In light of Veterans Day, veterans from three different war regions reflect on the state of the country as a new president prepares to take office.

by Brian Bryant

Even though Veterans Day is today, typical war stories weren't ones they wanted to relive.

"Instead, they talked about freedoms," said Dorothy Simpson-Taylor, a Vietnam veteran and director of diversity resources at the University of Iowa.

Vets have different takes

Joe Victor, vice president for marketing at AkerBio Inc., a company that produces vaccines and biopharmaceuticals.

"I've talked to a lot of veterans who have served in the military," he said. "And it's not about the war or the politics. It's about the freedoms they've fought for and the sacrifices they've made.

"But there are still many challenges that they face in everyday life," he continued. "Like access to healthcare, financial stability, and social support systems.

"I hope we can learn from their experiences and work to create a better future for them," Victor said. **

Lauren B. Johnson said that because the university has a university policy that allows student groups to be recognized, the university cannot say that it cannot or will not recognize a group that is willing to abide by the policy. She said the university’s policy states that student groups must agree to abide by certain rules, such as not discriminating against any group. She also said that the university has a history of recognizing student groups that have faced challenges, such as the Christian Legal Society, which was one of the first groups to be recognized at the university.

The university’s policy also states that the university will not discriminate against any group that is willing to abide by the policy. Johnson said that the university has a history of recognizing groups that have faced challenges, such as the Christian Legal Society, which was one of the first groups to be recognized at the university.

The Christian Legal Society is the national group’s attorneys formed at the UI, and the same university president, and he is obsessed with the "Statement of Faith," which he has been willing to litigate to prevent its enforcement. The "Statement of Faith" has raised issues on campus for the past 10-15 years with roughly six students.

WASHINGTON — President-elect Obama’s advisers are hammering out plans for closing the Guantanamo Bay prison and reestablishing the U.S. position as a beacon of justice, with House Democrats saying Monday that the Bush administration has failed many times to close the prison.

The administration is trying to close the Guantanamo prison, which has been a target for the Bush administration, but it has been unable to find a country willing to take them.

Advocates participating directly in the planning spoke on the condition of anonymity because the plan isn’t final.

The plan being developed by the Bush administration has drawn criticism from Democrats, who oppose bringing terrorism suspects to U.S. courts, where they would be tried by military tribunals.

The agreement is designed to strengthen efforts against illegal activity on Craigslist, particularly trafficking of children.

Bill Roush, spokesman with the Iowa Attorney General’s Office, said:

While child pornography and child trafficking via Craigslist have been a concern in Iowa, problems have been eradicated in other states, Roush said.

Iowa City police Sgt. Troy Kraly said there have been no complaints involving Craigslist in Iowa City. While the Internet is commonly used for illegal activity, he said, he hasn’t seen it associated with a particular site.

In the agreement last week, Craiglist, which boasts more than 35 million users each month, adopted several measures to reduce illegal activity.

Parties who post ads on the “erotic services” page will be required to provide a working telephone number and pay a fee to put the ad on the site. Craigslist will make the information available to law enforcement.

Prop Hate and the long struggle ahead for equality

It has been a monumental week for civil rights. The election of Barack Obama has validated more than 145 years of struggle and has been inspired by the American people and elected for the quality of his character, not the color of his hair. While we celebrate the advent of this historical occasion, a shadow has been cast on our rev¬ery by the California Proposition 8, an attempt to amend the state Constitution to restrict the definition of marriage to a man and a woman. The efforts of those who wish to deny the rights of same-sex couples have been frustrated by a victory for the Constitution and for the rights of people to determine what is right for them. It is a great relief, given the nature of other issues on the ballot, that the Proposition 8 propagandists have come so close to success.

Editorial

BEAU ELIOTT

Well, so much for Karl

Even those who are not familiar with the origins of Proposition 8 are likely to know of the Mormon Church's role in its promotion. It is a sad commentary on the distorted values of an organized religion that would seek to deny the rights of people who happen to be gay, lesbian, or bisexual. Further, even as other religions such as the Catholics in Colorado are fighting for their right to practice their faith, the Mormons are looking to establish the right to deny their fellow citizens the right to marry. This is a clear violation of the separation of church and state.

BEAU ELIOTT

So, now, we can see Barack

BEAU ELIOTT

I have no doubt that Barack Obama will be a fine President. He understands the issues, he has a clear vision for America, and he has a plan to make it happen.

BEAU ELIOTT

That is a political decision, it is a personal choice, it is a religious decision, it is a human decision. The right to marry is a human right, not a political right. It is a right that should be protected by the government, not by the church. It is a right that should be respected by all citizens, not just those who agree with it. It is a right that should be available to all people, not just those who can afford it.

BEAU ELIOTT

What is important is that we remember the lessons of history. The struggle for civil rights is not over. We must continue to fight for equality and justice. We must continue to work for a world where everyone is treated with respect and dignity. We must continue to fight for a world where everyone has the right to live their life as they choose. We must continue to fight for a world where everyone has the right to love and be loved.

BEAU ELIOTT

So, now, we can see Barack Obama on the hunt for understanding.

The vitriol is strong with this one

Although A History of Violence is the most lucidly disturbing film of the year, it is the latest entry in the oeuvre of David Cronenberg. Director of such films as The Brood, Scanners, and Dead Ringers, Cronenberg has long been a master of surrealism and violence. His latest film, A History of Violence, is no exception. The story follows a small-town butcher and his family as they fall victim to a series of violent threats. The film is a harrowing tale of human brutality and the lengths to which men will go to protect their families.

Joeecera is a small town in the middle of nowhere. The only things going for it are a dingy diner and a gas station. The townspeople are all basically the same, with the exception of Joe (played by Viggo Mortensen). Joe is a quiet, unassuming man who runs the gas station. He is content with his life, until one day he is drawn into the world of crime.

The film opens with a scene of Joe being attacked by a group of masked men. He fights them off and manages to escape, but the incident leaves him with a sense of fear and vulnerability. From that moment on, Joe becomes obsessed with protecting his family. He starts to carry a gun and is constantly on the lookout for danger.

As the story progresses, we see Joe's transformation from a peaceful small-town resident to a violent and dangerous criminal. He becomes involved in a series of crimes, including murder and theft, all in an effort to protect his family. The film is a disturbing portrayal of the darkness that can lurk beneath the surface of even the most ordinary people.

A History of Violence is a powerful and unsettling film. It is a reminder that behind the facade of normalcy, there may be a world of violence and brutality waiting to be revealed. The film is a must-see for anyone interested in exploring the darker aspects of human nature.

UI graduate student Kimn Swenson Gollnick, who has taken 10 online courses last spring, wishes to enroll in such classes last spring, “It's not the policy isn't likely to affect us. But we don't want the policy to impact the accessibility to online courses.

TEN ONLINE COURSES next semester as eight students.

The U.S. Department of Education reports 90 million American adults are enrolled in some kind of education. "Lots of adults are coming back to change careers or finish education," Swenson Gollnick said. "I'm hoping that the UI would have more online courses. Having those courses is very vital."

Tide's revenge tour

By Jeff Latzke

STILLWATER, Okla. — There were times in Mike Gundy's first three years as Oklahoma State's head coach that he thought he might have been making matters worse instead of dishing in on defense.

But he's taken much of the blame for what went wrong when the Cowboys gave up touchdown on seven straight possessions in a 56-20 loss to No. 2 Texas Tech Nov. 5.

The mismatch knocked No. 10 Oklahoma State (9-1, Big 12) out of the Big 12 championship race and, if likely eliminated any BCS chances, too.

But as a former offensive coordinator who has helped create the sixth-highest scoring offense in the country, Gundy focused his criticism Monday on the defense's productive game of the season.

"When I was disappointed was offensively. We had a couple chances there to go strike-1st-strike with them when we needed it badly," he said. "Do I was disappointed in us as a group because we didn't go to work."

Gundy took himself out of the defensive preparation this year, focusing instead on his expertise as a former quarterback and longtime offensive coach. He planned coordinator Tim Beckman in charge of the defense and quickly got his head into it.

"My first thought is I don't specialize in that," he said. "I don't spend the time. I don't study it. I can't study it. I'm not as good as a head coach offensively as I am defensively."

That's how our offensive line position. They really are definitely making sure they stay in line and handle what they have to do. They know. I don't know. I'm not involved at all, and they're the ones who have the time and effort into it. I think it may be better, but we're going to sit down as a group, and talk about it after the season and we're going to do that."

The new coaching arrangements seemed to be working well as an improved defense has helped Oklahoma State to its first 7-0 start since 1945, and the unit was still effective in the Cowboys' 28-24 loss at Texas A&M last month.

The nation's second-rated defense gives up 10.7 points per game, including 516 against the air. It was nearly 100 yards less than in last year's 49-45 Cowboys win against the Red Raiders. "They were able to score and take advantage of that," he said. "We weren't able to play that game. That's not what we thought we were going to get."

"They.con. They've been doing some things quite well, and we've been able to do a few things that we though it would be," said Gundy. "They've done a great job of converting a high percentage of the time and the pass game, and they've done a great job of getting the ball on us and scored, when usually you think it was the other way. That's not was a good picture."
