A Mexican man in his early 40s sat focused at the end of a long table, stumbling over his pronunciation of "fireworks." Not far away, a woman studied for the U.S. citizenship test, easily answering questions about Supreme Court justices and Dwight D. Eisenhower.

On Thursday night, UI students helped immigrants transcribe Spanish thoughts into English words in West Liberty, a small town 30 minutes away from Iowa City. As the group members came together to share their summer stories, smiles and laughter lingered about the room like the small girl circling the tables, patiently waiting for her mother to finish her lesson.

Thursday's session was the first of the year for those involved with the West Liberty Adult Tutoring Program, which teaches non-English-speaking immigrants how to overcome the language barrier when dealing with everyday obstacles.

All of the volunteer tutors are either UI students or alumni, and they all share a passion for teaching.

"I just get a rush of energy from the family and community and just teaching in general," said UI senior Danielle Silva, who has interests in bilingual education and social justice.

Melissa Orsino, a UI graduate student in English education, expressed the same enthusiasm for the people involved.

"It's just such a great atmosphere," she said. "The students bring such great energy."

Although she sometimes gets tired on the ride out to West Liberty, Orsino said, she is energized when she sees the students ready to

The Wal-Mart cash register intones the familiar beep as bread, turkey, cookies, chips, and plastic gloves slide past the scanner.

UI graduate Mitch Moylan pays the $35.02 bill, but the food isn't for him or a Friday night party. It's going toward the free-sandwich stand he and UI graduate student Ukpong Eyo run every Friday afternoon.

The two meet once a week at the Campus Christian Fellowship, then carry a card table and a blue food-stuffed cooler to the Pedestrian Mall. As they set up the table, a line of "regulars" are always awaiting their Friday sandwich.

Reliable patrons and some passersby bump elbows with gloved Moylan and Eyo as they approach the table, a friendly greeting Moylan said they created to keep the gloves sanitary.

When the project began in last May, the sandwich fates were not well aligned. It was raining, and the stand drew some unwanted attention.

"That day the cops came out, and they gave us a hard time," Eyo said, describing how the police insisted they buy a license to give away food. "We understood. The cops are there to protect. [The customers] were thinking the cops were out to spoil all the fun."

The men checked into getting a license, which, they said, would have cost them hundreds of dollars.

If they handed out food once a week, Moylan said, and if they stayed on a little strip across from the Washington and Dubuque intersection, they could continue to hand out the sandwiches.

Regents eye tuition increase

A lack of state education funding could push tuition up from 2.7 percent to 5 or 6 percent.

By SHANE ERSLAND

COUNCIL BLUFFS — UI students may face steeper tuition increases next year because of the ongoing financial struggles of Iowa's universities, one member of the state Board of Regents said on Thursday.

Tuition fees will rise at least 2.7 percent — the midpoint of the Higher Education Price Index — during the 2010-11 school year. But Regent Craig Lang said the number probably needs to be closer to 5 or 6 percent to help make up for the lack of state funding.

Lang suggested the hike during discussion about the $767.6 million state appropriation request for fiscal 2011 at Thursday's regents' meeting in Council Bluffs. The regents unanimously approved the request, which assumes the baseline increase of 2.7 percent for the UI, Iowa State University, and the University of Northern Iowa.

The U.S. House passed a bill on Thursday that could dramatically speed up the way students apply for federal financial aid.

Officials said they hope the bill will simplify the application process, a yearly task frustrating for many college students.

"The old system was simply not efficient," said Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., in a teleconference with student journalists this week.

The bill, titled the Student Aid and Fiscal Responsibility Act, aims to provide federal financial aid to a broader range of Americans and improve competition in America's job market.

Representatives touted the new system, saying it would save taxpayers roughly $87 billion over 10 years by switching to the cheaper Direct Loan Program.

In search of new name

For two UI alums, a class assignment turned into a company.

The business, J&J Solutions, is a concept developed in 2006 by John Slump and Jared Garfield as a part of the UI's entrepreneurial program at the Pappajohn Entrepreneurial Center.

The company "manufacture[s] a patent-pending, disposable medical device that enables safer, more time-efficient, and cost-effective preparation and delivery of chemotherapy and other hazardous drugs," Slump said.

The cofounders were motivated to create the business when their family members were diagnosed with cancer, Slump said. Slump did research on cancer care and chemotherapy and discovered that the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health estimates 5.5 million workers are exposed to chemotherapy and other hazardous drugs during preparation and delivery, which can cause serious illnesses and damage.

"We resolved to develop and commercialize a product that eliminated these severe health risks while simultaneously making the chemotherapy preparation and delivery process more efficient and affordable," Slump said.

Joe George, a UI entrepreneurial marketing lecturer, said he recalls when Slump turned in the project, which was above and beyond what the assignment called for.

But the two former UI students now have a problem: Their name is too similar to Johnson & Johnson.

"We want a company name that evokes the industry and space we are in — pharmacy-safety technology," Slump said.

Slump contacted George to ask if he could hold a brainstorming session with his students to come up with a new name for the firm. Both George's Wednesday and Thursday classes helped Slump and Garfield generate possible names for the firm.

"I thought it was really productive," said UI junior Ashley Keifer, who is in the Wednesday section. "I thought it was really awesome to see actual alumni from this university be successful."

George's classes were beneficial, Slump said, and they helped "fill that huge whiteboard with text twice over."

"Aggregately, [the students] are a mental powerhouse with no restraints, and they got into it," said Slump, who now plans to chose a new name and logo for the firm.

"It was hard to believe that two young business students in Iowa City could spearhead the launch of a multimillion dollar medical-device company,"

Slump said. "If there's one piece of advice I would give to aspiring entrepreneurs out there, as cliché as it is, don't ever give up."

George said he feels that Slump and Garfield helped inspire his students.

"John is a great example of what young people can do if they put their minds to it and believe in their service and pursue it," George said. "He is a living example. John [and Jared] took advantage of it, and now look at where [they are]."

No raises for school presidents

By SHANE ERSLAND
shane-ersland@uiowa.edu

COUNCIL BLUFFS — UI President Sally Mason will not receive a pay raise for fiscal 2010, but she could receive a bonus of up to $80,000.

The state Board of Regents announced at its Thursday meeting in Council Bluffs that Mason and the presidents of Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa could garner performance bonuses, though the regents froze their base salaries earlier this year.

In late February, the regents announced it would not offer raises or fiscal 2009 performance bonuses to presidents at the three regent universities. Leaders at the state's schools for the deaf and blind also relinquished salary increases or performance incentives.

The current bonuses range from a possible $25,000 for UNI President Ben Allen to Mason's potential $80,000, which fits with the typical bonus plan.

Bonus money would come from the universities' general operating budgets, said Regent President David Miles.

"For the year that ended in 2009 [the institutions heads] would have been eligible for them, but we didn't give any," he said. "They are eligible for the bonuses this year, but we reserve the right not to give them."

The regents will know which heads will receive bonuses within a few weeks, he said.

Typically, raises and bonuses are doled out after annual performance reviews, which the regents conducted in closed sessions on Wednesday. As planned, the regents held off on raising any president's salary due to budget concerns. The regents will decide which leaders deserve performance bonuses by examining the presidents' goals and other categories, some of which hold more weight.

Because of the faltering economy, university leaders did not meet some of their goals set last year. For example, the regents expected Mason to fill vacancies on the UI's administrative team but five of the spots still remain open.

When regents announced earlier this year they would ask institutional heads to surrender raises, UI Provost Wallace Loh said the move was positive during tough economic times.

"It is leadership by example," Loh told the DI in March. "Once the president sets the example, then I think vice presidents and deans may very well want to follow that example."

Across the country, some university presidents rarely earn bonuses, regardless of economic conditions.

Dan Wolter, spokesman for the University of Minnesota, said his school did not offer its president a plan similar to the regents'.

"Bonuses here are really uncommon except in business development offices where people might be eligible," he said. "Our president will not be getting a bonus."

Mike Lillich, assistant director in the Office for University Relations at the University of Illinois, also said his school didn't give raises, but made some financial exceptions to attract and retain top faculty.

Mason will remain the highest paid regent university president in the state at a base salary of $450,000. ISU President Greg Geofrey brings in $423,315, and UNI President Ben Allen has a salary of $320,000.

This is the second year Mason will not receive a salary increase. The regents denied her a raise last year after the UI mishandled an alleged Hillcrest sexual-assault case.

Supervisors back health-care reform

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors agreed on a resolution which urges "immediate passage of comprehensive federal health-care reform legislation" on Thursday.

Supervisor Sally Stutsman said this shows support for urging any health-care reform, not a specific policy.

The supervisors also voted to raise the bottom wage of township trustees and clerks. Supervisor Pat Harney said this raises their earnings from $9 per hour to $12.

VJ Engineering gave a report to the board on the condition of the Sutliff Bridge, outlining what options it would consider to restore it. The county will hold public meetings in the future to collect residents' viewpoint on the bridge's future.

But Stutsman said that before the supervisors hold any meetings, they want to ensure that the bridge would utilize Federal Emergency Management Agency funding if it is restored.

UI to add 2 programs

COUNCIL BLUFFS — The state Board of Regents granted UI officials permission to add two new programs — a bachelor of arts program in ethics and public policy and a bachelor of arts program in environmental sciences.

The ethics and public-policy program will provide a cross-disciplinary approach connecting the study of philosophy, economics, law, and sociology. The program is unique to the UI, with no other institutions in the state offering it.

The environmental-sciences program will provide students with a more flexible alternative to the existing bachelor of science program in environmental sciences.

The board also gave UI officials permission to terminate the bachelor of arts program in oral health science.

Admissions to graduate studies in German were suspended with regents' approval as well. UI officials had already suspended admissions for the current year, after the program had generated only four applications this fall.

state Board of Regents to remodel some portions of the Dental Science Building during the regents' meeting on Thursday.

The first phase of the project is expected to cost around $17 million, and it will include building on the south side of the structure's parking lot.

Doug True, the UI senior vice president for Finance, said the building is sturdy enough to go ahead with the remodeling.

"The building is structurally sound, and we've had two separate assessments of it," he said.

Restructuring the area is expected to take around five years.

The UI is requesting the expansion because of the growing number of students enrolling in the dental program in recent years.

federal government rather than borrowing money from an independent source, which students did with the old Federal Family Education Loan Program.

Mark Warner, the director of UI Student Financial Aid, said the new bill will increase allocated funding for the federal Pell Grant.

In 10 years, students will be able to receive 30 percent more from the grant than the current amount — all while keeping their interest rates low, he said.

For the 2008-09 academic year, 3,281 UI students borrowed federal dollars from the Federal Pell Grant loan program.

"Overall, I believe it's a great piece of legislation," Warner said.

U.S. Department of Education Secretary Arne Duncan labeled the bill a historic milestone.

In the conference call, he stressed the importance of ensuring more college students graduate to improve America's international ranking.

The U.S. currently ranks sixth in the number of college graduates produced throughout the world, Duncan said, but America graduates only half of students who enter college.

"By improving our graduation rate over the next 10 years, America's economy will grow significantly," he said.

The government will invest savings earned from this new system into the country's educational system.

The act will implement new standards to provide children from low-income families more pre-kindergarten and kindergarten opportunities. The bill's savings would also allocate $12 billion to America's community colleges.

"I believe community colleges are the gem of this country's educational system," Duncan said. "They provide adults with adequate training to attain a better, higher paying job."

Duncan also noted community colleges that offer training in "green" energy technology provide students sturdy job prospects.

The fledgling proposal has students around the UI campus eager for an easier application process.

UI sophomore Josh Messer, a two-year financial-aid recipient, said he's glad the government is investing in U.S. colleges and universities.

Justin Thornburg, also a sophomore and two-year financial aid recipient, said applying for financial aid has always been a daunting task.

Rep. Dave Jacoby, D-Coralville, said he usually supports legislation that improves opportunities for local students because he represents a district with a university in it.

Marvin Morley eats a sandwich prepared by Mitch Moylan on the Pedestrian Mall on Sept. 11. Morley visits the table almost every week to grab a bite to eat.

Giving a free bite

The two sandwich men are individually associated with the Campus Christian Fellowship, and their faith played a prominent role in the creation of the booth. But they did not want people to feel as though there were religious preconditions involved in accepting food.

"When we started out, we wanted to do the good thing," Eyo said, his voice possessing a slight accent from the Nigerian home he left six years ago. "We didn't want it to be like we were trying to buy them. The best we could do was to get to know them, get to know their names."

After a year of handing out sandwiches, the pair can count on always seeing certain regulars, including Marvin Morley, 50, who has two sandwiches named after him.

One of those sandwiches is the Marvin Sandwich — a regular sandwich with chips in the middle, Eyo said.

"Only way to eat them," Morley said, shrugging as he took a big, crunchy bite. "It all goes down the same way."

Morley also originated the Duane Sandwich — Mayo and chips on a slice of bread — which he proudly exhibited as he sat on a bench beneath a tree. He is a frequent visitor to the stand, attending all but two Fridays since its start, he said.

When students begin to don hats and gloves and the leaves above the table change color and drop, the customary menu is exchanged for warm chili.

"When it started getting cold last year, sandwiches and cold drinks didn't seem to be right," Moylan said. "We cooked up a whole Crock-Pot of chili, cut up some onions and cheese."

Not all meals go to the regulars, nor are they exclusively for the homeless. But for many who receive the sandwiches, they are a welcomed sustenance that fill up empty stomachs.

Debora Gustafson, 50, said she was coming back to the Ped Mall from a Mid-Eastern Council on Chemical Abuse class when she realized she only had enough money for a cup of coffee.

"I said to [my friend], 'I'm broke.' Then this guy comes in, and he says, 'They're handing out sandwiches on the Pedestrian Mall,'" Gustafson said through the haze of smoke in the Tobacco Bowl, 111 S. Dubuque St. "I was surprised, but it just goes to show you, random acts of kindness just come around."

REGENTS

The 5 to 6 percent increase would force students to pay spend approximately $300 more per year on their education, Lang said.

Last year, the regents increased tuition by 4.2 percent for in-state students.

Some UI students who heard the news said it's always disheartening to learn about the increases every year.

UI sophomore Joe Fleming said his parents likely won't be too happy with the rising tuition. But the Chicago native said it won't keep him from returning to the UI.

Michelle Terwilliger, a junior pharmacy major from Humboldt, Iowa, said she'll probably have to borrow more loan money to pay a higher tuition.

"Pharmacy school is pretty expensive as it is, so I won't be a happy camper," she said. She has some financial help from her parents, she said, but she gets the rest of tuition money from loans.

The tuition increase was just one topic regents discussed at their meeting.

UI President Sally Mason also informed the regents of the school's new policies regarding sexual misconduct.

First-year UI students will now be required to complete an online course addressing sexual harassment, sexual assault, dating violence, and stalking. The course must be completed before the start of a student's second semester.

The course is a result of UI officials' convergence with the law firm Schuster & Clifford to upgrade the university's sexual misconduct policy.

As of Thursday, 3,659 students had completed the training.

New training is not just relegated to UI students. So far, 97 percent of the faculty, staff and teaching assistants have completed new training that involves mandatory web-based learning or an instructor-led program. The program covers harassment, misconduct, and policy-reporting protocols.

Regent President David Miles approved of the policy upgrades.

"This is tremendously important work," he said.

The free program reflects West Liberty's diversity, where immigrants come from Mexico, El Salvador, Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam. Their speaking skills are as varied as their backgrounds, making it difficult for the tutors to design programming to fit the levels of each student.

But the tutors pride themselves on their ability to cater to their students' needs. UI associate professor Carolyn Colvin, the program's director, said the tutors' enthusiasm outweighs their language skills.

"Knowing the language isn't necessarily the most important thing," she said. "The most important quality you need is the desire to help someone learn something new."

Tutors use an individual approach that focuses on what the students want to learn, a method Colvin described as "elbow-to-elbow" tutoring.

"It's not me teaching them, it's us working together," Silva said.

Orsino said the cooperative dynamic proves beneficial for both the tutors and students.

"When I started tutoring, I had this idea that I would be a beacon of Americana," Orsino said. "The more I tutored, the more I realized I was learning just as much from them."

Silva said the value of the program goes beyond developing any new teaching technique.

"There is a reward to seeing people be so excited to learn English," she said. "Just seeing the look on their faces is great."

Flu numbers to increase, officials say

With possibly 200 cases of H1N1 already on campus, UI officials said the number of students contracting the virus may be on the rise.

"I believe we will see an increase almost immediately," said Jean Robillard, the UI vice president for Medical Affairs, during a state Board of Regents meeting in Council Bluffs on Thursday.

H1N1 cases are increasing at the UI and are expected to be the rest of the year, UI Health Care officials said Thursday.

"Usually you see a peak in winter, but we're seeing it already," Robillard told the regents.

Many schools, including the UI, continue to work on a vaccination for the virus, which could be complete by the end of October. In the meantime, students are encouraged to prevent spreading the flu with basic sanitary measures, including washing their hands and staying home when feeling ill.

When the vaccine becomes available, officials will administer it to priority groups, including pregnant women, household contacts, and caregivers for children younger than six months, as well as health-care and emergency personnel.

Dean of the College of Medicine Paul Rothman said everyone should eventually take advantage of a future vaccination.

"When they develop an effective vaccine, everyone should get it," he said.

UI's hypocrisy clear in recent acceptance of ExxonMobil donation

The UI is going through tough times. The economic recession has wreaked havoc on the university's finances. It has cut deeply into the state's budget, and that, in turn, has sliced through the UI's. The university has had to make numerous sacrifices in order to balance its books, but integrity shouldn't be one of them.

ExxonMobil's contributions to the UI both last year and this year stand in direct contradiction to the university's commitment to sustainability and risk eroding its integrity.

The UI announced on Sept. 11 that ExxonMobil donated approximately $100,000 to the UI Foundation — the nonprofit organization that handles private donations to the university — as part of the oil company's employee matching program. Under the program, ExxonMobil donates $3 for every $1 an employee or employee's relative donates to the foundation. Employee donations last year totaled more than $36,000 last year.

ExxonMobil's donation is a large sum and will no doubt help floundering departments desperately in need of some extra cash. But impressive as it may be, ExxonMobil's donations are antithetical to the UI's sustainability commitment. The university introduced a certificate program this semester designed to prepare students for sustainability careers and research. The new Beckwith Boathouse is the first building at the UI to receive Leadership in Energy Environmental Design certification. Craig Just, an associate research scientist of civil-environmental engineering, said the UI was looking to expand its commitment to sustainability.

ExxonMobil's donations come at an inappropriate time.

The oil giant is a leader in arguably the least sustainable industry in the world and delivered a $45 billion profit to shareholders last years. Despite its public-relations blitz touting the company as environmentally friendly, the numbers tell a very different story. ExxonMobil has invested about $1.5 billion since 2004 "to reduce greenhouse-gas emissions and improve energy efficiency," according to its 2008 annual report, but spent $12.3 billion on capital and oil exploration products in the first half of 2009 alone, according to the

Dallas Business Journal. The priorities of the ostensibly "green" company are clear.

The company is also responsible for one of North America's greatest environmental disasters. The Exxon Valdez — an Exxon oil tanker — ran aground on the Alaskan coast in 1989, spilling millions of gallons of oil and severely damaged the environment.

The money ExxonMobil and its employees have donated and continue to donate to the UI is no small sum. But relative to other donations the UI Foundation has received, it's not gargantuan, either. Susan Shullaw, the UI Foundation senior vice president for strategic communications, said Exxon's $100,000 approximate donation was one of around 100 other donations similar in size. The UI Foundation received more than $200 million in contributions this year — an 8 percent increase over last year, according to its website. ExxonMobil's contribution is a drop of oil in the ocean comparably.

The contribution's relative size and scope illuminates the UI Foundation's reasoning behind its acceptance. Shullaw said the UI and UI Foundation officials take a second look at a company only if its contribution could lead to recognition. The UI would think twice if the oil giant wanted to give $50 million toward the ExxonMobil Center for Sustainability, for example, but the UI Foundation didn't hesitate in accepting $100,000. Shullaw said the company's matching program is more about ExxonMobil encouraging its employees and other alumni to give back to the UI than the company looking for recognition.

ExxonMobil isn't the first company with a questionable reputation the UI has accepted money from. Coca-Cola is infamous for allegations of union-busting and environmental degradation, yet the company still enjoys a sales monopoly on campus and at sporting events.

The ExxonMobil donation, however, highlights an even starker contradiction. The UI is busy trying to market itself as a "green" university. But how green can the UI really be if ExxonMobil is paying the bills?

Your turn. Should the UI Foundation have accepted ExxonMobil's donation? Weigh in on dailyiowan.com.

A tackle box full of race bait in today's America

By JONAH GOLDBERG

Of all the poisonous, ugly, and intellectually rapid controversies ginned up in my lifetime, the current breakout of St. Vitus' Dance over the "racist" opposition to Barack Obama may be the most egregious.

Al Sharpton tells CNN's Larry King that decent and racially sensitive Americans shouldn't let a small minority make health care into a "racial issue."

Someone in the control room surely yelled, "Cue the laugh track."

In case you don't get the joke, this entire "debate" over whether opposition to Obama's health-care reform is racist is totally, completely, and in every way conceivable an invention of the left.

Oh, sure, there are some racists who oppose Obama. Shocking news, that.

And, yes, a tiny, tiny fraction of the signs at the Tea Party protests last weekend were racially insensitive. But if that's how we're going to score, then opposition to the Iraq war is anti-Semitic. After all, I saw a bunch of signs at antiwar protests that said bigoted things about Jews.

Meanwhile, no significant conservative politician, pundit, or intellectual has said that they object to Obama's agenda because he's black. Rather, they've said they oppose his agenda for precisely the same reasons they oppose Nancy Pelosi's and Harry Reid's and Barney Frank's agendas. They stand athwart Obama yelling "Stop" just as they did with Clinton and Democratic presidents before him.

Magically, the alchemic powers of Obama's black skin transmogrify the same arguments and the same rhetoric into racism. Saying "you're wrong" to a white politician is a disagreement; saying it to a black politician is like shouting through Bull Connor's megaphone.

Left-wing writers spent the week droning on about how it's now racist to say "I want my country back." These amnesiacs are blissfully unaware that "taking back" America was the rallying cry of the Democratic Party for eight years under George W. Bush. Anti-white racists all?

Jimmy Carter sighs, "It's an abominable circumstance, and it grieves me and concerns me very deeply."

Well, ditto. Except I think the abominable circumstance is the Vesuvian eruption of nonsense belched forth from distempered liberals frustrated by their inability to win a public policy debate.

Really, President Carter? Based on what? Polls you've studied? Which ones? Or did you descend from the temple of the Carter Center, flee your enabling entourage of sycophants, and canvass some neighborhoods yourself? How many people told you they don't think a black man should be president? One? Two? Zero? Or are you simply reading minds again?

And, in fairness, when it became clear that Carter had turned this "debate" from mere fraud to farce, it suddenly dawned on some Democrats, including those in the White House, that smearing millions of constituents and swing voters (many of whom voted for Obama) as racists isn't the best politics.

Runners — the real nuts

lauren-sieben@uiowa.edu

It seems like almost everyone I know has a depraved, unnatural obsession with running.

People are constantly jogging. In the morning before class, during lunch breaks, late at night, even when it's pouring rain and when the sidewalks are a completely solidified sheet of ice. Runners possess an abnormal and unwavering dedication to their activity — a dedication that I've never shared or understood.

People particularly enjoy running while I'm partaking in grossly gluttonous activities. Like eating a brick of baking chocolate, unshowered, and attempting to distinguish transsexuals from women on "Maury." It used to bother me when I saw joggers run past while I loafed in front of the television. I would think, "Shit, that brick of baking chocolate isn't going to work itself off;" and sometimes that feeling would segue into an actual attempt at running.

I'd scour the apartment for my only pair of gym shoes, which hadn't made contact with pavement since high school P.E. and head outside for a jog. But 20 seconds into my noble effort, I'd realize why I first chose trannys over exercise — running is not fun, and anyone who believes otherwise is bat-shit bonkers. The feeling that my lungs are on fire is my body's way of saying, "Cut it out." Not, "Please, continue running, because this feels fantastic." Plus, running always leaves me with a nasty, stubborn headache. Anything that replicates a hangover from drinking a box of Franzia is absolutely not worth my time.

Beyond my disdain for jogging based on the discomfort it causes me, I find the activity troubling on a much more elementary level. Most people think of jogging as the Messiah of exercise, ignoring that there many other effective ways to work out. I know I'm not the only person who would rather clean a gas-station bathroom than relive running the mile from my high-school years. But those of us who loathe running are often too timid to speak out against it, because to most, running is considered cool.

You woke up at 6 a.m. for a jog today? Sweet, bro. Now you get a high-five. We know that running sucks and that we don't want to do it, so if you dragged your ass out of bed at 6 a.m. to jog, you hold your bragging rights over the rest of us. We were in bed at 6 a.m., being subpar human beings.

This idea that running is cool or respectable overshadows the fact that most masochistic running machines are also douchebags, which entirely cancels out their bragging rights.

Try telling a runner that walking is a legitimate form of exercise — he'll look at you like you birthed a child right on the floor in front of him. Runners see walking as an inferior method of fitness, but walking regularly has its own benefits — do it enough, and you'll inevitably lose weight and at least be in mildly decent shape.

Runners also rave incessantly about the "runner's high" they experience after they've metaphorically "hit the wall" in their workout — or, gotten to the point where their bodies are seriously not pleased. I don't need to "hit the wall" to have my own "Lauren's high." One might argue that marijuana is actually more efficient than running — you save loads of time and energy by skipping the "run" and heading straight for the "high."

Now is the time to stop over-glorifying running. It's merely a mediocre form of exercise dominated by douchey masochists seeking high-fives and simulated highs. If you're into fitness, wonderful. Sweat out 10 pounds of water at Bikram Yoga, or put in a Jane Fonda tape. But nobody thinks you're awesome for running 20 miles at the ass-crack of dawn this morning.

Go ahead and jog past my window again, but this time I won't succumb to the non-runner's guilt. I'm standing my ground and staying on this couch, picking out the transsexuals on "Maury." ■

Zombies return

By ERIC ANDERSEN
eric.p.andersen@uiowa.edu

BRAAAAINS!
Zombies will invade Iowa City on Saturday for the Fourth-Annual Iowa City Zombie March — an event that raises money for various charities while allowing people to unleash their inner thirst for blood. The family-friendly event will kick off at Happy Hollow Park. Participants can meet for makeup help at 3:30 p.m. or arrive at 4:30 p.m. in costume to learn about local charities and make donations. The walk begins at 5 p.m. and lasts around an hour — ending at the Deadwood Tavern, 6 S. Dubuque St.

“Of all the things you can do to volunteer and raise awareness, I mean serving in soup kitchens, picking up garbage off the highway — those are all noble things,” former Iowa City resident and UI graduate Shawn Beatty said. “This is far enough off the wall that people are like, ‘Yeah, I’m going to go out there, be weird, and be a zombie.’”

During the day, Beatty is a high-school Japanese teacher in Menasha, Wis. By night he is King Zombie — webmaster of kingzombie.com and leader of the undead. His site is dedicated to selling a variety of zombie collectibles from miniature replicas to board games.

Beatty organizes the Zombie March every year, but he said he can’t take credit for coming up with the idea. There are similar events around the nation. “I missed a zombie march in Madison, and I was like, ‘Dammit, I can do my own,’” he said. “I thought it would be a great way to raise awareness, and I thought Iowa City would be the perfect place to have it. Zombies marching into town will get your attention.”

Each year, Beatty puts together a list of charities and businesses to help sponsor the event. In turn these charities set up tables in Happy Hollow Park, where participants can donate money or food items. Beatty also picks one cause that he raises money for by selling T-shirts. This year, he is dedicating the Zombie March to his good friend and fellow UI graduate Christopher “Thor” McClatchey, who died of necrotizing fasciitis, a rare skin disease.

“The money is going to be donated to two charities,” Beatty said. “Thor’s family wants to donate something in his name, and they will pick where the money goes.”

Beatty initially started the event because he thought it would be a great way to get more people interested in doing charitable work.

“It hits a sector of society that might not ordinarily volunteer to help out and raise awareness,” Beatty said. “Blood drives attract regular people. With zombies you’ll get some of the alternative kids who will go, ‘Oh cool.’”

Beatty enlists some Iowa City residents to help set up and promote the event. UI graduate and clinical laboratory scientist Joshua Christain has been attending the Zombie March since it first started, and Beatty refers to him as his “man in the ground.”

“It’s just a fun event and is a strange thing you don’t normally get to do,” Christain said. “My wife and son are going. It’s kind of become a weird family thing.”

Saturday marks International Talk Like a Pirate Day, and Beatty said pirate zombie costumes are recommended. Christain said his family tries to wear different costumes each year for the event, but the most important thing is acting like a zombie.

“What makes a good costume I think it’s more in your body language,” he said. “Fake blood is wonderful, and makeup is fantastic, but if you’re walking around and talking like a normal person, you’re not a zombie.”

Beatty encourages people to bring $10 for a T-shirt, some extra cash for other charities, and cat or dog food as donations. However, he said, the event is free, and people should still show up even if they don’t have spare cash.

“C’mon this is too much fun to pass up,” Beatty said. “You promote charity, you get to dress as a zombie, and have a really good time.”

An evening with the ‘Schmemmys’

The Creative Arts Emmys (or as host Kathy Griffin calls them the “Schmemmys”) occurred last weekend (though it’ll technically air today on E!), and I wanted to point out a few winners (and losers) that you need to be sure to check out.

The first is “Dr. Horrible’s Sing-Along Blog,” starring famed funny man Neil Patrick Harris, Outstanding Special Class — Short-Format Live-Action Entertainment Program winner. The free vid (found at drhorrible.com) has everything — love, hatred, and a singing Harris. It doesn’t get any better. (Well, it would if Neil Patrick Harris took off his clothes and sang. Just saying.)

The second is one that I hope you’re all aware of, but if you haven’t watched the celebrated clip, you need to get on that faster than PETA at fashion week. Justin Timberlake grabbed the Emmy for Guest Actor in a Comedy Series for, what else, “Saturday Night Live.” More specifically, it was “Motherlover” starring Timberlake, Andy Samberg, and Susan Sarandon, that provided that epic win for the former ‘N Sync-er.

When country hits punk, it gets drunk

By ALISSA ROSEN
alissa.rosen@uiowa.edu

The first lyrics Mike Herrera sings on his latest album are a call to action: “Let’s drink, let’s drink till we fall down / let’s drink, I’ll see you on the ground / let’s drink, let’s drink till we fall down / there’s nothing else to do here in this town.”

Though it’s certainly not a plug for social activism, this sentiment is not a surprise from Herrera, who is best known as the lead singer and bassist of the pulsating punk group MxPx. Herrera now splits his time between MxPx and his new project, the country-punk-tinged Tumbledown.

On Sept. 20, Tumbledown will perform at 8 p.m. at the Picador, 330 E. Washington St. John Nolan of Taking Back Sunday and Straylight Run, as well as Lipstick Homicide, will open. Admission is $8.

Herrera’s venture into Southern territory is not completely unexpected. The musician experimented with different genres ranging from indie to country — the latter of which he began writing as far back as 1999.

“I wanted to have an outlet with [country] that I didn’t have previously with MxPx,” he said. “It gave me a little bit of a wider range to write about.”

Tumbledown’s genesis occurred when he came across a group called the Rocky Point All Stars, a country blues band from Bremerton, Wash. The MxPx member joined forces with the quartet, and Tumbledown was created.

“The musicians I have in my band have ridiculous stage energy; they blow my mind every night,” Herrera said. “I just sit there, and I can’t believe I am playing with these guys.”

The group released its first full-length album, Tumbledown, on May 19 — two years after the band formed. Herrera said the band waited so long before recording a CD because the members wanted to make sure the music on it would appeal to listeners.

“I didn’t want to just put out a record without playing live,” Herrera said. “We played live quite a bit before we even recorded the album.”

A majority of songs on Tumbledown are written based on experiences Herrera has had while playing different concerts.

“We started playing a show when the band went on tour on the West Coast, and it just became sort of the atmosphere of a party,” he said. “So when I was out writing songs for the full-length album, it was after we had been playing live a bit. It inspired me to write more songs about drinking, because that’s what people do at our shows.”

Tumbledown’s audiences play a role in both its songs and in its shows. Herrera said the band enjoys involving the crowd by creating a high-energy atmosphere and connecting with fans.

“A lot of it is about interacting with the crowd in between songs,” he said. “I’m always talking to people and having a good time. You know it’s kind of become a tradition where fans actually buy us drinks and bring us drinks to the stage. There’s drinking always.”

Third Eye Blind coming

SCOPE will bring Third Eye Blind to the IMU in November.

By REBECCA KOONS
rebecca.koons@uiowa.edu

The members of Third Eye Blind have lived more than a semi- charmed life. The band’s domination of ‘90s alt-rock airwaves included four albums, three top-10 U.S. singles, and a hit song that covertly inserted meth use into the mainstream.

Twelve years later, the post-grunge powerhouse will make its way to the UI community.

Third Eye Blind will perform in the IMU Main Lounge at 7:30 p.m. on Nov. 2. The show is a SCOPE production, and tickets are $30. The opening act will be announced.

“The band was routing the tour, and the dates lined up, and everything came together really well,” said Carly Susral, SCOPE’s director of marketing.

SCOPE is a primary source for live entertainment for UI students, and it produces concerts and events throughout the school year. In the past two years, its acts have included Shwayze, Dierks Bentley, Lupe Fiasco, 311, Motion City Soundtrack, and Chuck Berry. Third Eye Blind’s IMU performance is the latest addition to the band’s fall U.S. tour, which will kick off Sept. 25 and includes several performances at colleges across the country.

Members Stephan Jenkins, Tony Fredianelli, and Brad Hargreaves first broke onto the scene in 1997 with the band’s massive hit “Semi-Charmed Life.” Despite an extended hiatus, Third Eye Blind has continued to stay in the popular musical consciousness.

The group’s latest album, Ursa Major (released Aug. 18), is peppered with musical experimentation while maintaining the group’s characteristic alternative rock edge.

For many UI students, this concert will provide a chance to wax nostalgic on Third Eye Blind’s past hits, as well as the opportunity to experience the band in a fresh light with its new material.

“We think the reaction to Third Eye Blind will be a pretty positive one,” Susral said. “It’ll be cool for anyone who grew up in the ‘90s and remembers those hits. [The members] put on a great live show, and we’re really excited about it.”

Spotlight Iowa City

Helping hand for seniors

An Iowa City woman works to make retirement life a bit easier.

By JIM MALEWITZ
james-malewitz@uiowa.edu

When senior citizens talk, Karen Davis is there to listen.

Davis, 40, has worked closely with elderly Iowa City residents for the past two and a half years, helping them transition into retirement-community life.

Often spending time helping those with Alzheimer's and dementia, she said, her job inspires her every day.

'She is a fabulous person who is very dedicated to the residents. She's energetic, enthusiastic ... she goes above and beyond.'

— Jim Hunter, the executive director of Legacy Active

"I have become very attached to each one of our residents — they mean the absolute world to me," she said.

As marketing director for Legacy Active Retirement Community, her duties include more than salesmanship — she has penciled in advocate, listener, and companion into the job description as well.

"Part of my job is making people feel secure and knowing they are making the right choices," Davis said.

She also consults with people whose elderly parents want to live in active retirement communities. After spending 10 years as the owner of Iowa City Signs & Graphics, she said, she decided to try something new. Since then, she refuses to let go of what she has found.

Davis serves as a facilitator for two support groups — multiple sclerosis and Alzheimer's/dementia. It's here that she works closely with people with the diseases.

Her fellow employees have noticed Davis' connection with the residents.

"She is a fabulous person who is very dedicated to the residents," said Jim Hunter, the executive director of Legacy Active. "She's energetic, enthusiastic ... she goes above and beyond."

Through her work, Davis hopes to add to the residents' lives.

"Especially those with Alzheimer's and dementia — they deserve to have tremendous moments every day," she said. "They might have good days and bad days, but they all have stories. They need someone to partake in those stories."

As she grows close to each resident, she has had many heartwarming experiences. But her line of work also presents some inevitable difficulties, particularly when it comes to dealing with a death.

"It's just heart-wrenching to lose someone," she said.

With her heavy involvement at Legacy Active, her hours are hardly 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., especially when she's organizing community events. To help her out, the rest of the Davis family enlist their services.

Karen's husband, Chris Davis, runs a children's Easter egg hunt in the community, among other activities. Her two children, Derrick, 15, and Nicole, 12, also help whenever possible. Derrick has taken up the show-biz side, performing as Santa Claus, the Easter Bunny and even Elvis Presely.

"It's always a family affair," Chris Davis said about events at the community center. "The kids know all the residents. It's almost like they have a second set of grandparents."

ON THE WEB

Residents dub the community "a campus," Karen Davis said, with some comparing the social life to what they once found in their university residence halls.

Kirk Ferentz and the Hawkeye football team even stopped by recently to serve pancakes as a way to help raise money for the Alzheimer's Association.

During her whirlwind of daily duties, Davis said, she looks forward most to her breaks — not for alone time, but so she can more casually visit with residents and listen to more of their encapsulating tales.

"We need to cherish our seniors," she said. "They are what made this community what it is today."

Working to prevent suicide

Community members have discussed developing a suicide coalition for Johnson County.

By MITCHELL SCHMIDT
mitchell-schmidt@uiowa.edu

The number of suicides has more than tripled for adults ages 21 to 40 in the last year in Johnson County.

In 2008, there were four suicides in that age group. So far, that number has already reached 13 suicides.

"One suicide is too many," said Joan Benson, a facilitator at the Iowa City Crisis Center.

While the increase is surprising, more information regarding each particular case is necessary to determine if this is a trend and what may have caused it, according to the American Association of Suicidology.

One possible factor could be the faltering economy, said Sam Cochran, the director of the University Counseling Service.

"There has been a clear historical trend with suicide and economic problems," he said.

University Counseling Services has seen a decrease in the overall number of clients from 2,434 in the 2007-08 school year to 2,333 in the 2008-09 year.

The number of clients with depression was consistent, he said, with one in every five having some variation of suicidal thinking.

Officials agree that education and awareness are necessary in preventing suicide.

The Crisis Center worked toward that goal by hosting a meeting titled "It's Time to Talk About Suicide" on Sept. 9 in Iowa City.

Representatives from several organizations and family members of suicide victims attended.

Participants brought up one topic of interest — the Polk County Suicide Coalition, a collaboration of the county's suicide-prevention agencies.

The coalition provides a place where community partners and organizations can share ideas and work together in a more effective way, said Chris Frantsvog, a Polk County public-health planner.

The Polk County Coalition started out with 70 people in 2005; the number has more than doubled to 150.

Participants at the local meeting discussed the possibility of creating a similar coalition for Johnson County.

Keri Neblett, the Crisis Center program director, said it may be early to talk about a coalition, "but we did get some great feedback."

Johnson County has a good number of organizations and programs already in place that could work together even more effectively, said Dale Chell, the Iowa Youth Suicide Prevention coordinator.

MECCA looks back at 40 years of service, growth

A local substance-abuse treatment and prevention center celebrates 40th anniversary.

Chuck Panzer didn't think he had a drinking problem. But in 1988, he lost his job, received his third OWI, and was ordered to be evaluated at the Mid-eastern Council on Chemical Abuse center in Iowa City.

Volunteering himself for a 28-day stay in the residential program, the now 67-year-old hardly believed he could make it a month without drinking again.

He's now 21 years sober.

MECCA, a not-for-profit treatment and prevention center for substance abuse and several other conditions, celebrated its 40th anniversary on Thursday with an open house, tours, and speakers.

Panzer, who attended the event, said he owes much to MECCA and he "couldn't have done it himself."

"At first, I thought I was a failure, because I'd lost my job because of drinking and all that, and I'd never failed at anything," he said. "I like myself a lot better, I don't have to drive with one eye in the rearview mirror, and other people like me."

Although MECCA offers services for everything from gambling and drug addiction to dealing with HIV/AIDs, it was originally founded solely to aid alcoholics, said CEO Steve Estes. The most common issue clients come in for today is still alcoholism.

MECCA was founded in 1969 by a group of Iowa City citizens concerned with alcoholics struggling in their community, Estes said.

But from its humble beginnings, MECCA has grown exponentially in terms of staff size and geographical reach, he said.

With more than 170 professional staff members,

MECCA now covers 37 of Iowa's 99 counties with "face-to-face" services and all 99 counties with residential services.

For UI graduate Shannon Wagner, the MECCA vice president of community affairs, being a part of the growing organization has been a positive experience.

"It's really neat to see us grow and the impact you have on people's lives," Wagner said. "The best part of it is when you see people are doing well ... [and] put their life back together."

For Estes, the past 40 years of growth is just a promise of an even bigger future to come.

"If you can imagine what has been done from those 40 years from that little itty-bitty halfway house and a couple of counselors, and you look at us now," Estes said. "We serve around 5,000 people at our organization every year ... and if you add the prevention piece to it, we touch directly 15,000 lives a year. Multiply that times 40."

Former board member Dick Myers, who started working in alcohol treatment 41 years ago, gave a speech at the open house, touching on the center's future.

But instead of reciting numbers or future technologies, he told a story.

He spoke about a woman he had hired while she was struggling. Years later, after he retired and was dealing with health problems, the woman tracked Myers down.

She came to pray for him. Myers said her selfless action immediately made him think of MECCA.

"That's what this place is all about," he said. "Every day in this organization there are people ... who do something for somebody else that nobody knows anything about. That's why there's a future for MECCA."

Judge to rule on Jones' lawsuit

A Johnson County judge will soon decide whether to dismiss the lawsuit Phillip Jones, the former UI vice president for Student Services, filed against the UI, UI President Sally Mason, and the state Board of Regents.

The hearing on the UI's motion to dismiss the lawsuit will be held Oct. 16.

Jones sued in June, alleging wrongful termination and defamation after Mason fired him following the controversy surrounding the university's handling of an alleged sexual assault in Hillcrest.

Former UI General Counsel Marcus Mills was fired with Jones after both were named in the Stolar Report, which the regents ordered as an investigation into the school's response to the alleged assault.

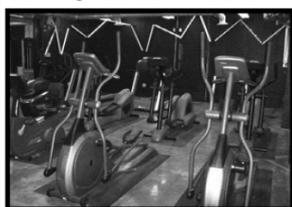

So far, UI officials have refused to comment on the lawsuit because it is pending litigation.

A shot at Las Vegas

UI students with a passion for golf have a chance to qualify for the National Collegiate Golf Championships in Las Vegas through the local intramural golf tournament on Sept. 27.

By MITCH SMITH
mitchell-e-smith@uiowa.edu

Las Vegas isn't just a hotbed for those looking for a quick gambling thrill. On Nov. 6, the city of sin will host the eighth-annual National Collegiate Golf Championship.

Iowa students with a passion for golf will have a chance to show off their skills, and they might just wake up in Vegas.

The Recreational Services' golf tournament will be held at Finkbine Golf Course on Sept. 27; it is open to students, faculty, and the general public. It is a two-person best-ball event and is one of 47 qualifiers on college campuses nationwide for the national event.

The sign-up deadline is today, but golfers who wish to register can still do so up until midnight. Registration is done online through the Collegiate Golf Alliance website. The link to register can be found on the Recreational Services website, www.recserv.uiowa.edu.

The golf tournament has been a staple in intramural sports at the UI and has been the largest qualifier for the past three years. Last year, 52 golfers participated in the event.

"I think it proves that we market this event very well," said Dan Payne, a Recreational Services graduate assistant. "We focus a lot on the marketing of our programs here at Rec Services, and the numbers prove it."

The partnership with Finkbine Golf Course has also been a key aspect for the event's success, said Mike Widen, an associate director of Recreational Services.

Along with a round of golf, Rec Services will also offer food, as well as a raffle with prizes such as Oakley sunglasses, sleeves of golf balls, shoe bags, and Nike hats.

There will also be a chipping contest in which golfers can attempt to chip a ball into a basket to win a free drink.

Most importantly, the winner of the student division earns a spot in the national championship, a three-day event held at Silverstone Golf Club in Las Vegas. Rec Services covers the cost of the hotel and the entry into the tournament, leaving the winner only covering the cost of travel.

"We have the option of paying for the student winner or the overall winner," Widen said. "But we've always said that we want our students to represent us and the university."

The winners of the faculty and community divisions will receive bids to play in the national event, but they will have to pay their own way.

Silverstone Golf Club is a 27-hole, par-72 course that boasts three holes more than 600 yards in length, including the longest hole in Nevada, a 653-yard par 5. Finkbine is also a par 72, but the longest hole is 562 yards.

Iowa golfers have been very successful at the national championship since Rec Services began holding a qualifier in 2004. Since then, Iowa golfers have finished in the top 10 four times, the highest being a second-place finish in 2005.

Last year, Joseph Leuman and Brian Nelson won the Iowa qualifying tournament by shooting a 65, making eight birdies and zero bogies. Unfortunately, Nelson and Leuman were unable to make the trip to Las Vegas to play in the championship because of midterms.

Now a junior at Iowa, Nelson said that although he hasn't registered for the tournament yet, he plans on playing again this year.

"[Leuman] and I hadn't played more than one or two times [together] before last year's tourney," he said. "But we managed to play well."

Sand V-ball heads to playoffs

After a week-and-a-half of pool play, teams now enter a single-elimination tournament in intramural six-on-six sand volleyball.

By IAN MARTIN
ian-martin@uiowa.edu

Iowa may be 1,500 miles from the shores of Miami, but over the past week, 47 teams have found their way to the Hawkeye Recreational Fields to whip up their visions of the beach with some sand volleyball.

Played six-on-six just like its indoor counterpart, intramural sand volleyball finished its eight-day-long divisional play on Wednesday. Each division consisted of three or four teams, with squads playing two games within their pools.

After the pool-play games, the bottom team was eliminated, and the rest moved on to the playoffs, which will begin on Sept. 21 and end on Sept. 24.

A single-elimination playoff would seemingly be cut-throat, but Jon Randle, a Recreational Services graduate assistant and the person in charge of organizing sand volleyball, said students have a good time playing the games.

"A lot of teams are just out there for fun and enjoyment," he said, and much of the appeal may lay in the idea that sand volleyball is a much more casual sport and involves no contact, which contrasts to the only other intramural sport currently in season — flag football.

But casual or serious, teams are still solidly displaying their talent on the dunes. While some squad members are out to enjoy themselves, there are many players who admit that sand volleyball isn't all fun and games.

"Were all pretty competitive, so no one wants to lose," said freshman Will Radoszits of Team Blue.

Team Blue strove to score every time the ball came over to its side, never wanting to prolong the game by pointlessly volleying back and forth.

And while U.S. Olympic volleyball players Misty May-Treanor and Kerri Walsh may not be playing in the sand pits at the Hawkeye Recreational Fields, there have been several blowout games and shutout matches in the initial pool play.

In a system in which games are played to 25 points — the first team to two wins — 31 of the 37 pool-play sets ended in 2-0 shutouts.

With spiking allowed in the league, and no rules requiring women to hit the ball during a rally, the first thought may be that the men would lead the scoring charge.

But really it's the other way around, Randle said.

"In most cases, there is no organized men's volleyball, [in high school] — at least where I went to school," he said. "So it's the [women] who have more experience."

Recreational Services graduate assistant Dan Payne echoed Randle's view. "I know there are more women who play [volleyball] than men," Payne said

MEN'S CROSS-COUNTRY

Harrier captains experienced, dedicated

Fifth-year seniors Brendan Camplin and Tommy Tate bring leadership and experience to the Iowa men's cross-country team.

By SEAN MORGAN
sean-morgan@uiowa.edu

Iowa head men's cross-country coach Larry Wieczorek has labeled his young team as being deep, exciting, and "horses."

But the adjective he uses to describe his soon-to-be-named cocaptains Brendan Camplin and Tommy Tate? Experienced.

Both fifth-year seniors, Camplin and Tate have put an enormous amount of effort into the program, starting when they both arrived in Iowa City late in the summer of 2005, Wieczorek said.

"These are two guys who came in as walk-on athletes and devoted five years of their lives to us," he said. "They did not come in with the credentials. They both had rough edges to even out. They are good examples of guys who know how to persevere."

Perseverance was a big reason why Camplin believes he and Tate will succeed as captains this season. It is something he has tried to teach the new runners who will represent the Black and Gold this fall.

"It's a longer, tougher season than what they are used to in high school," said Camplin, a native of Batavia, Ill. "You'll have some guys going to the well too early, really digging into their reserves. When they reach in there later in the year, there is nothing left." Tate, who Wieczorek said can be "a demonstrative and emotional leader," will try to bring that attitude every day in hopes the more junior members of the squad will take notice.

"I try to lead by what I do, which isn't always the easiest thing," said Tate, who hails from Galesburg, Ill. "In high school, I was far better than everyone else. What I've come to learn is how to work with the team."

Wieczorek hopes that his two captains will be able to reach every member of the squad. The two athletes bring different leadership styles to their new roles.

"Brendan is a biomedical engineering major," the coach said. "So he takes a calculated approach. Tommy, he's a high-energy guy. I tell him that when he's around, I don't need to eat power bars."

While Wieczorek admits that there were a number of runners he could have given a captain spot to, he ultimately chose to reward Camplin and Tate for their long devotion to the Iowa cross-country program.

That being said, Wieczorek still expects leadership roles to be taken up by each of his veteran athletes.

"Leaders are going to lead even if you don't name them captains," Wieczorek said. "You can't stop a leader from leading."

One runner that he hopes will help carry the leadership role is All-Big Ten selection Jesse Luciano. Though he was not named a captain, Wieczorek was quick to point out that a certain four-time All-American wasn't named a cross-country captain, either.

"I wasn't a captain during the cross-country season," said Wieczorek, who won an individual Big Ten championship when he ran for the Hawkeyes in 1967. "Later on, I was named captain of the 1966 Iowa Big Ten championship track team."

Cross-country reaches across Mississippi

Iowa head cross-country coach Larry Wieczorek dips into deep Illinois talent pool to find talent.

By SEAN MORGAN
sean-morgan@uiowa.edu

When the Iowa men's cross-country team stretches out before a competition, they wear their black and gold uniforms.

But while these uniforms read "Iowa" across the front, the name is fairly misleading when you consider runners from the aforementioned state are in the minority on head coach Larry Wieczorek's team.

Of the 17 runners on Iowa's men's cross-country roster, only three attended high school in the Hawkeye State. Aside from junior James Paul, who hails from Queenston, Canada, the other 13 members of the Iowa cross-country squad are from Illinois.

Wieczorek said this disproportionate number of Illinois products on his squad is due to Iowa's small population in comparison with its crowded neighbor.

"The population of Iowa is fewer than 3 million people," he said. "Compare that with Illinois, which has [a population] of more than 12 million. It's just a much larger talent pool."

That isn't to say that Wieczorek doesn't do his best to get the top talent in Iowa. The state is his first stop on an expanding recruiting campaign.

"We try to recruit the top Iowa kids," he said. "There is a bumper crop of runners coming up in Iowa. We just go in concentric circles after that, moving out to the next closest states."

"We've had a lot of success recruiting in Illinois. We brought in back-to-back state champions in Nick Holmes and Jeffrey Thode."

One of the few runners from Iowa is Sam Bailin. Unlike many of the highly touted prospects from Illinois, the Des Moines native wasn't answering very many phone calls from potential coaches.

"I wasn't even recruited," Bailin said. "I just came to Iowa City and asked Coach if I could walk on."

Part of Wieczorek's successful hunting in Illinois can be attested to his experience there as a high-school coach. He is a member of the Illinois high-school coaching Hall of Fame after coaching for 12 years at Proviso West High School.

"I have a lot of contacts in Illinois from when I coached there," he said. "It gives me a first step. I'm aquatinted with a lot of coaches."

"The athletes there know that [Iowa] is an appealing place to compete and go to school."

One Illinois native who found the school appealing was Tommy Tate, now a cocaptain of Wieczorek's squad. The Galesburg, Ill., native liked what he saw when he first visited Iowa City.

"I liked the campus a lot," Tate said. "I'm from a small town, and it's got a small-town feel but is still a bigger city. There have always been a lot of Illinois runners [on the men's cross-country team]. People know people, and they realize it's a good place to run."

No matter where he gets his talent from, Wieczorek has no fear as far as were his runners' allegiance lies, or who they will push themselves to the limit for.

"I'm from Illinois as well, and I was adopted by Iowa," he said. "Once they put the Hawkeye uniform on, they become Hawkeyes."

Beckwith Boathouse dedication today

The Iowa athletics department will dedicate the Beckwith Boathouse in a public ceremony at 2 p.m. today.

The new home for the Iowa rowing team is located on the bank of the Iowa River in Terrell Mill Park, near the Mayflower.

Iowa Gov. Chet Culver, UI President Sally Mason, and Athletics Director Gary Barta will speak during the dedication.

An open house will precede the ceremony, starting at 1:30 p.m. Parking for the event will be available at the site.

The boathouse is named for UI alumna P. Sue Beckwith, a renowned Des Moines surgeon who made a $1 million donation to the UI Foundation to support the facility.

It is the first building at the UI named solely for a woman benefactor.

"We're extremely excited to celebrate this beautiful new boathouse," Barta said in a statement. "The student-athletes and coaches involved in our program will benefit from this magnificent facility for many years to come."

Iowa linebacker Pat Angerer blocks a pass intended for Northern Iowa running back Carlos Anderson during Iowa's game against Northern Iowa on Sept. 5 in Kinnick Stadium. The Hawkeyes will face Arizona in Kinnick on Saturday.

"If you asked [Iowa defensive coordinator] Norm [Parker], he would say [the Wildcats] look a little bit like us last year," Ferentz said. "That's how he would describe it."

That would seem to be a fair comparison. Arizona is dedicated to running the ball and relying on what looks to be a tough defense to keep them in games — a formula Iowa used in 2008 to finish 9-4 and earn a January bowl bid.

Like Iowa a year ago, the Wildcats are dealing with uncertainty at quarterback after losing four-year starter Willie Tuitama. Matt Scott will start on Saturday against the Hawkeyes, but he has been inconsistent under center.

The sophomore has thrown only one touchdown against two interceptions, but he has proven to be a threat to pull the ball down and run — he has notched 131 yards on the ground in two games.

Perhaps Arizona's biggest similarity to the 2008 Hawkeyes is on defense. The Wildcats return a host of talented, veteran starters who held offensive-minded Central Michigan to just six points.

Junior running back Nic Grigsby has 325 yards rushing and three touchdowns in Arizona's first two games, and is averaging 8.6 yards a carry. However, after two weeks chasing spread offenses, Iowa linebacker Pat Angerer is excited to play a "conventional" running team.

"It'll feel like I'm actually doing something out there on Saturday," Angerer said. "It'll definitely be a good test and a good opportunity."

with this year.

In six games, Iowa has tallied one more shot on goal than its opponents (44-43) and has earned a decisive advantage in penalty corners (37-27). Yet despite all this, Iowa has been outscored, 19-12.

With a team whose 16 members include eight freshmen, the Hawkeyes cannot afford to wait much longer to get better production. Saturday's game will be Iowa's last opportunity before Big Ten play starts with a road contest against Michigan on Sept. 25.

The Hawkeyes still have plenty of players who have experienced at least one of the team's last three conference crowns. The question remains — what needs to be done to start scoring?

"We're definitely drawing more corners," said Dean, a member of all three of those Big Ten title teams. "We just need more grit in the circle. We have to put the ball in the net."

Head coach Tracey Griesbaum's club's defense isn't bullet-proof, either. She says there is still plenty of room for improvements on the other side of the ball — improvements that will need to be made if Iowa is to overhaul its record.

"We have to be a lot more physical," Griesbaum said. "We have to tackle harder with better timing. We have to understand when to go to the ball and when not to go to the ball."

Starting their careers with a 1-5 record at such a successful program may be difficult for the team's freshmen. With seven seeing playing time

As frustrating as Iowa's campaign has been in its early stages, Griesbaum is confident that a turnaround is almost here. There are no doubts about her expectations for Saturday.

"Play better than Sunday," Griesbaum said. "We can't really afford to hang our head, or we're going to miss a good opportunity to get better. I think we're a much better team than our record. We received votes this week. We have respect from the coaches who are voting. We just have to prove it now."

this group who may be able to contribute in some way later in the season."

Iowa, ISU, and Northern Iowa will be the only Division-I teams in the event, with schools from the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics and the National Junior College Athletic Association competing as well.

Formerly known as the ISU Open, the Iowa Intercollegiate is an opportunity to pit the best runners in the state against each other. The goal of the race is to measure the recruiting ability of the state of Iowa.

But the 3.1-mile race is the longest distance the Hawkeyes have seen this season. Their first meet, the Hawkeye Invitational, was a 1.8-mile race.

Because Iowa has previously defeated UNI this season, 15-0, on its own turf, some of the women noted the Cyclones are the only real threat.

Although sophomore Jordan Williams said she is familiar with some of the Iowa State runners because they were on her high-school team — which, she said, should make the meet interesting.

"This will be the first time I get to run against them," the Council Bluffs native said. "It will be fun to see how they are running, and it's kind of more competition, because you always want to improve compared with them."

Not only will the harriers be competing to boost their statewide reputations, they are also competing for a coveted spot on the travel squad.

The Hawkeyes travel team competes in the bigger meets throughout the season but only has room for 12 runners.

"I'm looking to prove myself and maybe make a spot on the travel team," freshman Kelsey Hart said, noting she got 13th for the team in the last meet.

"I'm right on the border. My goal is to travel, but I know it's everyone else's goal, too, because everyone wants to race."

Anderson said the harriers have a chance to "put themselves in a position" to run at their first Big Ten meet at Wisconsin on Oct. 3 and this meet has benefits for the women on the team who will get a weekend off.

"This is a relaxing weekend for the rest of the team," Anderson said. "They can take some time to focus on academics, and they get more time to train for October and November."

Fifth-year senior Jackie Kaeding has played in the past four games of the Cy-Hawk rivalry.

"Honestly, there are teams in the Big Ten that we have bigger rivalries with," she said. "When we play Iowa State, though, people on the outside get really amped up about it. It's just this feeling you get when you play them that it's different from any other game because you know a lot of people will be watching."

This match, however, presents a unique mixture of high and low feelings for the midfielder — it will be her last against the Cyclones.

"I try not to think about that, because it makes me so sad," Kaeding said. "Every game now, I treat it like I have to play as hard as I can because it's the last time I'm going to play this opponent. I think just Cedar Rapids native Jade Grimm is only a summer removed from playing high-school soccer. Now, the freshman defender is looking forward to starting in her first rivalry game and all the hype that comes with it.

"It's always a big rivalry," she said. "Fans are always helpful when the whole rivalry thing gets pumped up."

Kaeding is also eager to show everyone watching what the Hawkeyes can do.

"It's going to be big," she said. "I think a lot of people are going to start to see that we are a force to be reckoned with, especially with the scores last weekend. Now that we have people who are paying attention to our games, I think it definitely puts a good foot out there."

VOLLEYBALL

Volleyball off to West Point

After a disappointing tournament at home, the Iowa volleyball team (6-3) will return to the road, traveling to West Point, N.Y., to compete in the West Point Challenge beginning today.

The Hawkeyes will face Binghamton this afternoon before playing an evening match against Army. The squad then gets Saturday off before returning to finish the tournament against Morgan State at 8 a.m. on Sept. 20.

As the final test before the start of the Big Ten season, the Hawkeyes look to improve their on-court communication and offensive sets after having lost three-straight games in Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Head coach Sharon Dingman will be interested to see how her team responds after suffering its first losing streak of the season.

"I'm excited that we obviously have another opportunity to play three really good teams," she said. "It's a good chance to prepare for the Big Ten season."

FOOTBALL

Podolak honorary captain

The Iowa Hawkeyes announced on Thursday that former running back and current radio analyst Ed Podolak will be the team's honorary captain on Saturday for Iowa's game against Arizona at Kinnick Stadium.

Podolak honoree

As a player, Podolak was the team's captain and most valuable player during his senior season, in 1968. He rushed for 286 yards in a game against Northwestern that same year.

In addition to his 1,710 career rushing yards, the Atlantic native also played quarterback and had 2,316 career passing yards.

In the NFL, Podolak played for the Kansas City Chiefs and set a playoff record that has yet to be broken, posting 350 all-purpose yards in a battle against the Miami Dolphins on Dec. 25, 1971.

Podolak will join the current team's captains at mid-field for the pregame coin flip and will be in the Hawkeyes' locker room before and after when he's not on the air with play-by-play broadcaster Gary Dolphin.

Iowa running back Paki O'Meara is tackled after a 4-yard run during Iowa's opener against Northern Iowa on Sept. 5 in Kinnick Stadium. O'Meara ran for 16 yards on nine carries during the Hawkeyes' 17-16 win over the Panthers.

Talented Wildcats loom

After an 11-year hiatus, a rivalry is renewed as Arizona invades Kinnick Stadium with an all too familiar gameplan.

By JON LINDER

jonathan.linder@uiowa.edu

The last time Iowa met Arizona on the gridiron, Hayden Fry was on his way out as Iowa's head football coach, and St. Louis slugger Mark McGwire had just broken Roger Maris' single-season home-run record.

On Saturday, 11 years to the day since the two teams last met, a pair of Fry protégés will be at the helms as the long-distance rivalry is renewed. And just as McGwire's record is now shattered and figuratively branded with an asterisk, the rivalry between Arizona and Iowa looks nothing like it did in 1998.

Arizona embarrassed

Iowa, 35-11, that year on its way to a 12-1 campaign and a Holiday Bowl victory over Nebraska. The Hawkeyes managed only 28 yards on the ground against the Wildcats and finished 3-8 in a season remembered as Fry's disheartening exit after a legendary career.

Now, 11 years later, Kirk Ferentz is the established coach leading a wary Iowa team against both a confident and young Arizona squad and a budding coach who knows plenty about Iowa football.

Mike Stoops, now the head man at Arizona, played defensive back for Iowa in the early 1980s. He twice earned first team All-Big Ten honors in 1983 and '84 and was an All-American in 1984. He then returned to serve as a graduate and volunteer assistant coach under Fry from 1986-91.

"I have not reminisced much about it," Stoops said. "But maybe when I get in the stadium that is when it will hit [me] the most."

Just as Ferentz struggled in his fledgling years taking over for Fry, Stoops posted three losing seasons in his first four years in Tuscon after taking control in 2004.

Stoops now leads one of the hottest teams in the country into Kinnick Stadium after winning four in a row dating to last season, including an impres-

Although the Hawkeyes likely knew a fair amount more heading into games against Northern Iowa and Iowa State, on Tuesday Ferentz drew comparisons between Arizona and another team he knows quite well.

Top harriers to stay home

Iowa State will play host to some of the Iowa women's cross-country team this weekend.

By MICHÈLE DANNO

michele-danno@uiowa.edu

While the Iowa women's cross-country team has a chance to prove itself on Saturday as the dominant running program in the state, the Hawkeyes aren't using this weekend's meet as an opportunity to send their top runners to compete.

Iowa State will host the first Iowa Intercollegiate meet at the ISU Cross-Country Course in Ames. The meet will bring in 12 teams from across the state and across divisions.

Iowa head coach Layne Anderson said he considers this a "less competitive" meet because it consists of smaller schools than those in the Big Ten, so he is not sending his top runners. As a result, he plans to send "about 10 runners" to compete, and he wants to see how much progress the women have made.

"We're just trying to give some folks a shot who potentially may not have many more opportunities from this point forward," Anderson said. "We want to see if there's someone in

Field hockey win-hungry

The Iowa field-hockey team is looking for its first home win of the season after a 1-5 start.

By JORDAN GARRETSON

Not often will a team encounter a must-win game as early as September.

Iowa's field-hockey team may be staring at that situation when the Hawkeyes host St. Louis (1-4) at Grant Field at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Iowa (1-5) has suffered as many losses this season as it did in all of last season — and four have been by a combined four goals.

The most recent defeat, a 3-2 stunner on Sept. 13 against Stanford, concluded after a Cardinal goal just 20 seconds into overtime. One would be hard-pressed to find a better microcosm of the Hawkeyes' season thus far.

"We thought our energy was a lot higher than it has been in past games," senior Tricia Dean said. "We definitely controlled tempo. We got more shots, we 'out-stated' them ... [Getting the win] is the only thing you can ask for now."

Iowa out-shot Stanford, 12-7. Iowa earned more penalty corners as well (7-4).

But the Hawkeyes came up short in the most important category: goals — something Iowa has become painfully familiar

Soccer meets Iowa State

The Iowa soccer team prepares to face rival Iowa State with the Big Ten Network in town.

By ROBBIE LEHMAN

As if the Iowa soccer team needed another reason besides state bragging rights to get pumped up for its game today at 7 p.m. against Iowa State.

Emotions and excitement will already be overflowing as the Hawkeyes (5-2) face Iowa State (4-0-3) in the third event of the annual Hy-Vee Cy-Hawk series. The Hawkeyes will also host Northern Iowa at 1 p.m. on Sept. 20.

But Iowa will have extra motivation on its side with the Big Ten Network announcing it will broadcast its Friday Night Tailgate program live from the Iowa Soccer Complex, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

"I think it'll be real fun," Iowa head coach Ron Rainey said. "The Big Ten Network is awesome for

Stoops returns to Kinnick Stadium

By RYAN YOUNG
ryan-c-young@uiowa.edu

Mike Stoops rarely reflects back on his Hawkeye career.

He remembers playing alongside the likes of Larry Station, George Little, and Dave Moritz between 1982 and 1984. But his current duties keep him fairly focused on the team he's associated with now, more than 1,500 miles from the heart of Hawkeye Nation.

Stoops coach

During the fall, the sixth-year Arizona head coach never has a chance to get to Iowa City for Hawkeye football reunions. And in the summer, the former All-American and two-time All-Big Ten Iowa defensive back is a regular family man.

Come Saturday, however, Stoops can expect a flashback when Iowa faces Arizona for the first time since a 35-11 Hawkeye loss on Sept. 19, 1998.

"I'd rather be home, playing a lesser opponent," he said during a teleconference on Tuesday. "But it's on the schedule. I have not reminisced that much about it. Maybe when I get there and in the stadium, I think that's when it will hit [me] the most because that's kind of where we did our work."

Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz certainly remembers the work Stoops did during the Hawkeyes' 1983 clash with Ohio State in Kinnick Stadium — a brutal collision with former Buckeye tight end John Frank that Ferentz thought neither player would recoup from.

Quickly though, both jumped to their feet and prepared for the next play.

Stoops also remembers that monster lick.

"That was probably the best hit I've ever had," he said. "I thought [Frank] was going to stay down, but he got up and kind of wobbled off the field. I always remind him of that, too."

His players are reminded of that hit as well, occasionally finding the old Iowa/Ohio State footage spliced into the Wildcats' motivational tapes.

Stoops also tells his group about his adventures living in Hillcrest and Slater for five years.

"I tell our players that, and they die," he said. "I don't know if that was smart or not. It was chaos. Every weekend, it was like our own fraternity living in Hillcrest, and then we moved over to Slater. It was a pretty interesting time."

Having Stoops back in Iowa City should also be interesting.

"It's always good to have former Hawkeyes home," Ferentz said. "It's better if we're not competing against him — more enjoyable if he's coming for a reunion. But that's not the case."

No, other than a couple of friendly handshakes and a few pregame smiles, this weekend's nationally televised game at Kinnick Stadium won't be spent recalling Iowa's glory days under former Hawkeye head coach Hayden Fry.

Although, Ferentz and Stoops did find time to talk not too long ago during a Nike clinic in Orlando, catching up on nearly 15 years' worth of time.

That's when Ferentz said he realized Stoops was no longer the tenacious strong safety he had helped coach in the early 1980s but rather a budding defensive guru striving to make a name for himself at the University of Arizona.

And if Ferentz had his choice, he'd pick somebody else to coach against on Saturday other than Mike and brother Mark Stoops, Arizona's defensive coordinator.

"It's not a lot of fun to be honest with you, to see each other on the field," Ferentz said. "I'd rather be playing somebody I don't know, quite frankly, or don't have an association with. But all that being said, we both want to win."

A fresh one-two punch

Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz found his running back duo in the freshman class, of all places.

By SCOTT MILLER
scott-t-miller@uiowa.edu

Kirk Ferentz is not a gambling man.

That's why his press conferences are about as exciting as U.N. hearings. It's why his emotions are always reserved on the sidelines. And it's most certainly why he rarely starts freshmen.

Why risk anything? Why spice things up? Why deviate from the norm?

Until this season, playing it safe wasn't just an option; it was the only option. In his 10 previous seasons in Iowa City, Ferentz had never started a freshman at running back. And now, after losing Shonn Greene to the NFL and Jewel Hampton to an injury, both of Ferentz's top-two tailbacks are freshmen.

'[It's impressive] the way they take care of the ball and the way they make their cuts and their reads. I feel like it's unusual for a person their age to be able to do something like that.'

— Dace Richardson, senior

So much for playing it safe.

Indeed, Adam Robinson and Brandon Wegher are young — that much can be seen by looking at their faces. But you wouldn't know it after watching their film from the Sept. 12 game at Iowa State. The two, who have played in only three college games at running back, made the right cuts, hit the correct holes, and dissected the Cyclones' defense one carry at a time.

In all, the duo combined for 27 carries for 170 yards and a touchdown in Ames.

Iowa tailback Adam Robinson runs down the field during the Iowa/Iowa State game on Sept. 12 in Ames. Robinson rushed for 69 yards on 12 carries, and teammate Brandon Wegher had 101 rushing yards on 15 carries.

Richardson said. "I feel like it's unusual for a person their age to be able to do something like that."

This holds especially true for Wegher, who won't turn 19 until Dec. 19. In his first-ever collegiate game, the true freshman eclipsed the 100-yard mark and averaged nearly seven yards a carry.

Perhaps more importantly, he looked at ease. Or, as Robinson said, "He got a lot of the first-game jitters out of the way."

Wegher came into Iowa as one of the most heralded skill-player recruits during the Ferentz era. The 5-11, 206-pound running back rushed for 3,238 yards on 362 carries with 54 touchdowns as a senior at Sioux City's Bishop Heelan. His consistent obliteration of Iowa high-school defenses became YouTube sensations long before he stepped foot on campus.

Robinson's arrival in Iowa City couldn't have been more different. A redshirt freshman, he was part of the 2008 recruiting class. Originally signing as a greyshirt recruit, the Des Moines native thought he would have to wait until 2009 to join the team.

But late in May 2008, he was given a scholarship, putting him on the roster for the 2008 season. But Robinson was largely unknown before he gained 63 yards on 15 carries in Iowa's opener against Northern Iowa.

'That's a good thing about young players, too, they tend to improve a little bit more dramatically than older guys, maybe. They also tend to have a miscue or two along the way, too. We'll have to be prepared for that.'

— Kirk Ferentz, head coach

"We really weren't sure what to expect, especially when Jewel went down," junior offensive lineman Julian Vandervelde said. "We always knew [the two running backs] were going to run hard and try [to] hit holes. Beyond that, we really didn't know what we were going to see out there."

But after the duo's performance against Iowa State, it seems the Hawkeyes have a legitimate "one-two punch," as Robinson put it. Indeed, Ferentz's gamble has paid off — at least for now.

The two will most certainly have their struggles. They'll fumble or miss the hole or whiff on a block in pass protection. But currently, the young running backs are far exceeding expectations — much to the delight of their head coach.

Q&A

Robinson eyes a big game

Adam Robinson talks about the upcoming game, addressing the freshman factor and the offensive line.

By JON LINDER
jonathan-linder@uiowa.edu

dailyiowan.com for more sports

DI: How big is this game for you guys when you think about Big Ten versus Pac-10 and the history of the two conferences?

Robinson: It's a really big game for us. To go up against a very talented Arizona team and prove we can hang with teams from the Pac-10 and other conferences. It's a great opportunity for us to go in and make a statement.

DI: It has been around a decade since Iowa has leaned so heavily on a freshman running back, let alone a tandem of two freshman backs. Does that put any extra pressure on you, knowing that's something people are talking about?

Robinson: It has been a while, but really Brandon and I just want to help our team win. If you just think about your jobs and your assignments ... all the pressure and everything, that's on the backburner.

DI: There are a lot of people who say if there is one position where a guy can step in and play early, it's at running back. How true is that for you?

Robinson: I think that it's true, as in this year with the injury we had. Usually, you have a pretty solidified one and two backs, and that didn't happen because we had some injuries early in the summer. It's been kind of wild in camp and everything, but everything has worked out for the best.

DI: Can you talk about your offensive line from Week One to Week Two?

Robinson: There was a lot of improvement. There was a lot of push from the O-line that wasn't there, necessarily, in the Northern Iowa game. I just hope we can keep improving in that area.

DI: How much of that progression has to do with people getting healthy and now playing in position?

Robinson: We had some injuries to some key offensive linemen, and we had to move a lot of people around, so we were kind of out of sync. We got a couple guys back on the starting O-line that helped us in the rushing game last week. I think when we get a solidified O-line, that's when things will really start to progress, and we'll really start to get to the peak of our potential.

DI: Can you talk a little bit about Riley Reiff stepping up last week, and what he meant to the success of the offensive line?

Robinson: Riley played a key role last week. Bryan [Bulaga] didn't play, and we missed him a lot, but Riley stepped in and did some really great things up front. We're just looking for him to improve and continue on the path he's on right now.

DI: In both of your first two games, you played in-state teams. Logically, you'd know more about those teams. What difference does it make this week, playing a team from a different part of the country?

Robinson: It makes a lot of difference, because you normally don't play these guys. You just have to concentrate a lot harder than you do on the teams that you normally play. In the film room, everybody has to pay extra close attention to his defensive schemes, offensive schemes, in order for us to have a chance on Saturday. It's going to be a challenge. [The Wildcats] are well-coached, and they are hard, so it's going to be a fight."

Your fantasy football draft may be over... But Iowa's big draft is just getting started.

You did your research, compiled your spreadsheets and drafted the perfect team. You've got sleepers and breakout players and rookie sensations. There's no way you can lose.

But while your fantasy football team may be set to dominate, another big draft is just beginning. Not for football ... but for Iowa's future.

Remember when we had real leadership in Des Moines?

Branstad cut taxes and balanced the budget. That's the sort of fiscal discipline we need today.

Branstad worked to grow our economy, and helped make Iowa education among the world's best.

He steered Iowa through the farm crisis, and worked with national leaders to help us recover from devastating floods in 1993.

Branstad now serves as president of Des Moines University, a private medical school whose graduates deliver quality health care all over Iowa.

A time of great challenges demands proven leadership that we can trust.

Draft Terry Branstad for Governor.

Point/Counterpoint

Did the Hawkeyes prove anything by beating Iowa State?

NO
Iowa defeated archrival Iowa State, 35-3, in Ames on Sept. 12. What does that mean? Absolutely nothing.

The bottom line is this: A top-25-caliber team (Iowa) took care of business against one of the worst BCS conference teams in the nation (Iowa State) — which is exactly what should have happened. Add in that Iowa's Cy-Hawk victory comes just a week after the Hawkeyes barely managed to escape a home upset to Northern Iowa, and last week's blowout looks even less impressive.

Yes, Hawkeye signal-caller Ricky Stanzi threw for a career-best four touchdowns. How much does a four-touchdown performance really mean when you also connect with the defense on two passes in the same game? After an awful performance against Northern Iowa two weeks ago, I was expecting the fan favorite to go to Jack Trice Stadium and blow us away with much-improved accuracy and poise. Stanzi failed to do that, looking only marginally better.

And then there was Iowa's tackling. Norm Parker's defense made numerous Cyclone ball carriers look like they actually belong in the Big 12 — which is terrifying. I shudder to think how the Hawkeyes will fare in such places as State College and Columbus if they have a similar tackling effort.

It's not all doom-and-gloom. Iowa did manage to stomp the Cyclones by a hefty margin. But how often has that game been an accurate barometer for how the Hawkeye season will turn out?

The last two times Iowa won a share of the Big Ten title — 2002 and 2004 — the Hawkeyes battled the inferior Cyclones until the final seconds. In fact, Iowa lost, 36-31, to unranked Iowa State in Kinnick Stadium before claiming a share of the '02 conference crown and going 11-2.

Did Iowa smash the Cyclones? Yes. Was it enjoyable? Of course. Is it indicative of how the Hawkeyes will fare when it matters — come November, when Iowa is in the thick of the Big Ten schedule? Absolutely not.

— by Jordan Garretson

YES

Iowa State is a joke program. This is not an opinion; this is a fact.

But for whatever reason, the joke has never seemed funny to the Hawkeyes. No matter how highly ranked Iowa has been, the Black and Gold have rarely dominated their weaker brethren.

Kirk Ferentz's squads are 2-4 at Jack Trice Stadium. What transpired in Ames last weekend was a powerful mental victory for the Hawkeyes. In destroying Iowa State among the Cyclone masses, Iowa showed it will no longer take games against seemingly weaker opponents lightly.

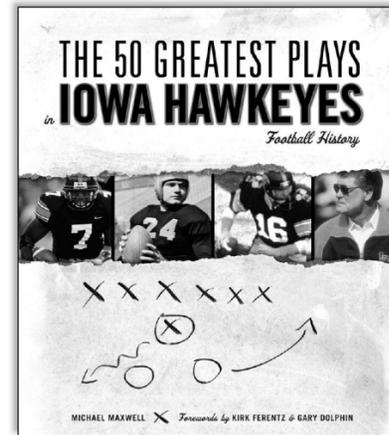

Units that struggled mightily against Northern Iowa shone against Iowa State. The much maligned defensive backfield responded with five interceptions, four of which were against starting quarterback Austen Arnaud, who is no slouch.

Mentor, Ohio, native Stanzi has not had a clear No. 1 receiver in his time at Iowa. Last year, Johnson-Koulianos was the Hawkeyes' top receiver with 44 receptions for 639 yards. In contrast, Oklahoma quarterback Sam Bradford found Juaquin Iglesias 74 times for 1,150 yards last season.

Stanzi has had to rely on dispersion. Stross and Moeaki missing games last season because of injuries forced the offense to center on tight end Brandon Myers and wide out Andy Brodell, neither of whom netted more than 40 catches.

Shonn Greene's catapulting into the nation's top running back is last season's news, and that has resulted in Iowa's need for an offensive transition.

"Our older, more experienced players are going to have to make plays for us," Ferentz said Sept. 8. "The passing game has to help us out, too. Shonn Greene is not coming back, we know that. So we're going to have to find other ways to be productive on offense."

Stross and Moeaki are healthy. McNutt has switched from a backup QB to receiver, and Davis brings his fresh ability to the field.

"I have plenty of confidence in the receivers around me, and I know the coaches do, and I know our receivers themselves have confidence that

Hawks take to air

Ferentz is not afraid to rely more on his passing game with little experience in the Iowa backfield.

By BRENDAN STILES
brendan-stiles@uiowa.edu

Kirk Ferentz knows his team has been identified for its running game.

And the argument that the Hawkeyes have historically been more of a running team is legitimate. Since Ferentz's first season as Iowa's head coach, in 1999, he has had running backs and offensive linemen aplenty who, with enormous success, took their games to the NFL.

This year, though, he knows there's a void left by Shonn Greene — and Jewel Hampton won't fill it. Ferentz realizes that the two running backs he trusts most to get the job done right now are both freshmen.

Though the circumstances aren't nearly as extreme as in 2004, when numerous running backs suffered injuries, Ferentz is looking toward the same solution: He isn't afraid to rely more on the passing game.

"I think common sense would dictate that," he said. "Shonn is not back now, he's gone. We have to find other ways to move the football."

His reasoning is obvious. He wants the Iowa offense to do three things successfully every time it takes the gridiron — score points, avoid turning the ball over, and win the field-position battle.

For the offensive players, it's simply a matter of going out and executing the game plan that Ferentz and offensive coordinator Ken O'Keefe put in place for each opponent.

"Whatever we have to do to move the ball and put some points on the board," senior tight end Tony Moeaki said.

If there's one player who seems to be comfortable with the idea of Iowa throwing the ball more for the time being, it's junior quarterback Ricky Stanzi.

The Mentor, Ohio, native has thrown 40 completions this season on 68 attempts through two games, and if passing the ball is what the Hawkeyes

JULIE KOEHN/THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa quarterback Ricky Stanzi looks for open receivers during the Iowa/Iowa State game on Sept. 12 in Jack Trice Stadium. Iowa won, 35-3. With the inexperience in the running game, Ferentz is counting on Stanzi's arm to lead the team, especially for the short term.

'You adjust to each game, you adjust to each week and being able to do different tasks is very important as a football player.'

— Ricky Stanzi, junior need him to do, he can step into that role and carry the offense with his arm.

"You adjust to each game, you adjust to each week and being able to do different tasks is very important as a football player," Stanzi said. "The whole team knows that, and you can't just be doing one thing the whole time. You've got to be able to switch things up a little bit."

Running backs such as redshirt freshman Adam Robinson understand Ferentz wants to mold him and true freshman Brandon Wegher and make certain both have game experience before calling on either back to take on as many carries as Greene and Hampton did.

"I think we're going to be a pretty balanced offense this year, in terms of me and Brandon getting carries and also airing the ball out a little bit, so I think you can look forward to that," Robinson said.

And that balance is exactly what Ferentz ultimately anticipates as the Hawkeyes progress further in the season.

"We have guys capable in the backfield," Ferentz said. "I am hopeful that our passing game would be better than it was last year, more efficient and more effective."

Sharing the air power

Ricky Stanzi's pass distribution gives the Hawkeyes' offense an edge.

By AMIE KIEHN
amie-kiehn@uiowa.edu

For a package to get from Point A to Point B, it goes through a lot of hands. Perhaps the UPS air carrier refuels in Toledo, Ohio, and then loads the package on a truck that cuts through Truth or Consequences, N.M., all before the delivery person in brown knocks on a door on a beautiful Tuesday morning.

No matter how many cities the package passes over via plane or towns it drives by en route to the destination, success is measured by one caliber — delivery to the rightful owner.

Football is like that system. As long as wide receivers are catching the ball with at least one foot in the end zone, the quarterback can throw to whichever wideout delivers. No one playmaker is needed for an offense to be effective, Iowa should know. Hawkeye quarterback Ricky Stanzi has not limited his targets to one or two receivers; he has involved 10 players in the season's two games so far.

"We have such a rotation at receiver right now, that's why everyone's seeing so many different faces catching football and making things happen right now," he said.

Stanzi is unlike current Florida quarterback Tim Tebow and a majority of college football quarterbacks. Tebow's offense centers on his go-to receiver and roommate Riley Cooper. In the Gators' 62-3 stomping of Charleston Southern on Sept. 5, Cooper nabbed a career-high five receptions for 105 yards. Not bad for a guy who was significantly ill and demonstrated it by throwing up on national television seconds after one grab.

But why have one wingman when Iowa junior Stanzi essentially has enough contributors to form another team.

"When we run our two-receiver sets and stuff like that, guys are rotating in so much, it's easier to get guys to touch the ball more and different guys to get their hands on it," he said.

Stanzi's 40 completions has resulted in the following players nabbing receptions: Tony Moeaki, Trey Stross, Marvin McNutt, Derrell Johnson-Koulianos, Brett Morse, Keenan Davis, Allen Reisner, Brandon Wegher, Paul Chaney Jr., and Colin Sandeman.

Feeding such veterans as Stross and Moeaki, along with true freshmen Wegher and Davis, demonstrates Stanzi's presence on the field and the comfort level of his teammates.

"You don't want to key on one guy, throwing the ball to him.

That can lead to bad things. Obviously, they're going to try to shut down a guy such as Tony [Moeaki]. Everyone knows what he can do, and it's a little bit easier at the tight-end position, because you're not spread out."

— Ricky Stanzi, junior

"Rick's a good quarterback, and he's got experience now," offensive lineman Dace Richardson said. "His eyes are more open to other people, and he's just going to distribute the ball, and whoever's open, he's just going to get it to him."

Allocating the ball among an array of players was not necessarily planned, but nevertheless, it has benefited the Hawkeyes' offense so far. When Stanzi's arm leaned heavily in the direction of Moeaki's routes against Northern Iowa Sept. 5 — resulting in Moeaki's 10 receptions — opponents placed a massive red bull's-eye on the tight end's back.

"You don't want to key on one guy, throwing the ball to him," Stanzi said. "That can lead to bad things. Obviously, they're going to try to shut down a guy such as Tony [Moeaki]. Everyone knows what he can do, and it's a little bit easier at the tight-end position, because you're not spread out."

Iowa wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos catches a touchdown pass during the second quarter of the Iowa/Iowa State game on Sept. 12 in Ames. Johnson-Koulianos is one of 10 Hawkeye players to have benefited from quarterback Ricky Stanzi's ability to distribute the ball to many different players.

The bull's-eye Iowa State put on Moeaki limited him to a single reception for a measly four yards.

Simulation

the NCAA Super Sims

Each week, DI Super Sims will preview three major games from around the Big Ten, including Iowa's upcoming contest. Games are computer versus computer simulations, which are run through the NCAA Football 10 game engine and played on Hesiman-level difficulty with 15-minute periods. Default settings and playbooks are also used. Because some players are not available, rosters may not be up-to-date.
