least 180 days. A substance-abuse evaluation and restitution of damages or injury must also be remunerated.

Bal estimates that Student Legal Service sees approximately 40 clients with OWI charges each year, a number both he and Ziemann said has "unfortunately" remained constant over the course of their employment at the organization.

"[Costs are] just something useful for clients to know," Bal said. "It's one of the main questions they always ask when they come in and are deciding how to plea."

Ziemann's goal in research was to help clients and UI students understand the consequences of an OWI charge and to have people take action rather than come into the office after the fact and say 'I wish I never would have gotten behind the wheel.'

"I hope people understand [the aftermath] before it happens to them," Ziemann said. "In Iowa City you will get caught — it's just a matter of time, and there are long-term consequences that you don't want to deal with."

Collinson quits

RESIGNATION

Collinson had previously suggested selling the UI museum's Mural, by Jackson Pollock, but Parrott said Collinson was just "saying, 'Should we consider whether we should sell or not,'" because of its major value.

"The answer was no," Parrott said. "It's worth bringing up every now and then as a matter of due diligence."

Collinson had also been in the "investigative stage" in November 2007 of working on moving the UI Museum of Art to Burlington and Clinton Streets, despite the $400,000 construction going on at the current facility.

During that time, he had been looking ahead at least five years, because, he said, it would take that long to be able to move locations.

Lopes said in a statement that Collinson has brought innovative exhibitions to the museum, promoted public interest, and worked to remodel the facility.

"We thank him for his commitment and efforts on behalf of the UI Museum of Art during his tenure at the UI and wish him success in his future endeavors," Lopes said.

Collinson was integral in bringing to the museum Lure of the West: Treasures from the Smithsonian Art Museum, American Tableaux: Selections from Walker Art Center, and VOOM Portraits: Robert Wilson.

Collinson previously was the Mona Campbell Curator in the Department of Western Art and Culture at the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto.

Ex-UISG hopeful arrested again

A former UI Student Government presidential candidate was arrested May 3 for public intoxication, racking up four charges within three days.

Vernon Jackson, 21, 838D Mayflower, was charged with public intoxication and disorderly conduct — both simple misdemeanors.

On April 30, three days before the most recent charge, he was charged with fourth-degree theft and failing to appear in court on another charge.

In that incident, Jackson allegedly failed to return two hand-held bullhorns to Aero Rental, 227 Kirkwood Ave.

He reportedly rented the merchandise on Feb. 25 and was told to return them no later than March 3.

Police said the business made several phone calls and wrote a letter to Jackson. As of April 9, he still had allegedly failed to return the bullhorns, which were valued at $250.

Jackson ran for UI Student Government president on the Student Power slate this year but did not win.

Jackson reportedly failed to appear April 23 for a pretrial hearing on a charge of assault causing bodily injury. In a January incident, Jackson was allegedly involved in a fight at the 3rd Base Sports Bar, 111 E. College St.

Jackson has also been charged with disorderly conduct for fighting/violent behavior and with trespassing, both simple misdemeanors, stemming from a June 24, 2007, incident at Brothers Bar & Grill, 125 S Dubuque St.

Nickeled and pennied

Congress looks at steel pennies and nickels because of the high cost of copper, zinc, and nickel.

By Laurie Kellman
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Further evidence that times are tough:

It now costs more than a penny to make a penny. And the cost of a nickel is more than 7½ cents.

Surging prices for copper, zinc, and nickel have some in Congress trying to bring back the steel-made pennies of World War II and maybe using steel for nickels, as well.

Copper and nickel prices have tripled since 2003, and the price of zinc has quadrupled, said Rep. Luis Gutierrez, D-Ill., whose subcommittee oversees the U.S. Mint.

Keeping the coin content means "contributing to our national debt by almost as much as the coin is worth," Gutierrez said.

A penny, which consists of 97.5 percent zinc and 2.5 percent copper, cost 1.26 cents to make as of Tuesday. And a nickel — 75 percent copper and the rest nickel — cost 7.7 cents, based on current commodity prices, according to the Mint. That's down from the end of the 2007, when even higher metal prices drove the penny's cost to 1.67 cents, according to the Mint. The cost of making a nickel then was nearly a dime.

Gutierrez estimated that striking the two coins at costs well above their face value set the Treasury and taxpayers back around $100 million last year alone.

A lousy deal, lawmakers have concluded. On Tuesday, the House debated a bill that directs the Treasury secretary to "prescribe" — suggest — a new, more economical composition of the nickel and the penny. A vote was delayed because of Republican procedural moves and is expected later in the week.

Goat meat is hot

Beth Skogen/The Daily Iowan

A goat stands in a pen at Myron Smalley's farm on April 30.

FARMERS

Today Smalley's farm, Iowa City Boers, has increased its herd to 80 Boers, a type of goat known for its meat production. Only a few dairy goats, cattle, and sheep remain on the Smalley farm as his focus turns to the petite farm animals.

While the popularity of the animal's meat surges in Iowa, it's nothing new on a global scale.

More than 57 percent of the world's red meat consumed is goat, and two-thirds of the world's population feasts on the meat regularly, said goat association President Eric Finch.

But Finch, who runs a 150-head Boer farm near State Center, said the growing interest in Midwestern states is largely due to the relative unfamiliarity with the product and a growing number of immigrants.

Sievers said response in his hometown was loud among certain ethnicities.

"Storm Lake is a pretty diverse community, and when the Mexicans found out I had goats, I got rid of the ostriches and added more goats," he said.

Demand for goat meat is

'The demand is good; our distribution is bad.'

— Vern Thorp, New Sharon Boer farmer strong in the Latino and Muslim communities for religious and holiday reasons.

An Iowa State University survey of residents near Sioux City found that the Latino population desired goat for birthdays and Christian holidays like baptism. Demand among Muslims jumped near religious holidays such as Eid ul-Adha, an Islamic holiday that includes sacrificing animals to share with friends and relatives.

"We have a far larger ethnic population than ever before, and they all have different ideas of how they want it and what they want," said New Sharon Boer farmer Vern Thorp. "We've got to become a little more aware of how people want it. They want everything from a little 40-pounder to a big, stinking billy goat."

Apart from religious demand, goat is a healthy alternative to other common meats.

Goat has fewer calories and less fat than chicken, beef, pork, or lamb, according to the goat association.

Demand had surged since the goat association was founded in November 2003 until last year, Finch said.

"Right now, I would say things have probably leveled off," he said. "The producers in my area that I have visited with one-on-one that are backing out or cutting off is due to feed cost and the rapid increase in the price of corn."

But goat farmers agreed that a demand is there — they just need to keep working to meet it.

"The demand is good; our distribution is bad," Thorp said.

Finch noted the industry overall is unique from other agri-meat sectors.

"Since the late-90s, the market price has steadily climbed, so we don't really have those trend cycles that the pork industry or beef industry have," he said. "Unless there's some drastic immigration reform from Washington, I think there's always going to be a demand for goat meat in Iowa."

Prof: Learn about Iran

IRAN

Keshavarz said information is skewed because of the lack of exchange between the United States and Iran. Only around 300 U.S. citizens travel to Iran every year.

It is because of embargos on commerce and exchange between the United States and Iran that many of the reports in U.S. papers are from secondhand sources, said Ahmed Souaiaia, a UI assistant professor of religious studies.

The importance of Keshavarz's information, Souaiaia said, is that she has direct contact with the Iran and is able to give an accurate opinion.

As for the 300 who do travel to Iran, Keshavarz said, they all loved it. One man who traveled to the country was a big fan of Persian music, and when he returned to his hotel room, he found an unlabeled iPod with 400 songs on it.

Keshavarz said that among the things the U.S. public does not know about Iran is that it is an accepting country regarding religious practice and that it has a literacy rate of 82.5 percent.

The country is currently having its annual book fair, with 77 countries represented and 33 percent of the titles being translations from other languages.

Keshavarz said Iran is also quite progressive in the role women play in their society. Women have become increasingly involved in political and social movements throughout the country, she said.

There are still issues in Iran that need to be addressed, she said, such as electoral and gender laws, but that does not mean that the United States should fear the country.

Keshavarz said she wanted to see the United States open up more normal contact with Iran in order to spread a "realistic interpretation" of the country. She also said that institutions should encourage their students to study abroad in order to "emphasize cultural exchange and contact" not only between the United States and Iran, but the whole world.

"It is important to know about Iran because if we don't it can lead to a dangerous and hurtful situation for both countries," Keshavarz said. "We are all tied in the same garment of destiny."

Mason to teach leadership class

Julie Brayton/The Daily Iowan

UI President Sally Mason speaks to a group of students and staff from the UI Alumni Association at the President's Residence on Tuesday. Mason will teach a class for freshmen from the residence next fall.

Students will meet a variety of UI and state leaders throughout the president's leadership class.

By Ashton Shurson
THE DAILY IOWAN

'I'm certainly pretty excited to be in close contact with students in a learning center again.'

— Sally Mason, UI president

UI President Sally Mason is often seen as a faceless figure who runs the UI, but next year some freshmen will get a chance to be more up close and personal with the head of the university.

For the first time at the UI, Mason — with the help of the Office of Student Life and Admissions — will hold a president's leadership class for 30 incoming freshmen. The class will last for one semester next fall and will give students a chance to improve their leadership skills and meet UI, state, and community leaders.

"I'm certainly pretty excited to be in close contact with students in a learning center again," Mason said.

At the end of this week or beginning of next week, the Office of Student Life will send out postcards to roughly 800 to 1,000 incoming freshmen to invite them to apply for the class. These students have been selected with the help of the admissions office based on their GPAs and previous leadership roles.

The chosen students can fill out the application online that consists of a number of questions about their high-school leadership experience and an essay about their leadership philosophies.

Once roughly 30 students have been selected, the two credit-hour course will meet every Monday at the President's Residence. Classes will tend to vary by session and showcase different speakers and panels. Three panels will include different leaders from the UI, some local leaders, and state government officials. The class will also take a field trip to the Statehouse to meet state politicians.

"I've never had a teaching experience where I didn't learn as much as I gave as a teacher," Mason said, adding she will learn a lot from the guests as well.

With Mason, Tara Edberg, the assistant director for the leadership-development program in the Office of Student Life, Kelly Jo Karnes, the associate director of Student Life, and Bill Nelson, the director of the Student Life, will also help direct the class.

Edberg said she hopes students will use the class to build upon their leadership skills and to motivate them to pursue UI leadership positions.

"Our hope is that the students gain valuable leadership experience," she said.

Students will also get an opportunity to meet further with the panels outside of class and, at times, eat dinner at the President's Residence.

Mason said she thinks the class will show students what it will be like to be leaders at the UI for the next four years, adding that she thinks the next student-government president is probably going to be in this class. She said as long as she is at the UI, she will participate in the class every fall semester.

"Students will not only have a better understanding of the university and its moving parts but have a life experience that will go beyond the university," Mason said.

Prof tells Senate panel about mortgage ills

By Kelli Shaffner
THE DAILY IOWAN

Robin Atchley, a mother of four in Ballground, Ga., said her son offered to give up his lunch money so she and her husband could make the mortgage payments.

Needless to say they didn't let him. The family sold their house last year so they wouldn't be foreclosed.

UI law Associate Professor Katie Porter met with Atchley and the U.S. Senate subcommittee of administrative oversight and the courts to discuss current problems with mortgage loans and the servicers that provide them.

She was one of four witnesses to discuss what needs to be done about lack of conversation between borrowers and servicers.

The subcommittee invited Porter to the hearing because of her work on mortgage-servicing companies. She completed a study last fall in which she found unreasonable discrepancies between what mortgage servicers, or lenders collecting payment from homeowners, were charging borrowers and what the borrowers thought they had to pay.

"[We've had] too many horror stories, too many investigations, too many sanctions for us to simply take the word of company spokesmen that says 'mistakes were made,'" Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said during the hearing.

The majority of the conversation and questioning was focused on Steve Bailey, the senior managing director and chief executive officer of loan administration for Countrywide Financial Corp.

Although he was brought to the subcommittee because his company is allegedly representative of the loan market, Bailey says Countrywide has an error rate less than 1 percent — a contention that Schumer and Porter didn't buy. "Unfortunately, it seems these dubious practices are held by the entire loan-servicing industry," Schumer said.

Although Bailey's appearance was a good sign, Porter said, she remains worried about all the other companies and thinks congressional action is needed.

"Already, we've done something important just by holding the hearing," she said. "[We're] bringing public awareness."

Sheldon Kurtz, a UI law professor and mentor of Porter, said legislators need research such as Porter's.

"Without that work, legislators would be running around in the dark," he said.

Porter said she hopes there will be more enforcement on mortgage servicers, because they're a big part of the subprime mortgage crisis.

During the hearing, she encouraged the bankruptcy rules subcommittee to adopt the "best practices" — standardized recommendations for good business practices — as mandatory.

Debra Miller, a trustee with bankruptcy advisers Chapter 13, said during the hearing that no loan service that she works with uses the best practices.

"And those rules need to actually be enforced so we don't get excuses from servicers that they don't follow the rules because the rules are not routinely enforced," Porter said.

She joked that she might be the only law professor who wants more laws immediately.

Policing Lenders and Protecting Homeowners

Is Misconduct in Bankruptcy Fueling the Foreclosure Crisis?

• Who: UI law Associate Professor Katie Porter, Senior Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer of loan administration for Countrywide Financial Corp. Steve Bailey, Standing Chapter 13 Trustee Debra Miller, Postal Service worker Robin Atchley
• What: Discussing problems and solutions to outstanding fees added on to mortgage payments, and the servicers who distribute them
• Where: The U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight and the Courts

But Sen. Sheldon Whitehouse, D-R.I., was not joking when he asked Bailey in the hearing, "Why is this suddenly optional to comply with the rules?"

Financial incentives are what Porter said makes the loan servicers add fees — many of which are labeled as "other," or have no explanations. The best part of the hearing was when Schumer read off a statement made by the president of Countrywide, saying that when mortgage servicers give loans on bad mortgages, they rely on fees, she said.

But to completely get rid of the problem, the entire market for these loans would have to change, Porter said.

A holiday from gas taxes, reason

The weather is warming, finals will soon be over, and many students will hit the road and head home. Vacations will begin, and the interstates will be packed with drivers who aren't just angry about the endless construction but also about the sizable fortune needed to pay for all those stops at the gas pump.

Enter John McCain and Hillary Rodham Clinton, who hope to influence those pulling the lever on Election Day by sympathizing with those pulling the trigger at the pump. In a truly pathetic form of pandering, both have suggested a national gas-tax holiday from Memorial Day to Labor Day. The idea plays well with voters concerned about out-of-touch politicians who don't seem troubled with the day-to-day problems of average Americans. Unfortunately, the logic behind such a scheme is full of holes, and temporarily eliminating the gas tax would not demonstrate candidates being in touch with voters as much as it would show how badly out of touch they are with reality: This scheme is stunningly stupid.

A respite from the gas tax would have almost no effect on prices at the pump, because the busy summer driving season increases demand. Who, exactly, is going to cover the $9 billion gap created from halting the tax? Are we simply going to put it on our massive tab and lump it in with the rest of our national debt? Rodham Clinton has suggested making the petroleum industry pay the difference, a feat that could be more difficult than weaning ourselves off oil in the first place. Temporarily eliminating the tax would also encourage more driving, which doesn't help prices but also doesn't solve the bigger problem: We can't keep going like this. The big picture is being lost. More gas, cheaper or otherwise, is not the answer.

A policy is not viable simply because it is popular. Many a student-council election was won on the promise of extra recess or free soda. Dictators have gained power in impoverished and hunger-stricken nations by giving away free sacks of grain with a promise for more, just so long as the favor is returned with support. We're betting most Americans aren't stupid enough to believe this is a good idea, but unfortunately, that doesn't make it go away.

The high gas prices are a burden on everyone, affecting some more than others. The sad truth of it is that as much as these prices hurt our wallets, they help our planet, as well as our future; this might be what it takes for the majority of society to finally realize how our addiction to oil is slowly killing us. While we struggle to afford a trip to the pump, the oil industry is bathing in record profits. Why continue to believe that this system is part of some future solution? Real changes are needed on every level, and we need to be personally accountable as much as our leaders need to find alternative solutions. Temporary price cuts are a shortsighted waste, a flashy paint job on a failing old jalopy. No one likes high gas prices, but a short break from the national tax doesn't solve anything, it would only encourage a bad, old habit.

Down with Jack

Hey, you. Yeah, I'm talkin' to you. Heads up, DOOM marine. Look out, Max Payne. Check yourself, Eastern European guy from Grand Theft Auto 4.

Jack Thompson is in town. You say you all never heard of Sheriff Jack? Well, he's certainly heard of you. He's been the scourge of you blood-guttering, school-violence-inducing cattle rustlers ever since he got bored with putting the ol' hammer to rap music and suing Janet Reno.

JON GOLD

You see, Jack Thompson is a lawyer, of sorts. He don't much care about the law, but he sure knows low-down, dirty immorality when he sees it. And he sees it all the time, every second of every day.

Why, if it weren't for Sheriff Jack, we wouldn't have known about the GAY SEXUAL CONTENT in Bully, a critically acclaimed, darkly humorous weapon of moral destruction. (It's a brief kiss. — ed.) And we wouldn't have had an opportunity to massage our engorged senses of outrage over the depiction of PIXELATED NUDITY in The Sims, one of the most engrossing, open-ended examples of the decline of Western civilization.

But it's not just the sex in the video games that gets Sheriff Jack all antsy-pantsy. Mostly, it's the violence that he feels obliged to object to. After all, there's no denyin' that pretty much every bad thing that's ever happened in the past 15 years is on account of them durned, good-fer-nothin' violent video games.

It weren't parental neglect and untreated mental illness that did fer all those poor kids at Columbine, it was DOOM! I mean, there's crazy, but DOOM! classmates in the face crazy? Naw, had to be the video games. I rightly can't understand anything as complicated as the effects of sadistic bullying and chemical imbalances, so they scare the bejesus outta me. So it must have been the video games. That way, I can do something about it.

And that young Asian fella that killed all those people at Virginia Technical University? Why, he trained on a murder simulator called Counter-Strike! Didn't have nothing to do with easy access to guns despite recorded mental-health problems. That's what these "games" are really all about, training people to become murderers! Then when Activision's army of trained killers is ready, they'll march on Washington and butcher us into cybernetic Stroggs! (Wait, that was kind of similar to Quake 4. Fiddlesticks.)

Some people say that of Sheriff Jack doesn't bear listenin' to. I say that nothin' could be further from the truth. So what if the guy's more litigious than Scientology? I think that just means he has the courage of his convictions, whatever that means. Or at least, that's what I choose to believe, often in the face of the available evidence.

Jack Thompson is an honorable man. Why else would he have offered to donate $10,000 to a charity of Take-Two Interactive's CEO Paul Eibeler's choice if a video-game company would make a game where you brutally kill video-game executives and random video gamers the Electronic Entertainment Expo? (Sheriff Jack was particular about that last bit.) That's downright Swiftian, right there. How's that fer public dialogue, you skulkin' heathens?

And just because he didn't pay up when somebody took him up on the offer, that don't make him a bad person, right? (Interestingly, not long afterward, the creators of a video-game-related webcomic called Penny Arcade donated the ten grand to the Electronic Software Association's charitable foundation, writing in the memo line of the check "because Jack Thompson won't." — ed.)

I mean, just because he welshed on making a charitable donation and threatened to sue people who criticized him for it? Just because he's a lot more concerned about kids playing with digital guns than real ones? Just because he's treated almost every public tragedy since 1997 as an excuse to get his name in the paper?

Just because he sent an e-mail last month to the mother of Take-Two board Chairman Strauss Zelnick, blaming her son for the recent deaths of three Alabama police officers, comparing him to a member of the Hitler Youth, and lambasting her for having raised a child who "unleashes porn and violence upon other mothers' boys?"

Well, at least he's not making violent video games himself, right? Right? ■

Ledge-endary sexism

What is it that makes the relentless sexism in the Ledge column OK? Would you publish the same material about ethnic minorities just for laughs? Mobs would march on the DI's offices.

Words matter. If Scott Pacanowski can't tell that, The Daily Iowan must have an editor somewhere with the sense to stop this.

Commentary

HIV and the Peace Corps

"The men and women who join the Peace Corps reflect the rich diversity of America in race, ethnic background, age, and religion."
— From the Peace Corps website

That rich diversity apparently doesn't include able-bodied Americans who are also HIV-positive. As Washington Post columnist Stephen Barr reported last week, Jeremiah Johnson learned that harsh lesson in January when he was drummed out of his service in Ukraine and out of the Peace Corps altogether after he tested positive for the virus that causes AIDS. The American Civil Liberties Union is suing the 47-year-old creation of President Kennedy on Johnson's behalf to get it to stay true to its ideals.

Johnson, 25, who was HIV-negative when he joined the Peace Corps, had been teaching English to middle- and high-school students in Rozdilna, Ukraine, since December 2006. While in Kiev this past January for a Russian-language program attended by other Peace Corps volunteers, Johnson received a midservice medical exam and consented to an HIV test. The results came back positive. He was given two days to shut down his work, pack up his belongings in Rozdilna, and head back to Washington.

In his lawsuit, Johnson said the Ukraine country director for the Peace Corps told him that he had to return to Washington because Ukraine does not allow foreigners with HIV to work there. We will save our quarrel with Ukraine's policies for another day; no matter how misguided and discriminatory, they cannot excuse the U.S. government. After another medical examination in Washington in February, Johnson's Peace Corps volunteer career came to an end.

"The resolution of your condition[s] will take longer than the maximum-allowable 45 days," Johnson's medical-separation notice said. It went on to add that it was determined that he "would be medically unable to perform" his volunteer assignment. Never mind that Johnson is in good health and eager to help others. In a brief note acknowledging receipt of the separation notice, Johnson wrote, "My signature does not imply that I agree that my separation is lawful or appropriate or has any sound medical basis." A letter from the ACLU to Peace Corps Director Ronald Tschetter challenged Johnson's termination as a violation of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act because it "appears based upon a Peace Corps policy to terminate volunteers who are HIV positive without an individualized assessment as to whether they are able to serve with reasonable accommodation."

A more formal response to the ACLU letter is forthcoming. Peace Corps press director Amanda Beck told us Monday that the agency does not have a policy of "automatically excluding people with HIV." Still, the fact remains that Johnson, now waiting tables back in Colorado, was booted from the Peace Corps because of his diagnosis. HIV should not be a barrier to public service. Making it so, as in Johnson's case, is a waste of talent and goodwill. With all of its work in dealing with HIV-AIDS around the world, the agency should know that.

A taste of real life

Tonight's New Play Festival premiere takes its playwright from subjects such as vampires and the distant past to one closer to home, though no less dramatic — the roller coaster of the human heart.

On Tuesday evening in the Theater Building, cast members rehearse A History of Bad Ideas, a play about hard times in a relationship.

When it comes to creating works of art, there's often no greater source of inspiration than plain ol' real life. And with the latest production in this week's New Play Festival, another can be added to the score — tonight marks the premiere of A History of Bad Ideas, which comes into the world thanks to real-life romantic woes.

"It was definitely harder to write in some ways," said playwright Greg Machlin, adding that despite the difficulty, "the end result was definitely worthwhile."

A History of Bad Ideas tells the story of Jason, a guy Machlin describes as "very much in his own head," and his more emotional girlfriend, Georgia. The pair move from New York to Iowa City so Jason can join the Writers' Workshop, and upon doing so, their relationship begins to falter.

If the plot sounds awfully realistic, well, it's probably because Machlin wrote A History of Bad Ideas directly around the difficulties he and his ex-girlfriend went through.

"It was very important to be balanced," Machlin said about reliving the former relationship for the sake of writing the script. "I needed to have both characters be equally likable and flawed."

It seems that he wound up successful — A History of Bad Ideas was run by Machlin's own "Georgia" recently, without issue.

In fact, Machlin reported, "She got a kick out of it."

A Playwrights' Workshop student, Machlin's latest production serves as a departure from several of his former works produced at the UI — though it might seem backward to many. Rather than continuing in the vein of such plays as Bloody Lies, a vampire love story, or This Is Your Life, a play set in the 1960s, he decided to move more toward straight, modern-day situations.

"I'd say the point of inspiration was to get away from a lot of the more sci-fi or fantasy elements that I've used before and toward more realism," he said.

One element that did carry over from This Is Your Life, however, was his relationship with director Joe Luis Cedillo, who helms A History of Bad Ideas as well.

"Right now, it's about the search, the hunt for what the play is trying to tell us," Cedillo said, adding that much of his directing style for the production has been "all about trying to forefront the script."

"We can kind of intuit each other's next move," Machlin said about the pair's decision to work together again, noting that the two also a shared love of genre-blending, not to mention similar senses of humor.

Cedillo emphasized the "world premiere" nature of this week's New Play Festival productions, saying that what the cast and crew are doing is "theater without a safety net."

"That's what theater is about," he said. "It's not about doing Shakespeare the same way everyone else has done it before."

"HOP A PLANE"

Tegan & Sara

Tegan & Sara is an amazing group. It makes great folkie music with a lot of interesting quirks. Not to mention the uniqueness of the voices, a distinct sound that sets the band apart from the rest of indie female leads.

"Handcuffs"

Brand New

One of my favorite bands. The song "Handcuffs" not only explores its softer side, it explodes in true emoey goodness.

"Kissing Families"

Silversun Pickups
Silversun Pickups is a great band. That is all.

"She Doesn't Get It"

The Format

The Format (RIP). It will make you dance and smile. This song makes some really poignant arguments about the dating scene and one-night stands.

"Guns and Cigarettes"

Atmosphere

Atmosphere is an amazing rapper. His lyrics are eloquent and intelligent. He definitely shows an awareness of the scene he comes from. Ant, his producer, creates some of the catchiest beats I've heard, fusing folk rock with traditional hip-hop.

"Good Witch of the North"

Everclear

Everclear is one of those bands that never really quite made it but kept making music.

BENEFIT CONCERT

Becoming visible

Invisible Children, a national organization that helps spread awareness about the ongoing crisis in northern Uganda, wants everyone to know it exists. Tonight, students will when the UI chapter hosts a benefit concert at newly opened venue, the Industry, 211 Iowa Ave.

Since the group's inception on the UI campus in the fall of 2007, it has shown the Invisible Children film twice as well as bringing the national traveling group of 20-somethings to share how this movement changes lives.

"It's so hard for student organizations to raise money through the university," said Lauren Katz, an Invisible Children benefit organizer. "Iowa City has a really good music scene, so we thought it'd be a great way to open it up to the community."

The UI division has set out to raise money for the charity organization Invisible Children Inc., based in California. The benefit features local musicians Jessie Witherall, Caleb Engstrom, Dave Beck, Mannix, and the School of Flytenology supporting the rebuilding of schools so that children can have a safe place where they are able to better their lives. "The reason I'm in this is my stepsister went to Africa. She had an Invisible Children shirt, and she told me about it," Katz said. "The concert will let people know we're here, and the bands will be explaining what we're all about in between sets."

Iowa City Invisible Children President Brianna Berendes, Vice President Roberto Paglia, and secretary Jess Barnes have wanted to do this benefit for a while, but gave it serious consideration after the success of the last film screening in February.

And with the opening of the Industry, Katz said, the group had no reason not to do it, although initially there was difficulty in setting the final show date.

"The Industry said once a month it wants to do some sort of benefit concert there," said the 20-year-old. "We wanted to be the forerunners of these awesome benefit concerts."

Dissecting the Lolita society

Gravity, relativity, and sex sells: three universal theories in our culture.

UI Associate Journalism Professor Gigi Durham challenges the morality of the latter hypothesis in her new book, The Lolita Effect.

By Meryn Fluker
THE DAILY IOWAN

The issue of sexuality in advertising, particularly involving females, is always a timely topic and has been since the days when often-criticized Barbie first placed her always-elevated heels onto store shelves. One only needs to flick on the TV or open a glossy magazine and see the advertisements featuring impossibly attractive women with flawless bodies attempting to sell readers a product that, in essence, will liken them in some way to the gorgeous product-pusher.

With recent scandals involving 15-year-old "Hannah Montana" star Miley Cyrus' bra-baring personal photos and "topless" shoot for Vanity Fair, the issues addressed by journalism faculty member Gigi Durham in her new book, The Lolita Effect, are pushed even further into the media's spotlight.

"It illustrates how we really polarize our ideas about girls' sexuality. Either we try to repress it, and police it, and moralize about it, or it gets exploited and used for commercial purposes in this really voyeuristic way," Durham said. "There's no middle ground of healthy, safe, progressive, natural ideas of sexuality."

selling copies of Vanity Fair. The controversy includes many of the elements, or "myths" as they're referred to, present in The Lolita Effect, which she will read from at 7 p.m. Thursday at Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St.

Durham's research took her through women's magazines, video games, teen magazines, and even hip-hop videos. One of the more startling results was a high-incidence of girl-on-girl crime.

"In fact, a lot of [teen and women's] magazines are staffed by women," Durham said. "It's women also buying into and reinforcing these ideas."

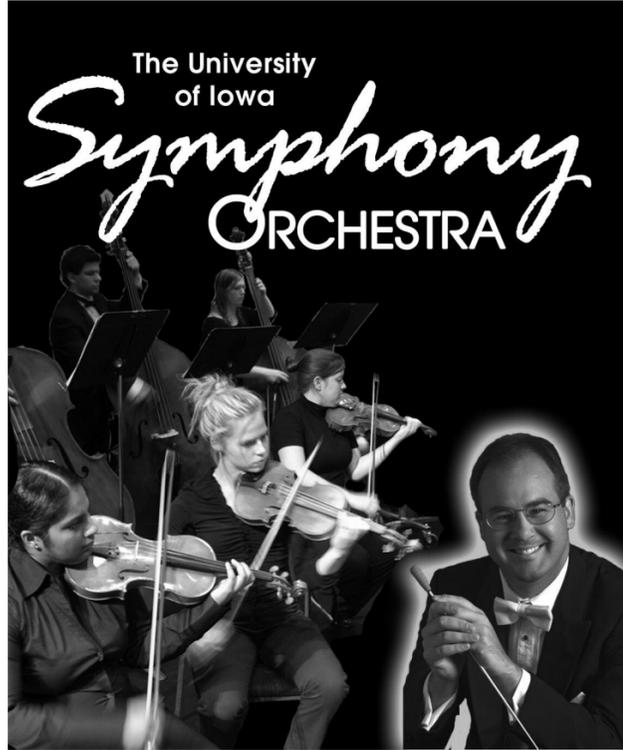

It's inevitable the day will come in all girls' lives where they will have their first kiss, begin buying makeup, and start shopping for underwear at a store with a name not ending in "Mart." Kids grow up; such are the facts of life. Durham argues not only that there's a natural curve of when girls should mature, and advertising and cultural attitudes that disrupt this curve are destructive to the growth of youth.

"I think that sex is normal, natural, and healthy," Durham said. "We ought to be a whole lot more open about talking about these kinds of issues and understanding that there really are healthy and progressive ways to deal with children's sexuality."

Durham said the problem ultimately does come down to the media, even though she has described herself as "pro-media."

"The media construction of sexuality is highly problematic because it's not in girls' best interest," she said.

Culver OKs school tax

A statewide sales tax for school infrastructure was signed by the governor on Tuesday.

By Shawn Gude
THE DAILY IOWAN

Beginning next year, school districts all around Iowa will receive per-pupil funding under a bill signed on Tuesday by Gov. Chet Culver.

Johnson County and Linn County, which approved their own local-option sales taxes in February 2007, will be exempt from contributing to the statewide pooling for the first five years. For that time, the county sales tax money will be funneled into the local school infrastructure.

Still, the measure split Johnson County lawmakers, with the area's three representatives voting against the bill last month and Sen. Bob Dvorsky, D-Coralville, and Sen. Joe Bolzcom, D-Iowa City, supporting it. Proponents also had Iowa City School District Superintendent Lane Plugge on their side.

Rep. David Jacoby, D-Coralville, acknowledged the bill did have some positives but argued it would be a net loss for area schools.

"It's going to be good for schools border-to-border, but there will be a significant number of dollars generated in Johnson County that will go out of the county," Jacoby said.

Plugge argued the possible loss in revenue is outweighed by the equity the law brings, as well as the long-term planning now available with the fixed stream of money.

"Even though it generates less for Johnson County, the money for schools shouldn't be based solely on where a child lives," Plugge said.

Bolzcom agreed. "I think it's important that we have a [state] where we have money behind every student when it comes to building infrastructure needs ... Every child in the state deserves an equal investment in them," he said.

Dvorsky said money collected from the use tax will also aid school districts with low property values.

The bill is a win for rural schools, which have been receiving less funding than their urban counterparts. But some say Iowa City's School District could lose some potential revenue, although an exact number is unclear.

View from the top

Here was Culver's statement on Tuesday's passing of the statewide sales tax for school infrastructure:

The local-option tax has helped transform Iowa's schools and fulfilled our commitment to giving our children the best education in the country. All children in Iowa deserve the opportunity to learn in a modern, safe school building. And I'm proud to say House File 2663 will help us do just that.

Bolzcom said he couldn't estimate how much such the total loss would be, but maintained the now-equitable infrastructure money will be a win for the state overall. Dvorsky asserted that after five years into the bill, per-pupil amounts will increase.

In the end, Dvorsky argued, Iowa City will not lose any potential revenue for schools.

In other state politics news, Secretary of State Michael Mauro decided against challenging last month's English-only voting form ruling. Mauro had been printing voting forms in languages other than English, but 5th District Judge Douglas Staskal decided that making such forms available violated a 2002 law.

In a statement, Mauro maintained he would "make the voting process as accessible as possible for all Iowans, regardless of their first language."

Attorney General Tom Miller also issued a statement on Tuesday saying his office favors amending the current law in order to allow voter registration to be printed in non-English languages.

"We will work with the secretary of State and county auditors on how election officials, within the bounds of the decision, can assist non-English-speaking Iowans in exercising their right to vote," Miller said in the statement.

On Tuesday, Culver also signed a bill that establishes energy efficiency commission and calls on electric utilities to create energy efficiency goals.

Online courses burgeoning

The UI approaches online courses with 'cautious optimism.'

By Alyssa Cashman
THE DAILY IOWAN

More students are turning to the Internet for their educational needs.

The number of students taking online courses jumped by more than 10 percent from 2002 to 2006, according to statistics from the National Association for College Admission Counseling. About 19.8 percent of students were enrolled in online courses in 2006.

At the UI, there are a "couple hundred" online courses available and approximately 4,000 students participate, said Chet Rzonca, an associate provost and the dean of the continuing-education program. The number of courses available saw a 3 to 5 percent increase over last year.

Although a relatively small percentage of UI students take 'More and more people's lives are packed, and with an online course, you can access it whenever.'

— Chet Rzonca, associate provost online courses, that number is increasing, he said.

"More and more people's lives are packed, and with an online course, you can access it whenever," Rzonca said.

UI officials have approached the idea of web education cautiously, he said. Tenure track and adjunct professors are chosen in terms of interest and who will best represent the department to teach the Internet courses. Recent initiatives have increased the number of online courses available.

"Our No. 1 priority is quality," Rzonca said.

The cautious approach, however, has not put the UI behind the curve compared with other public research universities, Rzonca said.

UI sophomore Karen Leidall, who is taking medical terminology online from the university, plans to take another online course in the summer from Kirkwood Community College.

"If I could take all online courses, I would," she said.

Although Leidall sang the praises of online courses, she admitted they're not for everyone.

Rzonca agreed, saying that self-discipline is vital to success in an online class.

Newly hired Provost Wallace Loh has been an advocate of online education in the past.

"I see online education as an excellent way to complement learning in the classroom," he

75 students arrested in drug bust

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Dozens of San Diego State University students were arrested after a sweeping drug investigation found that some fraternity members openly dealt drugs and one even sent a mass text message advertising cocaine, authorities said Tuesday.

Two kilograms of cocaine were seized, along with 350 Ecstasy pills, marijuana, psychedelic mushrooms, hash oil, methamphetamine, illicit prescription drugs, several guns, and at least $60,000 in cash, authorities said.

Of the 96 people arrested, 75 were students. Eighteen of the students were arrested Tuesday when nine search warrants were executed at various locations including fraternities, said Jesse Rodriguez, San Diego County assistant district attorney.

The undercover probe, dubbed Operation Sudden Fall, was sparked by the cocaine overdose death of a student in May 2007, authorities said. As the investigation continued, another student, from Mesa College, died Feb. 26 of a cocaine overdose at an San Diego State fraternity house, the DEA said.

Those arrested included a student who was about to receive a criminal-justice degree and another who was to receive a master's degree in homeland security.

"A sad commentary is that when one of these individuals was arrested, they inquired as [to] whether or not his arrest and incarceration would have an effect on him becoming a federal law-enforcement officer," said Ralph Partridge, a special agent in charge of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in San Diego.

Some defendants were scheduled to appear in state court to face charges Tuesday.

During the probe investigators discovered that in some fraternities most members were aware of "organized drug dealing occurring from the fraternity houses by its members," the DEA said in a news release.

"Undercover agents purchased cocaine from fraternity members and confirmed that a hierarchy existed for the purpose of selling drugs for money," the DEA said.

The district attorney's office said search warrants were served in San Diego and suburban La Mesa, including the Theta Chi fraternity house and several apartments.

Baseball whips Valpo

After toppling Valparaiso, 13-5, on Tuesday night, the Iowa baseball team looks towards its weekend series with Penn State.

Iowa's Caleb Curry is congratulated by teammates after scoring a run against Valparaiso on Tuesday night at Banks Field. The Hawkeyes used 14 free passes to build an early 5-1 lead and went on to defeat the Crusaders, 13-5.

Tuesday's crowd at Duane Banks Field saw two Hawkeyes move deeper into the Iowa baseball record book during the team's easy 13-5 win over Valparaiso.

Hawkeye junior Caleb Curry used his legs to run into elite company, moving among the top-three single-season steals leaders in Iowa history. The center fielder stole two bases, his 33rd and 34th, which tied him with ex-Hawkeyes Craig Conti for third most.

"I was just trying to get into scoring position for the guys behind me, just trying to help my teammates out," Curry said. "It's not really a personal thing."

The Alexandria, Minn., native grabbed his first stolen base to aid a five-run second inning for the Hawkeyes.

His second swipe came in the fifth inning, just after a Jarad Miller pitch glanced off his right elbow. Moments later, Curry nearly earned third place

BOSTON (AP) — LeBron James couldn't make a basket down the stretch — or at virtually any other time — and the Boston Celtics eked out a 76-72 victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers on Tuesday night in the opener of the Eastern Conference semifinals. Kevin Garnett scored 28 points to make up for an off night for the rest of Boston's Big Three. James was held to 12 points on 2-for-18 shooting. He missed three drives and a 3-pointer in the final minute. Game 2 will be Thursday night in Boston. James scored Cleveland's first basket and then missed his next 10 shots before driving for a lay-up that cut Boston's lead to 66-65 with 5:34 left. He then missed his last six shots, including a potential game-tying finger roll that bounced off the inside of the rim with 8.5 seconds left. James scored just two points in the second half while finishing with nine rebounds, nine assists and 10 turnovers. Rajon Rondo scored all 15 of his points in the first half, and Kendrick Perkins grabbed 12 rebounds for the Celtics. Paul Pierce drew two charging fouls while guarding James but scored just four points on 2-for-14 shooting, and Ray Allen (0-for-4) didn't score. But at least they had Garnett. Zydrunas Ilgauskas had 22 points and 12 rebounds for the Cavaliers, who shot 31 percent and couldn't make a basket at the end of the game. Boston led 68-65 when Daniel Gibson hit a 3-pointer to tie it with 3:18 left.

One down, eight Big Ten games left to go.

That's what the rest of the schedule looks like for the Iowa baseball team heading into the final week and a half of the regular season.

The Hawkeyes put a five-run second inning up on the scoreboard on Tuesday against Valparaiso and went on to easily dispose of the Crusaders at Banks Field, 13-5, with the help of seven pitchers.

Freshman starter Jeff Pacha notched his first win, throwing three innings and allowing just one run on one hit while striking out three batters. The victory was Iowa's fifth midweek triumph since the beginning of April.

"We just want to continue to get momentum into the week-ends," Hawkeye head coach Jack Dahm said. "Our guys did a very good job, played a very solid baseball game in all phases. We threw a lot of young guys, who haven't had a lot of experience, and they did a nice job for us. They took control of the game for us." There was a brief scare during the first inning of Tuesday's contest. Junior first baseman Wes Freie and sophomore catcher Tyson Blaser collided in foul territory while charging a pop up a few yards from the Iowa dugout.

Blaser appeared fine after regaining his breath, but Freie left the game and walked gingerly back to the dugout. Blaser was later removed in the seventh inning.

"I called for it, went after it, and when I was calling for it, he was calling for it, so we didn't hear each other," Blaser said. "We hit pretty hard."

"My bell was rung pretty good." Junior Justin Toole extended his now 21-game hitting Despite missing on its biggest goal, the Iowa men's tennis team holds high expectations looking forward.

Iowa waited. And waited. And waited.

Top-seeded Ohio State bounced the eighth-seeded Hawkeyes in the second round of the Big Ten Tournament on April 25, and despite solid credentials from previous matches, they did not receive a bid for the NCAA Tournament on April 29.

The Hawkeyes' overarching goal this spring was a postseason berth, and if you're going to be black and white about it, the outcome was a failure.

"It was a letdown because we had a goal of making NCAAs, and we didn't," said junior Greg Holm, who played mostly at No. 6 singles. "But you can't ignore that we improved."

Kelly Crawford describes herself as someone who, after winning a national championship by four shots, would ask her team why they didn't win by 15.

She always wants more. She demands that her team constantly improves. And she expects for her players to reach their potential — and then some.

So it shouldn't come as a surprise that after a season in which she predicted that her team would finish top four in the conference, Crawford is already setting the bar higher for next season after the Hawkeyes tied for eighth place in the Big Ten.

"In my mind right now, knowing what our potential is, it's not unrealistic for me to think we can be top three [in the conference]," said the second-year head coach. "The top-four teams in our conference are a regionals right now, and I felt that's a place we should have been all year long."

NCAA warns schools on teams' academics

NCAA academic report: Some college teams may be hit hard.

By Michael Marot
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Brand
NCAA president

INDIANAPOLIS — NCAA President Myles Brand wants college teams concerned as much about academic scores as final scores. If they aren't, they might be barred from NCAA postseason play.

Brand warned the underachievers Tuesday they could get hit with the NCAA's harshest sanctions — fewer scholarships, reductions in practice, and even a postseason ban. Nearly 150 teams face potential scholarship losses and another 26 are on the brink of a postseason ban because of poor academics.

"Academic reform is here to stay, and those penalties resemble what we give for major infractions. So these are serious penalties and there are a number of teams that received those," Brand said after releasing this year's Academic Progress Report. "Yes, there are individual institutions who have seen a steady decline [academically] over the last four years, and for them, the situation is dire."

Brand was mostly pleased with what he saw in the report. Overall scores improved by four points since the NCAA began collecting data in 2003. Scores are also up in 26 of 29 sports over the last four years, and fewer teams were penalized than even NCAA officials expected last year. One reason was the substantial academic improvement made by baseball and football players. Those sports increased their average scores by 12 and 11 points since 2003, respectively, which equate to graduation rates in the mid 60s.

There was plenty of reason for concern, too. More than 700 of the 6,272 Division I teams fell short of the mandated cut score of 925 to avoid penalties, and 218 were assessed punishments ranging from warning letters to reductions in practice times. Some were granted waivers while others showed enough improvement to avoid penalties.

But the 26 teams that have now scored less than 900 in two consecutive years must improve now. A third consecutive score below 900 would keep them out of NCAA tournaments 2009-10, and a fourth straight year on the list could lead to having Division I status revoked.

"The penalties should tell people that we take this very seriously," said Walter Harrison, chairman of the NCAA's committee on academic performance. "These penalties will be equal to, or greater, than the most serious penalties you can take in infractions cases."

Schools already facing possible postseason bans include football teams at San Jose State, Southern, and Temple, and men's basketball teams at New Mexico State, Centenary, and East Carolina.

Thirty-six teams were assessed two penalties and three schools had more than one team hit twice — Alabama-Birmingham in men's basketball, football, and men's golf; San Diego State in baseball and football; and San Jose State in baseball and men's basketball.

Florida International had five teams — baseball, football, men's basketball, men's outdoor track and field, and women's swimming — receive one sanction each.

Money is also becoming a more notable factor. According to the report, 180 teams cited low resources as the reason for poor scores, and 253 teams said they were hurt by the departures of academically ineligible players. Teams can cite more than one explanation for scores when filing the report.

Brand acknowledged there is a correlation between money and APR scores although he called on athletic directors and university presidents to set better priorities.

"It's not as much about how many resources you have, as it is about where you put it," he said. "If you have a problem, you should put it more toward academic development and not as much toward suites or new facilities, for instance."

The numbers show large Division I schools, such as those in the Bowl Championship Series conferences, performed relatively well.

Eighteen BCS teams were penalized, eight in men's and women's basketball and two in football. Of those, only four teams — Kansas State, Purdue, Southern California, and Tennessee — made the NCAA men's basketball tourney. All four could lose up to two scholarships next season but only if a player leaves school while academically ineligible.

Indians' Lee surges back

Tony Dejak/Associated Press

Cleveland Indian Cliff Lee pitches against the Oakland Athletics on April 13 in Cleveland. Lee was sent to the minor leagues last year, a humbling experience for the veteran left-hander, who has turned his career around and is off to a 5-0 start this season.

By Tom Withers
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — Every now and again this winter back home in Arkansas, Cliff Lee would turn on his computer and check out baseball's hot-stove league for the latest transactions and rumors.

One player's name was popping up a lot in trade talks — his.

A former 18-game winner for Cleveland, Lee's value had plummeted following a 2007 season in which he got hurt, was demoted to the minors, then was relegated to a relief role when he returned. He even was left off the Indians' postseason roster.

An avid fisherman, Lee was, for lack of a better term, trade bait. The Indians, who obtained him in a 2002 deal with Montreal, had lost confidence in the left-hander.

"They did," he said. "I knew the deal."

Luckily, the Indians didn't make one.

Lee won a three-way competition for the final starting spot during spring training, and he will take a 5-0 record and 0.96 ERA into his start tonight against the New York Yankees and Chien-Ming Wang (6-0). The 29-year-old is the first Cleveland pitcher to win his first five starts since 1988.

More impressively, according to Elias Sports Bureau, Lee's .163 on-base percentage allowed is the lowest against a pitcher over his first five starts in 99 years, since Frank Smith of the Chicago White Sox had a .159 on-base percentage in 1909. Lee also had a 27-inning scoreless streak, the longest by a Cleveland pitcher in 26 years.

Rarely one to show emotion, Lee is taking his start in stride.

He understands how fleeting success can be in a game where statistics can be as tough to judge as a diving, split-fingered fastball.

"I'm happy with how things have gone," Lee said last week before getting in a cardio workout. "My job is to give the team a chance to win, and I feel like I've done that every time I went out there. We've won — that's the goal. It's still really early. I'm pleased with the way it has gone so far, and, hopefully, I can continue to pitch the way I have."

The Indians don't expect Lee to stay perfect, but they're thrilled with his turnaround in a season in which their bullpen has struggled and their bullpen has been a work in progress.

Lee's 2007 season unraveled before it started.

He pulled an abdominal muscle during spring training, went on the disabled list and didn't make his season debut until May. He threw a three-hitter in his second start, but Lee's season was soon spiraling downward.

After four-straight losses dropped him to 3-8 with a 7.40 ERA, Lee was optioned to Triple-A Buffalo, a team he hadn't played for since 2003 and a minor-league stop he never thought he'd have to make into a temporary home again.

Lee never questioned the Indians' decision. He knew it was the right one.

"It was kind of a shock when it all happened," he said. "But I didn't have anyone to blame but myself. I flat out didn't get it done, so I could completely understand why it went the way that it went. I wanted to go to Buffalo and get better. I grasped the whole situation. I understood what was going on. I didn't want to be the bitter guy in Buffalo."

Back in the minors, Lee went back to the basics of pitching: pound the strike zone, locate the fastball, mix in the secondary stuff.

When he came back to Cleveland, Lee was fixed. He also was a reliever for the first time, and there were moments when he felt like an outsider. Lee came back just as the Indians were wrapping up an AL Central title, one he contributed little to.

When October opened and the Indians didn't include Lee on their playoff roster, it was a final, painful slap of reality.

Judge allows Clemens to keep attorney

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge says Roger Clemens can keep his lawyer in the defamation lawsuit against his former trainer, who accused the pitcher of using performance-enhancing drugs.

Lawyers for Clemens' former trainer, Brian McNamee, filed a motion for attorney Rusty Hardin to be removed from the case because Hardin represented both Clemens and pitcher Andy Pettitte for several days before the release of the Mitchell Report.

Pettitte later admitted using human-growth hormone. He also told congressional lawyers that Clemens informed him nearly a decade ago he had used HGH.

U.S. District Judge Keith Ellison ruled Tuesday that because McNamee is not a former client of Hardin, he has no standing to ask for his disqualification. Only Pettitte would be able to make such a challenge and he has chosen not to at this time, Ellison wrote in a 13-page order.

This is a team that came into 2008 returning its entire starting lineup from a year ago. While last year's version captured just one Big Ten victory, this season's model won five conference meets. Not exactly elite territory, but the wins quintupled the production of the previous year.

Losing van Monsjou and fellow senior J.P. Ritchie is going to hurt the Hawkeyes, but the team returns plenty of talent. Four recruits are also coming in, and Iowa head coach Steve Houghton is already talking "instant impact." Meanwhile, Nikita Zotov, a Russian recruit who sat out last season awaiting eligibility, seems poised to finally break into the lineup next spring.

"He's very, very good," Holm said. "A very promising player. Everyone's been impressed with what he's done in practice."

Coaching stability could help keep Iowa on track early in the 2008-09 season. When six-year assistant coach Matt Brothers left for a head coaching gig at DePaul, Iowa had to make do with the temporary void.

"He did what was best for him, and he's a good coach, but we were without an assistant coach for a while," Holm said.

"Looking around puts a lot more work for [Houghton] to do. We didn't have both coaches for the first couple tournaments in the fall.

"It'll be really good to have a solid base."

As for the coveted — and recently vacated — No. 1 singles spot, the presumptive favorite is likely senior-to-be Christian Bierich, who split time between No. 2 and No. 3 during his sophomore and junior seasons.

"I have a lot of confidence that, if he is our one guy next year, that he'll have a very good year at 1," Houghton said, noting that Bierich's experience at No. 2 and No. 3 gave him experience against top-flight competition.

After a season of progress mixed with disappointment, the 27th-year coach isn't shying away from big expectations next year. And that includes aiming for an NCAA Tournament bid ... again.

"I think the guys are going to be very disappointed if we don't meet those goals next year," Houghton said. "I would think those goals would be essentially the same, or maybe even upward from there, just depending on how the new guys fit in."

But the reality is that Crawford's team isn't in Austin, Texas, preparing for regionals. After a subpar fall season in which Iowa failed to win its home tournament, the Hawkeye Intercollegiate, for the first time in three years, the Hawkeyes kicked off their spring schedule with a team and individual victory in Ensenada, Mexico.

But for junior Tyrette Metzendorf — Crawford's most consistent player all season, averaging just over 75 shots per round — the high point of the season came when the Hawkeyes followed up an opening-round 325 in the Big Ten championship with a season-low 291.

"The 291 was 1,000-times more exciting than winning in Mexico," said Metzendorf, who placed third individually at the Big Tens. "We played really [badly] in Mexico, but the teams there weren't that great. With our 291, I think it was the second-lowest score [by any of the teams] for that round. That was really, really exciting."

Crawford agrees, contending that her team's ability to rebound after an emotionally-draining first round was the best moment of the season.

"It's nice [to win in Mexico] — I've got the first-place championship award in my office," she said. "But we didn't play to our abilities. [At Big Tens], we put up a 325 in that first round. We were dead last in the conference championship. And to come back with a 291, it wasn't a fluke."

The Hawkeyes followed up their first-place finish in Mexico by placing in a tie for ninth (Gainesville Shootout), fifth (Shamrock Intercollegiate), and 10th (Indiana Invitational and Buckeye Invitational) before tying for eighth for the second-consecutive year in the Big Ten.

"The season's over. It's done. We can't dwell on it. We've just got to learn from it and move forward," Crawford said. "... I believed all year that we could have a top-four, top-five finish in the conference, and to finish eighth isn't where I felt our ability levels were."

Along with the disappointment, she can look forward to next season knowing that her best player and her two most-improved players — junior Becky Quinby and freshman Laura Cilek — will return next season.

"For Becky, her best career score was a 79 up until this year, where she had a 74 and a 73," Crawford said. "So that shows a lot of promise for next year with her coming back. Obviously, Tyrette had a phenomenal season. If she puts the work in that she needs to [over the summer], she's got potential to do some really good things next year."

With that said, Crawford isn't worried about her team not meeting its top-three-or-bust goal. Sure, she wants, demands a lot from her players, but she hopes that they saw what they were capable of in the second round of Big Tens.

"I think we're going to rebound really well," she said. "We put the 291 in that second round — that's where I felt we should be all year long. I think it showed the returning athletes that, 'Yeah, we are capable of doing this.'"

Baseball rolls to win

BASEBALL

Julie Koehn/The Daily Iowan

Iowa catcher Tyson Blaser collides with first baseman Wes Freie as the two try to field a foul ball in the first inning against Valparaiso on Tuesday night. The Hawkeyes used a five-run inning offensively and solid relief pitching to win, 13-5.

Valparaiso later scored a second run in the top of the fourth. Hawkeye freshman reliever Kevin Lee, a converted catcher, surrendered a lead-off home run to senior Jason Brunelli before retiring his next three batters. Brunelli launched another homer in the top of the ninth.

But Iowa followed with another lengthy offensive surge. The Hawkeyes sent nine hitters to the plate and added three insurance runs to pull away from the Crusaders, 8-2.

The Hawkeyes tallied three more successful innings afterwards, stringing together five bonus runs. Freshman left fielder Kurtis Muller highlighted the stretch in the bottom of the seventh, blasting a two-run homer that cleared the Banks Field scoreboard in left-center field.

The Hawkeyes will face Penn State this weekend in a four-game series in State College, Pa. Dahm's club has struggled in transferring any momentum from midweek games and crucial conference contests, and Iowa is one of three teams trying to put together a run and get into the Big Ten Tournament.

"That's all we need is one little game," said senior center fielder Caleb Curry, who is tied for third for the single-season stolen bases record with 34. "As long as we go out this weekend and don't worry about the outcome, the process is what matters, good things will happen."

2 move up on Iowa records

OFFENSE

outright, getting a great jump toward third base. But T.J. Cataldo's ground ball to second negated Curry's efforts.

"I told T.J. and the guys who are behind me that if they have one strike on them and I'm stealing, don't worry about me," Curry said. "I don't want to put them in a hole just so I can get a stolen base."

"I told him, 'If you get a pitch you like, don't worry about me. I'm not here to get records or get a lot of bags, I'm just here for you guys.'" had an equally impressive night, using his bat to rocket up the Iowa record books. The shortstop ripped three hits to jump from 10th to fourth in the single-season hits column, continuing a 21-game hitting streak along the way.

Fellow junior Justin Toole

"Those guys have done such a good job all year long and actually the last couple of years," said Iowa head coach Jack Dahm. "You know what you're gonna get from them every day."

"Both those guys, we've been bouncing them around a bit. With some of our struggles, we've moved them around, and yet they haven't been affected offensively at all."

Toole's first hit of the evening was a liner up the middle that pushed two across for the Hawkeyes, giving them their first lead of the night and one they would never relinquish. Toole finished 3-for-5 with three RBIs and three runs scored.

"Justin Toole just has an incredible mentality going right now," Dahm said. "He's a tough out right now. He's got that hitting streak going; he's just a fundamentally sound player."

Curry is three steals from the second-place Lance Platz, who nabbed 37 bases in 1979, and eight behind record-holder Tony Burley, who swiped 42 in 1981. Toole has 78 hits on the year. Right now, he stands just one behind Chris Hatcher, who smacked 79 base hits in 1989, and seven behind Travis Sweet, who had 85 hits last season.

He'll need 13 more hits to catch John Knapp, who set the record in 1986.

With two four-game series remaining, both Curry and Toole will have their opportunities to continue climbing the Hawkeye baseball hierarchy.

horoscopes Wednesday, May 7, 2008

— by Eugenia Last

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Of whatever you can do to feel good about life and who you are. A strong bond with a colleague or peer will bring you in contact with different ways of doing things. A lifestyle change may be in order.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You will be tempted to want things too fast, and this will lead to delays and problems. Don't rush into sharing your sentiments, especially if your emotions are soaring. Secrets may be necessary.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Don't pull the plug on something or cut someone off in a fit of anger or emotional stress. You will regret your actions and make yourself look bad in front of people who may judge you for future considerations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A partnership may start out on the wrong foot, but if you are clear about what is expected of each of you, it will turn out favorably. Hard work and doing your best to help others will result in popularity and favors granted.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your gift to others should be time and effort, not a monetary output. Take action to the heart of the problem. If a loved one opposes your time spent helping others, her or him in the process.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Consider starting a home-based business or getting into a new hobby. Don't let someone discourage you. He or she is jealous of your talents and fears your success may change the way you treat or feel about her or him.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Use your sophistication and your intelligence to find your niche. Something new and exciting will enable you to expand a concept you have wanted to develop for some time. Take baby steps, and keep your costs down.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Someone you respect will tell you something that will change the way you think and do things. A partnership will be advantageous if you each stick to what you do best. Make creative changes at home to avoid problems with someone you live with.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You need to be motivated by something spectacular. Take a trip, or join a group that will stimulate and encourage you. Don't limit yourself. Your involvement now will lead to bigger and better things in the future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can tie up loose ends and close deals if you make alterations to the way you handle the people you deal with. Take a lead position to showcase your capabilities and strengths. Investments, real estate, and personal issues can all be dealt with successfully.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can expect to have some issues with neighbors, friends, or relatives today, if you don't do what you have promised. Stick around home, and sort out what needs to be done and the most efficient way to accomplish it. A great idea will please everyone.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Embellishment may appear to be an easy out for you. However, you will have to answer questions that will prove you to be wrong in your assessment. Don't play the role of knowing everything if you don't. Focus on work, love, and keeping the peace.
