Spectators watch Iowa Gov. Chet Culver walk out to the old Rock Island train station on Sunday. Culver and Representative Dave Loebsack, D-Iowa stopped in Iowa City to drum up support for the Iowa City-Chicago railway, which would reportedly cost $42 for a one-way ticket.

Iowa Gov. Chet Culver and Rep. Dave Loebsack, D-Iowa rolled into the old Rock Island train station on Sunday afternoon for the Whistle Stop Rally.

They were met by children and adults munching on free hot dogs and waving mini American flags and the sound of a brass band playing a jaunty rendition of "When the Saints Go Marching In."

The two came to Iowa City to show their support for a proposed Chicago-Iowa City passenger-train line, which could take hordes of Illinois natives attending the UI back to the suburbs for $42 one-way.

Culver said he was on his way to be a part of a Midwestern governors rail summit held by Illinois Gov. Pat Quinn to discuss how the Midwestern rails will be connected.

"It's going to be very competitive," Culver said. But officials are confident the federal government will award $51 million in stimulus money for the project. Culver and Loebsack said they want locals to participate in the effort.

A group of men allegedly robbed a pizza delivery person on July 25.

According to Iowa City police, officers responded to a report of a robbery in the 10 block of Regal Lane.

The delivery person reportedly told authorities a group of 10 to 15 males from 10 to 25 years old approached him from behind as he was bringing a pizza to an address on Regal Lane. He said one of the men punched him in the neck, then the group grabbed his order and fled.

During the investigation, police determined the order did not come from the resi-

Law-enforcement officials continue to investigate a July 24 stabbing and shooting that left one man injured and another dead, though they hadn't release any additional information by Sunday evening.

A plainclothes Johnson County deputy allegedly shot and killed a homeless man on the evening of July 24. The man had reportedly stabbed a patron of Hawkeye Hideaway bar, 310 E. Prentiss St., outside the establishment, Iowa City police confirmed early on July 25.

According to witnesses, the stabbing victim left the bar with his wife and saw a 26-year-old homeless man drop a bag of cans and bottles on the pavement, strewing trash across the parking lot in front of City Electric Supply, 315 E. Prentiss St.

The bar patron reportedly told the homeless man to clean the bottles up. The homeless man allegedly stabbed him with a knife.

Police have not yet released the name of the stabbing victim.

Iowa City police said they received a report from the Johnson County Sheriff's Office about a fight in the area shortly after 7 p.m. that evening.

At the same time, dispatchers fielded several 911 calls reporting a man with a gun on the scene.

Responding officers identified the man with the gun as a Johnson County deputy in plainclothes. While Iowa City police officials said the Johnson County Sheriff's Office has jurisdiction in all parts of Johnson County — including Iowa City Wiki sites become popular among the UI community.

By ALINA RUBEZHOVA
alina-rubezhova@uiowa.edu

With the advent of Wiki software at the UI, professors now have more options than just textbooks.

In fact, employees at Information Technology Services say the number of Wiki spaces in the university server nearly doubled this year, and views went up by 40 percent.

UI law Professor Lea VanderVelde found a unique way to utilize that technology in her Employment Law class last spring. Now, she and a team from ITS are working to make the project more accessible to the public.

Although many think "Wikipedia" when it comes to such troves of information, Wikis are, more generally, classified as a group of interlinked websites — though Wikipedia is undoubtedly the most popular kind.

Employment law can come into play after an individual is dismissed from work. Former employees decide whether they will file suit for reasons such as improper discharge or discrimination.

Grants aid East African, South Asian studies

The International Program plans to expand with two federal grants.

By HOLLY HINES

Recent UI graduate Rachel Bender studied Swahili while in college.

With a concentration area in global health, she said the language seemed “interesting, exciting, and applicable.”

And beginning early this week, other students interested in Africa will be greeted by an expanded program.

The UI is set to receive $75,000 from the U.S. Department of Education to create an undergraduate program in East African studies, according to a press release from Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa.

“There have been a lot of people wanting to make [African studies] grow,” said Bender, who received a bachelor’s degree in international studies.

Many related programs need funding, she said; for example, a trip for UI pre-medicine students to gain firsthand medical experience in Tanzania.

Students interested in Kiswahili — as it is called in the African language itself — will benefit from the grant, according to the press release.

At the UI, Swahili classes focus on culture, food, and current events in addition to teaching the structure of the language, Bender said.

After taking the class, she picked up bits and pieces of Swahili in passing conversations around campus, she said.

UI funding helps students who want to travel abroad through International Programs grants, said Joanna Wiese, a graduate research assistant in the program.

The Stanley Award for research abroad, offering $1,000 to $3,000 to “outstanding undergraduates,” is one such example, according to the International Program website.

The program also provides smaller international travel grants of up to $500 for students interested in shorter trips, Wiese said.

A related $82,500 grant will be used to expand the

Mitchell seeks Mideast peace

By JOSEF FEDERMAN
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — President Obama’s Mideast envoy called on the Arab world to take steps toward normalizing relations with Israel, and Israel’s prime minister said he hoped his country’s disputes with the United States over West Bank settlement construction would soon be resolved.

Envoy George Mitchell, opening a new round of peace efforts in the region on Sunday, played down the differences with Israel “as discussions among friends.” His comments, along with those of Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, appeared to be aimed at lowering recent tensions as the United States tries to restart Israeli-Palestinian peace talks and work for a broader peace between Israel and the Arab world.

Mitchell arrived in Israel from Syria, where he told his hosts the United States is determined to achieve a “truly comprehensive” peace settlement that includes normal relations between Israel and all of its Arab neighbors.

“We will welcome the full cooperation of the government of the Syrian Arab Republic in this historic endeavor,” he said.

It was Mitchell’s second visit to the Syrian capital, reflecting U.S. recognition that Syria would play an important role in any regional peace effort. The Bush administration isolated Syria for years because of its support for violent Palestinian and Lebanese extremist groups.

Man charged with pimping

Iowa City police arrested a man for allegedly soliciting an undercover officer for a prostitute while a woman was arrested for prostitution.

Ronald Erving, 53, 620 Kirkwood Ave., was charged July 24 with pimping.

Tammy Long, 39, 620 Kirkwood Blvd. Apt. 4, was charged July 24 with prostitution.

According to police, officers made a recorded phone call to a woman — reportedly known to be involved in the prostitution trade — asking to meet up with her.

The woman reportedly met up with an undercover officer at CRANDIC Park and called Erving to come to the park to approve the transaction.

After Erving arrived, the officer asked him what he would get for $50, and Erving immediately replied “head,” police said. Erving and the woman agreed the $50 would be paid to Erving.

The officer handed Erving a $50 bill, and the female left with the officer toward a waiting vehicle, police reports show.

Upon several officers’ approach to Erving, he dropped the $50 bill on the ground, authorities said.

Pimping is a Class D felony, punishable by up to five years in prison and a maximum fine of $7,500.

Prostitution is an aggravated misdemeanor, punishable by up to two years in prison and a maximum fine of $6,250.

Rally backs IC train

TRAIN

The Iowa government contributed $3 million needed to refurbish freight tracks from Iowa City to the Quad Cities. The Iowa City Area Chamber of Commerce will apply for a $32.5 million federal grant, while officials in Illinois will apply for $22.5 million to work on the section from Chicago to the Quad Cities.

Nancy Quellhorst, the president of the Chamber of Commerce, said the train is expected to run from Iowa City to Chicago by 2012.

Quellhorst said officials expect to hear whether they'll receive the stimulus funds a few weeks after the first week of October — when the applications are due — and federal officials have told them their pre-applications are “the most robust,” of those submitted so far.

The rally attracted Iowa City resident Libris Fidelis, formerly known as Ronald Kinum. He brought a home-made sign that read “Iowa Needs National Passenger Rail Service To East, and West.”

“It’s really a shame that people have abandoned the trains,” he said. “It’s always been the best, and we need to have it brought back.”

Fidelis used to be a locomotive engineer for Southern Pacific in California. He said he wants those tracks to be expanded to Omaha, which will also connect Iowa City with the West.

Culver, who signed Fidelis’ sign, said a challenge will be meeting Amtrak’s expected ridership of 120,000 to 190,000 riders every year.

“It is important that you tell your friends, that you tell your neighbors, to get really engaged here over the next several months as Amtrak makes some very important decisions,” he said.

— the city tends to have its own officers patrolling the streets.

The deputy confronted the homeless man, but he allegedly ignored repeated orders to drop the knife.

Instead, he advanced “threateningly” toward the already injured bar patron, police said. The deputy then shot the homeless man once.

He has since died from his wound, police confirmed.

Witnesses disagreed over whether they heard the deputy identify himself as law enforcement before firing the single shot.

In fact, three men who refused to give their names, or even speak to local media in front of police, denied seeing a knife in the homeless man’s hands.

They said they pulled up in their car when they

“He didn’t know he was a cop,” one of the witnesses said. “He was scared.”

The homeless responded with an expletive and stood up. He put his hands up, the men said, and stumbled sideways, apparently intoxicated. That’s when they said the deputy shot him.

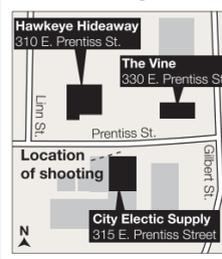

The men agreed the first time they saw the deputy’s badge was when he held it up as Iowa City police began to arrive.

The bar patron who was stabbed underwent emergency surgery,

UI turning to ‘Wikis’

Because laws relating to this are decided on the state level, and the field is rapidly changing, VanderVelde decided a textbook wouldn’t be suitable. So she had her students research and compile an extensive collection of information relating to the field. Each student focused on two states. “The form of the ‘Wiki’ really was perfect for the function of showing students that there’s no dominant way [to do employment law] and every one of the states have decided it [differently],” she said.

And her students didn’t seem to mind.

“Several people expressed the view that it was the most fun class to come to,” VanderVelde said. “It wasn’t just reading the textbook, being called upon, or having the professor lecture to them.”

The Wiki is a program that can be used in many different ways, which, ITS student employees said, makes it a popular tool on campus. And it’s simply easy to use, they said.

Wikis differ from typical HTML pages because instead of using technical codes, users look at a screen that resembles a word processor.

VanderVelde approached ITS in December 2008. She wanted to use Wiki to organize law students’ research on employment law in a way that would expand on available information.

She first spoke with Leighton Christiansen, who graduated in May with a degree in English and a minor in informatics. Along with three other student instructional technology assistants, he put VanderVelde’s ideas into action.

“Professor VanderVelde really pushed us to look at new ways to use the Wiki,” he said. “She began to realize the new opportunities that were there as well and sort of taught us.”

The UI Wiki service had just come out of the pilot phase in the last couple of years, he said. Last spring, it became a fully supported service. The server currently hosts 100 or more Wiki spaces, and users can tailor them to their needs.

Another student assistant who worked on this project, UI graduate student Nathan Culmer, said VanderVelde chose to use the software in a unique way.

“She turned [the roles] around and made the students into researchers,” he said.

VanderVelde said clients pay lawyers thousands of dollars to research the “old-fashioned way,” but here she has a website that has all of the information readily available. Although the comprehensive set of information is arguably beneficial for the larger legal community, the Wiki is only available to those who created it.

But a major concern was student privacy laws, Culmer said.

The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1975 states students’ work cannot be viewed by the public without the authors’ permission. Anything they create must also include proper attribution.

“In order to make this live, we’d need to eliminate students’ information or get waivers from the students,” Christiansen said.

But there is often a light side to the business, Enochson said, especially during the football season, when often intoxicated customers become generous.

Weekend shooting will hold important implications

This weekend's shooting happened on the night of July 24, but by the morning of July 25, buzz was already swirling around the area.

It's easy to get caught up in discussion over the violent fiasco; as details emerge, they will surely have implications for our community. However, we should all be careful to let those details emerge with in due time before making hasty conclusions.

It's still not clear exactly what happened on Prentiss Street that evening. The broken details include a local man outside Hawkeye Hideaway engaging with a homeless man in front of the bar. The interaction turned violent when the homeless man reportedly stabbed the other man. Witnesses say the homeless man attempted to flee but ran into a plainclothes law-enforcement officer, who shot him.

Details are sparse. Law-enforcement officials have good reason to be tight-lipped about the situation. While the lack of information could lead to rumors, it's important to protect the identity of all three people involved until police determine exactly what happened.

Undoubtedly, the most important details to the story lie in what happened between the law-enforcement officer and the homeless man before shots were fired. Differing accounts have emerged about that exchange. Reports have surfaced from supposed eyewitnesses, saying the homeless man did not act threateningly toward the officer before being shot. While local law-enforcement officials have a responsibility to act transparently, we should not necessarily jump to conclusions based on unchecked accusations.

Still, as details emerge, the shooting will surely have implications for our community.

The incident could have the biggest effect on Iowa City's homeless population. Already, many locals argue Iowa City's growing homeless population threatens the community. Shelter House — which provides support to eastern Iowa's homeless population — has been met with great resistance as it tries to construct a new facility on the South Side of Iowa City. Residents nearby have insisted the shelter would bring robbers and sex offenders to their neighborhood, endangering families and diminish property values. Their argument will surely be enhanced if we find that an Iowa City homeless man was unprovoked when he reportedly stabbed a man and then turned on a law officer.

While we should be careful not to brand all homeless men with the same iron, we should also evaluate whether our efforts to help those in need end up attracting violence.

We will also see discussion regarding local law-enforcement policies. Any time law-enforcement officers draw their guns in a town of our size, it is important to carefully examine what happened. In 1996, an Iowa City officer mistakenly shot and killed Eric Shaw, a 31-year-old Iowa City artist. As a result, Iowa City formed a Police Citizen's Review Board as a way of evaluating complaints about the local police force. That's just one example of the reform that can stem from a situation like this.

In this case, anti-gun groups will undoubtedly say this shows guns are needlessly risky. Gun-rights proponents will say this shows guns are necessary protection. We hope the community can find the middle ground. While we have too few details to predict what, if any, reform will come from the July 24 tragedy, we hope it will act as a means for the city to assess the way law-enforcement forces in the area operate, especially in regard to the use of firearms.

Your turn. How did you hear about this past weekend's shooting? Weigh in at dailyiowan.com.

Splitting

dean.treftz@gmail.com

Iowa City is a serene Eden of learning, originality, and small-town charm, and I have never been so relieved to leave a place. The strange thing is that this seems to be a fairly common contradiction.

At some point — not necessarily graduation, but that seems to be a popular one — a Leave-Iowa City Clock (the Homework-Due Clock's big ugly ex-con brother) seems to start ticking.

There are specific cliché worries about career and life course that accompany and possibly even cause this unease, but it's less noticeable in words or explicit thoughts than in an increasingly nervous presence in my stomach.

Having managed to squeeze four years of college into five years, my personal clock started last summer when many of my friends and acquaintances left. The tick-tick-tick grew louder and faster with every handshake in front of a packed minivan, every earnest doorway hug, even with every awkward "I'll see you around, man," which both parties know is probably not true.

I knew I was going to leave and do something, but I was going to enjoy my last summer here. Tick.

More and more undergraduates started to look like they were on the other side of the definitive mini-generational line that separated freshmen from everyone else and high-school seniors from freshmen. Tickticktick.

By the time July rolled around, I was practically counting out the ticks with my shoe and could barely have a casual drink with a friend without saying some derivative of "I gotta get the hell out of here."

From what I've seen and whom I've talked to, this seems to be a shared experience among a decent section of the local soon-to-be/postgraduate demographic (yes, I know that I'm more likely to talk to/remember people I can relate to, but let's go with it anyway).

It's been interesting watching friends' clocks go off, and they have trouble talking/thinking about anything but getting away.

Everyone seems to love Iowa City as much as ever, too.

This is a fun, fascinating town. It's a magnet to interesting and eclectic people. There's always something going on to the extent that it feels like the social infrastructure is built for a town at least twice the size.

I personally love how the student area and broader city are two distinct cities within Iowa City that offer completely different enjoyable experiences right on top of each other (it helps to know a bunch of townies for good times past Governor Street).

As with anywhere, there are downsides. There's a vicious violent streak and weird ethnic tension that no one really knows how to deal with, and the level of self-satisfaction can make me want to go join a Sarah Palin rally.

But this is best place I've ever lived for any extended period of time.

There's quite a few different explanations for this contradiction like "I came here for college, that's done, so I need to leave" and "I need to see more of the country/world."

A particularly seductive narrative sometimes whispers in my ear that this anxiety is ambition not letting me settle for an "ordinary" life, and the stronger the pressure to leave, the more successful you can become. But besides being way too easy and narcissistically gratifying to be true, it carries a heavy implication on those who stay, even just for a year or two.

I'm not sure what is driving my clock, but it seems to be the swan song of my college career, and I try not to fill in the blanks for people whose thought processes are clearly different.

I've written this to describe my experience in Iowa City as I've seen it with the hopes that you understand what the hell I've been talking about. I hope you got something out of it. ■

"Field House &amp; Etc. may lose liquor licenses"

"Los Cocos has been the scene of several assaults, a stabbing, a shooting, and averages a dozen police calls a night. And it has had their license renewed. So, everyone who thinks this stupidly run town ignores real crime and harasses students has been vindicated. Or maybe the police would like to keep those losers concentrated there and out of downtown. I can understand that.

"But what I can't understand is what would make dozens of boarded-up and empty storefronts so attractive on the Ped Mall. If Iowa City wants to become another Waterloo, and that seems to be the long-term plan here, then let's just get on with it, because that's exactly what this town would be if all the bars closed. And your rents/taxes/parking fees would go up to cover the shortfall. Unless you think Vortex, Peaceful Fool, and dozens of other non-bar establishments would somehow magically reappear — in a recession, no less — simply because the bars were closed. Your City Council and most of this town's residents are stupid enough to believe that."

Despite media attention, ethnic discourse won't go anywhere

By JONATHAN CAPEHART
Washington Post

This is what is likely to come of the arrest of Henry Louis Gates Jr. at his home by a white police officer: nothing.

The July 16 arrest of the African American scholar by a Cambridge, Mass., police officer looks a little more complicated and a lot more nuanced today than it did when the story broke last week. But it has sparked another conversation on ethnicity in America that, I suspect, will end as quickly as it began, with no clearer understanding of the roots of the reactions that fueled it. I'll explain why in a minute.

We've made enormous strides in the 46 years since the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. expounded on a dream of equality. America in 1963 envisioned neither a prominent, wealthy, and powerful black professor at Harvard nor a black president of the United States.

"I am standing here as testimony to the progress that's been made," President Obama said at the end of his news conference July 15 when asked about the confrontation in Cambridge. But then he added, "And yet the fact of the matter is, is that, you know, [ethnicity] still haunts us." It certainly haunted Obama.

Two days after the president said he thought the police "acted stupidly" in the Gates affair, he stood in the White House briefing room to ask everyone — himself included — to "take a step back" from the heated rhetoric from all sides. He acknowledged that he "could have calibrated those words differently" and that the controversy shows that "these are issues that still very sensitively here in America."

Obama's comments were all the more noteworthy because he rarely speaks directly about ethnicity. Only when the impertinent rantings of the Rev. Jeremiah Wright threatened to send his Oval Office ambitions the way of the Hindenburg did Obama speak up. He did so with a forthrightness that earned him plaudits for talking to the American people like adults about one of the country's enduring ailments. It was a teachable moment — but, like most lessons, it was largely forgotten.

We've been down this road many times: an ethnic flare-up; talk for a week or so; then a rush to move on. Aside from the revelation of incendiary sermons by Wright (2008), there were the stiff sentences meted out to the Jena 6 in Louisiana (2007); the death of unarmed African immigrant Amadou Diallo in a hail of 41 police bullets in New York (1999); the dragging death of James Byrd in Jasper, Texas (1998); the New York police assault of Abner Louima with a plunger handle (1997); the Million Man March (1995); the arrest, trial, and acquittal of O.J. Simpson on charges that he murdered his white ex-wife and her friend (1994-95); and the beating of Rodney King by Los Angeles police officers (1991).

I was reminded of this enduring quest for understanding while doing research for this column. In 1999 I wrote an editorial lauding the one-year anniversary of what would be another failed attempt at dialogue: President Clinton's national conversation on ethnicity. "Americans need to talk frankly and openly about the causes and effects of racism that people deal with daily," I pleaded. "The fear and the misunderstandings. The anger and the resentment. For they have combined to make racism a corrosive cancer of the soul."

This remains true today. The cure for this corrosive cancer won't come through a government program or the courts. It won't come through documentaries such as the ones that Gates says he wants to do on the criminal justice system or terrific movies such as Crash, the 2006 Oscar winner for best picture. This is a matter of the heart, an intensely personal exercise that demands we talk to each other — one on one, face to face. Perhaps over a beer, as Obama, Sgt. James Crowley, and Gates plan to do at the White House. But this requires trust.

MOVIE REVIEWS

Not the offspring of run-of-the-mill horror

Orphan twists traditional horror movie tactics into an original, truly scary story line.

By RYAN FOSMARK
ryan-fosmark@uiowa.edu

Seeing the previews for Orphan didn't leave me with much desire to see the actual flick. The movie looked like a low-budget horror film — completely void of suspense and human anguish. Not to mention the blood looked like cherry syrup. Shortly after the movie began, however, I was proven wrong.

The beginning of Orphan didn't help my misconceptions. A heavily pregnant Kate (Vera Farmiga — best known for her role in The Departed) and John Coleman (Peter Sarsgaard) slowly make their way to a hospital's front desk. Something is odd about how bare and bright everything is except for Kate's face, which shows a lot of pre-dilation pain. As Kate is pushed in her wheelchair from the front desk, she huffs and puffs and tells the nurse that this will be her third baby and the baby's name is Jessica. Then comes the blood.

Immediately, I thought I was right all along. Kate awakes on a hospital table with clumsy, faceless doctors all around piling large, dangerous-looking metal tools under her gown saying "I'm sorry for your loss." Kate begins to break down at the thought of a miscarriage when they tell her she might "feel some tugging." A vacuum is turned on as Kate screams and writhes in pain with her husband filming the whole scene saying, "You're doing great, honey." Then a baby begins to cry, and the doctor congratulates Kate on a new baby girl as the mother is handed a wad of wailing, bloody linens and flesh.

But thankfully, it was all a dream. As Kate awakes from her nightmare, I began to realize the true nature of Orphan. The flick seems to be a sort of meta-horror, utilizing and almost mocking the oh-so-familiar tools of traditional horror movies. The blood and guts in the beginning are just about the extent of the gore in this film — except for a couple necessary corpses and a few blood splatters here and there. The messy introduction sets the mood for Orphan in a way that left me expecting blood and virtually unshielded against the suspenseful and shocking moments to come.

The movie makes good use of viewer psych-outs. The orchestrated soundtrack completely had its way with me — especially combined with the increasingly creepy plot. John and Kate adopt an extraordinarily bright and mature 9-year-old girl named Esther (Isabelle Fuhrman), who leaves more and more hints that she is not the innocent little painter that she appears to be. I was continually expecting some moment of disturbing surprise, and the music led me on, building in volume and dissonance to the breaking point until it was so tense that I was literally holding my breath only to be tricked when finally nothing was around the corner or on the other side of the mirror. Then again, sometimes Orphan delivered the psychological shock full-force.

The tale winds around into detective/mystery territories as Kate becomes convinced that Esther is hiding something awful — which she is. Esther becomes increasingly powerful over her little deaf sister, Max (Aryana Engineer), demanding her help in beating a nun to death with a hammer or spying on Kate. Max is so obviously torn between having a sister to play with and telling her mother about what Esther had done that her development is the most intriguing of all the characters.

Except for the somewhat predictable ending, which leaves the story far too wrapped up to allow any lingering eerie feeling, the plot was intricate and effective, delivering the final twist with a heavy blow. Orphan's use of horror-movie tactics were original, leaving me eating my initial words.

Ugly, but not so funny

By ERIC SUNDERMANN
eric-sundermann@uiowa.edu

What does a woman want in a man? Sexy, smart, sophisticated. He plans romantic evenings at the opera with red wine and caviar. He has a successful job as a doctor or lawyer, drives a nice car, and opens every door. He listens. He has a witty sense of humor, and he sends flowers and love letters. But most importantly — he's straight and single.

Sadly for women, this man does not exist — at least according to the new movie The Ugly Truth.

Katherine Heigl stars as Abby, a television producer who is way too much of a control freak to find any real relationship. She brings checklists to dates and talking subjects if there is a lull in conversation. As far as sex goes — she doesn't have it very much but is willing to wait for Mr. Right with a symmetrical face to come take her away in his convertible.

One night, after coming home from a terrible date (her first in months) in which she spent the first five minutes criticizing tap water versus bottled, her cat accidentally turns on the local-access program "The Ugly Truth" with Mike (Gerard Butler). Despite being a bit rough, Mike believes that all men really want is sex, and anything more than that — listening, romancing — is just a way to get sex. He tells women, if they want a relationship, to forget about their "Mr. Rights" and accept the truth that each man is merely an animal that needs to hump something.

These "facts," as Mike calls them, make Abby angry and she calls and they get into a fight on air about what men are capable of, then he calls her a "dog," and she gets hung up on. The next day, because her morning news program's ratings are poor, the TV corporation decides to bring new talent. Who is it? Of course — Mike. From then on, the story revolves around the two's relationship. Abby meets another guy — Colin (Eric Winter), and she and Mike make a bet. If she follows whatever he says, Colin will fall in love.

The Ugly Truth's major problem is that the movie isn't sure if it wants to be a man's romantic comedy or a woman's. Over the past couple years, such movies as Knocked Up and The 40-Year-Old Virgin established that it is possible for this type of genre to appeal to the male species — providing enough guy humor for the boyfriend to not only tolerate seeing the movie but enjoy it as well. The Ugly Truth wants to appeal to those guys, with its share of crude humor and hefty language, but instead the film tries too hard, and it's just awkward. Imagine Ryan Gosling's character in The Notebook talking about tapping girls — it just doesn't work.

A saving factor of the movie is John Michael Higgins as the dimwitted news anchor Larry. Like always, his dry sense of humor came across golden and the audience loved it. Without him, the awkward two leads never would have had a chance to redeem themselves.

Aside from the uncomfortable interactions of the characters, like so many romantic comedies, the characters aren't real, the situations don't happen, and the ending is cheesy. Beyond that, The Ugly Truth will only promote the fantasies women have that it works so hard to extinguish and continue to make men look like assholes everywhere.

- ARIES March 21-April 19 Refuse to let a personal problem dictate what you can accomplish. You may have to give a little more time to home, money, and relationships, but with the right attitude, you should be able to take care of business.
- TAURUS April 20-May 20 You don't have to go it alone today. Partner up with someone who can complement your attributes, and you will have a winning combination. Put your energy into developing your own ideas and projects.
- GEMINI May 21-June 20 You only have to make a couple of adjustments to come out on top. Your good fortune coupled with the support you are given will lead to a winning combination. Don't let someone's jealousy trip you up or cause you to fall short.
- CANCER June 21-July 22 If you don't get what's going on, ask questions. You can't possibly fix what's wrong if you don't understand the situation. Emotional problems brought on by an older relative or someone wanting to meddle in your affairs must be stifled.
- LEO July 23-Aug. 22 You'll take the people who know you best off guard with your serious, no-nonsense attitude. Just because you are willing to go the distance and do your best doesn't mean you should let others take advantage of your industrious attitude.
- VIRGO Aug. 23-Sept. 22 Attentive and helpful gestures will win you benefits. Someone you meet will offer something worth checking into. Develop a partnership that allows you to accomplish far more than you can by yourself.
- LIBRA Sept. 23-Oct. 22 Determination and practicality will be what counts. You owe it to yourself to take care of your own business. Think big, and a money-making opportunity will develop. A change will give you the boost you need.
- SCORPIO Oct. 23-Nov. 21 Size down, and be less indulgent if you want to get ahead. You have to budget your time and money in order to get your ideas and plans moving in a positive direction. Face your competition head on; don't back down.
- SAGITTARIUS Nov. 22-Dec. 21 Communicate, ask questions and go to the source in order to find out all you need to know to get your plans underway. If you jump from one thing to another, you will fall short of your expectations.
- CAPRICORN Dec. 22-Jan. 19 Your focus should be on professional and financial gains. Put an end to any messy, personal issues. Productivity is what counts, and anyone trying to stop you can expect a negative response.
- AQUARIUS Jan. 20-Feb. 18 You'll be fortunate, no matter what you do and good things will come from an unexpected source. A friend will be there to back you if you need help and encourage you to follow through with your plans.
- PISCES Feb. 19-March 20 A financial proposal will be exactly what you need to pursue something you've always wanted to do. An encounter with someone who can complement your plans and your personal life will develop through unusual circumstances.

Henderson, Rice in Hall

By JOHN KEKIS

Associated Press

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y.

— Jim Rice's icy glare melted into a wide smile. Brash, flamboyant Rickey Henderson was humbled by it all.

The former left fielders were inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame on Sunday along with the late Joe Gordon, and Henderson, baseball's all-time leading base stealer, was briefly overcome before evoking some hearty laughs.

"My journey as a player is complete," he said. "I am now in the class of the greatest players of all time, and at this moment, I am very humbled." Born in Chicago on Christmas Day 1958, Henderson moved with his family to California when he was 7 years old and became a three-sport star at Oakland Technical High School. Football was his forte, and he received numerous scholarships. He was persuaded to turn them down for a shot at baseball. "My dream was to play football for the Oakland Raiders," Henderson said. "But my mother thought I would get hurt playing football, so she chose baseball for me. I guess moms do know best." Henderson led the AL in steals 12 times, and he holds the record for steals with 1,406, runs scored with 2,295, unintentional walks with 2,129, and homers leading off a game with 81. He said he owed much of that to a trick played by his former Babe Ruth coach, Hank Thompson.

Rice inductee

Henderson inductee

"He tricked me into playing by coming to pick me up with a glazed doughnut and a cup of hot chocolate," said Henderson, who played for nine teams during his 25-year career. "That was the way he would get me up and out of bed."

While Henderson was just the 44th player elected to the Hall in his first year of eligibility, Rice had to wait until his final year of eligibility to be selected.

"It doesn't matter that the call came 15 years later," Rice said. "What matters is that I got it."

"It's hard to comprehend. I am in awe to be in this elite company and humbled to be accepting this honor. I cannot think of anywhere I'd rather be than to be right here, right now, with you and you," Rice said, pointing at the 50 Hall of Famers on stage behind him and then at the fans. "Thank you."

Playing at a time when offensive numbers paled in comparison to the past two decades, the so-called steroid era, Rice batted .298 with 382 home runs and 1,451 RBIs from 1974-89. He drove in 100 or more runs eight times, batted over .300 seven times, and topped 200 hits four times. And he's the only player in major league history with at least 35 homers and 200 hits in three-consecutive seasons (1977-79).

And he's known for a long time the reason he had to wait so long.

"The media often asked me about my players [teammates]," Rice, now 56, said. "I refused to be the media's mouthpiece. I came to Boston to play professional baseball, and that's what I did. And I did it well."

Henderson said a high-school counselor who needed players for the baseball team also sparked his interest in baseball.

"She would pay me a quarter every time I would get a hit, when I would score or stole a base," he said.

Contador, as expected, wins Tour

By JAMEY KEATEN

Associated Press

PARIS — Lance Armstrong's children were dressed in yellow. He was not.

When the seven-time Tour de France champion returned to the Tour podium Sunday, his family was there. His fans were there. And so was rival and teammate Alberto Contador — wearing the coveted and hard-won yellow jersey.

Four years after his seventh Tour win, Armstrong capped his return with an impressive third-place finish. He had his whole clan on hand — son Luke, twin girls Grace and Isabelle, his mom, Linda, and his girlfriend, Anna Hansen, with their baby Max, sporting bright yellow shoes.

They were among the massive crowd that poured out onto Paris' most famous avenue for the finish — Norwegians in Viking helmets, flag-waving Britons, and an American in a Stars-and-Stripes top hat among them.

Contador cruised down the Champs-Elysees to win the Tour for a second time Sunday after 2,141 miles over three weeks of racing. He repelled many challenges in the mountains, excelled in the two time-trials — winning a pivotal race against the clock in the 18th stage — and won the first Alpine stage.

Andy Schleck of Luxem-

Seven-time Tour de France winner Lance Armstrong (left), who finished third, is greeted by his family and girlfriend Anna Hansen, holding their son Max, as he steps down from the podium after the 21st stage of the Tour Paris on Sunday.

bourg, Contador's toughest rival in the mountains, was second overall.

Contador's biggest battle, however, was against his own Astana team.

"It has been an especially difficult Tour for me, but I savor it, and it is more special because of it," he said after the prize ceremony.

"The body language on the winner's podium said it all.

As the 37-year-old Armstrong climbed onto the stage, he gave a perfunctory handshake to his teammate Contador, then heartily grabbed Schleck's hand with both hands.

And as Contador took the victor's bowl, Armstrong cast a long sideways glance at what had long been his spoils; he gave only a cursory glance to his own crystal trophy.

Asked on French TV what the hardest moment in this race, Contador replied: "It was in the [team] hotel," without elaborating.

Only 26 years old, Contador already is one of cycling's greats, having won all three Grand Tours of France, Italy, and Spain.

Armstrong's comeback after 3½ years of retirement raised questions about who would lead Astana during cycling's most prestigious race. And those questions remained through much of the Tour as tensions mounted over who was the No. 1 rider.

"We are totally incompatible," Contador said. "In the end, Armstrong will go his way, and I'll go mine."

On Sunday, they were both headed for Paris and the winner's podium.

They shared a glass of champagne on the ride into the city, only this time it was to celebrate Contador's win and their win as a team.

"I'm realistic; I did everything I could," Armstrong said before the final stage. "For me, and even more for my kids, it's probably a healthy thing for them to see, because they saw their dad that never lost, and the kids in their class [say], 'your dad never loses,' so it's good for them to see dad get third, and still be cool with that, and still be happy with it."

By the end of the race, Armstrong, who admitted his form wasn't the best, was talking less of squabbling within Astana and more about Contador's greatness as a rider.

Despite the team tensions, Contador said he enjoyed this victory more than in 2007. Four days from the finish that year, then race leader Michael Rasmussen of Denmark was sent home for lying about his whereabouts during pre-Tour doping controls.

Uncompromising, unflinching, and not for the faint of heart, HUNGER follows a hunger strike instigated by a group of detained Irish Republican Army members in a military prison during the 1980s. The film centers on IRA soldier Bobby Sands through a series of increasingly drastic protests following rampant prisoner abuse at the hands of the guards. Downplaying the inherent political agenda of the subject matter, director Steve McQueen instead focuses on the all-encompassing transformative power that the hunger strike has on Sands. HUNGER pushes through the clichés of both prison films and political films to make something original, powerful and hard to shake.

Gatens eyes repeat

GATENS

Though mindful that Culver's could win the championship without an Hawkeye player's name on the scorecard, Farokhmanesh says a perceived Northern Iowa-Iowa rivalry is the last thing on his mind.

"A lot of emphasis gets put on that," said Farokhmanesh, who grew up in Iowa City playing for West High, then transferred to Northern Iowa from Kirkwood Community College. "We have players from a lot of different schools who have helped us get here."

Gatens, who has averaged nearly 22 points per game and finished second overall in assists per game with 7.6, will need Northern Iowa 3-point threat Matt Schneiderman to help him overcome Koch and Farokhmanesh. Schneiderman has scored a league-high 26.6 points per game while managing to finish in the top five in assists with 5.4 per game. He shot 56 percent from beyond the arc, putting him second in the league. Former Upper Iowa standout Nick Kramer, averaging 20 points and 9.6 rebounds per game, will also be a factor.

Though many Iowa fans may be shocked to see so few players representing the Black and Gold in the championship, Larson isn't surprised to see so many Northern Iowa products suiting up for tonight's contest.

"Time and time again, [Northern Iowa] has proven to be every bit as good as Iowa's program," said Larson, who filled in for coach Ron Nove, who was out of town, in Culver's 101-93 semifinal win over Imprinted Sportswear/Goodfellow Printing.

"These kids always know the right way to play the game. Free-throw shooting, making that extra pass. They play [basketball] the right way and have done so for some time now."

The championship game will begin at the North Liberty Community Center at 6 p.m. in the second gym.

CARDINALS

No matter who pitches for the Phillies, the big bats are usually out.

The Phillies wasted little time rocking righty starter Todd Wellemeyer (7-9). Wellemeyer continues to struggle and lasted only 5 2-3 innings when the Cardinals could have used a longer outing to give the bullpen a needed break.

Instead, Utley, Howard and Rollins all took him deep to build a 7-2 lead before he was yanked in the sixth.

Ibanez made it 9-2 in the seventh when he hit his 26th homer of the season off Blake Hawksworth. Ibanez moved into second place in the NL in homers and the Phillies lead the league with 138 homers.

Utley, who hit his 22nd, was the first to go deep when he hit a full-count pitch into the first few rows in right for a 3-1 lead in the third.

Howard's 25th home run ricochet off the ivy-covered brick wall in center in the fifth for a 5-2 lead. Howard also had a sacrifice fly in the first.

Iowa senior linebacker A.J. Edds tees off at the 10th hole at Finkbine during the Golden Harvest Golf Outing on July 25. The golf outing was part of the 2009 Golden Harvest festivities, which also included a tour of the wrestling facilities in Carver-Hawkeye Arena and a banquet at night.

HARVEST

Dale and Marilyn Howard of Iowa Falls won the Hawk of the Year award. The Howards have been I-Club members for 33 years and have contributed to several projects, including the current Carver-Hawkeye Arena renovations. Dale Howard is the owner and president of Dale Howard Inc., an automobile dealership in the central Iowa town of 5,000.

Last year, the couple made a gift commitment of $5 million.

"They are great examples. The tradition of their interest, tradition of giving, and their support is absolutely phenomenal," Ferentz said. "I think it's very symbolic of the kind of support we have been able to enjoy over the years."

Dale Howard, who earned a degree in physical education from the UI in 1955, said the award was a tremendous honor for him and his wife.

"It is probably the top thing that could ever happen to us," he said. "To have them bestow this honor is really special."

Cubs take over first

CUBS

The Reds happily would settle for such problems. The loss wrapped up an 0-6 road trip, their first winless multi-series trip in five years, and they fear they've lost two more players to injury.

Cincinnati already has seven players on the DL.

Making things even more frustrating, the Reds had a potential rally snuffed out in their eighth on what replays showed was a missed call by home-plate umpire Laz Diaz.

Trailing 3-1, the Reds loaded the bases with one out against Angel Guzman. Edwin Encarnacion tried to score on Jerry Hairston Jr.'s fly ball but was called out even though he slid home ahead of center fielder Kosuke Fukudome's throw.

"Man, Dickerson looks like he's hurt pretty good," said Reds' manager Dusty Baker, who was obviously irritated. "Micah's shoulder is barking. Edwin was safe at the plate. Every day there's a call. Every day."

Dickerson said his injury reminded him of a torn rotator cuff he suffered in 2006. Owings said he didn't feel as bad as last year, when he missed most of the last two months with shoulder pain. Both players will be evaluated Monday in Cincinnati.

Owings (6-11) gave up two runs on three hits and four walks — including one to Fukudome with the bases loaded — in matching his shortest outing this season.

White Sox avoid 4-game sweep

DETROIT (AP) — Paul Konerko hit a two-run homer in Chicago's four-run first, Gordon Beckham added a solo home run the next inning, and the White Sox coasted to a 5-1 win Sunday night over the Detroit Tigers and avoided a sweep.

Clayton Richard (4-3) allowed only a run on five hits over eight innings to help the White Sox salvage a four-game series that started with them tied atop the AL Central with Detroit. The Tigers lead Chicago by two games and the Minnesota Twins by four.

Rick Porcello (9-7) gave up five runs and five hits over 5 1/3 innings. The rookie has allowed 19 earned runs in his last four starts after giving up 16 earned runs in the previous 10 outings.

Porcello got off to a rough start, loading the bases with two singles and a walk. Jim Thome followed with a fielder's choice to drive in the first run, and the second one came on Adam Everett's throwing error on the play.

Konerko took advantage of a 3-1 count by sending a pitch 402 feet to left-center, snapping an 0-for-13 slump and putting the White Sox ahead 4-0 with his 19th homer.

After Porcello needed 31 pitches to get out of the first inning, Richard retired the Tigers in order with just nine pitches in the home half to set the tone for the game.

Twins rookie ends Angels' streak

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Although Justin Morneau took the AL lead in both homers and RBIs with a noisy day at the plate, Minnesota's slugger gave more credit to a rookie pitcher for waking the Twins out of a big sleep.

Morneau first baseman

Anthony Swarzak shut down the Angels' potent lineup with 6 2/3 strong innings, and the Twins ended Los Angeles' eight-game winning streak with a 10-1 victory Sunday.

Denard Span homered and drove in a season-high four runs, and even light-hitting Nick Punto added a season-best three RBIs as Minnesota ended a four-game losing streak. The rebound came one day after a closed-door meeting in which the Twins worried aloud whether their season was slipping away.

"Any time you get pitching like that, it gives you a little boost," Morneau said. "You're not trying to hit three-run homers because you're down by seven. ... We needed it for ourselves, for our confidence. They beat us around pretty good for the last three days, so it was good to come back and do that to them — for one game, anyway."

Ferentz: Holes to fill

DAVID SCRIVNER/THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa wrestling assistant coach Terry Brands answers questions about the team during a tour of the wrestling facilities in Carver-Hawkeye Arena on July 25. The tour was a part of the 2009 Golden Harvest for I-Club members interested in seeing plans for the Carver-Hawkeye Arena renovation.

Iowa football coach Kirk Ferentz discusses upcoming season at 43rd annual Golden Harvest.

By CLARK CAHILL
clark-cahill@uiowa.edu

Iowa football coach Kirk Ferentz, speaking at the 43rd-annual Golden Harvest on July 25, said the Hawkeyes have some holes to fill, and that will be pivotal for any success in the upcoming season.

The team not only lost some excellent players from last year's squad, he said, but excellent leadership, too. He is counting on such veterans as seniors A.J. Edds and Tony Moeaki to step into those roles.

"We have a good foundation and a nucleus of guys on offense and defense," Ferentz said. "We are anxious to see how that develops."

Ferentz also said the team's success always relies on "good stories." He used former Hawkeyes Shonn Greene and Bradley Fletcher as examples of players who became large contributors after previously not playing much.

The coach said that how well the team plays on the road will be significant. Iowa will face a tough road schedule, with games at Penn State, Wisconsin, Michigan State, and Ohio State.

"I'm not saying we don't need to worry about our home schedule, either," he said. "But if we are going to be a good football team, we are going to have to be able to handle our challenging road schedule."

The Golden Harvest is an annual golf outing and dinner program hosted by the National I-Club. It is the organization's way to provide recognition to contributors to the Hawkeye Fund and Iowa Scholarship Fund.

"A lot of people who come are our leaders from our local chapters and member of the National I-Club Board," said Darryl Borchering, the National I-Club director of development for athletics. "This is our way to say thank you for all of their work throughout the spring working on their grassroots support and getting local energy to support the Hawks."

The event also included an optional tour of the Dan Gable Wrestling Complex hosted by assistant wrestling coach Terry Brands.

He described the expansion of the Dan Gable Wrestling Complex and said it will be the best facility in which he has ever worked.

"I have been all over the world and seen just about every wrestling facility there is," said Brands, who won a bronze medal during the 2000 Summer Olympics in Sydney. "This will be the premier institution in the world."

Before Ferentz spoke at the dinner, four awards were given to those who contributed most to the I-Club last year — Hawk of the Year, I-Club Volunteer of the Year, I-Club of the Year, and a Special Commendation.

Prime Time Prime finale

The Prime Time League is ready to crown a champion.

By SEAN MORGAN
sean-morgan@uiowa.edu

The Prime Time League has been dominated by Iowa basketball players' performances, as the largest program-participant had a definite presence on the court.

But tonight's matchup will be unique.

Gatens guard

Matt Gatens will walk into the Prime Time championship game as the lone Hawkeye in the bunch when he leads his second-ranked Jill Armstrong of Lepic-Kroeger Realtors against the league's top team, Culver's of Coralville. Iowa teammate Andrew Brommer will remain on the bench for Culver's with a badly sprained ankle.

Because of the teams' fluidity and precision on the court, league director Randy Larson thinks the game is a must-see for local sports fans.

The dangerous tandem of Adam Koch and Ali Farokhmanesh of Northern Iowa will be the roadblock in Gatens' path to a back-to-back Prime Time championship. Perhaps a mountain might be a better analogy — both Panther stars scoring more than 20 points a game while shooting more than 60 percent from the field and more than 80 percent from the charity stripe.

Philly homers sink Cardinals

By DAN GELSTON
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Chase Utley, Ryan Howard, Jimmy Rollins, and Raul Ibanez all hit two-run home runs to lead the Philadelphia Phillies to a 9-2 win over the St. Louis Cardinals on Sunday.

Blanton pitcher

Joe Blanton (7-4) had another effective outing, allowing only two runs, and he struck out six over eight innings. Blanton has allowed two runs or fewer and pitched at least seven innings in five of his last six starts for the NL East leaders.

Howard had three RBIs to lift the Phillies to their 17th win in 20 games.

Mark DeRosa hit a solo homer for the Cardinals, who dropped two of three in a matchup of division leaders.

Blanton has been Philadelphia's most dependable starter the last two months, and he has put a slow start way behind him. He's lost only once since May 9 (6-1) and the Phillies are now 20-12 in Blanton's 32 starts since he was acquired from Oakland last season.

He received a huge standing ovation from another sellout crowd when he struck out Matt Holliday to end the eighth inning. It matched his longest outing of the season.

Holiday's sacrifice fly in the first and DeRosa's fourth homer of the year in the fifth were the only runs off Blanton.

The burly right-hander is a big reason the Phillies are starting to pull away toward their third-straight NL East title. Acquiring Blue Jays ace Roy Halladay would go a long way toward boosting their odds at a second-straight World Series championship.

The Phillies are still actively pursuing the former Cy Young winner and could return from their seven-game road trip with another ace to pair with Cole Hamels in the rotation.

Brad Lidge tossed a scoreless ninth.

Harden pitches Cubs into first place

Associated Press Press

CHICAGO — Day, night, home, road ... Rich Harden says the when and where don't matter.

He proved it Sunday with a dominating 5-2 victory over the reeling, aching Cincinnati Reds that put the Chicago Cubs atop the NL Central for the first time since April 21.

After being told that manager Lou Piniella was pleased with his six-inning, one-hit performance, Harden smiled slyly and said: "Yeah, and it was during the day, too, wasn't it?"

Harden, whose previous Wrigley Field day victory had been Aug. 24, 2008, snapped two inexplicable trends: Going into Sunday, he had a 1-5 record and 7.38 ERA in day games (vs. 5-1, 2.23 at night) and a 2-5 record and 7.59 ERA at home (vs. 4-1, 2.03 on the road).

"I had a bad first half and, of course, I pitched a lot of day games," he said. "It's the way I was throwing the ball. It's not like they were going to try to change the rotation around just to have me start all these night games."

Actually, Piniella had planned to start Harden tonight and moved the right-hander up a day only after Ted Lilly had to go on the disabled list.

run to the game's third batter, Joey Votto, Harden (7-6) retired the final 16 men he faced. He struck out eight and walked none in his 90-pitch effort and has surrendered only one run in each of his last three starts.

He called the attention he had received regarding his home and day statistics "ridiculous" and said he's feeling better after making some mid-season adjustments to his mechanics.

His Cubs are feeling good, too, winning 10 of their last 13 games to move a half-game ahead of St. Louis.

"We're headed in the right direction," Piniella said. "It's only a half-game, but we're on top."

As the two-time defending division champions — and the NL Central team with by far the highest payroll — the Cubs were expected to win again. Outfielder Milton Bradley didn't seem happy about the team's ascension, complaining about the demanding fans and media.

"Are we going to get more cheers now?" he asked reporters. "Are we going to start getting bashed ... in articles about our lineup and was it better last year and all that garbage?"
