Today, UI's recently-based law tasked with investigating the hard of an alleged sexual assault at Hillcrest will issue a highly anticipated report on whether the UI administration managed the case appropriately.

The alleged rape has made headlines for nearly a year, generating questions about what happened and whether the university officials might have muddled procedures.

Ali Fahey, the head of the College of Dentistry's Go Green committee, sorts trash within a waste characterization project on Wednesday. "Recycling is where we need to improve, and we want to address the issue from as many ways as possible," Fahey said.

Most students don't spend their mornings sorting through heaps of trash. But for UI senior Janice Brown, it comes with the territory.

"We are just trying to raise awareness about recycling," the civil and environment-engineering major said as he sifted through a pile of crumpled Post-It notes and stale brown pizza crusts.

Brown was one of around a dozen volunteers conducting a waste-characterization project at the UI College of Dentistry on Wednesday.

"It's a benchmark day," said Tim Knab, a member of the Environmental Coalition.

"This is an example of another small projject contributing to a larger goal. It's pretty sweet," he said.

The project is a small part of the UI's push toward sustainability and represents the first step in the dental school's "Go Green Initiative," a program designed to refine the college's recycling practices.

During the characterization, participants sorted items from the trash into several bins marked for each type of recycla-able. Once items were properly categorized, volunteers weighed the bins to determine how much recyclable waste the college sends to the dump each year.

The college has a diverse waste stream compared with other areas of campus.

"We're doing this so that we can continue to track our progress properly," Fahey said. "If we are sending less to the landfill, that means we are doing a better job of recycling."
Agriprocessors officials plead not guilty to thousands of charges

By Henry C. Jackson

WASHINGTON — Agriprocessors officials entered not guilty pleas last week to thousands of charges of child abuse.

None of the five people charged appeared in court, the court clerk said, and no one was in court.

Aaron Rubashkin, who ran the Agriprocessors plant, and his two brothers, Earl and Hyrum Rubashkin, appeared in person.

Attorneys for the three defendants from rural Black Hawk County all entered not guilty pleas on behalf of their clients.

The five defendants, named in the case, are the same people named in the case that led to the 2008 death of 10-month-old Aydin Hernandez.

None of the five people facing charges, however, are charged in the case that led to Aydin's death.

A federal judge in Iowa has ordered the Agriprocessors plant and its owner, Hyrum Rubashkin, to give the Department of Justice access to any documents it wants in the federal investigation of child abuse.

The five defendants charged in the case are:

• Aaron Rubashkin
• Earl Rubashkin
• Hyrum Rubashkin
• William Williams
• Samuel Williams

The charges stem from a federal investigation that started when Hyrum Rubashkin and William Williams were charged with second-degree theft.

Rubashkin and Williams were arrested in May 2008 after authorities said they were running a child abuse mill at Agriprocessors.

The case is the subject of a 2008 documentary film, “Blood Money,” that was shown at the Sundance Film Festival.

The five people charged are accused of abusing children.

Each defendant faces more than 1,000 charges.

In one case, the defendants are accused of kidnapping a child.

In another case, the defendants are accused of using force to get a child to earn money.

In a third case, the defendants are accused of using force to get a child to perform a task.

The regents are also looking at their options to reinvest. Wirehouse Consulting — which the regents hired to investigate the board’s investment performance — said the current investment community is "a crisis of confidence." Experts with the firm noted that today’s economic state is indirectly affected by equity managers, which create a long-term effect on the investment marketplace.

"Normal could be much nastier," Bryant said. "We’re very concerned about the long-term economic downturn. It does seem to be affecting our portfolio." The firm’s model for the future is based on a median rate of return of 5.5 percent, adjusted for inflation.

UI thinking down the road in flood recovery

UI officials look at the long run for some facilities.

The University Athletic Club is seen on Melissa Avenue on Wednesday. The UI is paying $50,000 per month to lease the club.

By Regina Zilbermints

UI officials may buy the University Athletic Club to offset the loss of the flood-damaged IMU.

"The IMU as a self-funding entity, as far as the fact that the building is closed means that in order to pay its staff, it needs a location to generate the revenue to operate," UI spokesman Steve Parrott said.

The IMU was badly damaged during the flood, and it has been closed since water threatened the building. UI officials are unsure about when the building may again be usable.

UI officials will also appoint an internal flood-mitigation task force to see if the university can do anything to reduce the risk of future flood damage.

"There are a possibility that certain buildings may not reopen, or if they do, their basements may not be put to use. Meanwhile, officials have to think about a different stable, possibly permanent structure."

"In looking at the club, we are thinking longer term," Parrott said, pointing out that the $50,000 per month agreement between the UI and University Athletic Club, 3360 Melrose Ave., is a use agreement, rather than a lease agreement as was done with most buildings, meaning both the UI and current club members can use the building.

Still, a couple of potential analyses remain before a purchase would be included in the purchase price. Parrott declined to comment what that price might be, saying it is still too early being negotiated. Regardless, that money would not come from tuition or taxpayor funds.

"If we bought the club, it would get used," Parrott said, pointing to its strategic location and that the biggest meeting room can hold up to 600 people.

Though the club is compacting for lost space from the IMU, it will continue to use its space at least for now. The state Board of Regents must give its approval, which will mean going through an elaborate and detailed process, Parrott said. The regents may not look at this issue until December.

No decisions have been made yet, Parrott stressed.

UIHC going slowly on communication system

UIHC is not following suit in adapting to popular wireless communication system.

By Adam Sullivan
THE DAILY IOWAN

UI Hospitals and Clinics officials do not plan to jump on a communication bandwagon with a system like Vocera, using a one-touch wireless communication system, which some say has a positive effect on patient care.

The Vocera Communications System — already used in more than 600 facilities around the world, said Vocera spokeswoman Victoria Elizondo — allows hospital personnel to communicate with each other almost instantly. Users press a button located on a small badge and say the name of the person they want to contact. Vocera officials said the hospital has not ruled out the possibility of installing the system, but safety concerns take precedence.

“We have a large complex, and the first concern is always patient safety,” UIHC spokesman Tom Moore said. “There are certain areas of the hospital that cell-phone use is prohibited, for example. What- ever technology you install, you have to make sure that it’s not going to harm patients.”

Moore said the hospital uses satellite phones and wireless phones for intra-hospital communications.

Unlike cell phones, the Vocera badges remain on a wireless network, according to the compa-y’s website. Moore said parts of the UIHC are already on a wireless network, making this device adaptable to the technology.Vocera is already used at some area hospitals, including Mercy Hospitals in Iowa City, Mercy Medical Center in Cedar Rapids, and St. Luke’s Hospital in Cedar Rapids, hospital officials said.

“UIHC is not following suit in adapting to popular wireless communication system,” Moore said.

Jeff Cash, chief information officer at Mercy in Cedar Rapids, said the Vocera system has dramatically improved communication among caregivers.

“The system at Mercy is also linked to devices at patient’s bedside, allowing for nurses to be more accessible to patients,” Cash said.

“UIHC can’t be too careful when you get con-ected with the person who is caring for you, the better quality of care you can get,” he said. “We can connect a patient from the bed directly to the caregiver.”

Cash said the hospital has around 400 of Vocera Hospital communication Vocera communications badges are increasingly popular in hospitals.

• The devices are connected to a server via a wireless network.
• The device weighs fewer than two ounces.
• The device can be used on a lapband around the neck or clipped onto clothing.
• More than 600 facilities around the world are equipped to use the system.

On that note, the quickie.

UIHC police say Davis likely knew her adversary, but they also say they have no suspect.

Police Sgt. Vince Valdez said that after Davis was shot, she ran away into the take of a truck driven by Native Rich of Des Moines. That car then collided with one driven by Robert Pettitton of Ankeny.

Davis’s vehicle went over an embankment, across an exit ramp and into a concrete barrier. It knocked over a pole before landing on its top. The other vehicles veered after the impact and struck a concrete center median. Rich and Pettitton were not seriously hurt, police said.

Bomb threat Scribbled on wall at Dubuque school

DUBUQUE (AP) — Officials at Dubuque Community School District said Wednesday they are investigating a bomb threat scribbled on a wall at a middle school.

The threat, which was discovered Tuesday, was for Friday.

The school district’s policy says that to indicate that it is a credible threat.

DUBUQUE (AP) — Authorities say Dustin Coates and Anthony Heitman, both of Dubuque, sold the bell from the Oakville Evangelical Free Church in Mendenhall on Sunday night.

The bell was sold at a salvage yard in Lakeland, Minn. It was recovered by authorities and will be returned to the church.

The Cherokee County Sheriff’s Office says both men have been charged with third-degree theft.

They are currently being held in the Cherokee County Jail in lieu of $5,000 bond.

The bell has been with the consignment since it was forged in 1926.

Unsurprisingly, this led Blum to choose a close friend to head the Lecture Committee, Brian Bolen. "Brian has been an incredible "Budgeting" and "Allocating" Committee, the group that controls UI's $600,000 budget. We would love to see this process be a lot more transparent than it has been in the past," Blum said. "We want to ensure that the process of allocating money is done in a fair and transparent way."

Two qualified candidates interested in the head position were given the opportunity to speak. Blum has made it clear that he would like to see an end to this independence. Blum has also demanded — as did the budget committee five years ago — that the Lecture Committee bring more politically conscious speakers. Steve Truev, who heads the Lecture Committee in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, will be the new student head. Blum has made it clear that a decision must be made about the future of the Lecture Committee. He was not allowed to continue drinking until the point of a hangover. City posts buyout plan

Iowa City officials submitted a notice of intent for 248 homes to receive federal buyouts Sept. 12, which included all homes and see what FEMA offers.

"They could've had more bang for their buck" he said. Although the city's buyout request is undeniable, he said, a full analysis of damages has not been completed, so it was appropriate for the city to have included all homes and see what FEMA offers.

"There is no way it's happening," said Abbie Yoder, the city's flood-recovery assistant. "There's no way it's happening," said Richard Nakamura, the science. "I am angry that it has been a running process with a degree of pessimism in the Iowa City residences.

As time passes, Jones said, "This was a wise and careful decision," said Barbara Strupp, a professor of psychology and nutritional sciences at Cornell University.

"By discontinuing the study, the mental-health institute will not prove the effectiveness of chelation therapy one way or another. Instead, they have now made a decision with more unanswered questions," said Estepp in a statement.

But many parents of autistic children are believers in the treatment, and mental-health institute agreed to test it.

"The study outline said that autistic children and some don't want to wait," said Amy Andrews/The Daily Iowan. "The next step is to get things together as soon as we can so we have answers," Yoder said, noting that the city is surveying together as soon as we can so we have answers. Alison Cavanaugh is the only junior on Iowa women's golf team.

By Krisanne Ryfler

The beginning of a college student's life isn't always easy. They arrive on a new campus, high school have to worry about in their classes, extra-curricular activities, and living a life away from home.

For Iowa women's golfer Alison Cavanaugh, she not only had to make a transition from high school life in Colorado, but also had to begin her journey on a sports team at Iowa as the only freshman.

"As a coach, you can see great potential in some people who are used to playing at a high level and want to be there," said head coach Didy Anderson. "They want to be there, but not necessarily on a sports team at Iowa."

"It's a bit of an understatement," added head coach Didy Anderson. "She has had her big six events and taken some time to get used to her new experience.

"She's been outstanding. In the team's first match of the year Aug. 22, the Hawkeyes had six freshmen finish in the top 15. Betsy Flood led the team with a fifth-place finish, while Alison Cavanaugh finished eighth after her first and second rounds.

Anderson is hoping that the women learn a lot from the team's current stars, senior All-American Rachael Marchand, and what it takes to be competitive at the highest level.

"If you want to be a golfer, you have to put in the best times, and you may look the way people like Anderson do. It gives everybody a clear picture of what they want to be."

Cavanaugh has come a long way since her inaugural season, winning the Colorado Springs City Championship and getting her strong play over to the Colorado Springs City Championship.

"I definitely feel like my best collegiate tournament golfer is still ahead of me," said Alison Cavanaugh, Iowa women's golfer.
McCoy poses challenge in a phone interview with the DI on Monday. “They work well at: ...率领 at least, the Brewers will be a familiar foe. ...coefficients to the ball. It will be a good game.”

For one Hawkeye at least, the ball is a reminder of how McCoy's tendencies on the gridiron have not been as well-utilized this season. Hawkeye fans hope that by next season, McCoy can be a key part of Iowa's offense.

American University offered Kanaris to Iowa. Once arriving here, Francois said, the thing that it immediately stuck out about Iowa was the climate. “I came in January, and I was like, ‘What is happening here?'” Francois said. “In my country, it is never so cold. I was quite shocked.”

Winter had the same shocking effect for Kanaris. “Winter in Australia, especially Braddon, where I’m from, to 70 to 65 degrees is kind of the coldest it gets during the day,” Kanaris said. “Coming here and having the first winter was kind of a big shock for me.”

Although they both said they enjoyed the climate in Iowa, Francois and Kanaris will be in the Big Ten next year. Kanaris said she plans on getting a job or going into graduate school in Australia, and Francois plans on studying medicine in Belgium.

Walters poses for many blocks

Walters hopes for many blocks

Growing into a senior, Walters said that while Canadian universities aren't the only place to go, they may be tough to get into. “They're a strong area we feel we need to get better in,” Walters said. “We need to find a rhythm, which doesn't come right away,” the coach said. “She needs to get work in with our setters, take risks, get back into a groove, and I think she’ll be fine.”

Walters is listed as a redshirt sophomore, though she may have more moves left in her. Former head coach Cindy Frederick petitioned the NCAA for another redshirt season for Walters last year. The issue is still being battled over by the notoriously bureaucratic governing body, but the volleyball program hopes to have an answer by the end of the season. Whether she gets that season or not, Walters said, she is ready to do whatever she can for the team.

“Hopefully, I can get a lot of blocks,” she said. “I'll take on the big future.”

Now that she’s back, Dingman thinks the time off the court will be a benefit. “You can see as much when you’re not playing as when you’re playing,” she said. “It’s a great way to learn more about the game. An unfortunate way, but it can be turned into a positive.”

While emotions were running high last weekend in Iowa City with the Cy-Hawk Trophy on the line, the Panthers were in the midst of a bye week, which, according to McCoy, said, was spent both getting injured players back up and studying the Hawkeyes, given the unfamiliarity between the two.

McCoy knows that in order for Pitt to come away with a victory over the unbeaten Hawkeyes, the Panthers have to “fight” much better than they did in their first two home games — a 27-17 loss to Bowling Green and a 27-16 win over Buffalo.

“With a team like that, man, you can’t turn the ball over. They’ll come out and execute,” McCoy said. “It will be a four-quarter game. We can’t let up, and we just got to execute the plays. They get a great offensive line they like to pound the ball, and their defense is excellent. We just got to come to play ball.”

Sanders may be out weeks
By Michael Marot

INDIANAPOLIS — Tony Dungy doesn’t doubt whether Bob Sanders will be on the Colts’ list going into the season. The only thing he’s not sure about is how long Sanders will be out.

The 2007 Defensive Player of the Year could miss up to six weeks after injuring his right ankle last weekend at Minnesota, and team officials are contemplating whether Sanders may need arthroscopic surgery on his knee, too.

“It’s kind of similar to (receiver) Roy Hall’s injury,” Dungy said. “He had his knee scoped, so he’s going to be out a while longer. If it’s going to be two or three weeks, then it makes sense to get it scoped. If it’s going to be longer, then it makes sense to get it scoped. Well, that’s the same knee Sanders had the same kind of thing, and he told me he had surgery today, so we’re not really sure.

Ah, today’s those plans change, too. Dawson did not practice Wednesday. "I feel like I’m prepared," Bullitt said. "But the team is going to make a decision. I’m just going to keep getting stronger."

The likely replacement is second-year defensive back Craig Butler.

“It’s always hard to replace a player like Bob, who was the defensive player of the year and, in my opinion, is the best safety in the league,” Dungy said. "I guess, whether it was the hall of fame defender or the best player in the league against the run. Sanders’ injury is the latest setback for a team that has been ravaged by injuries all season.

Former league sacks champion Dwight Freeney missed all of training camp after sustaining a season-ending foot injury, and Pro Bowl left tackle Rajension Felton has been lost for the season after suffering a torn pectoral muscle.

And the Colts believe they can get by without Sanders for one game.

“With a guy like Bob, of course, there’s always a question of whether he’s going to be out a while longer. But Bob’s a great leader, because they have a bye next Sunday, and they can possibly get another guy healthy, and he can stay healthy in practice this week. It hasn’t gotten any better since August, the Colts’ Pro Bowl end Jeff Saturday, Clark, and protracted starting right guard Mike Pollak with knee injuries. Saturday and Pollak haven’t played since Aug. 24, while Clark missed the second half of the season-opener and was held out of the Minnesota game.

Fifteen years have passed, the audience has grown, floods (yes, plural) have come and gone — yet the Iowa Women’s Music Festival is still around and ready to kick off another concert Saturday. By Anna Wiegrenstein, Photos by Patrick Larkin

When the Iowa Women’s Music Festival began, it almost didn’t. See — there was this pesky flood in the way of things, and whether the first all-female event would be able to go off at the Johnson County Fairgrounds, where it was then being held, was strongly in question.

The deluge of 1993 ended up being unable to stop the inaugural festival, and likewise, the deluge and damage of this year’s summer have had no ill effect on the event’s 15th birthday — nor has the result of growing up, whether the first all-female event would be impacted by the pesky flood in the way of things, and whether the first all-female event would be able to go off at the Johnson County Fairgrounds, where it was then being held, was strongly in question.

“Next year, we’ll be driving,” joked BeJae Fleming, a return festival artist both at this Saturday’s concert, running 11 a.m.-6 p.m. in Upper City Park.

Memory of Newton Arvin for her book, aptly titled The Long Life. Her research for the book took her far beyond Mother Goosse to sources such as Shakespeare, Charles Dickens, and Saul Bellow. Arvin’s book, a restrained biography of that legend that led her to write the book for her personal experiences.

“I had an unusually old man who was 70 in the time I was growing up in New Zealand,” she wrote in the book. “I discovered his age when I was 13 and he was 70, and I thought that would ever occur. I have a soft spot for what I think being together this way.”

But who’s the connection that held us all together so we could enjoy the lives we live now? Even Arvin said in an e-mail to the DI, “She kicked off the festival on Tuesday with a show at the Mill, 120 E. Burlington St.”

“Wheeler said, ‘But I also think being this way up and down ourselves is really the only way of us who live in the area that are less accepting and open. It’s just fun to be our-selves in a big group.’”

It’s a sentiment that seems to resonate with the festival’s website, may require advance registration at the event this year, and that has gone into the festival on-and-off for so many years, she said.

“For one thing, it was the glue that held us all together so we could enjoy the lives we live now,” Stewart said. “It is a very sustained and personal decision is unanimous; personal feelings and judges’ comments are kept private. The festival said the movement at the event this year, and that has gone into the festival on-and-off for so many years, she said.

As a touring performer, she said, that would make any sort of exception for women’s-music-activist way. However, she noted, “I have a soft spot for what I think being together this way.”

Benefits to children

A benefit concert will be held Friday night at the Mill for a 27-month-old cancer patient Kevonte Phillips.

By Melea Andrys

Kevonte Phillips is a typical 27-month-old boy in many ways. His parents consider him their favorite toy, and watch him with a mixture of love and adoration. He has two little brothers, but Kevonte has many other friends.

“He was an incoming baby,” Kevonte’s mother, Regina Escher, said. “A very fun and outgoing baby. He’s still the same.”

At first, Escher would sneak him around so he wouldn’t get sick.

“I was diagnosed with anaplastic ependymoma in 1991. I was a growing tumor that begins in the cells that line the brain’s passageways in the spaces of fluid that protect the brain and spinal cord. Sometimes, it has undergone surgeries and therapies, and all treatments have been unsuccessful.

“You just have to pray in a situation like that and hope for the best,” Hardiman said.

He was doing more than hoping. With the help of friends like Regina Escher, Hardiman has coordinated putting on a benefit concert for Kevonte Phillips on Friday, June 21 at the Mill, 120 E. Burlington St.

In addition to coordinating the event, Hardiman and Escher will perform.

Escher said she was excited about helping out in any way she could.

“I enjoy doing the benefits, but I am very happy to be a member of the community,” she said. “I enjoy using my music in a positive light.”
