UI meets goals in fighting flood

University authorities are anticipating a week-long crest and will finally begin executing relief plans.

At the north side of the Park Road bridge, eyes were fixed on debris lining the Iowa River. As viewers gazed in amazement, they gazed in amazement. The intense sound of the rushing Iowa River was drowned out by the laughter of children as the camera panned around. It is finally nice enough where we could go out and see everything with our eyes instead of on television,” said Deb Klingelhutz.

Not over just yet

Coralville Reservoir peaks, but city officials said Sunday that they know the crisis is far from over.

The Riverside Theatre Festival Stage was one of the low lands in City Park on June 10. Now, filthy water is covering the stage. The fenceline bordering the outfield of the baseball diamonds are almost submerged. On Normandy Drive, the tops of houses rose out of murky, waist-high water. Although a return to normalcy is still far away, Iowa City officials began to breathe a sigh of relief Sunday when the news that the Coralville Reservoir had crested.

Water levels in town remained only about 10 inches above peak as of 7 a.m. Monday, according to the Iowa Department of Natural Resources. Water levels will continue to rise lightly and then, slowly, the water will start to recede, city administration.

“There’s definitely that moment of, ‘We’re going to be okay,’ but the city has experienced worse water levels in the past,” said Julie Koehn, River supervisor. "The big thing is that we know the levels will go down very slowly."

Cresting at last

The reservoir had crested. “But when the water broke, the house filled in five minutes,” said Mike McDonald, a University Housing resident. The river began to breathe a sigh of relief as the cresting of the reservoir finally began.

“A few miles away on Normandy Drive, Francesca Kinglazio put on a sandbag wall surrounding her house and looked across the street, where the home of her and Bob Jones forms on island in the Iowa River. “It was incredible,” Kinglazio said.

Joe Martin hugs his neighbor’s dog while sitting at the shelter at the Johnson County Fairgrounds on Sunday. Martin was forced to leave his home after authorities threatened to arrest him if he did not evacuate.

“The Northwest side of the Park Road bridge, eyes were fixed on debris lining almost one half of the bridge, including a Dumpster, numerous trash cans, tree limbs, and other garbage. As viewers slowly worked back toward town, the intense sound of the rushing Iowa River drowned out the laughter of children as they passed in amazement. It is finally nice enough where we could go out and see everything with our eyes instead of on television,” said Deb Klingelhutz.

Coopering with a disaster

As the floodwaters remained high in Iowa City on Sunday, city and UI connections continued to cope with a crammed communications system.

At UI administrators closed the two city buildings immediately surrounding the floodwaters. But reporters remained on campus, working to complete assignments.

According to local officials, water in Iowa City has likely peaked. However, the flood still has the potential to cause damage.

Public Works Director Rick Fossi said water in Iowa City will recede much more slowly than it is moving in nearby communities. "They're moving at a snail's pace," he said.

Approximately 2 million square feet of the UI's 18 million square feet have been affected. One million of the square feet affected are flooded. And although the other half is at risk, it's a decreasing risk, officials said.

According to the National Weather Service, the Iowa River at Iowa City crested at 31.53 feet around 6:30 a.m. Sunday morning. It was 1.5 feet lower than the previous day Sunday.

A Partnership with Iraq

Though it was hardly noticed in Washington, Iraq's Shiite-led government sent a powerful message to the U.S. and to the Middle East last week. Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki has talked consistently about building an inclusive, democratic Iraq that is at peace with the United States and the region's Arab neighbors. Iraq's cabinet has set a new date for elections—December 14, which marks the end of the third year of the U.S. occupation. That is why this week was so momentous in Iraq. The timing, especially in the aftermath of a U.S. military triumph over insurgents, is noteworthy.

Iraq is seeking to re-establish its former status as a regionally influential Arab state that would look to the United States to ensure its security. So it's hard to fathom why Democrats in Congress have joined Khamenei in trying to make Bush publicly face up to the wrongdoings he has placed upon the city of New Orleans, and the rest of the country's news sections). It seems to be less enforcement of social and minor traffic laws and more compliance with the unwritten rule—drain the disasters go.

As a result, the fatalities have been so high that we speak, using anecdotes, whether I looked stupid enough to get even with the traffic laws the water flouted. At the moment and stress, it was beautiful. I could have made the 400 mile journey that could even hurt Democratic candidate Barack Obama's White House run. The impression to impeach a Democrat move, and a foolish one at that. The Democratic administration has been unable to stop the deaths in New Orleans and the rest of the Middle East. Surely this is not what the Democrats want.

The attempts he is making are failing. They may seem to be too late in the game to achieve something that would exist in title only. When the Bush administration is seeking to establish scores of permanent U.S. bases in Iraq, Iraq has merely asked that the agreement list the bases that are currently there and those that the United States wants to establish in the future. In fact, Iraq has asked that the agreement list the bases that are currently there and those that the United States wants to establish in the future. The Happening doesn’t

The Happening, M. Night Shyamalan’s first R-rated movie, results in nothing but head-scratching.

M. Night Shyamalan’s resume has more peaks and valleys than the Himalayas. There are high points: The Silence, the Village, and the six other members of their band opened for Iron and Wine at the Englert Theatre on June 12. Together, though, both bands with their multi-instrumental approach made a real marriage. (This week’s recipe is not from the Daily Iowan, but it’s from Soulard Produce.)

The Lady in the Water

The movie’s message is_similarity. Global warming and environmental harm are mentioned as being at work, but they are never given enough attention to be taken seriously. If Shyamalan was asked attempting to make his own inconvenient truth, it came as out of nowhere. Interpersonal connections and the strength of love are also candidates for what the director was trying to tell us, but when it’s done through such underdeveloped and superficial characters the message is lost.

Coraline

What could potentially be hearing this film is that Shyamalan is trying too hard to be himself: revealing his 2005 film, which ran with a certain set of expectations, to provoke some sort of misunderstanding. If Shyamalan were to walk away, saying “I couldn’t think of anything better!”

As an attempt at characterization goes, Shyamalan attempts to humanize the couple by giving them a typical “roughed marriage” backstory, but every mention of their problems seems completely out of place. Comic relief occurs once or twice, but it, too, seems irrelevant and thrown in just for the sake of having it. The supporting players, then, become more captivating than the leads — a classic case of a horror film with a ring of hipster-style punk nursery owners who are actually kind of funny and a terrifyingly cute old woman may or may not be what she seems.

Lakers win, still alive
By Tom Withers

LOS ANGELES — Pack up the championship trophy and book a flight back to Illinois—the NBA Finals are back in Chicago.

The Los Angeles Lakers are headed East to try to get a hand of their own.

In last year’s NBA playoffs, Andrew Bynant scored 25 points, including a decisive dunk in the final minute — and Lamar Odom scored 20 as the Lakers, playing with pride on their star-studded stage, prevailed, the Celtics 4-0 in winning a 14–0 series title with a 101–99 win in Game 4 on Sunday night to close out that marred rivalry.

No team has overcome a 3-1 deficit in the finals to win a title. The last 28, and now the Lakers, who have a 2-0 series lead and lost Game 4 and nearly squandered a 20-point lead in Game 5, have a chance to do something extraordinary.

“They’re definitely possible,” said Bynant, the game’s hero, player on hand.

Tiger Woods hit a double-bogey on the 18th hole for his second straight hole, Bynant said. “We’ve been in tough environments, they’re definitely possible.”

But the league doesn’t want to lose, electric atmosphere that may send shockwaves to Lakers’ management help to get him a fourth championship ring. Did it have a lot to do with a series-extended LA’s season for at least another game.

Big Ten tournament to IC

The Iowa soccer team was named the host for this year’s Big Ten Tournament in November.

As Ron Rainey enters his third year as Iowa’s associate coach, his group of players have already managed to stay within bounds from where they were prior to his arrival.

The Big Ten took notice, and Iowa was named second host for the 2008 Big Ten Tournament, which will take place Nov. 6-9 in Iowa City.

The Iowa Soccer Complex was part of a $37 million project that also included indoor and outdoor tennis courts and a Olympic-sized swimming pool.

Last year, the Hawkeyes made their first appearance in the Big Ten Soccer Championship. The team was named the host for this event.

This season, the league's eight teams will compete in a single-elimination tournament that will kick off Dec. 2, in Piscataway, N.J. The top two teams will advance to the championship game.

Rainey said he is excited about the opportunity to participate in the Big Ten Tournament this season.

“The Big Ten Tournament is the best opportunity for us to show what we can do and what we’re capable of,” Rainey said.

The Hawkeyes will be looking to improve on their third-place finish from last season.

The Hawkeyes were 12-6-3 overall and 6-4-0 in the Big Ten.
