Rent for downtown businesses has more than doubled in the past five years.

Becky Mnuk/The Daily Iowan

Customers scan the shelves at Prairie Table on Sept. 13. The gourmet shop is offering a 30 percent off on sales items before going out of business. Owner Ron Gleitman said a number of factors played a role in the store's closing, such as a perceived lack of parking.

By Kelli Shaffner
THE DAILY IOWAN

The cost of downtown space was too expensive for Judy Gates, the new owner of the Cottage Bakery & Café, 230 E. Benton St.

So the store is now in a residential location.

"It's different for small-business expenses of any property," she said. "The expense [downtown] is astronomical. It's prohibitive for such small businesses."

In contrast, Catherine Champion's new men's boutique started when a Hawkeye T-shirt collection sold out in two days at her first store, Catherine's, 7 S. Dubuque St.

She immediately started looking for space for a second store.

"We literally ran downtown and rented the space before we even had the product in," said the now-owner of Champion's, 105 S. Dubuque St.

But the cost of opening a store downtown is more than double what it was five years ago, and that can act as a hindrance to some businesses.

Downtown destinations

To see a slide show of downtown shops, check out dailyiowan.com.

Today, new space is going for $25 per square foot, whereas in the early 2000s it went for $10, said Jeff Edberg, a realtor with Lepic-Kroeger Realtors.

"It's the highest I've heard of [in the downtown]," he said.

And that high price is straining some small businesses.

Although some prospective owners feel that empty space in the downtown district is just too costly, it's what Edberg calls a seller's market.

Higher sales equal a better market, he said.

Although it's hard to compare one market with another, Edberg said, the current price is roughly equivalent to what buyers pay for space next to the Coral Ridge Mall, in Coralville.

District bucks lockdown trend

The School District isn't following a lockdown trend because of the wide range of possible threats, officials say.

By Adam Sullivan
THE DAILY IOWAN

Despite two lockdowns in the past year, the Iowa City School District isn't following a trend in practicing lockdown drills.

Brad Spicer, the founder of SafePlans — a hazard-preparedness firm in Missouri — estimated that around 75 percent of schools in the Midwest regularly practice lockdown drills. And increasingly, he said, School Districts and state legislatures are requiring lockdown drills to be conducted in schools.

Arizona, for example, requires two lockdown drills per year, and Ohio requires one, according to state-government websites.

"Law enforcement needs to take into account the risk that [schools] face," he said. "Shootings and violence isn't an epidemic, but it's a far greater risk than fire."

Spicer noted that since 1958, there haven't been any fire-related deaths in U.S. schools. However, there have been nearly 150 school violence deaths in the last 15 years.

The most recent local lockdown affected six East Side schools after authorities learned that former UI Professor Arthur Miller's BMW was While many consider the Iowa-Iowa State football game one of the rowdiest weekends of the school year, police saw less illegal action than on past game weekends. The Hawkeyes beat Iowa State by 12 points on the field, but outside the field, police doled out 87 alcohol- and drug-related charges, totaling at least $11,850 — almost a $4,000 decrease from last week. From Sept. 5-7, police gave out at least $15,700 in tickets. Be sure to check out Monday's DI after every home game to make monetary cents of the weekend's blotter.

Crazy for games

Third in a seven-part series

Every season, the Black and Gold faithful flock to Kinnick Stadium with beer, brats, football, and family, transforming the typically tranquil residential roads surrounding the stadium into raucous roosts. For many Hawks, it's tailgating season. Keeping checking back with The Daily Iowan and dailyiowan.com after every home game as we add additional sites, sounds, and stories.

By Terry McCoy
THE DAILY IOWAN

Ten minutes until 6 a.m., and they were already waiting.

Hands in pockets, voices low, nearly two dozen brave souls lined up Sept. 13 at the Riverside Kum & Go ready to buy beer, beer, and more beer.

And oh yeah, maybe a coffee too, if it wouldn't be too much trouble.

This was not your regular-morning shift for the Kum & Go workers, not with the store already packed the way it was — and not with the Cyclones in town to try and keep the Cy-Hawk Trophy in Ames.

"I love it on game day," manager Cindy Davidson said. "But it's crazy. Let me tell you, the bathroom out there ain't going to be pretty later."

With the game still hours away, the gas station was ready for its own match, Davidson said, gesturing to a back room where cases upon cases of every cheap beer imaginable — including Busch, Miller, Keystone, Michelob — sat in waiting.

"Reserves," she said while ringing up a 30-pack of Busch Light at 6 a.m., her first alcohol sale of the day.

Outside, a steady rain was doing its best to keep prospective tailgaters between the sheets as the sleepy college town began to yawn and stretch awake.

"The only thing we need to worry about today is avoiding fights," said UI law student Eashaan Vajpeyi while tipping back a Lipton iced tea.

For him, the drinking would come soon, he said, but at this godly hour, he first needed to gather his wits and dust off fatigue.

At the frontlines of the store, Jessie Emmert, the assistant manager, rapidly swiped credit cards and checked IDs, all the while casting a suspicious eye at customers and keeping her comments sarcastic.

"Do you know where I can park my car? There aren't any spots out in front," asked Adam Nelson, a junior at Prairie High School in Cedar Rapids.

"I think there's room in the river," Emmert responded, smirking.

By now, 30-packs were flying off the shelves. Darwin Green, another staffer, worked feverishly in the freezer behind the scenes restocking the shelves. He wore thick woolen gloves and a black stocking cap. He had worked all night and was bearing down on the end of his shift. Thankfully.

But he wasn't too tired to miss out on a little fun.

"Whoa! Who's back there?" a woman asked, grabbing a case of beer and looking back at Green behind the beer shelves and into the freezer.

"It's the one-armed man! Ah!" he shouted back, thrusting out an arm.

Regents to hear report

By Clara Hogan and Amanda McClure
THE DAILY IOWAN

The state Board of Regents will receive a report about the UI's handling of an alleged sexual assault, but it will hold off reviewing President Sally Mason's involvement with the case until a special meeting, which is set to occur sometime before the regents' October meeting.

said the regents will not be asked to make any decision about the report or Mason's salary during the Sept. 17-18 meeting. At the group's previous meeting, the regents deferred Mason's evaluation until their own investigation of the administration's actions involving two football players came to a close. At the group's August meeting, officials formed a three-regent advisory committee to oversee an investigation into how the UI handled the sexual-assault report from October 2007. Regents hired a Missouri-based law firm, the Stolar Partnership, to assist the committee in looking into the issue. The price tag for the law firm could be upwards of $250,000. Miles said the three regents on the advisory committee will receive the report on Sept. 17, but the public, and the regents as a whole, will get the report at the Sept. 18 meeting. "The board won't know anything in advance to receiving the report," said Regent Bonnie Campbell, who headed the advisory committee.

Miles said that during the report, regents will be allowed to ask questions to the firm. He expects Mason to observe the discussion — not join it. Abe Satterfield, 20, and Cedric Everson, 19, are accused of sexually assaulting a former UI student in a vacant Hillcrest room in October 2007. They are charged with second-degree sex abuse. Satterfield also is charged with third-degree sexual abuse. Both have pleaded not guilty to the charges.

Woman reports finding man in bedroom

Iowa City police are looking for a man who allegedly entered a female's bedroom while she was asleep. Authorities said a 20-year-old woman woke up to find a male subject in her bedroom on Sept. 12 at 1:21 a.m. After a brief conversation, the man left the apartment, police reports show.

Police said the female was uninjured during the incident, and nothing was stolen from her residence. The suspect is described as a black male 5-10 or taller. Police said that the suspect was wearing blue jeans, a long light-colored T-shirt, and a white hoodie with multicolored designs covering the sweatshirt on the morning of the incident.

Police said that the man possibly goes by the name "Boston." Investigation of the incident continues. — by Ashton Shurson

McCain gains in electronic markets

Mirroring nationwide polls, Republican presidential nominee John McCain has made up ground in the Iowa Electronic Markets' winner-take-all presidential market. McCain's share was valued at about 46 cents, while Democratic challenger Barack Obama's quote was at about 54 cents as of Sunday afternoon. Although Obama still leads in the market, his lead has dropped from the approximately 19-cent margin he enjoyed on Sept. 5, a day after the Republican Convention.

Both McCain's running mate selection of Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin and the GOP's convention reaped little next-day price gains, but the gap between the two candidates has been shrinking since the latter.

The Iowa Electronic Markets, which is operated by the UI Tippie College of Business faculty, allows traders to buy and sell shares based on certain outcomes.

The most popular markets are political ones, including the presidential markets, the U.S. Congressional Election Markets, and the Minnesota U.S. Senate Election Markets. — by Shawn Gude

Man charged with auto theft

An Iowa City man has been arrested for allegedly stealing a car. Iowa City police charged Dominique Conway, 21, 2033 Keokuk St. Apt. 9, with second-degree theft on Sept. 11.

Reports said that police received a call of a missing gray Pontiac Vibe the afternoon of Sept. 11. The keys had been left inside the vehicle. Witnesses told police that they saw Conway driving the car and get into a collision, police said. Authorities later found the defendant near the parked car.

Conway later reportedly admitted to taking the car and getting into a collision, reports show. He allegedly told police he had "sticky fingers" and was "just a 21-year-old trying to have fun," reports state. The car valued $10,995, police said.

Second-degree theft is a Class D felony punishable by up to five years in prison and a fine up to $7,500. — by Ashton Shurson

UI Health Care picks Gordon Williams

Gordon Williams has been named UI Health Care's chief of operations, project planning and construction, pending approval from the state Board of Regents.

As chief of operations, project planning and construction, Williams will oversee the planning and construction of several UI Health Care building projects, according to a UI news release.

UI Health Care consists of the Carver College of Medicine, UI Hospitals and Clinics, and UI Physicians.

Williams, a UI graduate, previously served as the interim chief executive officer of UI Hospitals and Clinics.

"I was born at University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics, and it was always my plan to come full circle and move back to Iowa City to retire," Williams said in a release. "It's great that I won't be retiring just yet. I'm grateful for this opportunity to contribute to the advancement of a national leader in providing high-quality care to our patients." — by Adam Sullivan

Man charged with going armed with intent

Iowa City police arrested a man after he allegedly tried to enter an apartment armed with a shotgun.

Dustin Gaskill, 24, 922 E. College St. Apt. D5, was charged Sept. 12 with going armed with intent and carrying a concealed firearm.

Police said they received a call about a man attempting to enter an apartment with a shotgun. When officers arrived at the residence, they allegedly found Gaskill outside of the caller's apartment. Authorities later allegedly discovered a shotgun in Gaskill's apartment upstairs.

Authorities contend that Gaskill admitted that he went to the apartment with the gun to let people know "he's not scared of them." Police said the defendant told them he didn't know the victims.

Going armed with intent is a Class D felony punishable by up to five years in prison and a fine up to $7,500. Carrying a concealed firearm is an aggravated misdemeanor punishable by up to two years in prison and a fine up to $6,250. — by Ashton Shurson

Police search for 2 robbery suspects

Iowa City police are searching for two men after they allegedly robbed another man at gunpoint.

An adult male told police he was in the parking lot of Creekside Market, 2601 Highway 6 E., when two suspects with handguns approached him and demanded money. The man reportedly gave the two his money and the suspects fled on foot, police said.

The man was uninjured in the incident.

The suspects are described as black males in their mid-20s. One was described as 5-7 with a small build and thin mustache. He was also seen wearing a gray sweatshirt with the hood pulled over his head, reports said.

This has been the sixth robbery in the Iowa City area since Aug. 4. Investigation of the incident continues. — by Ashton Shurson

"Some commercial leases and rents are equivalent to those in Chicago," said Thomas Connolly, owner of Tobacco Bowl, 111 S. Dubuque St.

In the 18 years he has owned the Tobacco Bowl, rent has almost doubled. And although the increases have come periodically, he has seen a bit of a difference.

"It does eat up a greater percentage of your product," he said, adding that the tight economy also plays a role.

But it wasn't money as much as it was a lack of decent snow removal that led to the Prairie Table's recent demise, said owner Ron Gleitman. He also said a perceived lack of parking — even though there are three parking ramps close to his store — and the struggling economy also had an effect on the 223 E. Washington St. business.

"When you lose money, you lose everything with it," he said.

That's why some potential entrepreneurs are looking at openings further from the traditional downtown area.

Connolly is opening up his second business — a restaurant — called the Bluebird Diner, 330 E. Market St.

And although he said renovations will cost around $100,000 for adding a kitchen, water, electric, and gas to the former paint store, "anything worth having is worth the risk."

But this doesn't mean that downtown isn't expanding, said Wendy Ford, Iowa City's economic-development coordinator.

In the next 10 years there's a possibility of adding another 140,000 square feet of retail space downtown, she said.

"There are a lot of little nooks and crannies we think aren't there that are potential new retail spaces," she said.

Additionally, Ford said, the developing area south of Burlington Street could become an alternative to owning downtown real estate.

It's the most logical step to go a couple blocks south, she said.

The traditional downtown is becoming fairly maxed-out, and this area would allow for taller buildings with more space, she said.

But Ford said building up interest in this area will take time.

"As soon as the first building goes up we'll have a lot more interest," she said. "Nothing in 'big building land' goes quickly. Not until we see things begin to happen."

But at this point the idea is in the planning and theoretical stages, Iowa City City Councilor Matt Hayek said, who also works at the lawfirm Hayek, Brown, Moreland & Smith, 120 E. Washington St.

Hayek said he feels downtown lacks top-quality office space.

"Some businesses don't want to be downtown," he said. "But I'm willing to have the inconveniences."

Edberg said that businesses that cater to the downtown market have the potential to do very well.

"If you just go to buy a pair of jeans off the shelf, you go to the department store," he said. "But boutiques offer something different."

found in Hickory Hill Park on Aug. 20. He was found dead on Aug. 24.

"The teacher I had at the time closed the door and checked her e-mail to see if she could find out what was happening," City High senior Dillon McIntosh said.

Because the threat was from outside the schools' campuses, schools did not enforce a traditional lockdown, City High Principal Mark Hanson said. Rather than shutting off lights, securing windows, and taking cover under desks, school officials aimed just to keep students inside classrooms.

McIntosh said the climate inside classrooms was loose.

"Most of our class was just joking around," he said.

The lockdown was over without incident in 10 to 15 minutes, Hanson said.

The previous lockdown on March 24, which involved the entire district, occurred when Steven Sueppel went missing after his family was found dead.

Superintendent Lane Plugge said lockdowns are determined based on information from local law-enforcement officials. Then, principals and other school officials carry out designated emergency procedures.

"We have written plans that are shared with staff members at the building," Plugge said. "Plans have many similarities but each school may be different."

Jim Behle, the assistant superintendent for the Iowa City School District, said while teachers are educated about what to do in a number of emergency situations, the district does not require schools to practice lockdown drills.

"The reason we don't have specific drills is because each lockdown situation would be different," he said. "It isn't like a fire drill where everyone evacuates."

However, school officials are taking other steps as a precaution against potential incidents.

Last year, faced with a record number of fights, City High administrators began enforcing stricter hallway policies. Teachers were instructed not to allow students to leave classrooms except when absolutely necessary, Hanson said. The school also hired additional hall monitors.

West High Principal Jerry Arganbright said aside from a district-wide lockdown last year, West High has not enforced any lockdowns or restrictions.

City High's restrictions yielded results. Plugge said the district's annual "Safety and Climate Report" found that physical confrontations in Iowa City high schools fell from 56 in the first trimester to 12 each in the second and third trimesters.

This year, Hanson said there has been "no official moratorium" on restricting student hallway access.

But students still say faculty continue to limit privileges.

"It's just like last year; everyone gets yelled at for being in the halls," City High senior Tyler Shoemaker said.

Finding fresh but affordable

By Mary Harrington
THE DAILY IOWAN

For local families, low-income does not necessarily mean low-quality. At least not at the dinner table.

Every week, the Local Foods Connection delivers fresh food to 87 low-income families in Iowa City. The local nonprofit organization works with area farmers to help harvest organic produce and distribute it to needy families.

"I think it is really important that fresh food does not become something that is just available to an elite population," said Susan Jutz, the owner of ZJ's Farm near Solon.

Local Foods Connection is different from most food-donation organizations because cheaper foods, such as canned or dried goods, are not an option.

"Fresh produce is so important to a healthy diet, yet it's the first thing to go out of a low-income person's diet," said Caroline Gottschalk-Eruschke, a volunteer for the group.

In addition to providing needy families with nutritious foods, the program also allows for a unique volunteer experience.

Three UI students worked on Jutz's farm on Sunday, cleaning up her greenhouse in preparation for a fall harvest. Approximately 150 students donate their time to the cause each year.

Chris Page, a volunteer coordinator for the UI Honors Program, which organized the event, said he enjoys working with the organization because he can see the results of his efforts at the end of the day.

Organic farming

Along with the food donations, the volunteer organization emphasizes education when working with the families. Recipes, fact sheets, and surveys are distributed to the food recipients.

"You can't just give someone, say, a box of arugula, and expect them to know what to do with it," Gottschalk-Eruschke said.

Clients are also expected to visit a local farm once per season to learn about Iowa farming and interact with local farmers.

And although those farmers are happy to support this effort, their mission is not at all an easy one.

Jutz lost money this season, and her food-delivery fees did not cover the costs of transportation.

The local farmer — she is the only full-time worker on her 80 acres of land — charges $355 for 20 weeks worth of fresh produce. The fee is paid in advance and the clients then receive a large cooler full of in-season, organic vegetables each week.

Local Foods Connection buys out some of these shares of produce for low-income families, paying off their fees through volunteer work on the farms.

Gottschalk-Eruschke said it is also important to support the local farmers, so the organization leaders do not ask the producers to donate anything for free. Through their combined efforts, others are able to enjoy a fresh taste of what the community has to offer.

"It's not just any food we're giving," said Gottschalk-Eruschke. "It's good-for-you food, and it's good food."

Challenger soldiers on

Second District Republican challenger Mariannette Miller-Meeks sounds off.

By Shawn Gude
THE DAILY IOWAN

At this weekend's Iowa-Iowa State game, amid a sea of red, yellow, and black T-shirts, Bud Lights and Busch Lights, and umbrellas and ponchos, sat a white-and-light-blue-striped ambulance. The vehicle, parked in a lot at Kinnick Stadium, is a prop for the Mariannette Miller-Meeks for Congress campaign, whose slogan is: "Healing Iowans, Healing Congress." A blue rain tent was attached to the ambulance, shielding the candidate, staffers, and the free food from the morning rain. Pastry in one hand, the tailgating Ottumwa doctor — the Republican challenger to Rep. Dave Loebsack — spoke with The Daily Iowan.

DI: Three months after you won the Republican primary, how would you evaluate your campaign and the progress you're making?

Miller-Meeks: We continue to gather support in all counties. We see a lot of momentum in our direction, and we're just not hearing a lot from the incumbent.

DI: A month and a half out from the election, how do you feel about your chances?

Miller-Meeks: I feel like the Hawkeyes' chances to win this game — very good.

DI: You do have a lot going against you. You have the money gap [Loebsack has around $470,000 on hand, while Miller-Meeks has a little over $5,000, according to the most recent data], you're a Republican in a Democratic year, and you're going up against an incumbent. What do you have to do to overcome that, and how hard do you think it's going to be to overcome that?

Miller-Meeks: I think anything worthwhile doing requires a sacrifice and takes hard work, and I am known for my work ethic. He has more money; I've got more shoes. I'm wearing out the shoe leather meeting voters. We don't see him anywhere. We don't see people energized for his campaign.

DI: Do you think the money advantage is overblown?

Miller-Meeks: I think the media uses markers for campaigns. One of them is money. I think that's a poor marker. They underestimate Iowa voters. Iowa voters are looking at the issues, and they're looking at the candidates. When they look at an incumbent, they say, "What has the incumbent done for me?" And so far, he's voted 98 percent of the time with his party.

DI: What are your main criticisms of Loebsack? Obviously you think he's too much of a party guy, but what are some of the specific criticisms that you have of him?

Miller-Meeks: When he campaigned against [former Rep. Jim] Leach, he went in for ethics reform and no [Political Action Committee] money. Seventy percent of his funds that he's raised are PAC money. The ethics reform — we haven't seen that. We still see earmarks. Not only has he voted for his party, but he really hasn't done anything to distinguish himself in getting flood monies for Iowa. Prior to adjourning, [Iowa Rep. Leonard] Boswell said [House Speaker Nancy] Pelosi would ensure we have funds. We still don't have them.

DI: So do you think Loebsack's to blame for that? Do you not think he's pushing hard enough?

Miller-Meeks: You're darn right. I think we should be pushing hard. We should be like bulldogs, not lapdogs. I may be Mariannette, but I'm nobody's puppet.

DI: What are the specific issues you're looking to push in this campaign that you have major differences with Loebsack on?

Miller-Meeks: Since last year, I've been pushing a comprehensive energy policy with a diversity of supplies, I've been pushing economic growth and how we manage to do that. ... Health-care reform — how do we get health care that's accessible to everyone, that's affordable, that's portable? No one should be worried about having a car accident, or a heart attack, or cancer and not being able to navigate and access the health-care system.

DI: So why do you think your plans on those issues are better than Loebsack's?

Miller-Meeks: I have expertise on those issues, I've run a small business, I'm a veteran, I'm a doctor, I'm a nurse, I left home at 16 to work my way through college. I think I have this knowledge base that really gives me expertise in all of these areas, and he does not. It's hard to advocate for issues if you don't have knowledge of the issues. Then you're just suspect to what lobbyists tell you.

Playing tag with the monarchs

By Mike McDonald
THE DAILY IOWAN

Last year, the Rowold family captured and tagged 22 decadently colored black and orange monarch butterflies. But after such success in 2007, the Rowolds unfortunately went home without tagging a single monarch on Sunday.

Ben Rowold and his daughter, Gen Rowold, have participated in the Johnson County Conservation Board's monarch butterfly tagging event for four years. "We think they're beautiful animals," Ben Rowold said, describing himself as having a strong passion for nature.

Overall, this year's butterfly tagging conditions were less than desirable for the several dozen participants, with high winds carrying the insects beyond the reach of taggers' nets.

The tagging, which took place at Kent Park on Sunday, is part of the Monarch Watch Program, sponsored by the University of Kansas. The university sells tags to monarch enthusiasts around the country in an effort to track the butterflies' annual 1,600-mile fall migration to Mexico — something Johnson County conservation board naturalist Brad Freidhof calls "a monarch vacation."

He led an information session for dozens of attendees — both newcomers and seasoned veterans — and explained how to attach a sticker to the wing of the butterfly. The participants then grabbed white nets and marched into the towering grasses and florescent purple and yellow flowers in search of monarchs.

The conservation board buys around 200 tags per year, Freidhof said, and allows families such as the Rowolds the opportunity of snatching insects.

"It's about the thrill of the hunt," Gen Rowold said, keeping her eyes peeled for the smallest flit of flapping wings. "It brings out my competitive side."

Each year, researchers from the University of Kansas venture to central Mexico to see if any of the tags have been recovered. Residents of Mexico who find a tagged butterfly receive $5, which serves as an incentive to keep the land of the butterflies' new home protected.

If locals don't receive the payment, Freidhof fears the area will soon become farmland.

"We are trying to create an economy based on the monarchs [in Mexico]," he said.

Since the conservation board began participating in the program in 2002, eight tagged butterflies have been found. Most of those tags were discovered in the town of El Rosario, Mexico — 1,608 miles from the dense shrubbery of the Iowa park.

Taggers can check the program website to see if a butterfly they marked has been located. Although none the Rowolds tagged in the past have showed up, Ben Rowold said the idea of tracking the insect south of the border is "fascinating."

Some families were able to snag a piece of natural-science history, despite windy conditions. But the Rowold family left disappointed.

After a near miss, Ben Rowold shook his head and looked into an empty net. "Nothing," he said.

Meanwhile, Gen Rowold thought about next year.

"This year will be the story about the one that got away," the 29-year-old said. "We will look back and say, remember that fourth year? We got close. It was a big one, too."

Probing mental health

The UI's presentation was one of fifty across the nation.

By Meredith Mulford
THE DAILY IOWAN

Twenty-five percent of American adults and 10 percent of children will likely suffer a diagnosable mental illness this year.

It's facts such as these that motivated the National Alliance for Research on Schizophrenia and Depression come to the UI on Sunday to raise awareness about mental health.

The goal of the Healthy Minds Across America forum, held in coordination with about 50 other similar presentations across the United States and Canada, was to increase understanding of mental-health treatments.

"We hope to convey some appreciation of the impact of mental illness [and] hope to increase awareness about the challenges addressed and faced by mental health research," said Jess Fiedorowicz, an associate in the UI psychiatry department who spoke Sunday.

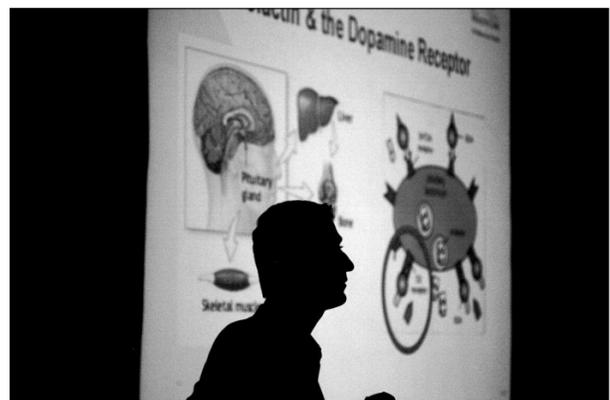

To begin the event, Chadi Calarge, a UI assistant professor, addressed the effectiveness of the mental-illness medications on the market.

Medicines being used today are not up to par and further research needs to be conducted in order better understand how to match patients with care, Chadi said.

"It's very important to realize what factors make someone more reactive to treatment," he said.

Speakers also noted that mental-health medications are sometimes responsible for other health problems.

Following Calarge's presentation, Fiedorowicz discussed mortality rates related to mental illness and suicide. He said these "excess deaths" are strongly associated with the nation's inability to effectively treat mental disorders.

"Individuals with mental illness represent an excess amount of mortality," he said. "No single solution will address this public-health problem."

He suggested basic research, health and public policy, and increased access to mental-health services as ways to address the issue can be looked into.

Stephen Trefz, executive director of the Community Mental Health Center for Mid-Eastern Iowa, agreed that more effort needs to go into caring for the mentally ill.

"What I want to underscore is that with early diagnosis, early treatment, and good self-care, these disorders are very amenable to good outcomes," he said.

Police review board provides chance for improvement locally

Unfortunately, many UI students' only interactions with the Iowa City police are negative and one-sided. However, the community's Police Citizens Review Board's public meetings offer an opportunity for positive change.

Rather than waiting to be charged with a PAULA, public intoxication, or maintaining a disorderly house before complaining about the police's priorities and tactics, concerned students should take the opportunity to express their views in advance of facing any potential legal difficulties. Doing so would add more credibility to young people's arguments that the police are not serving the community's actual best interests.

On Tuesday at 7:30 p.m., the Iowa City Police Citizens Review Board will hold a community forum in Harvat Hall, 410 E. Washington St. The meeting will include information about the board's history, an explanation of how to file complaints against the police, and an open public discussion.

According to the city's website, the board serves a number of different purposes. First, it conducts and publicizes independent reviews of police investigations into people's allegations of officer misconduct. Second, it maintains a registry of complaints against police officers and files regular reports regarding this data to the City Council. Third, it reviews general police policies and practices and recommends changes to the City Council.

Although learning about how to file complaints against officers who act inappropriately would serve all members of the community well, getting good information about this process is especially important for students and other young people. Most UI students come to Iowa City from communities across Iowa, the United States, and the world. Not having deep roots or substantial support networks in Iowa City makes students particularly vulnerable to feeling there is nothing they can do if they believe they have been mistreated by law-enforcement authorities.

Attending the review-board forum will help students better understand the nature of the complaint-filing process, both with regards to how they can go about filing complaints and what they can expect if they do. Also, learning about how the board reports on allegations of officer misconduct to the City Council could help students more fully grasp the importance of participating in the local elections that decide what sort of councilors will be watching over the police.

Perhaps the most important reason for students to attend the board's forum is simply to make their voices heard. Every weekend, particularly when there are home football games, the police blotters in local newspapers swell with the names of students ticketed or arrested for engaging in a wide variety of conduct. Obviously, many students' behavior is not significantly affected by the state of the law regarding such activities as underage alcohol consumption.

Everyone can agree that binge drinking can lead to behavior that endangers the health and lives of not only those engaging in it but also other members of the community. However, given the huge number of young people who break alcohol-consumption laws as they tailgate before football games or at other types of parties, it is obvious that most of the people engaging in this behavior do not end up causing serious problems in the community. Thus, it is reasonable to question whether the current law-enforcement strategies, which may wind up being highly arbitrary in whom they punish, are truly effective in maximizing public safety.

Ultimately, students who feel that Iowa City would be better served by a police force more focused on reckless behavior and violent crime than simply underage drinking or public intoxication have a responsibility to make their case publicly. If such people attend the Police Citizens Review Board in sufficient numbers and make their arguments in a thoughtful and respectful manner, perhaps the city government will reconsider some of the policies it currently follows.

Live life while you can

Hey freshmen, chug another pitcher at Jakes for me next time you go out. Don't worry — I'll keep an eye on the door.

Please engage in all sorts of stupid shit while you can. You may regret it tomorrow, you may regret it at next month's court date, but you'll thank me in a couple of years.

Blurt jungle-juice red puke in a stranger's empty dorm room, get kicked out with the trash bag, and forget that you're holding it by the time you get back to your hall. Spend as many Sunday mornings as possible unable to do anything but stare at your dorm room's splotchy white walls because anything else will probably make your roommate wish he didn't leave his toothbrush on the sink. Punch out the screen of your window in a failed attempt to dump alcohol before letting the RAs in (OK, that one isn't mine, but I kinda wish it was).

DEAN TREFTZ

All of these things are incredibly dumb and you couldn't pay me to do them again. But they're staples in my "Crazy story" pantry.

"Crazy" may not realize it now (I hadn't at the time), but this is probably the peak of your doing-dumbass-shit career. True, some of you will go forth and prove me wrong until you're 35, and that's more than a little creepy, but for many, freshman year is the pinnacle of actions that will make your parents consider putting aside some money for future bail.

That desperate scramble for friends and respect that so easily turns to alcohol pushed me to do things I couldn't imagine. Along with the drinking, there was an unwritten moral code of acting as crazy as possible.

But after a couple rounds of finals (and too many of Hawkeye Vodka), I slowly realized that there actually is such a thing as too much to drink. By the time I hit 21, it was almost over, and even on those occasional 11-beer nostalgia nights, I don't pee, puke, or insert my tongue in nearly as many places.

My new "I'm an idiot" tales started to come more and more from classes, work, love life, and imagination. I started to gravitate toward bars with floors that don't remind you of walking on Velcro. At the ATM before $2-you-call-it night, I now think in $5's and $10's instead of $20s.

It's definitely not a bad thing. Ask most seniors walking by the Sports Column on a Friday night, and they'll agree.

Still, there was a definite right of passage to be found in my insecure shenanigans four years ago. In my desperate attempts to prove something (not sure what now), I learned the benefits of moderation in a way that can't be taught.

More importantly, I have the requisite tales to tell at parties. I don't know if there's a better unifying topic among people I meet than the proud, pseudo-self-effacing stupid freshman story.

It does occur to me that advising the younger and more impressionable crowd at this fine institution to indulge in their basest instincts may come across as somewhat morally unscrupulous. That in mind, I would like to temper this with a note to the two (well-populated) extremes here on campus.

If you are that guy or girl who is already redefining hedonism on your floor to the point that even your friends think you should probably slow down, they're probably right. To be fair, you've probably had already several of your equivalents of my freshman year in high school.

If you are able to find fun sanely and soberly, or just determined to do so, I wish you luck (especially in the UI dorms). If you do one day decide to start partying, ease into it. I remember the first time I saw a certain friend of mine drink at a party, she needed at least three handlers to keep her vertical.

But if you're just some naïve kid from Minnesota (or wherever) who has more experience watching Animal House than actually attending college, let loose a little while you can.

So to everyone taking up the whole sidewalk on the way back to Quad, blowing through dryer sheets in Daum, and taking tandem showers in Burge, remember: If you can't remember it and brag about it in a couple of years, it's not really going to be worth it in the morning. ■

Veterans should support Democrats

One strong, unwavering principle guides my decisions this election year. In my years serving in both the Army and National Guard, I knew it as "Never Leave A Buddy Behind," and we who served hold that commitment at our very cores. Gen. George Washington told us this commitment doesn't stop at the edge of the battlefield if we are to remain safe and free. Washington said, "The willingness with which our young people are likely to serve in any war, no matter how justified, shall be directly proportional as to how they perceive the veterans of earlier wars were treated and appreciated by their country."

This November, I will vote for people who understand and uphold this commitment. People such as Art Staed, who worked in the Iowa House to improve the lot of veterans and their families here in Iowa despite G.O.P. opposition. People such as Dave Loebbeck and Tom Harkin, who worked to pass the Omvig Veterans Suicide Prevention Act despite G.O.P. opposition. People such as Barack Obama, who has consistently worked and voted to improve the lives of veterans, while his Republican opponent, a veteran himself, consistently votes against veterans. No wonder the Disabled American Veterans rates McCain as among the worst members of Congress when it comes to working for veterans.

This disabled combat veteran will stand with and vote for those who stand with and vote for me and my brothers- and sisters-in-arms, not those who simply claim veteran status. Sorry, formerly Grand now merely Old Party, our country and Constitution, and those who serve to ensure we remain safe and free, are too important to be entrusted to those who don't understand Gen. Washington's message. We Don't Leave Our Buddies Behind. Ever. Period.

Vote Democrat.

Bush decision to step up U.S. attacks necessary, overdue

For more than six years, the Bush administration has relied on Pakistan's government and army to combat Taliban and Qaeda networks based in the country's tribal territories along the border with Afghanistan. The result has been the strengthening of both networks in the rugged and virtually lawless region, a steady increase in Taliban assaults on U.S. and NATO forces in Afghanistan, and ominous reports that Al Qaeda is using its bases to prepare for new attacks on Western targets, including the United States. By now it is clear that Pakistani army and security forces lack the capacity to defeat the extremists — and may even support some of the Taliban commanders. Pakistan's army has arranged truces with some of the extremists that don't preclude them from fighting in Afghanistan. U.S. officials say that the Pakistani intelligence service was complicit in a July 7 suicide bomb attack on the Indian embassy in Kabul.

In these circumstances, President Bush's reported decision in July to step up attacks by U.S. forces in the tribal areas was both necessary and long overdue. According to a count by the Associated Press, there have been seven missile strikes by remotely controlled Predator aircraft in the past month, as well as one ground assault by helicopter-borne American commandos. At least two of the targets have been Taliban commanders reportedly considered friendly by Pakistani intelligence — including Jalaluddin Haqqani, the alleged author of the Indian embassy bombing. The results of the attacks are hard to gauge, because U.S. officials refuse to discuss them; reports from the remote areas, often by sources sympathetic to the Taliban, frequently allege that most or all of the casualties are civilians.

To its credit, the Bush administration has tried to execute this shift in tactics while preserving its alliance with the Pakistani army and the new civilian government. It's a tricky balancing act: The latest attacks have prompted outraged public statements by the army commander in chief and the prime minister, and there have even been threats to retaliate against American forces. But army chief Gen. Ashfaq Kiyani was briefed by senior U.S. commanders at a summit meeting on an aircraft carrier last month, and his forces still are in line for billions of dollars in U.S. aid. Pakistan's newly elected president, Asif Ali Zardari, also will desperately need U.S. support to extract the country from a worsening economic crisis and move forward with an ambitious program to counter extremism in the tribal territories with economic development.

There's a risk that the missile strikes will prompt a breach between the U.S. and Pakistani armies or destabilize Zardari's democratically elected administration, which is the friendliest Washington could hope for in a country with strong anti-American sentiment. Some experts argue that U.S. attacks only increase support for the Taliban. But the group already appears to have a stranglehold on large parts of the tribal territories. U.S. commanders say that victory in Afghanistan is impossible unless Taliban bases in Pakistan are reduced. And no risk to Pakistan's political system or its U.S. relations is greater than that of a second 9/11 staged from the tribal territories. U.S. missile and commando attacks must be backed by the best intelligence and must minimize civilian casualties. But they must continue.

Eco tip of the week
 Save some energy by washing your next load of laundry on cold-water settings. Most items don't need to be washed in hot water, and a whopping 90 percent of energy used during a laundry cycle comes from heating up the H₂O. After all, polar bears bathe in chilly water — why can't your jeans?

COOK IN PROGRESS

In the kitchen
 Join DI reporter and cook-in-progress Elizabeth Timmins for a video feature on today's vegetarian chili recipe at dailyiowan.com.

As temperatures outside drop, nothing sounds better than a warm meal. Yet, for vegetarians on the go, finding the time and creativity to make a meal and fulfill all nine of the essential amino acids (protein) can seem daunting. Luckily, a week's worth of dinner can be created in a few hours with a Crock-Pot and $25. Vegetarian chili, made with bulgur (cracked wheat) and two types of beans, covers all the amino bases. In case high-school health class did not teach you about amino acids and protein, here's a rundown.

There are two types of protein: complete and incomplete. Incomplete protein lacks one or more essential amino acids; complete protein contains all nine. Complete protein often originates from animals but can be obtained from a combination of food.

Try this easy-to-make chili this weekend to save time during the week.

VEGETARIAN CHILI RECIPE

- What you'll need:
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
 - 1 onion, chopped
 - 2 carrots, peeled, thinly sliced
 - 1 red bell pepper, seeded, chopped
 - 3 large jalapeño chilies, seeded, minced
 - 1 28-ounce can crushed tomatoes
 - 3 cups water
 - 2 15-ounce cans black beans, rinsed, drained
 - 2 15-ounce cans kidney beans, rinsed, drained
 - ½ cup bulgur (available at New Pioneer Co-op, 22 S. Van Buren St.)
 - 2 tablespoons white-wine vinegar
 - 5 garlic cloves, minced
 - 2 tablespoons chili powder
 - 1½ teaspoons ground cumin
 - 1½ teaspoons ground coriander
 - ½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
- What to do:
1. Sauté onion, carrots, red pepper, and jalapeños with olive oil in a sauté pan until carrots are tender.
 2. Put tomatoes, water, beans, bulgur, vinegar, garlic, and spices in crock-pot.
 3. Add sautéed vegetable mixture to crock-pot.
 4. Leave crock-pot on medium heat for several hours.
 5. Enjoy several meals of deliciousness.

Burning fun, Coen style

It may not be another Oscar-dominating masterpiece, but the latest from the Coen brothers returns them to their usual style with grace and hilarity to spare. OK, maybe not so much the grace.

George Clooney and Frances McDormand kick back and enjoy a delightful romantic comedy in Burn After Reading. Which, for the record, is a comedy about as dark as the theater they're sitting in here.

"I'm fixin' to do something dumber than hell, but I'm going anyway."

The above quotation, as many completists can probably already identify, comes from the screenplay for last year's No Country For Old Men. On the surface, it has pretty much nothing in common with the writing/directing team's latest effort, Burn After Reading — if anything, this looks like a step backward.

After all, hadn't the Coens spent too much time doing their usual thing — working with their typical casts (Frances McDormand and George Clooney are some of the main repeats here), detectable screenplays (dealing with money and the scramble to get it, usually), and fondness for classic Hollywood cinema (Hitchcock himself would be proud at the ridiculous plot here)?

No, not really. Because, as Burn After Reading proves, these things are classic Coen traits because they're classical in the best possible sense — not worn-out.

Doing things extraordinarily dumb but going anyway is kind of the point, after all, of many beloved Coen characters, and the ridiculous web of Burn After Reading's plot is par for the course.

Linda (McDormand) and her best friend, Chad (Brad Pitt), are leading ho-hum lives of working at a Washington, D.C., gym and looking for love online, until the day when a CD of, as Chad puts it, "some raw intelligence shit" lands in their midst. Obviously, this is their opportunity for blackmail — "You slip on the ice outside a fancy restaurant. Or something like this happens," Linda explains matter-of-factly of the chances life hands a person.

The CD actually belongs to Osborne Cox (John Malkovich, in full volcanic fury mode) an ex-CIA man whose icy wife Katie (Tilda Swinton) is one of many charmed into sleeping with the also-married Harry (Clooney). Somehow, the Russian Embassy also gets involved, and it doesn't seem that far-fetched.

This tendency is actually what makes Burn After Reading such a pleasure to watch — not the ability to work in a Cold-War-style villainous figure, but the way that the film makes even the most insane things, be they lines of dialogue or plot threads, just coast by on the wave of fun the filmmakers are having. (The indispensable J.K. Simmons gets the joy of delivering, "So, we don't really know what anyone is after.") That's writer/directors and cast included: All the new additions to the clan are fine, with the standout being Pitt and the weakest link Clooney, surprisingly enough, bringing just a little too much twitchiness to his philanderer.

It's almost as if all the positive criticism for No Country got channeled into this: an ultimate Coen flick — a melding of the comedic spirit behind past caper comedies such as O Brother, Where Art Thou? and Raising Arizona and, in the truly smart move in the screenplay's later section, twisting into the violent kind of ironic humor that fueled so many moments in Fargo and its ilk.

Does this live up to those past moments of glory? No. And, to answer the unspoken question posed by my opening paragraph, no, it's certainly not attempting to live up to the No Country fervor. But it does prove, as perhaps its creators were hoping to, that having a style detectable enough that film dweebs such as myself often just throw "esque" at the end of your name isn't a sin if you know how to work it right.

TRIPPIN' ON 'ACID'

Jenny Lewis: Rilo Kiley frontwoman, indie-rock princess, former Angelina Jolie costar, red-head awareness raiser. Many titles for one woman, and she deserves them all. Her work with Rilo Kiley is of course classic, and her 2006 solo debut Rabbit Fur Coat was pretty darn good. Actually, it was great. I think I played it too much during senior year of high school, and it got all scratched up. Oops.

Lucky for me, she's releasing another disc on Sept. 23, titled Acid Tongue. Even luckier for me, it was posted in its entirety on her MySpace, though now there are curiously only two tracks up. At least there are still those semi-creepy YouTube videos she made with Ben Gibbard to watch. Why can't he be hiding in my closet?

CROSS-COUNTRY

UNI trumps women harriers

The Iowa women's cross-country team ran in a non-scored dual meet against the UNI Panthers on Sept. 12. The Hawkeyes held their top seven runners out of the race.

Caedryn Schrunk of UNI won the race with a time of 10:39.58, and she was followed closely by teammate Carly Olsen, who finished in second at 10:44.09. UNI had four of the top five finishers.

Iowa junior Krista Anderson led most of the 3K race but eventually gave up the lead.

Hawkeye coach Layne Anderson admitted to not being too thrilled with the results.

"I certainly expected a little more," he said. "I would have loved to have a few women up there mixing it up with that front group even though we didn't send our top runners to the line."

Fionna Fallon, Jennie Docherty, Rachel Hawks, and Katie Ellis rounded out the top five for Iowa, finishing in sixth, eighth, ninth and 10th.

The Hawkeyes will next compete at the Lakefront Invitational at Loyola University in Chicago on Sept. 27, but Layne Anderson admitted that he is looking forward to the championship season and the big meet the team has Oct. 4 at Auburn.

"We will definitely look to run a lot faster than we ran this meet and the meet before," he said.

Men dominate UNI

The Iowa men's cross-country team dominated Northern Iowa Sept. 12 at the Ashton Cross-Country Course. Iowa claimed the seven top spots, led by Bruce MacTaggart.

Though the conditions were more monsoon-like than mid-September norms, the Iowa harriers turned in a stellar performance.

Head coach Larry Wieczorek held a handful of his top runners out of the contest — including co-captains Andy Napier and Eric MacTaggart, as well as stand-out freshman Nick Holmes — giving some unknown Hawkeyes a chance to bask in the limelight.

Sophomore Matt Battista took advantage of his chance to lead the Black and Gold. He seized control of the race from the opening gun, pacing the field through the 6,000-meter race.

But Bruce MacTaggart was not to be outdone. Keeping tempo with Battista throughout the race, MacTaggart used a late charge to seize the individual victory in the last 30 meters, finishing with a time of 19:27.27. Battista finished second with a time of 19:28.36, followed by Tommy Tate, who crossed the finish-line in 19:43.75.

"It was good for Mark Battista to set the pace and run to win because that's a tough thing to do," Wieczorek said. "Bruce is a big finisher, though, and he has a great kick. This time he was close enough to get the win."

Hawkeye football players hold up the Cy-Hawk trophy after beating Iowa State on Sept. 13 in Kinnick Stadium. The Hawkeyes reclaimed it after losing to Iowa State last year at Jack Trice Stadium, 15-13.

Through early rain and poor offensive play, Iowa regained the Cy-Hawk trophy.

A sell-out crowd watched on as the two mega-sized scoreboards lit up the final game tally: Iowa 17, Iowa State 5.

Then, in a matter of seconds, 365 days' worth of remorse, heartache, and yearning was washed away as an inky wave of students and fans, outfitted in their blackout gear, spilled onto the soggy sod of Kinnick Stadium. By Ryan Young

A joyous herd of Hawkeye players waited near midfield, the coveted Cy-Hawk trophy at the epicenter of the swarm.

Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz stayed out of the throng, however, quickly running into the grotto of his home arena after doing a quick TV interview.

"I missed the celebration, but I'm just happy for our guys, because it meant a lot to them," he said. "We knew this was going to be a tough ball game, and I'll make a prediction — probably the next 10 will be pretty tough, too, when we play Iowa State. That's just the nature of the game."

Scoring became a rarity after Iowa opened with a 70-yard, nine-play scoring drive that ended in a field goal by freshman Trent Mossbrucker for a 3-0 Hawkeye lead. The Hawkeyes failed to capitalize on their next five drives, including a missed 50-yard field-goal attempt by sophomore Daniel Murray in the second quarter.

The Cyclones could have responded with a field goal of their own before the end of the first quarter, following an interception. But Iowa State's Grant Mahoney sailed an attempt wide left.

Fortunately for Iowa, the Cyclones were unable to cash in on their scoring chances against a looming Hawkeye defense, which snatched three interceptions and allowed Iowa State to convert only four times in third-down situations. The defense also has yet to allow a touchdown, surrendering six of the combined eight points opponents have scored on the Hawkeyes.

"We came through at big times in the red zone. We were getting in binds in the red zone, but that's what we do," said sophomore linebacker Jacody Coleman. "We make some big plays at big times, but we still got things to fix."

Rain had Hawkeye running back Shonn Greene slipping and sliding on several hand-offs. Yet even with the less-than-ideal field conditions, he posted 120 yards for his third-straight 100-yard rushing performance.

He gave Iowa a 10-3 lead early in the fourth quarter with a 5-yard touchdown run up the middle, a play that broke a 3-3 deadlock.

"The first half, I just didn't have my feet under me, so I made an adjustment just keeping my feet under me, slowing down a little bit on my cuts," he said.

Senior Andy Brodell provided the biggest offensive spark, though. After being illegally leveled on a punt return in the second quarter, Brodell rocketed into the end zone on an 81-yard

Good football teams always find ways to win, no matter the circumstance. Whether it's 42-0 or 17-5, good teams always find ways to get it done.

I'm here to tell you that after three games, the Iowa Hawkeyes are a pretty good team.

Is the way Iowa beat Iowa State real compelling? No, of course not. In fact, for three quarters, I sat in the Kinnick Stadium press box wondering what I was going to write.

But does it really matter that the Hawkeyes only won this game by 12 points? It shouldn't. All said, the Hawkeye players were running toward the Iowa

HAWKEYE SPORTS

Goin' clubbing

Men's golf finishes fourth

After a disappointing '07-08 season, the Hawkeyes got their year off to a good start with this past weekend's Golden Gopher Invitational in Minneapolis.

Beginning the tournament on Sept. 12, Iowa began in an average manner, posting a team score of 11-over after the first round. However, freshman Chris Brant jump-started his career at Iowa, posting a 73 (1-over) in his first round of collegiate golf. The score was good enough to tie him for 14th place after day one.

The Hawkeyes were able to bounce back on Sept. 13, posting a phenomenal round of 281 (7-under), which moved the team to fourth place. The 281 was the single lowest round that any of the 12 schools shot all weekend and was good enough to tie the fourth best 18-hole score in school history. Senior Cole Peevler led the resurgence with a 67 (5-under).

Although Iowa only managed to shoot a disappointing 303 (15-over) in Sunday's final round, it was still good enough to earn it an impressive fourth-place finish, the highest among the three participating Big Ten teams (Wisconsin, Minnesota). Peevler finished in a three-way tie for second place, posting a 215 (1-under) in three rounds of work.

— by Jordan Garretson

sophomore Mara Hilgenberg chipped in with 16 assists.

"I thought we really took care of business today," head coach Sharon Dingman said, in a release. "It was a great effort by our team today."

Women's tennis coach likes effort

The Iowa women's tennis team kicked off its fall season by competing in the Minnesota Gopher Invitational.

The team was led by sophomore Alexis Dorr (3-1), who reached the championship round of her draw, but fell (6-1, 6-4) to No. 15 Megan Falcon of LSU.

Out of 74 players, the Hawkeyes finished with three players in the top-10 in singles: Sophomore Lynne Poggensee-Wei (3-1) finished ninth, and junior Kelcie Klockenga (2-2) finished 10th.

Also competing in the tournament as double teams were Poggensee-Wei and Dorr (2-2), Klockenga and sophomore Jessica Young (2-2), and senior Merel Beelen and freshman newcomer Allison Majercik (0-1).

However, Beelen, still recovering from surgery in the spring, competed in only one singles match and one doubles match before deciding she couldn't continue. Instead, head coach Daryl Greenan decided to try a new pairing of Majercik and Young (1-2).

Despite a decent showing at the Invite, Greenan thinks that there is still room for improvement. He also believed that experience will help for future competition.

"It looked like our first tournament of the year. It was an overall good starting point," he said. "Their overall effort was there. I think we got a lot of matches we needed to prepare us for future tournaments."

V-ball takes 2 of 3

The Iowa volleyball team improved its record to 5-4 over the weekend after going 2-1 at the Iowa State Tournament.

The Hawkeyes fell to the host Cyclones Sept. 12 in straight sets (28-26, 27-25, 26-24). Iowa wasn't without chances against its in-state rival. The Hawkeyes had set point in both the first and third set but were unable to finish the job.

Leading Iowa were junior Megan Schipper (11 kills), senior Kiley Fister (30 assists), senior Emily Hiza (15 digs), and sophomore Katie Kennedy (five block assists).

On Sept. 13, the Hawkeyes rebounded, taking matches against Xavier and Drake. Against the Musketeers, Iowa dropped the first set but rolled from there (22-25, 25-11, 25-14, 25-19).

Senior Catherine Smale led with 17 kills, Kennedy had eight kills and eight blocks, and Fister had 28 assists. It was never in doubt against the Bulldogs.

Iowa won 3-0, taking the sets (25-18, 25-11, 25-16).

Schipper and Smale led the way, with both collecting a double-double. Schipper had 11 kills and 13 assists, and Smale had 10 kills and digs. Fister had 23 assists to lead the team, while

Field hockey wins

The No. 4 ranked Iowa field-hockey team won a pair of games over the weekend against Stanford and Pacific in Stanford, Calif., improving its record to 4-2 on the young season.

The Sept. 13 3-2 win over Stanford marked the 100th victory for head coach Tracey Griesbaum as the Hawkeyes' head coach. She is now the third Iowa field-hockey coach to cross the century mark in wins.

Iowa followed up the close victory with an 8-0 blowout against Pacific on Sunday. Senior Caitlin McCurdy picked up a hat trick, increasing her team-leading goal total to seven on the year. Also contributing to the scoring was senior Caroline Blaum with two goals, and sophomore Sarah Pergin, senior Katie Naughton, and senior Lauren Pfeiffer each with one.

The Hawkeyes will be back in action Friday at home, when they take on Central Michigan at Grant Field.

More than a symbolic return

Andy Brodell showed his importance to the Iowa football team with an 81-yard punt return for a touchdown in the Hawkeyes' 17-5 win over Iowa State.

By Brendan Stiles
THE DAILY IOWAN

If what Andy Brodell went through over the past calendar year would be considered a journey, then that journey took a turn for the better.

Twelve months ago, in a game against the Wisconsin Badgers, Brodell suffered a hamstring injury that sidelined him for the remainder of the 2007 season.

Brodell has now made his way back, and it showed in Iowa's 17-5 win over Iowa State on Sept. 13. With the Hawkeyes leading 10-3 in the fourth quarter, Brodell fielded a 47-yard punt at his own 19, made a couple of moves, and found himself eluding Cyclone defenders and scampering toward daylight.

"That was the gutsiest play I ever saw, for sure," junior quarterback Jake Christensen said. "To tear your hamstring from the bone about 365 days from this Saturday, that long ago, a year ago, I couldn't be more happy for him."

Brodell arguably made the biggest play of his career with an 81-yard punt return for an Iowa touchdown that sealed the deal on the Hawkeyes' victory. It was the first punt returned for a score by Iowa since Jovon Johnson took one back against Ball State in 2005 and also the first time since the 2006 Alamo Bowl against Texas that Brodell scored a touchdown.

"We knew that if we executed our jobs like we need to, there would be a seam," Brodell said. "Fortunately for me, I was able to field the ball, make a guy miss, and hit the seam, and the rest is history."

It was a play that had the entire Hawkeye sideline jumping up and down along with the rest of the Iowa faithful clad in Hawkeye black.

Brodell's return proved to be symbolic of the route he took to get back on the football field.

"That's a senior player making a big, big play for our team when we needed one," head coach Kirk Ferentz said. "It's a result of his hard work and determination. A lot of times, he could have turned it around a little bit, too. But he just hung in there and did a fantastic job, and I'm extremely happy for him."

In his postgame press conference, Ferentz began to get somewhat emotional talking about the Ankeny native and everything he had done leading up to the Sept. 13 contest.

"When you have to surgically repair something like that, that's a concern," he said. "This has been a real hard road for Andy. I'm not saying he's back 100 percent yet, but people just don't realize, most people don't, I think, the price guys pay to get out there and play."

There had always been questions about Brodell's speed, and those questions became even more paramount with Brodell working to recover from a torn hamstring.

For one day, at least, all those questions were answered on one long journey from the 19 yard line to the end zone.

"Regardless of how fast I am after my injury, it doesn't really matter," Brodell said. "I'm going to be out there, and I'm going to try to contribute any way I can. [On Sept. 13], I was able to get there and get to the end zone on a punt return."

State sidelines to retain the Cy-Hawk Trophy and bragging rights on the in-state rival, which is all Hawkeye fans really wanted after this weekend, right?

I'm certain there are some fans bummed that Iowa didn't cover the 13.5-point spread on Saturday's game, but while the Hawkeyes may not have covered the Vegas line, they did keep another spread offense from scoring a touchdown for the third-straight week.

Now forget about the competition for one second, and consider that after one quarter of this season, Iowa has outscored its opponents by a combined 105-8.

No, that is not a misprint.

I don't give a damn who those three opponents are if you're outscoring them all combined by a 97-point margin. That's another thing good teams do. The teams they're supposed to blow out, they blow out. They also find ways to win nail-biters against opponents throwing everything but the kitchen sink at them, i.e. Iowa State.

Never mind that Iowa hasn't allowed a single touchdown through three games. The Hawkeye defense has already held three opponents to combined single digits after three contests. As Lee Corso would say, "Yo."

I could sit here and tell you that the Cyclones' coaching staff seemed clueless with some of their playcalling, which I'll admit did contribute to why the Hawkeyes were able to eventually pull away.

But elaborating on that would be unfair, in a sense, to the Iowa guys who gave it all they had on the Kinnick gridiron. Instead, I'm going to give credit where credit is due.

Maybe Jake Christensen didn't throw any touchdown passes when he entered the game for starter Ricky Stanzi, but everyone was praising him after the game for the checkdown he made that led to Shonn Greene's run the play before he punched in what proved to be the game-winning touchdown.

Maybe Andy Brodell only had two catches for 19 yards. But who didn't jump out of the seat when he returned that fourth-quarter punt back 81 yards for a touchdown?

Maybe the defense is "bend, but don't break," but even with Iowa State rotating quarterbacks every other series (they have a bigger problem than Iowa at that position), the fact they were able to keep the Cyclones from making that extra big play speaks volumes about how good they really are.

I guess what I'm trying to say is that Iowa fans ought to appreciate this victory more so than be upset that the Hawkeyes didn't slaughter the Cyclones. The Hawkeyes did all the little things on Sept. 13 necessary to win ball games.

That's what good teams do. E-mail DI columnist Brendan Stiles at: brendan-stiles@uiowa.edu return in the fourth.

The run put Iowa up, 17-3, with slightly more than six minutes remaining in the game, shifting all momentum to the Iowa sideline.

"Oh my god, I was in awe," sophomore receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos said. "My mouth was wide open as I watched him."

The Hawkeyes had plenty to cheer about in the locker room, but after having played three-straight games in the familiar confines of Kinnick Stadium, is Iowa ready to venture out on the road?

"We're going to find out," Ferentz said. "You know, that's the next challenge."

Greene runs like a vet

By Ryan Young
THE DAILY IOWAN

A year ago, Iowa junior running back Shonn Greene was working in Coralville as a delivery man for McGregors Furniture.

Take his word for it, a dresser is the heaviest piece of furniture to lift.

Hard to imagine. But since Aug. 30, he has been moving more than oak tables and leather coaches.

The Big Ten's fourth-leading rusher with 359 yards posted his third-straight 100-plus yard performance on Sept. 13 against Iowa State. Rushing for 120 yards and a touchdown on 20 carries, the former Kirkwood player is grateful to be back on the gridiron.

The only thing he has to carry on Saturdays is a one-pound pigskin.

"He couldn't have done this two weeks ago," Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz said. "So it's a tribute to the way he's trained, and the way he's trying to get back. And I think he's getting close."

"I have to say this: When I was playing [in college] we never faced anything like him."

But while the game has significantly evolved over the last two decades, Ferentz said Greene's recent performances illustrated why he was team's most important recruit last winter — even if he packed on a few pounds while boosting his GPA.

"It's hard to recruit a guy who's in his 20s," he said. "We don't really recruit many junior-college players. And guys like him are usually taken, you know, if they're in their 20s."

With age comes experience, though. Greene slogged around defenders on a rain-soaked turf, occasionally slipping before passing the line of scrimmage.

On the fifth play of the Hawkeyes' opening drive, Greene ran right and appeared bound for another loss in the backfield. But after shaking an Iowa State defender from his foot, he found his footing and sprinted 31 yards the opposite way for a first down.

Ultimately, the run set up teammate Trent Mossbrucker for a short field goal.

"I was fighting for my life, basically," Greene said. "They pretty much got me in the backfield, and I just didn't want to get a loss. I just so happened to get out and get down the sideline."

Still, he couldn't have kept piling up the yards without a little help from the rest of the offense.

"We have a great offensive line," Greene said. "I mean, wide receivers who go down the field and block, and then with the fullback, he does a great job. I feel like we can run on anybody."

He got a key block from sophomore wide out Derrell Johnson-Koulianos in the fourth quarter during a 20-yard run. Greene was hit out of bounds five yards shy of the end zone but scored his third touchdown of the season on the ensuing play.

"There were just two guys there, and I was just reading their eyes, reading their body language, so I could tell Shonn was coming," Johnson-Koulianos said. "He almost got in. He was pushing me from the back as I was pushing the guy."

As a New Jersey native, Greene isn't as well versed in the Iowa/Iowa State rivalry as his Iowa-born teammates. But he said reclaiming the Cy-Hawk trophy wasn't a goal of his in the first place.

"I just wanted to get it for the guys that took that loss last year," Greene said. "You know, it was more important for them than to me. So I just wanted to do everything I could for them."

Soccer takes 2

The Iowa soccer team came away with two victories this weekend at UNI and against Creighton at home.

By Amie Kiehn
 THE DAILY IOWAN

Senior forward Stephanie Hyink's favorite show "The Office" is wrong. Beets, bears, and Battlestar Galactica are not the only things that reign supreme in the universe.

If Dwight Schrute and Jim Halpert themselves were able to take an extended lunch from their Scranton paper branch and come to Iowa, the duo would realize that the Hawkeye soccer team would also need to be penciled in on their list of the best.

The Hawkeyes' hustle allowed the squad to snap its three-game losing streak this weekend with two decisive 2-0 victories, over UNI on Sept. 12 in Cedar Falls and Creighton on Sunday at home.

Hyink threw her name into the hat for Big Ten "Player of the Week" with not only her two huge goals for the Hawkeyes on Sept. 12 but also with her two assists in the aggressive matchup against Creighton on Sunday. The success the Hawkeyes had in Cedar Falls, though, was made even sweeter because of all the obstacles Iowa overcame.

"The [UNI] game, we were overcoming a lot of adversities I guess," Hyink said. "I mean the [rainy] weather, the grass was like three inches long, but our team came out and played really hard."

The torrential downpour on Sept. 12 could have made some fans believe Hurricane Ike had swarmed middle America. Luckily for those fans, the intense weather did not deter the Hawkeyes or the Panthers.

Iowa also played in less than ideal weather conditions Sunday, with the sun hiding behind the gray clouds, leaving the field extremely moist from the weekend's rain.

However, the soggy sod did not slow down the Hawkeyes' fast and furious style of play.

Sophomore firecracker Keli McLaughlin kept her spark lit the entire game, taking six shots. But as soon as the final horn echoed, she resembled more of a sinking ship than her normally chipper self. Exhaustion was written all over her freckled face.

"We just wanted to come in here and give [Creighton] everything we had, and I think a lot of us did give everything," McLaughlin said, pausing for a quick breath. "I don't know, but I am like dead right now."

The Hawkeyes should be filled with smiles as this weekend's wins not only boosted their morale but also their standing in the Big Ten. As of Sept. 10, Iowa was second to last in the conference overall, but the Hawkeyes are fighting back, and the wins this weekend will assist them in catapulting up the list.

Offense was key to Iowa's triumph, but goalkeepers Emily Moran and Kali Feiereisel kept defense up to par. Feiereisel showed fans at the Iowa Soccer Complex her best "Air Jordan" impression, and the sophomore's vertical skills built an impenetrable wall. The Bluejays huffed and puffed, but they could not whip a ball past Feiereisel.

Head coach Ron Rainey recognized Iowa's goalkeepers as an integral part in the team's success. "One difference between us keeping a shutout was how we played defense and the saves from the goalkeepers," he said.

Colts' comeback repels Vikes

Manning leads Colts back to beat Vikings, 18-15.

By Dave Campbell
 ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — The Indianapolis Colts were overwhelmed at the line of scrimmage and the swirling Minnesota defense frequently pounded Peyton Manning into the Metrodome turf.

But the Colts put the Manning touch on another impressive rally, thanks to a handful of clutch completions near the end by their stalwart quarterback, and reminded the Vikings it's just not possible to win without throwing the ball.

Manning passed for 311 yards and moved Adam Vinatieri in position for the winning field goal with three seconds left, leading Indianapolis to an 18-15 victory on Sunday after Minnesota led 15-0 late in the third quarter.

"We played a lot of man, got in their face, got a lot of pressure, but it wasn't enough," said Antoine Winfield, who had one of Manning's two interceptions. "He's been around. He's seen it all. You can never rattle him, I don't think."

Not since his rookie season in 1998 had Manning and the Colts started a season 0-2.

"That's one of the most satisfying wins I've had, definitely, since I've been in Indianapolis," coach Tony Dungy said. "It wasn't the most artistic, and I told the team we've got a lot of glass-half-empty-glass-half-full stuff, but I was very, very proud of our effort."

The Vikings (0-2) wasted more dominant defense, done in by a handful of critical lapses and repeated failure to figure out that pesky old forward pass. Adrian Peterson rushed for 118 of his 160 yards in the first half, and Minnesota was across midfield on its first eight possessions.

The prize for that? Five field goals by Ryan Longwell and three punts.

"It's real frustrating," said wide receiver Bernard Berrian, who had no catches. "It's kind of embarrassing, actually, to go out there and just have field goals all day. We're moving the ball up and down the field, really, at will. ... The defense played their hearts out today. They did everything they could. I mean, they really handed us the game, and we blew it."

Outgained on the ground 183 to 53 yards in last week's 29-13 loss to Chicago, the Colts were outtrashed this time 180-25. Three-time Pro Bowl center Jeff Saturday (knee) sat out again, tight end Dallas Clark (knee) didn't play, and left tackle Tony Ugoh (groin) was also lost to injury. The defense lost star safety Bob Sanders (ankle), too.

Manning hasn't looked all that sharp since coming back from summer knee surgery, but he's clearly still one of the NFL's best. He finished 26-for-42 and was sacked by Jared Allen and E.J. Henderson.

"Our running game is — it's hard to call it a running game right now," Manning said. "We don't have much of that. We have a pretty one-dimensional team." That didn't matter.

The last of Longwell's field goals — he later missed from 48 yards, his leg perhaps tired from scoring all the points himself — sliced through with 4:13 left in the third quarter.

On the next possession, Manning found a wide-open Anthony Gonzalez for a 58-yard completion on third-and-6 at his own 24. Gonzalez lateraled to Reggie Wayne as he went down, and the ball was eventually spotted at the 1. Joseph Addai, held to 20 yards on 15 carries, barely got in on third down, after an unsuccessful challenge by Minnesota coach Brad Childress, to cut the lead to 15-7.
