More TA cuts possible

UI graduate students are beginning to worry.

By DANNY VALENTINE
daniel-valentine@uiowa.edu

UI officials said more TA positions may be cut in response to ongoing state budget woes.

But it's too early to tell how many or what the scope of the cuts would look like.

There are still numerous financial factors, such as the effect of phased retirement and what — if any — the state's midyear budget cut looks like, said UI Provost Wallace Loh.

In the meantime, UI colleges are preparing various budget scenarios in response to potential cuts.

The UI has lost 150 teaching- and research-assistant positions so far this year, said John Keller, dean of the Graduate College.

"What happens next year remains to be seen," he said.

Bill Peterson, the president of the Campaign to Organize Graduate Students, said the union expects about the same number of cuts next school year. Grad students fill approximately 1,800 teaching- and research-assistant positions.

Peterson, who heads UECOGS Local 896, said he hopes there is some other option beyond cutting stu-

Funds gap in race

UI students attempt to keep up with financial aspects of council primary race.

By SHANE ERSLAND
shane-ersland@uiowa.edu

The three UI students vying for Iowa City City Council seats are hoping early voting, mass e-mails, and work on the ground will make up for their lack of campaign funds.

Hopefuls Terry Dickens and Susan Mims have both raised significantly more than the students, according to figures filed Thursday with the Iowa Ethics and Campaign Disclosure Board.

Dickens accrued the second largest sum on a pre-primary report of any Iowa City candidate with $15,915, second only to Councilor Matt Hayek's total of $22,709 in 2007. Dickens' contributions came from 261 donors.

Mims, the other nonstudent in the race, garnered $7,010 from 121 people.

UI student candidate Dan Tallon said the amount of money collected by Dickens and Mims would likely translate into votes for the two in the upcoming election.

"They're raising a ridiculously high amount," said Tallon, who did not report his numbers. "If someone gives you $100 [that contributor] is definitely going

The show was the band's first U.S. performance since its summer tour in Europe. Since the newest CD release, Wilco has explored new territory by playing smaller venues. "I've always liked Iowa City quite a lot," Stirratt said. "We've been coming there for 15 years to play and it always seems like sort of an oasis, like certain college towns are."

Stepping in when girls hurt girls

Local women's business of helping adolescent girls has a national audience.

By EMILY BUSSE
emily-busse@uiowa.edu

When Blair Wagner's daughter Libby was in third grade, her friends stopped talking to her. For months, Libby was treated as a "nonperson," and Wagner said she felt helpless watching her daughter cry herself to sleep.

But it was what Libby said one night, looking up into her mother's eyes as she tucked her in to bed, that stirred Wagner into action.

"She said, 'Mom, I'm going to pray for God to take me away,'" Wagner said. "It was like a punch in the gut."

Soon, Wagner got in contact with her daughter's school counselor at Wickham Elementary, Jane Balvanz. Both women felt passionately about emotional bullying among girls from own experiences. And it wasn't long after they met that the two women collaborated to form the organization A Way Through to combat the prevalence of destructive friendships from kindergarten through eighth grade — or as they call it, "when girls hurt girls."

What began as series of

Mason stays upbeat

'State of the U' address notes budget cuts, flood recovery.

By LAUREN MILLS
lauren-mills@uiowa.edu

UI President Sally Mason predicted future adjustments to the university's budget, but she remained optimistic throughout her annual "State of the U" address Thursday afternoon.

Around 200 people filled the dining room at the University Athletics Club, sipping coffee and finishing chicken at tables with white linens as Mason gave her speech. The Iowa City Noon Rotary Club hosts the luncheon each year and invites members of roughly 20 other service organizations in the area.

Mason recognized that economic problems dominate public discussions from kitchen tables to business meetings.

"Never before have we needed hope and optimism than in the past two years," Mason said.

She maintained that tone, noting the current environment provided the UI with an opportunity to redefine and recast itself.

Such adjustments are the responsibility of the university, she said, likening the institution to an investor that should protect its assets but also take advantage of the opportunity to invest more

And some adjustments will be necessary because of the $30 million reduction at the state level, she said.

"We will protect quality, protect people, and maintain affordability," Mason said.

CITY COUNCIL ELECTION

From combat to council

Council candidate Dan Tallon aims for affordable housing

By NICOLE KARLIS
nicole-karlis@uiowa.edu

UI junior Dan Tallon has experience in the combat zone.

In fact, he served his patriotic duties before he could legally purchase tobacco.

Now, Tallon is looking to further carry out the commitment he made as a soldier to serve and protect, but this time by running for a seat on the Iowa City City Council.

"I've served the community since before I was legally an adult and want to continue that my entire life," he said.

Tallon was born in Merced, Calif., but grew up in Davenport.

At 17, he graduated from high school early to join the Iowa Army National Guard. He said that decision is what defines him and makes him the most qualified candidate for a seat on the City Council.

"It teaches you a lot about when you have to get something done," he said. "There's no choice, you can't just hide things under the rug."

Majoring in political science, Tallon has also served on the board of directors for his church in Davenport.

Tallon decided over the summer to enter the race but noted it has been something he's thought about since he was a freshman.

"I was looking for a way to be more active in the community," he said, and he hopes to be a representative for the entire community.

One of his main concerns is high rent prices, which particularly affects students from lower-income families or those who have a disabled parent. And Tallon can relate to those issues.

He is the first person in his immediate family to graduate from high school. He financially supports himself, and he has experienced the expenses of living in Iowa City as a student.

As a councilor, Tallon said he would suggest that a small amount of money be set aside to help those who are struggling so they aren't forced to live in cheaper buildings that are often farther off-campus.

He would also like to see a change in the city's public transportation system.

"I want to see something as effective as the Cambus reach all the neighborhoods in Iowa City," he said.

His supporters acknowledge his drive to better the community for its residents.

"He really knows how to make a connection real fast with people," campaign manager Joey Belk said.

"He's very conscientious of others," said UI senior Amanda Leppert, who works with Tallon. "He gives 100 percent at his job and is good with people."

The primary election is scheduled for Oct. 6, when one at-large candidate will be voted out of the race, leaving four hopefuls running for the two available seats.

Early voting is available at the Auditor's Office, 913 S. Dubuque St., 8 a.m.-6 p.m. on weekdays. Satellite voting is available at the UI Hospitals and Clinics first-floor atrium lobby, Elevator 1, from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. today and at the Iowa City Public Library, 123 S. Linn St., 10 a.m.-8 p.m. Friday and noon-5 p.m. Oct. 4.

Lecture examines sustainability

'Sustainable U' draws a crowd to learn about the environmental trend.

By ERIN PETTIT
erin-pettit@uiowa.edu

Tina McPherson thought sustainability was just about being green.

But after the business graduate student attended a lecture Thursday, hosted by a vice president of the Fortune-500 company that makes Post-Its, she realized, "It's much more than that."

The lecture called "Sustainable U" was one of a two-part series in which the UI College of Engineering invites sustainability experts from corporations to talk about practical green applications.

In a full Shambaugh Auditorium on Thursday afternoon, Jean Sweeney joked as she tested her microphone, telling the audience she's not a professor and doesn't have a voice that can "clear a room."

Sweeney, a vice president of environmental, health, and safety operations, came to the UI from the 3M company to share her experiences of getting friendly with the environment.

"It's a long haul, and it's not something you can do overnight," she said. "It's a decision you have to make every day over a period of time."

Sweeney said sustainability is important because it provides a benefit in the marketplace, and affects how investors, new recruits, and customers view a corporation.

She explained how 3M began a program in 1975 to prevent pollution rather than react to it. Since then, she said the company has prevented more than 3 billion pounds of pollution and saved more than $1.2 billion.

Fred Streicher, the director of marketing and communications for the College of Engineering, said hosting the "Sustainable U" seminars is a way to promote environmental thinking on campus; the next lecture will take place next semester.

"This university is committed to both teaching and [conducting] research to make sustainability a priority," Streicher said.

He hopes exposure to corporate officials will cause students to look into sustainability as possible long-term career paths.

Liz Christiansen, the director of the UI Office of Sustainability, agreed that students could benefit by learning from people such as Sweeney.

"I think it's a great opportunity for students to learn how a large company is taking on these challenges," she said.

The corporations can be large users of resources, she said, and students from numerous disciplines can "learn what a company is doing and how it is changing."

Man wants aiding and abetting dropped

An Iowa City man accused of aiding and abetting attempted murder requested on Wednesday that the case against him be dismissed.

But Burkart was found not guilty on Sept. 11. That's why, Rayton's lawyer said, the charges should be dropped.

One of the elements of the aiding and abetting charge is that the attempted murder occurred. Because Rayton was found not guilty, the state cannot prove this element, wrote Dennis Cohen, a local attorney in the motion.

to go out and vote for you.” Fellow UI student hopefuls Jared Bazzell and Jeff Shipley reported their numbers, though neither raised or spent more than $750, the minimum required to report. Bazzell received $530 from six contributors, and Shipley acquired $390 from five. Bazzell plans to send e-mails to roughly 28,000 UI students, faculty, and staff informing them of the importance of the election this weekend, he said. He also plans to collect 100 signatures to take to Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett in an effort to hold early voting at Hillcrest, Burge, and the University Capitol Centre. Shipley said he is also trying to bring an early voting location to Mayflower. “I’m not just going after students, though,” Bazzell said. “I’ve been told I’m the first student candidate who goes into the city, not just on campus.” While UI students are using their funding to mainly target peers, the Iowa City residents are focusing on theirs. If he makes it through the primary, Dickens said, some of his money will go toward advertising on radio and cable outlets, and any leftover will go to charities. He is working on getting some student support, he said. “It’s tougher to get to the students,” he said. “But I’m going to talk to a poli-sci class this month, and we’re going to be involved in the Homecoming parade.” Mims noted she’s already put most of her campaign funds toward building followers. UI political-science Assistant Professor Jae-Jae Spoon said the student candidates are at a

UI may cut TAs

“I think there is a larger cost involved when they get rid of that many people,” he said. “We feel like it’s detrimental to the university to get rid of that many grad students.” Peterson said most graduate students he has talked with are worried for two reasons: They are concerned they won’t have the necessary funding to continue school, and they are concerned they will have more students to teach. He said the union is carefully monitoring the number of hours each grad student works so they don’t go over their maximum.

Keller said graduate education is absolutely affected by the loss of assistantships. The fewer there are, the less the university is able to provide professional and research development, he said, which helps to make students competitive in the job market. The school will determine how much money each college needs to cut, but each college will decide how it wants to cut those funds. It’s difficult to know what is going to happen in the coming months, but the Iowa budget picture got a bit gloomier on Tuesday. Revenue throughout the state decreased by roughly $141 million — about 9.1 percent — compared with the same time period last year, according to the Iowa Legislative Services Agency. This year, each UI college had a budget reduction of approximately 7 percent. Associate Engineering Dean Alec Scranton said it’s a possibility that the college will have fewer TAs. “TAs certainly play an important role at the university, but the budget situation is real, and we have to deal with it,” he said. “I am sure we will have quality classes.” Loh iterated the need to maintain top-notch education at the UI. “I have just one policy: The students cannot be hurt. You cannot make the students suffer from the cuts,” he said. Your turn. Do you think the UI should cut TA positions to save money? Weigh in on dailyiowan.com.

BULLIES

“I fully expect this business to go worldwide because it’s a problem worldwide,” Perrine said. “I think that’s a really exciting thing for them, but also for all the people the information will be able to help.” According to bullying resource website, Stop-Bullies.com, bullies persecute a girl every seven minutes at school. A key to dealing with that harassment on parents’ end is encouraging girls to solve problems on their own, Wagner said. “[It’s] how to coach them from the sidelines,” Wagner said. “You can’t fix the problem for them. It’s her problem, and it has to be her solution, and that’s really, really hard for the parents.” Beth Knudson, a mother with two daughters who attended Wickham, used the workshops years ago, and said her family still has a laminated poster from A Way Through hanging in the home. “Four of five years later, I haven’t had any problems with my daughters,” Knudson said.

Though she was uncertain of A Way Through’s role in the progress, she said the camaraderie helped. “It was just important to understand it happens to a lot of people so they shouldn’t be so surprised or shocked,” she said. Though Balvanz had her doubts when Wagner started toying with the idea of making their cause a business, she’s now having “a blast.” “When you have a hand in creating good problem-solvers, that’s just a wonderful thing,” she said. “That’s what you want for any human being.”

Despite her optimistic outlook and promises of affordability, some students expressed concern about rising tuition. “This is my second year here, and I’ve seen an increase,” said UI sophomore Richard Tronolone of Illinois, who saw approximately $1,500 added to his tuition this year. “If it kept going up for the next couple of years, I could see people not wanting to come here.” Students remain concerned about the debt they will have to face when they graduate. “I just had to apply for more loans,” said UI junior Jeannea Williams as she sat in the Main Library Thursday night. “I’m trying not to think about it now, just hoping it will get better.”

UI President Sally Mason discusses her “State of the U” address after the speech in the University Athletics Club on Thursday.

Last year, the luncheon took place just months after much of the UI was damaged by the 2008 flood. Updates on flood recovery dominated Mason’s speech, said Karin Franklin, the president of the Iowa City Noon Rotary Club. At this year’s lunch, Mason continued the recovery dialogue, but she focused on the selection of a site for the new Hancher/Voxman/Clapp complex. She also touched on the creation of a visionary committee for a new Art Museum, which, she said, remains one of the biggest question marks after the flood. Mason announced the final public forum on Hancher’s future location will be held Oct. 12. The forum will provide an opportunity for community and student participation before the committee makes the final selection. Some members in the audience were disappointed not to receive more information. “We’re all anxious to find out where they will put Hancher,” said Bruce Kout, the CEO of Farmers & Merchants Savings Bank and a member of the Iowa City Noon Rotary Club. “I guess they’re not ready to unveil that yet.”

County auditors shouldn't have a 'D' or 'R'

Democracies are based on the notion that elections should be free and fair and that ballots should be counted in an unbiased manner. So — because we're in the midst of election season — we must ask the question: Why is the county auditor a partisan position?

The inquiry isn't an indictment of the current holder of the Johnson County office, Democrat Tom Slockett, or a narrow castigation of the longtime vote-counter. Rather, our concern is much broader: the potentially negative effect — at least symbolically — the partisan nature of the office can have on citizens' perceptions.

In a sense, an auditor's election-conducting neutrality is analogous to a news reporter's objectivity. While reporters undoubtedly have biases, their work should not reflect them. Similarly, auditors typically have partisan leanings. The difference? County auditors in Iowa have a "D" or "R" behind their names.

There isn't a Democratic or Republican way to count votes (at least there shouldn't be). Consequently, it's an office that shouldn't be construed or classified as partisan. It's arguable other county positions, such as attorney and recorder, shouldn't be partisan, either. But the auditor's role as commissioner of elections and voter registration should certainly solidify it as a nonpartisan office.

In addition to counting votes, the Auditor's Office also compiles property-tax levies, certifies the county budget, and maintains property records, among other things.

Slockett told the Editorial Board he favors keeping the current system, citing transparency.

"It's really more of a truth-in-labeling argument," said Slockett, who has been the county's auditor for more than three decades. "You can make the office nonpartisan ... but just because you take the label off the ballot doesn't mean the individual doesn't have the philosophy or worldview."

Slockett argued Democrats typically focus on providing access to all voters, and Republicans emphasize rooting out fraud. It's a fair characterization, but it doesn't sufficiently rationalize making an office partisan that is, at its very essence, about objectively counting votes and conducting elections.

Slockett's Twitter account is an example of partisanship gone awry. His account is displayed prominently on the Johnson County Auditor's website home page, amid voter registration information, election returns, and census figures.

But he doesn't just Tweet "Get out the vote" or other assorted voting information. His Tweets regularly deal with explicitly ideological issues, such as whether the country should move toward a single-payer health-care system. Merits and criticisms of such a plan aside, overtly ideological espousals seem out of place on a county auditor's website.

Slockett justified the account, saying, "It's a good place for people to see what the auditor is doing and thinking." He also noted that the county Board of Supervisors and that "the people of Johnson County, the majority of them, want health care for everyone."

Be that as it may, the county auditor's role shouldn't be to advocate a given health-care plan.

This is a much larger issue than Slockett's Twitter account, however, which is simply a manifestation of a larger problem. While our Founding Fathers didn't even mention parties in the Constitution, they've now become an integral part of American democracy. Parties are an effective way to organize a government, provide accountability, and make voting easier by indicating general group ideologies.

But they should be left out of the auditor's race. The Legislature has the authority to change the situation, and it should do so. A preferable system would be one in which individual counties would at least be allowed to decide whether auditor candidates could run under a party banner.

Partisan auditors don't have an insidious effect on democracy or voting. But the negative symbolism that can percolate from such a classification should be reason enough to alter the current system.

Your turn. Should the county auditor be a partisan position? Weigh in on dailyiowan.com.

The power of the swipe

CHRIS CLARK
christopher-p-clark@uiowa.edu

I tend not to carry cash in my wallet.

That could be a statement about my bank account or about the proliferation of plastic money.

Regardless, all UI students get those plastic golden tickets — their student ID cards — and can use them in so many places on campus: A late night snack at Burge? A little Food for Thought in the library? Lunch at the IMU River Room? Swipe it.

Right now, Coca-Cola machines in the residence halls take plastic payment. Of those, most only accept Hawkeye Dollars, which can only be obtained with the purchase of university meal plans. Some are actually capable of charging items to the U-bill.

But by broadening the card's scope of power to all campus vending machines, students would have one more way to grab a drink while rushing to class or a snack when the late-night study munchies kick in. And for UI officials, the machines' increased accessibility could win over students who would otherwise go to the Den to get a cheaper — and typically larger — refreshment, possibly bringing in more revenue for the university. Though it probably wouldn't be much, the administration should take any extra money it can shake out of our pockets.

College students are poor, and it's easy to run out of money. Let's face it: Many students have their parents pay their U-bills. And it takes some of us longer than others to get used to not having our moms around to pack us lunch. So, after a long day of classes, or at the beginning of a longer night of studying, a quick swipe of the student IDs could give students access to a treasure chest of goodies.

And it seems UI officials are moving in a favorable direction. University spokesman Tom Moore called the current dorm program a "pilot phase" and said positive feedback may motivate officials to "make the program more widely available, at least in other high-student-traffic areas."

When the positive feedback comes in, as I assume it will, a wider variety of snacks should become available.

Beware, though, a trend such as this could easily go too far. Starting my junior year in high school, we were able to use our student IDs at the vending machines by simply depositing some money into an account. It quickly became a popular way of paying for food. But senior year, administrators brought in a Tyson chicken machine. That may sound good, but after eating the soggy, lukewarm chicken sandwich, well ... I think you get the point.

At the UI Student Government level, representatives said they've informally discussed the possibility of pushing for a campuswide policy, but it hasn't been a priority.

"We haven't thought about writing legislation [on the issue] or anything," UISG Sen. Cassie Creasy said. "It would take too long to go through the entire bureaucratic process while we're already working on a number of issues."

With its plate quite full this year, I agree that UISG should not spend excessive time writing a formal proposal on the issue. But I think it should contact UI officials to encourage an expeditious expansion.

Kyle Schwarz, the chairman of the Student Assembly Budgeting and Allocating Committee, said he is in favor of pushing the policy forward, which he felt has been stagnant since the summer.

"The first step is making sure the older vending machines are capable of [such technology] to see if we would have to spend money on new machines," the senior said.

I'm not encouraging students to start a vending-machine diet. I'm simply calling for what should be a simple augmentation of an existing program. The ultimate benefit of a policy such as this is convenience and to save a little time and aggravation when the machine repeatedly regurgitates your crumpled bill. ■

Issue bike warnings, not tickets

Does Iowa City police Officer Dan Roth really think it's "more dangerous" when someone runs a red light on a bike than in a car? ("Bike citations climbing in IC," Sept. 29) I don't know what's more baffling: that a police officer might believe such an outlandish notion, or that the same officer would be so committed to a crackdown on bicyclists that he would feel embarrassed to repeat it to a newspaper reporter.

It's surely reasonable to prevent cyclists from riding on downtown sidewalks, but wouldn't issuing warnings, along with some basic information, be sufficient for that task? Are numerous traffic tickets at $80 a pop really necessary, or even likely to be more effective? Or are these rather the exploits of some individual cops ("Officers Ed McMartin and Dan Roth have issued the majority of bicycle violations") with an overdeveloped sense of the letter of the law?

Living among the not-so-great unwashed

By FRANK HARRIS III

Just how clean are we? According to the Bradley Corp., a commercial bathroom and locker-room furnishings manufacturer, a majority of Americans aren't washing their hands much more now than before H1N1 flu entered our consciousness. Its survey found 54 percent said they washed no more frequently; 55 percent said they washed only with water.

On the other hand, the Soap and Detergent Association, which gives a report card on Americans' hand cleanliness, says our collective grade went from a C-minus to a B-minus this year.

So we're doing better. Well, some of us. It seems that while 6 of 10 females reportedly wash their hands 10 times every day, only 4 of 10 men do so — which lends slight support amid the H1N1 fear that men are apt to be the ultimate pigs.

However, 4 of 10 people of either sex also say they never wash their hands after sneezing or coughing.

So how effective can these hand sanitizers really be if so many aren't using them? To be truly clean and uninfected would require a fanatical cleanliness on a par with Felix Unger of the 1970s sitcom "The Odd Couple."

Fanaticism is in the hands of the holder.

Years ago, when I rode the New York subways, I would do my best to avoid putting my hands on the handrails. I would wrap my arm around a handrail and let my shirt catch the germs. But how long does a germ last?

Don't call me fanatical — I'm just trying to stay clean.

And don't get me started on the bathroom. Why don't they put the trash can close to the door so when I use my paper towel to open the door I don't have to make a long-range shot that misses or have to drop the paper by the door? Then there are the hand dryers, which would be fine if everyone washed their hands. Knowing they don't, what do you use to open the bathroom door, toilet tissue?

And because that person who didn't wash his hands is marking every spot, you might as well just keep the paper with you.

That's because people can be downright funky. And not the good, James Brown-type of funky.

I think cleanliness is a good thing — in sickness as well as in health. That is to say, the fear of sickness should not be the motivation for doing something as simple as washing our hands.

But let's face it. It's a funky world. How funky? Just as it's been said if we saw how our meat got to the supermarket, we all would become vegetarians, so it is my view that if we put a camera on the average person and followed him around for a day to see what he does with his hands before extending them to ours — we all would wear gloves and a HAZMAT suit till the end of our days.

Gleeful addiction

The joy of 'Glee' is found in the motivation behind the music.

MELEA ANDRYS
melea-andrys@uiowa.edu

medium
media filtered through us brought to you

My name is Melea, and I am a "Gleek."
My addiction began last April when I first saw the pilot episode for Fox's "Glee." It was spunky, it was fresh, and despite its atrocious "High School Musical"-esque lip-synching, its cult-classic potential was undeniable (Though I'm morally opposed to all things Journey, the McKinley High School Glee Club literally brought geeky tears to my eyes with its rendition of "Don't Stop Believin'").
Since the season started in September, my obsession has spiraled into full-fledged dependency (I custom ordered an "I'm a Gleek" T-shirt). I would kill to be in Vocal Adrenaline and would buy an Acafellas album ASAP. I relate to Lea Michele's character more than I'd like to admit, and I want to own every single outfit Emma Pillsbury wears. From "Single Ladies" to Ms. Minnelli to "Somebody to Love" — which also brings me to tears every time I hear Mercedes hit the high notes at the end — "Glee" has brought nothing short of elation to my Wednesday nights.
True, Tina's stutter is seriously fabricated, the characters are mere high-school archetypes, and if a football team pulled out the "Single Ladies" dance in the middle of the big game, it would undoubtedly incur at least false-start and illegal-formation penalties. But the joy of "Glee" lies in the audience members' ability to suspend their disbelief and just sing along.

In the spirit of full disclosure, allow me to admit to my own geeky past. When I was a kid, I sang and danced to Nat King Cole standards for my parents on our fireplace hearth. I sang in extracurricular choirs throughout school and became a proud member of Cedar Rapids Prairie's Ambassadors show choir in high school (in case you're from the Cedar Rapids area, in my senior year our girl's song was Beyoncé's "Crazy in Love"). And in May 2010, I'll graduate from the UI with a bachelor of music in vocal performance.
The sheer brilliance of Fox's marketing strategy is to target a national niche audience ("Glee" sheet music is available now), searching out music junkies such as me and presenting them with something they find irresistible: the power of performance. Anyone who has been in show choir can vouch for the fact that the experience is both the best and worst of times (let's be honest — the hair extensions and prostitute makeup are a little gross), but being on the stage is intoxicating — ask anyone who has tasted "the roar of the greasepaint and the smell of the crowd."

Nostalgia aside, "Glee" successfully channels one major factor that is universally compelling. When words fail, sometimes a song can narrate life perfectly — those of us who learned about sex from Salt-N-Pepa or have wished for a second chance while listening to the Cabaret soundtrack can attest to that fact. When Mercedes busts the windows out of Kurt's car, we feel her pain. When Rachel and Finn pine for "Somebody to Love," we relive our own soulful searches for that special someone.
Social theorist Theodor Adorno once wrote, "Music no longer serves direct needs not benefits from direct application, but rather, adjusts to the pressures of the exchange of abstract units. Its value ... is determined by use."
"Glee" may never win an Emmy, but it's perfectly imperfect in its exploration of the intersection between music and internal motivation. The way its characters use song to express their emotions reflects the ways in which music inspires, educates and enlightens in our day-to-day lives, and demonstrates how relevant the arts are within American society.
With this in mind, I'm not ashamed to admit that I need my weekly "Glee" fix. And now that Fox has officially signed on for a full season, I'm thrilled that I'll be getting it far more than once more, and always with feeling.

RACHAEL'S REALITY

Way to wed after one month, Khloe

The Kardashian family is always in a constant battle to see who can get the most attention. Be real, chicks — as long as Kim has the butt, she will be the focal point.
Kourtney's baby bump has recently overshadowed the other two sisters, and rightly so. But Khloe? Did you really get married after dating your lover for a month?
Apparently, she did. Last week, Khloe married her man of one month, Los Angeles Laker star Lamar Odom. The Kardashian clan also managed to pull together an alleged million-dollar wedding after announcing the engagement a week prior to nuptials.
Here's the thing: The wedding had to be fake. There's absolutely no way she could have managed to pull that off. Plus, Khloe is known for being the loud-mouthed prankster of the group (remember when she put Kim's profile on a dating site?).

Sorry you were feeling a lack of attention from the media, Khloe, but this is just dumb.

Kate plus 8 minus a tool

He's gone. From TLC, at least. Jon Gosselin finally quit the network he claims exploited his family. OK, Jon, let's recap.
Last winter, you were out at a bar with a girl while your eight children were at home sleeping. The girl was not your wife. You are being linked to late-night sojourns over to said girl's house. You and Kate filed for divorce. Then there were two women. And that trying to recapture-youth-with-Ed Hardy thing? Right.

TLC exploited your family, not you.
Either way, Jon's off the show — but it may not matter. Thursday, Daddy Gosselin filed two cease-and-desist letters against the network that allegedly broke his family apart. He also put a super snazzy sign on the gate to his mansion the show basically bought him that states camera crews are no longer allowed on the property.
His revengeful freak-out is more intense than Kate's hairdo. Some people are claiming he's fed up with reality television, while other reports say he's looking for a new channel to host a Jon-centered show.
Wonder how media-whore Kate feels about this twisted turn. Maybe she'll get her own talk show and line of hair products instead.

BITCH PLEASE

LADY GAGA - GENIUS OR IDIOT?

Lady GaGa is an idiot

It was a sad day in American music history when it was announced Monday that Lady GaGa would be honored as Billboard magazine's "Rising Star" during the publication's Women in Music event later this week.
Lady GaGa, a.k.a. Stefani Joanne Angelina Germanotta, somehow managed to seep into pop-radio airwaves with catchy, and of course trashy, songs such as "Poker Face" and "LoveGame."
Mothers cringe at the sight of witnessing their prepubescent daughters lip-synching to this filth. But Lady GaGa has unfortunately amazed both the American public and the paparazzi.
Her music, redundantly explicit and a nonsensical mush of dance pop, can honestly only be tolerated when one is completely inebriated while waiting for last call downtown.
Not shockingly, Lady GaGa models her songs after her lifestyle interests, which include clothes and hair. In regards to her bizarre physical appearance, well, let's just say that when Christina Aguilera comments on the uncertainty of your sex, you have problems.

So what's next for this vapid superstar? Touring with another tool, Kanye West, this winter. I'd maybe pay to see him, but I wouldn't spend a cent on "clown face."
— by Adam Salazar

Lady GaGa is a genius

People are quick to call Lady Gaga crazy, judging by her over-the-top performances and outrageous couture wardrobe, but this "crazy" masks a pure genius.
Beneath the layers of extravagant plastic headpieces, glitter, and hair extensions lurks a mas-termind. There is more to her media's puppet but rather its puppeteer.
The singer/song-writer has been quoted as saying, "It's about wooing the paparazzi to all in love with me. It's about the media whoring, watching ersatz make fools of themselves to their station."
The joke is clearly on us.
— by Bri LaPelusa

DVD VAULT

A place for us to reminisce about the movies we loved, lost, and still live for to this day.

Notting Hill

Released 1999
With the plethora of romantic comedies to choose from these days, it's hard to find one packed with as much romance, heartbreak, and delicious accents as Notting Hill. The movie, set in the London suburbs, focuses on the story of a lonely travel bookstore owner, William Thacker (Hugh Grant), and a famous American actress, Anna Scott (Julia Roberts).
One fine, fortuitous day, Thacker meets Scott while she's perusing his bookstore. After a series of mishaps, love ensues. It is not all English roses, however, because of the public life Scott leads. She is in a precarious relationship dating a fellow actor and lives in the United States. Thacker, who has had his own troubles in love, can never seem to get the words quite right. The characters seem to be their own biggest obstacle in pursuing the romance.

The greatest and worst thing about Notting Hill is the impossibility of the plot. The chances of meeting and falling in love with a beautiful actress or randomly meeting a handsome Englishman are slim to none. If you are missing class because of H1N1 or are just looking for a good cry on a Sunday night, grab a cup of hot coca, curl on the couch, and pop in Notting Hill.

An eye on Thai

By MICHELLE BORYCA
michelle-boryca@uiowa.edu

Khon Thai jai dee. This phrase, meaning "Thai people are good-hearted" in English, sums up the way UI Associate Professor Scott McNabb feels about the southeastern Asian country and its people.

McNabb, now fluent in Thai, has traveled to the country 17 times. His initial interest began when he taught there for three years while serving in the Peace Corps, starting in 1968.

He had free rein to develop his own curriculum, and he became fascinated by the foreign culture.

Since starting at the UI 30 years ago as an education professor, he has continually revamped his teachings to reflect each of his visits to Thailand.

Today, his curriculum substitutes the traditional hard-cover textbook for an assortment of recent New York Times and Washington Post articles to get students thinking about current affairs.

"Find something that intrigues [the students], and then they're off and running," McNabb said.

His courses include Education in the Third World and Research in Cross-Cultural Settings. Personal videos from Thailand, speakers, and discussion of his experiences abroad are incorporated into his syllabus.

He has also traveled to rural schools in Cambodia, catching his journeys on tape. The footage shows school children learning, standing on dirt floors in rooms with no electricity.

"Getting a lot of issues in play is the key to good teaching so people have to think about things from a lot of different dimensions," McNabb said.

He has made it a life mission to encourage students to look into foreign cultures.

"He's a good motivator for students who might be on the fence about having an international experience," said graduate research assistant Megan Johnson, who took his course.

A role model for students, McNabb stretches their minds in way they weren't expecting, Johnson said.

His enthusiasm about his miniature Buddha statues, posters of ancient king Jayavarman VII, and collection of colorful sacks from tribal groups in Northern Thailand is his method of piquing his students' curiosity.

Students walk away from McNabb's classes learning more than just a better understanding of foreign countries and cultures.

"I always realize how little I know about huge sections of the world and how important it is for me to continue to learn more about these countries, cultures, and people, if for no other reason than so I might learn more about myself," said DeeAnn Grove, a student in McNabb's Education in the Third World course.

And this is McNabb's ultimate goal for his students — giving them encouragement to spend some period of time abroad.

"[You] learn your role as an American that you can only learn from being in another country," he said.

Programs join in holiday celebration

Students from the Chinese study-abroad program also speak about their experiences in Tianjin.

By EMILY BUSSE
emily-busse@uiowa.edu

Chinese and Korean language students crammed into a small classroom in Phillips Hall on Thursday night under red hanging paper lanterns to watch live performances of kung fu, music, and poetry readings.

The festivities celebrated the traditional Mid-Autumn Festival, an East Asian holiday that is similar to Thanksgiving, said Chinese program coordinator and Associate Professor Helen Shen.

This was the first time in six years Korean language students also joined the party.

Students filled the seats, used up all available floor space, and spilled out into the hallway to attend the festival together, something several attendees appreciated.

"It's a good opportunity because we don't know too much about Korean culture," said Lilly Chen, a UI senior studying Chinese. "It's good that we're all good friends with each other. There are no tensions."

Because the Korean language program has roughly 45 students, compared with 180 in Chinese, the Korean celebration in past years had been minimal and held during class, Korean instructor Ho Jung Choi said, and he looked forward to the collaboration.

"Of course I am excited, and my students are excited," Choi said. "[Korea and China] share a lot of things ... and students can see, 'Oh, in China we celebrate the same thing, but in different ways.'"

Although this year's festival required more planning because of the combination of cultures, Shen sees it is an opportunity for American students to branch out.

"It first motivates students to learn language but also motivates students to learn Chinese culture," she said.

A presentation from students who studied abroad in Tianjin, China, added to the night's educational benefits.

UI junior Hanna Wolle, a Chinese and economics major, attended the trip to Tianjin two summers ago and said the mixing of cultures goes beyond just Korean and Chinese.

"A couple of my good friends, one is white and one is Indian, came for a little bit, and it's good to get awareness, not just for cultural diversity, but for Chinese and Koreans," she said.

Choi and Shen said they want to see the festival grow even more in coming years, something for which Chen had an idea.

"It would be cool if the Japanese [program] could join us, too, to be friends with each other,"

- Violin: "Méditation de Thaïs"
- Tianjin study abroad students' speech
- Poetry reading "How Old the Moon is"
- Learn to sing Korean song "Holo Arirang"

Chen said.

For now though, the meshing of the two countries is an opportunity to share their similar backgrounds.

"I think it's really cool that the Korean department and the Chinese are coming together this year just because, [although] the Mid-Autumn Festival is a Chinese celebration, what [it] really represents is important to all East Asian cultures," Wolle said.

Iowa City to open first new river bridge in decades

By NICOLE LUMBRERAS
nicole-lumbreras@uiowa.edu

Today, Iowa City officials will unveil a new bridge over the Iowa River, bringing with it the possibility of development to the Southeast Side.

"Development follows transportation," said Iowa City Mayor Regenia Bailey. "When transportation is enhanced or increased, business and residential development will grow."

A dedication ceremony will officially open the McCollister Bridge and Boulevard at 2 p.m. today. It will connect Old Highway 218 to South Gilbert Street and will extend Mormon Trek Boulevard.

Many officials are excited about the bridge's opening — the first in nearly 50 years.

Wendy Ford, Iowa City's economic-development coordinator, thinks the bridge is a great connection and will make transportation more accessible in town.

"As the community grows, it is important to have efficient links. This will create a more fuel-efficient way to get from one side of the river to the other," Ford said. "[The bridge] helps build an outer ring around the town; it's more efficient for traffic."

The overpass cost around $6 million dollars to build. Of that, $1 million came from city funds, and a federal earmark provided $5 million. Several Iowa lawmakers, including Rep. Dave Loebsack, helped appropriate the money for the three-year project, which employed hundreds of workers.

Officials say the new bridge will ease truck traffic in town and help businesses near Sycamore Street, South Gilbert Street, and Keokuk Street. Now, most drivers have to go into town to cross the river. This bridge is another option for them.

The construction will take pressure off Highway 6 — the most-traveled bridge, said Jeff Davidson, a community-development planner.

"It's a beautiful bridge ... nice, safe, and attractive. We are really looking forward to it," he said.

The early development of the bridge started during the 2008 flood, slowing construction, said Carol Sweeting, Iowa City's Public Works public-information coordinator. But considerations, such as being at least 7 feet above the 2008 flood levels, will keep the overpass safe.

Many companies were involved in the construction of the bridge, including Peterson Contractors Inc. and Howard R. Green Company.

The bridge will also serve as a place for people to walk and enjoy the scenery.

"There are walkways on both sides and places for people to sit and watch the wildlife out there," Sweeting said. "It will be a destination place for people."

McCollister Bridge

Some quick facts:

- Is made of Precast Portland cement
- Length is 396 feet
- Four sections for pedestrians to sit
- Lowest level of bridge is seven feet higher than 2008 flood levels

The road from the bridge ends right in front of Mike Lehman's fence, where the Lehman family has lived since 1960. He said the bridge will help with his grain deliveries.

But despite the bridge's benefits, with increased traffic comes obstacles — like moving farm equipment.

"We have to choose when because of the traffic," Lehman said.

Stutsman becomes supervisors' vice chairwoman

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors decided Sally Stutsman will fill deceased Larry Meyers position as the vice head of the supervisors. She will also take his place on the Board of Directors of the Iowa City Chamber of Commerce.

"Johnson County does it a little differently from most, we don't fight about it," said Supervisor Terrence Neuzil after the supervisors made the decision Thursday night.

Johnson County uses a tenured process, Neuzil said. Stutsman was next in line on the board to be come vice chairwoman. Stutsman was set to take the position beginning in January.

Though the move is bitter-sweet, she said, she thanked her board members for the opportunity to be vice chairwoman.

"[We] needed to have some one appointed in case I can't cover a meeting," Neuzil said.

Field hockey enjoying winning ways

The Iowa field-hockey team will try to extend its streak tonight against Indiana.

By JORDAN GARRETSON
jordan-garretson@uiowa.edu

Make the trip down Melrose Avenue, turn right on Mormon Trek Boulevard, and cruise through Prairie Meadow Drive to Grant Field on a weekday afternoon — a recent change is palpable.

No, it's not the gradually dropping temperatures.

It's the gradually rising confidence and energy surrounding the Iowa field-hockey team.

Iowa (3-5) will look to extend its two-game winning streak today when it takes on Indiana (5-4) in a Big Ten matchup in Iowa City. Game time is scheduled for 5 p.m.

A two-game win streak may not be monumental, but for a young team that started off the season by losing four of its first five, it seems that way.

Iowa won the second of those two games on Sunday, when the Hawkeyes traveled to Ann Arbor, Mich., for their Big Ten opener against Michigan. Iowa went into halftime down 2-0. It left the Wolverines' Phyllis Ocker Field with a 3-2 victory.

Iowa head coach Tracey Griesbaum didn't play down the importance of her team's ability to battle back and earn a victory.

"I thought we did a really good job of recognizing the changes that needed to be made on the field [in the second half]," she said. "The players really made it happen out there. The coolest part was it just didn't seem like they ever doubted themselves coming back. Their posture and the way they carried themselves on the field — they were very confident."

Griesbaum's highest praise was reserved for the performance of her seniors. The three — Meghan Beamesderfer, Tricia Dean, and Jess Werley — put themselves in the box score next to at least one of Iowa's three goals.

Beamesderfer fired in two goals on corners, and Werley notched her team-leading seventh score of the season on a deflection. Dean recorded assists on all three goals, but she credited her teammate for rattling the cage twice on corners.

"I just had to make the stop," she said. "The shooter [Beamesderfer] was just awesome and on point with those shots."

After not finding the net at all in her first six games, Beamesderfer has scored four goals in her last two.

It's no coincidence.

Recently, she has spent time working on her corner shots with Griesbaum. The results are starting to accumulate.

"That has really helped me get more fluid with my swing," Beamesderfer said. "The little things are coming together. I just wasn't doing things appropriately at first. I think that now I'm starting to fix them, it's just going to get better from here."

The Hawkeyes hope the same will be true for the rest of the team. This weekend's games — against Indiana today and against California on Oct. 4 — present an opportunity for Iowa to get back to a .500 record for the first time since Aug. 28, when Iowa started 2009 with a clean slate.

Although it's early in conference play, the Hawkeyes are one of only three teams with an unblemished Big Ten record.

As Griesbaum said, the Hawkeyes may share the lead now, but "if you keep winning, you're not going to share it."

"[Getting to .500] has to be the goal," she said. "You aren't even eligible for the NCAA Tournament unless you're .500. We don't want to have that be our focus and be in the forefront, but I think that's my role as the leader of the program — to know where we need to get."

48 hours to sell recruits on the Hawkeyes

By J.T. BUGOS
joseph-bugos@uiowa.edu

For the Iowa women's golf team, a recruit's official visit is just 48 hours. In that small time frame, prospective student-athletes must see the Hawkeyes' golf facilities, academic facilities, spend time with the team, and usually attend a sporting event.

Athletes who come in for official visits are ones whom Iowa is highly interested in, so the idea is to both impress them and inform them.

Part of impressing a recruit comes in the form of football games.

The women get to walk down Melrose Avenue and see all the crowds and sights, including tailgates, of course.

Before kickoff, the recruits get a tour of the Kinnick Stadium press box, which head coach Kelly Crawford said is an amazing facility that makes an impression.

After that, the athletes get to join more than 70,000 fans cheering on the Hawkeyes.

"When you walk into the stadium, and you're there before the football team comes out of the tunnel, and AC/DC's 'Back in Black' starts playing, and the guys are walking out in the black jerseys, and the stands are completely filled with black and gold, it's a pretty overwhelming experience," Crawford said. "So that's something we definitely want the prospective student-athletes to experience."

After the football game, recruits go downtown for dinner with their family and the Hawkeye coaches. This can allow some time to answer questions.

Assistant coach John Owens noted that the trip is not confined to campus, it also includes parts of Iowa City that students experience daily. The trip downtown for dinner allows recruits the chance to see what the town can offer.

For the information part of the visit, recruits visit Finkbine Golf Course, where they can see the facilities available.

"Our golf course is a must-see," Crawford said. "To have our own facility on campus is huge. It's a great golf course and so close to campus."

Recruits also see the Gerdin Athletics Learning Center, which is available to athletes.

Crawford is a fan of the campus tours. It is important, she said, for prospective student-athletes to walk on campus because of how neat the experience is for a high-school student.

Owens is a big supporter of getting the athletes to the learning center.

"We're not allowed to do golf-related things or test them in the gym," he said. "But the learning center is a really big one to see, just because it's one of the top in the nation, and the parents love to see that as well."

During the 48-hour visit, Crawford said, she is able to figure out what is important to the recruits and what their needs are. Every person is different, and Crawford understands committing is a big decision.

Many times on visits, officials will make offers to recruits, but neither Crawford nor Owens expects immediate answers.

Ultimately, the point of an official visit is to get recruits on campus and experience what it feels like to be a Hawkeye, along with what it would be like to attend school at Iowa.

"I think once the kids see all that we have and the facilities both athletically and academically, there's not much more we can say that's going to convince them," Owens said. "At that point, it's up to them."

5K race honors Goff

Steve Goff, an athlete and former leisure-studies professor at the UI, died in 1998. His legacy continues through the intramural 5K race named in his honor.

By MITCH SMITH
mitchell-e-smith@uiowa.edu

Steve Goff is remembered fondly for his remarkable athleticism and compassion for others — two things that often mixed together.

Goff, an Iowa graduate and a former health leisure, and sports studies professor at the UI for four years, was diagnosed with cancer in 1997 after feeling a lump under his arm while participating in RAGBRAI.

He passed away the following year at the age of 43.

An avid athlete, the Iowa native participated in several marathons, triathlons, and bicycle races, finishing near the top in most of them.

"Steve was as close to a world-class athlete as I've known," said integrative-physiology Professor Richard MacNeil, who knew Goff beginning when he was an undergraduate student at Iowa. "Educator and athlete, that summarized what Steve was all about."

One day after undergoing the final, and most intense, round of chemotherapy,

'It's a great way to honor his memory and his legacy. He would have had a much larger legacy if he were still with us. It's a good way to remember him and come to terms with his tragic and untimely death.'

— Ken Mobily, a friend and former colleague

Goff ran a 10K race and finished third.

Even more incredible, he ran the Chicago Marathon just 10 days after his final round of chemo, finishing the grueling 26.2-mile event in slightly more than four hours.

Despite his high placing in most races, he always stuck around until the last runner crossed the finish line — because it wasn't about winning, it was about participation.

"Life isn't a spectator sport. That was Steve's philosophy," MacNeil said. "He always encouraged other people to participate."

That was Goff's mantra from the first time he stepped into class as an undergrad until the day he passed away, said integrative-physiology Professor Michael Teague. Their former colleague's outlook on life continues on through a 5K race named in his honor.

For the past eight years, Recreational Services has hosted the Steve Goff Memorial 5K Run/Walk to honor the late faculty member.

The race will be held on Oct. 4 at the Ashton Cross-Country Course at 9 a.m.

Runners registering on race day will pay a $15 fee. Race-day registration from 8:15 to 9 a.m.

All proceeds from the race go toward a scholarship fund named in Goff's honor. The scholarship is awarded to undergraduate leisure-studies students.

In the last four years, the leisure-studies department has awarded three $500 scholarships each year, said MacNeil,

Volleyball takes on champs

The Iowa volleyball team will take on No. 1 Penn State this weekend.

By EVELYN LAU
evelyn-lau@uiowa.edu

It's been 748 days since the Penn State volleyball team last lost a match.

In the midst of a NCAA record-setting 78-match win streak, the No. 1 Nittany Lions (14-0) have demonstrated dominance in all facets of the game and have not lost a match since 2007, winning two consecutive national championships during the streak.

Despite the impressive achievement, the Iowa volleyball team (9-5) isn't alarmed.

"They're intimidating but not," senior outside hitter Megan Schipper said. "We're used to playing them. I've played them for four years now, so it'll be a fun match."

Competing in the third game of their four-match conference road trip, the Hawkeyes will head to State College, Pa., to play Penn State at 6 p.m. today.

Afterwards, Iowa will head back on the road on Saturday, traveling to Columbus to play Ohio State at 6 p.m.

The Iowa players said they are looking forward to the challenge of playing the top-ranked team. However, the Hawkeyes are 0-37 all-time against the Nittany Lions since 1991.

Penn State will have its 2008 Big Ten championship banner raised before the Nittany Lions' match against the Hawkeyes. The team has won the last six conference titles.

"Of course, they are chosen to beat us," said freshman outside hitter Emma Krieger Kittle, "but I think it's going to be such a good experience. We don't have anything to lose. I know if we can push them, we'll be OK against everyone else."

Leading the Big Ten in digs with 16.82 per game, Iowa turns to its defense to lead the way for success. Senior Christina Meister sits atop the Big Ten, averaging 4.67 digs per set, and junior middle blocker Becky Walters ranks fifth in the conference, averaging 1.24 blocks per game.

In contrast, Penn State ranks first in kills with 14.98 per game. Schipper said consistency and confidence are going to help the team.

"Our defense is going to be really key because [Penn State] can hit the ball," Schipper said. "They're going to get kills, but any kill they put down is just one point, and we need to remember that."

Penn State boasts many offensive weapons. It has four players ranked in the top 10 in hitting percentage in the Big Ten, with junior Arielle Wilson's .596 leading the way. As a team, the Nittany Lions have only allowed opponents to average 7.50 digs per game.

Despite heading on the road for the second-straight weekend, the Hawkeyes have had considerable success, going 9-2 away from Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Head coach Sharon Dingman sees playing Penn State as a good measuring

'Our defense is going to be really key because [Penn State] can hit the ball. They're going to get kills, but any kill they put down is just one point, and we need to remember that.'

stick for the rest of the season.

"Well, actually, I think it's good to get this road trip out of the way," she said. "It gives us an opportunity, playing Wisconsin, and then kind of moving up that level to Minnesota and now maybe another level to Penn State."

"I think we'll see some things we saw against Minnesota, as far as just the physicality of the game and how high they play. So I think this is a really good time for us to play Penn State."

still has managed to get over his occasional first-half hump.

"There are a lot of things we can do to be more consistent," Stanzi said. "You can go on film and look at a lot of things, but it all comes back to execution, though. That's all it really does — execution and fundamentals."

Despite being equipped with Leonard's strong arm, Arkansas State has also struggled. The Red Wolves were unable to advance past former conference champ Troy on Sept. 26, losing 30-27. The senior signal-caller completed half of his 24 throws for 190 yards.

With the victory last weekend, Iowa and Texas are now tied for the second-longest winning streak at eight. And whether the Hawkeyes can surpass the Red Wolves at home could be the beginning of a lot of "firsts" for Ferentz.

"Coach said in the past years, he's never been 5-0," Broderick Binns said. "So I think that is motivation for us to become 5-0 and not become 4-1."

Season last lap for Field House

NEW HOME

Being the last season in the historic venue, the women's swimming team wants to do well and send the Field House out on a good note.

"It will be a lot about defending at home, because it is our last year," said senior cocaptain Stacia Johns, an Iowa native who swam at the Field House as a child. "It's going to be a very special year."

The women's team returns 19 letterwinners, including the leader in 12 of the 14 individual events, from a team that finished 8-3 and ninth in the Big Ten last season.

Seven school records fell last season — four in individual events and three in relays.

All but one of the record-holders returns this season, including the entire 200-meter medley relay team and last year's team MVP Katarina Tour.

Tour, a junior, set school records in three individual events last season and ranks ninth on Iowa's all-time best performers list. She also swam on the record-setting 200 medley relay and 400-meter freestyle relay teams.

Also returning is sophomore cocaptain Danielle Carty, who placed first in the 50-meter backstroke and the 200-meter medley relay at the Canadian Games this summer.

Junior Veronica Rydze will lead the diving team this season, stepping in for senior Deidre Freeman, who is studying in Spain this semester.

"We're looking to create a culture to take us to the next level," Long said. "Not just at the Big Ten championships but at the national level."

The Aquahawks will have an intrasquad meet on at 9 a.m. Saturday. It is a "Pink Meet" to raise awareness of breast cancer.

The season will officially begin on Oct. 9 with a road meet against Truman State.

"We're competing this year, not just for our team, but also for the alumni," Carty said. "We want to make everyone proud and swim fast this year."

Soccer ready for Big Ten push

The Hawkeyes already made history once this season with their school-record 8-3 start, but they're greedy for something larger.

Five years ago, playing in the postseason was an afterthought for the team. Now, it's a distinct possibility, one that true senior Alex Seydel was giddy just thinking about.

"I think that would be absolutely unbelievable," she said. "Of course, that's our No. 1 goal, to finish as high as we can in the Big Ten and, hopefully, that would get us into the NCAA Tournament. It would literally make my entire year."

Seydel has witnessed the makeover in her three-and-a-half years as a Hawkeye. She was part of fourth-year head coach Ron Rainey's first class at Iowa.

The midfielder has started every match in her career (71). Her class has seen the number of wins increase in each season, from six to eight to nine last year.

"Especially because we've gotten better each year, creating that type of foundation and seeing those results in the end would be amazingly satisfying," Seydel said.

Five freshmen regularly contribute in Iowa's lineup, and they will go through their first Big Ten season. Kaeding said she was glad to see their eagerness to step up the level of competition.

"You can just see it in their eyes how excited they are," Kaeding said.

"They know how big a deal conference is. It's not high school anymore. It's a big adjustment, but that's the reason they're here. They're good players. It's good for them to be nervous because it means they're ready."

Iowa assistant coach Eileen Narcotta saw some things against Minnesota that the newcomers can improve upon for Wisconsin and the rest of the schedule.

"What we played against Minnesota is what we're going to see every game. They know what they have to do," Narcotta said. "They know that they have to do better under pressure, play quicker, and be more accurate with their passes. We know defensively that we have to watch the ball and support each other."

So far, the mix of veteran leadership and fresh talent has worked well for the Hawkeyes. Iowa players and coaches couldn't have predicted the successful start it had, but the team knew during the preseason that there was potential for this to be a special group.

"I think we as coaches knew the talent we had coming in and the talent that was here," Narcotta said. "We felt that this was where we should be. At 8-3, we could have easily come out 11-0. We could have come out on the other end at 3-8. In the first 11 games, I don't think we did anything on luck. I think we're primed and ready to go for the Big Ten."

MEN'S SWIMMING

"We definitely want to recreate that," he said. "Especially since it's the last year in the Field House, we want it to be a special one. We want to go out with a bang."

Staying undefeated at home might be a more difficult task this year. The Hawkeyes have a more difficult schedule and a team that's still relatively young. Long said the team is challenging itself with a tougher schedule this season, adding No. 9 Minnesota to the list after seeing four teams in the top 25 last year.

"What we're doing is building toward a championship team, and we'll 'Initially, it felt like we were losing a huge player, but we have 10 freshmen coming in. We have a ton of talent, and they're all working really hard right now.'

— Nick Divan, senior cocaptain take steps this year," Long said. "They're young, and they're developing. There is weekly development happening."

Even with the tougher schedule and younger team, senior cocaptain Nick Divan is optimistic about what the team can do, considering what it accomplished last season.

"Last year, we had some dual meets where nobody thought we could win," he said. "And everybody stepped up and raced, and we ended up winning."

This season, the Hawkeyes are hoping to surprise some people again. In the off-season, the Hawkeyes lost one of their best swimmers in Conor Dwyer. He set the school record in the 100-meter freestyle and was a major player in the relays.

The Hawkeyes believe they are more prepared this year because of depth.

"Initially, it felt like we were losing a huge player, but we have 10 freshmen coming in," Divan said. "We have a ton of talent, and they're all working really hard right now."

Another thing that could carry Iowa is its team attitude. Long said the Hawkeyes like to refer to themselves as "scrappy." He's hoping that attitude will take them far.

"We've steadily gotten better each year. We're starting to create the culture we think we can really launch from," Long said. "It's going to take some development to move up, but you look at where we've come the last four years. It's gotten more and more impressive."

Rocktober all over again

DENVER (AP) — It's a Rocktober redux for the Colorado Rockies, who are back in the playoffs after a one-year hiatus.

Aaron Cook pitched four-hit ball over eight spectacular innings in his second start since missing a month with a sore shoulder, and Garrett Atkins drove in three runs for the Rockies in a 9-2 win over the Milwaukee Brewers on Thursday.

The Rockies' fourth-straight victory eliminated Atlanta, their final pursuer, from contention for the NL wild card. Colorado can still catch the Dodgers for the NL West title if the Rockies sweep a weekend series in Los Angeles.

"We're in," Troy Tulowitzki said. "Anything can happen once you're in."

The Dodgers, who have lost four straight, were off Thursday and watched their division lead over the Rockies get sliced to two games with three left.

As the Rockies rejoiced behind the mound after the final out, fans broke into a chant of "Beat LA! Beat LA!" while fireworks crackled through a cloudless sky.

A bundled-up crowd of more than 38,000 sat through blustery winds on a 50-degree day to watch the record-setting win. At 91-58, the Rockies set a franchise mark for wins in a season and moved 23 games over .500 for the first time in their 17-year history

Football Mini-Ledge Friday

Five ways ASU can cover the 21-point spread:

- Learn how to kick 65-yard field goals.

- Put on makeup, dress like women, and hope against hope that Iowa players can be confused by such Bugs Bunny-style shenanigans.

- Hope God is an ASU fan.

- Expose their punt returner to massive doses of gamma radiation or cosmic rays, hoping he either gets an awesome superpower or mutation or that helps win the game.

- Bribes. REALLY BIG ONES.

Two reasons ASU teams are no longer called the "Indians":

- Native Americans find the term "Indians" to be incredibly offensive and were threatening to sue.

- Native Americans find any association with ASU to be incredibly offensive and were threatening to sue.

Five "creative" names that you can almost assuredly expect to hear ASU called Saturday at Kinnick:

- A-ass-U
- Arkansuck State
- The Dead Wolves
- Losers! (an overall assessment)
- Losers! (a prescient decree)

— Andrew R. Juhl predicts a 12-point win.

Think you're pretty funny? Prove it. The Daily Iowan is looking for Ledge writers. You can submit a Ledge at daily-iowan@uiowa.edu. If we think it's good, we'll run it — and maybe contact you for more.

— by Eugenia Last

ARIES March 21-April 19 Before you become too comfortable with the idea of change, double-check all the particulars. It's apparent that what you have already may be better than what's being offered. Listen to reason.

TAURUS April 20-May 20 You have plenty to rejoice about. Times are changing, and, although you still have some things to contend with, you can rest assured everything will work in your favor. A romantic encounter will make you realize how lucky you are.

GEMINI May 21-June 20 Don't bend to someone's whims. Playing emotional games will lead to heartache and loss. Say what's on your mind even if it does cause a rift in your relationship with someone. Take care of matters rather than letting them spiral out of control.

CANCER June 21-July 22 Open your doors, and host an event. Your ability to put everyone at ease will make an impression that will filter over into other areas of your life. Romance is looking good.

LEO July 23-Aug. 22 You'll get a different perspective on a situation you are dealing with by talking to an outsider with experience. Travel should be scheduled if it will help solve a problem you've been faced with. You don't have to go overboard when simplicity will suffice.

VIRGO Aug. 23-Sept. 22 Make some changes that will please the people you care about. Home improvements, a move, or a change of location will help to clear your head and give you greater incentive to pursue your long-time goals.

LIBRA Sept. 23-Oct. 22 Watch what others do, but don't become a chameleon. You have to follow your own path and use what you observe as a learning tool, not as a reason to procrastinate. Find someone with whom to explore new territory.

SCORPIO Oct. 23-Nov. 21 Search for peace of mind. Attend a conference, seminar, or retreat that will inspire you. Attitude can make a difference when dealing with people or formulating your own strategy for the future. You can revive your love life or find someone to share your world.

SAGITTARIUS Nov. 22-Dec. 21 Watch who you push around. You may end up in a tight spot that will force you to make a decision you've been trying to avoid. Facing problems will lead to changes you may not be ready for.

CAPRICORN Dec. 22-Jan. 19 Don't stop when you have so much to gain. Attend a reunion or make a point to get in touch with someone you think can contribute to your life or a project you are engaged in. Make things happen, and you will have no regrets.

AQUARIUS Jan. 20-Feb. 18 You'll be put in your place quickly if you try to boast about something that isn't factual. Do what's expected of you, and avoid upsetting someone you count on for help. Do what's right, not just what you want this time.

PISCES Feb. 19-March 20 Don't just think about a relationship gone wrong, do something about it. Question your motives and whether or not you should stay or let this one go. By offering compassion, affection, and immediate attention to the problem, emotional turmoil can be offset.

Montgomery an honorary captain

Former Iowa fullback Lew Montgomery has been named an honorary captain for the Hawkeyes' game against Arkansas State on Saturday.

Iowa will play the Red Wolves in a televised home game. Kickoff in Kinnick Stadium set for 11:02 a.m.

A few thousand tickets still remain for the nonconference meeting. Iowa has sold out 38 of its last 39 home games.

Montgomery, a Waterloo native, lettered as a fullback four times from 1989-92 under former Hawkeye coach Hayden Fry. He also played in the 1991 Rose Bowl, and the 1991 Holiday Bowl.

Leung ran for 1,093 yards during his Iowa career, scoring 17 touchdowns while averaging 4.2 yards per carry. He was a 1991 All-Big Ten honorable mention when he rushed for 498 yards and posted eight touchdowns.

Montgomery will accompany the other Iowa captains to the center of the field for the pregame coin-flip. He will also be in the locker room with the Hawkeyes before and after the game, in addition to being on the sidelines during the contest.

City High QB Derby to announce college pick

Highly touted City High senior quarterback A.J. Derby will announce which college team he plans to play for today during a press conference at City High School at 4 p.m.

Derby, a four-star recruit according to Rivals.com, has garnered significant interest from Iowa and other schools, including Alabama, Florida, Florida State, Miami (Fla.), and Michigan.

Derby, a 6-4 218-pound athlete, is coming off a statistically impressive junior season. Throwing for 1,197 yards on 136 attempts with 11 touchdown passes, the multifaceted quarterback also rushed for 1,064 yards and 13 touchdowns last year.

With Derby under center for the Little Hawks, City High is the top-ranked team in the state in Class 4A.

Derby will be the fourth football player to make the cross-town trip from City High to the Hawkeyes if he commits to Iowa.

Hawks zero in on Wolves

Hawkeyes focusing on Arkansas State before anything else.

By AMIE KIEHN
amie-kiehn@uiowa.edu

Iowa's defensive performance against Penn State quarterback Daryll Clark and tailback Evan Royster was the force behind the Hawkeyes' 21-10 victory over the Nittany Lions and the deserved national recognition.

Slated as a vital win for the Hawkeyes, prognosticators and fans alike are placing Iowa as a major contender for the Big Ten championship. For head coach Kirk Ferentz, he remains content to focus on one Saturday at a time.

Thus, the Hawkeyes' defensive front will have to continue its strong play before the Kinnick Stadium faithful on Saturday in order to hold off Arkansas State, which stands 1-2 overall.

"Let's hope we win the Kinnick Stadium championship this Saturday," Ferentz said at his weekly press conference on Tuesday. "I'll be happy with that, and then we'll go on to the next game after that. We've played one game in conference play."

The Red Wolves boast an impressive defensive line, which includes 6-5, 280-pound Alex Carrington. The defensive end from Tupelo, Miss., was named the 2008 Sun Belt Conference Defensive Player of the Year after accumulating 53 tackles (34 solo) and 10.5 sacks.

Carrington's accomplishments last season placed him on this year's Lott Trophy Watch List alongside Iowa linebacker Pat Angerer.

"They've got some guys on defense — particularly up front — who do a nice job," Ferentz said. "The one defensive end Carrington is a big strong guy. I understand he ran like a 4.75, or something like that, for the pros."

The redshirt senior is not the only player with experience for the Red Wolves, who return eight starters on defense.

While excelling defensively, Arkansas State quarterback Corey Leonard has brought a program formerly stalled in mediocrity to the Sun Belt's short list.

Last season Leonard broke the school record for yards in a season with 4,786. The Wolves' offensive stats so far beat the Hawkeyes in total yardage, 358.3 to 347.8.

"I think our defensive

SWIMMING AND DIVING

Hawks' long swim goodbye

The Iowa women's swimming and diving team looks forward to a successful season in its final year in the Field House.

By MITCH SMITH
mitchell-smith@uiowa.edu

After 35 years, the Iowa women's swimming and diving team will have a new home next season.

The Field House has been the home of the swimming and diving program for 83 years.

Long coach

When the pool was dedicated in 1927, it was the largest indoor swimming pool in the world. It is also the place where the butterfly stroke was invented.

"The place just oozes tradition," head swimming coach Marc Long said.

After this season, the Aquahawks will relocate to the new Campus Recreation and Wellness Center being built near the intersection of Burlington and Madison Streets.

The final meet at the Field House will be an alumni meet in April 2010.

Despite the rich history the women's team has had at the Field House — 25 All-Americans and 12 individual Big Ten champions — the move is necessary because the many limitations the Field House pool offers, including the length of the pool, shallowness, and height of the diving towers.

Bob Rydze, Iowa's diving coach for the past 35 years, has a "love-hate relationship" with the Field House.

"It's going to be sad in a lot of respects because of all the memories," he said "But there are days that are frustrating."

Swimming for history

The Iowa men's swimming and diving team begins its final season in the Field House with the inaugural Pink Meet on Saturday at 9 a.m.

By PATRICK RAFFERTY

The Hawkeyes can't hold their breath any longer. They're ready to come up for air.

The Iowa men's swimming and diving team will begin its final season in the Field House with the inaugural Pink Meet at 9 a.m. on Saturday. The team named the annual Black and Gold intrasquad game the Pink Meet to spread awareness of breast cancer.

Iowa head coach Marc Long said this was the first time the swimming team has ever done anything similar to this. He hopes to bring more awareness to the meet and the disease by placing the event right before a home football game.

"[Breast cancer] affects a lot of lives. It has affected our team — both teams," Long said. "So we thought a perfect meet for that would be our intrasquad meet, partially because the men are involved."

"I think we're the first men's team on campus to do this."

The team is hoping to pay tribute to the men and women who have suffered through breast cancer and spread awareness about the disease. They plan to make it an annual event, spreading awareness of a different disease each year.

The event is the first meet of the 2009-10 season, and the team is eager to get underway. Last season, the Hawkeyes went 7-1 overall, undefeated (4-0) at home. Junior cocaptain Max Dittmer is hoping to carry some of that success over to this season.

Kickin' it in gear

By ROBBIE LEHMAN

As the Iowa soccer team prepares to rejoin Big Ten play this weekend, the conference portion of the schedule presents a different challenge for two of the team's classes.

The Hawkeyes (8-3, 0-1) will face Wisconsin in a Big Ten Network match at the Iowa Soccer Complex on at 1 p.m. Oct. 4.

Raimey coach

The senior class has experienced what midfielder Jackie Kaeding calls a "transformation" of the program during the years it has spent in Iowa City.

While Iowa certainly isn't looking more than one game at a time, Kaeding, a fifth-year senior, described how she would feel if the team was able to win a conference championship and earn the program's first-ever NCAA Tournament invitation.

"It would be amazing," she said. "I think it would be such a great way to go out. Just the fact that our team is so much better than five years ago, and I've been able to see all that. To finish up with good record in the Big Ten or making it to the NCAA Tournament, that would be the proof right there."

Johnson-Koulianos, the playmaker

Junior wideout Derrell Johnson-Koulianos has quietly made a case for himself since falling in the two-deep during the off-season.

By RYAN YOUNG
ryan-c-young@uiowa.edu

Statistically speaking, Derrell Johnson-Koulianos is Iowa's third-best receiver five weeks into the season.

With seven catches, 111 yards, and zero game starts, only senior Trey Stross and sophomore Marvin McNutt have numerically claimed superiority over No. 15 after four games.

At the top stands Stross, who has tallied the most yards (167), the most receptions (11), and the longest reception (34) for the Hawkeyes. Not far behind is McNutt, whose offensive digits thus far (121 yards on eight receptions in four games played) are charming considering the St. Louis native had been signaling plays rather than making them a year ago.

junior

Then there is Johnson-Koulianos, who led the Iowa wideouts unit in 2008 and accounted for more than 25 percent of the Hawkeyes' 2,362 passing yards with 639 but has yet to regain his starting spot. During the spring, coaches named him a second-team split end.

"He had some injuries in camp, but when he was out there, he was really practicing well," Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz said on Tuesday. "He's a good player, and we expect him to play well. That's what I'm hoping for."

The 11th-year headman is also hoping his game-day receiver lineup quickly gets away from looking like an international à la carte menu.

Aside from Stross, who has become a near-permanent fixture in the Iowa offense, the Hawkeyes' six other wideouts have rotated practically every down and drive with minimal success.

And nearly two weeks ago, Iowa's stock sank a little further with Johnson-Koulianos hampered by a hamstring injury that kept him out against Arizona.

His absence was merely temporary, though. He came back for the team's Big Ten opener at Beaver Stadium in State College, Pa.

Leading his position with 50 yards on three receptions — including a 24-yard grab — Johnson-Koulianos once again helped lift underdog Iowa over a nationally lauded Penn State program.

Maybe the 6-1, 200-pound product of Campbell, Ohio, is a Nittany Lion killer. Or maybe he's just Hawkeye Nation's version of New York Yankee slugger Reggie Jackson.

dailyiowan.com for more sports

Whatever the reasoning, Johnson-Koulianos is just glad to be back making plays that make Iowa fans rise up and whoop.

"It felt good to be out there, contributing with my teammates," he said following Iowa's 21-10 win over Penn State last weekend. "Coach [Erik] Campbell had me right back in there, and you know, there really was nothing to it."

The transition may have been "nothing" for Johnson-Koulianos, but with Ferentz dubbing Iowa's current passing plan as "sporadic," clutch contributions have signified the importance of having No. 15 not only in the huddle but darting down field.

"You know, he's a playmaker," quarterback Ricky Stanzi said. "Everyone has seen the plays he makes — especially on third down. So having him there really gives us one of our biggest options for completing long balls and getting the ball to a receiver who is big, and can catch the ball, and can move up field when he gets the ball in his hands."

Hawkeye Pick to Click vs. Arkansas State ...	AMIE KIEHN	JON LINDER	SCOTT MILLER	BRENDAN STILES
2. What was your reaction to Iowa's 21-10 victory over Penn State?	Adrian Clayborn should replace Tom Cruise in the Mission Impossible series.	Christian Ballard. Since moving inside, he's wreaked havoc.	Karl Klug - he had a quietly brilliant game against Penn State, and it'll continue against Arkansas State.	Ricky Stanzi. He's due for a HUGE game.
3. Do you think the Hawkeyes can win the Big Ten now?	"Oh my! Oh my! Did I DVR this? Shoot."	We Own ... Penn State.	How do you come back from 10 down on the road?	Shock. I'll be honest.
4. What do you know about Arkansas State?	I am going neutral on this topic (don't want to jinx anything).	With the right mindset, this team will win the conference.	Can they? Sure. Will they? Columbus is a tough, tough place to play. But so is Happy Valley. Ask me in two weeks.	Like Kevin Garnett, "ANYTHING IS POSSIBLE."
5. Thoughts on nonconference games in October?	Saturday's matchup will mostly likely be the Red Wolves' only televised game.	It plays in the prestigious Sun Belt Conference.	They have an atrocious nickname: the Red Wolves.	They're called the Red Wolves.
6. Predict the score of Saturday's Iowa-Arkansas State.	Idiotic. Dumb. Annoying. Should I tell you how I really feel?	Makes no difference when games are played.	Can we just expand the Big Ten schedule to nine games already?	I second what Amie Kiehn said.
7. Give me an upset special for this week ...	34-3, Iowa.	27-3, Iowa. Defense shouldn't get scored on, but I'll be generous.	31-3. Last-second field goal ruins a shutout bid.	41-0. Yeah, I'm calling a shutout.
8. When is the earliest any college football poll should come out?	Iowa has to win. That is all. I don't want an upset this weekend.	Miami over Oklahoma.	Georgia over LSU. Playing in Athens is never a good thing.	Don't know. I wanted to say Iowa State wins its fake home game, but the Cyclones are actually favored.
	Aug. 1.	Week 4.	Oct. 1. See my column from August for further explanation.	Middle of October. Preseason and September polls are just stupid.

Point/Counterpoint

Is this a good week for Iowa to play Arkansas State?

NO

When trying to find an opponent to pencil in a week after topping Penn State and a week before facing Michigan, Arkansas State isn't exactly the type of team that comes to mind.

Of course, the logistics of scheduling dictate that Iowa step outside the Big Ten this week. With an odd number of teams, one is left out of conference play. This week, it's Iowa.

Logistics aside, the best-case scenario is: Iowa plays another high-caliber opponent this week.

The Hawkeyes' last opponent, Penn State, and their next Big Ten opponent, Michigan, happen to be two of the best teams the Hawkeyes will face all year. Arkansas State is arguably the worst.

The Red Wolves present your classic trap-game scenario.

The Hawkeyes are not only coming off of the emotional high of taming the Nittany Lions, but they are also only a week away from their first meeting with Michigan since 2006.

With these two ingredients, Iowa could be in for an emotional low and a slow start against the Red Wolves.

One of the glaring reasons that many preseason prognosticators did not choose Iowa as a legitimate Big Ten contender was a predetermined variable, the Hawkeyes' mind-numbingly difficult schedule.

With no games the last two weeks of the season, Iowa has no bye week. The Hawkeyes must run the gauntlet of playing 12 games in 12 weeks. Some may make the ignorant argument that Arkansas State serves as a "bye."

And let's be honest: Hawkeye Nation is assuming the victory this week.

Fortunately, head coach Kirk Ferentz is renowned for his ability to prepare his team the exact same way each week - and I'm sure this week will be no different.

But when Tate Forcier & Company come marching into Iowa City next week (and possibly four famous ESPN talking heads), it's safe to say the stakes will be more than a bit higher.

- by Jordan Garretson

YES

Saturday is a great time for Iowa to go head to head with Arkansas State.

I can see the argument that it is the fifth game of the season and it is time to get serious, especially before Iowa plays Michigan, but who says the Hawkeyes aren't going to take this week's game seriously?

ABC announcer Brent Musburger said it himself - Iowa is the most intelligent and well-coached team he has broadcast so far this season. Does anyone really believe head coach Kirk Ferentz is going to let the team slack off this week and then not be prepared for its Homecoming game against Michigan?

The timing for this contest couldn't be better. Iowa is coming away from beating a solid Arizona team followed by a victory over Penn State, which was the No. 5 team in the nation. The Hawkeyes deserve an opponent that will most likely play well below their talent level.

Some think that once conference play begins, all of the easy nonconference opponents should be forgotten. But that doesn't always make for the best preparation.

Take Penn State for instance. It walloped Akron, Syracuse, and Temple by an average of 23 points per game. But in came Iowa to stun the Nittany Lions in front of a home crowd of more than 100,000. Penn State was clearly overrated, but no one knew that until this past weekend, because it had played three inferior opponents to start the season.

Iowa, however, has not taken that path this season. Even if it annihilates Arkansas State, the game is not going to give the Hawkeyes a false sense of how good they are, because they already know what they can do against a formidable opponent.

This game could also potentially give left tackle Bryan Bulaga and tight end Tony Moeaki another week to recuperate from illness/injury before taking on the Wolverines.

The bottom line is Hawkeye fans do not need to worry about this game taking away any of the steam Iowa has built up after beating Penn State. If anything, it will allow the Hawkeyes to work out any kinks or question marks before welcoming the Maize and Blue to Iowa City.

Defensive line works for Hawks

DEFENSE

The Hawkeyes forced three turnovers and blocked a punt. Senior linebacker Pat Angerer tallied 14 tackles, and the Big Ten named him Defensive Player of the Week.

The defensive front four displayed their exceptional ability to bewilder opponents by running a variety of stunts to foil the Nittany Lions' offense and quarterback Daryll Clark, leading to Iowa's 21-10 victory.

"I think it was just getting the offense confused," Binns said. "You know, just staying in the pass-rush lane, not letting Daryll Clark get outside and run against us."

'It's time to turn the page. We need to move onto the next challenge, and we certainly have one coming in here Saturday.'

— Kirk Ferentz, head coach

Going back to 2008, no team has scored a rushing touchdown against the Hawkeyes in 29 consecutive quarters — 13 last season, 16 this season. The last time an opponent did was Penn State's Derrick Williams 9-yard run in the third quarter. And Williams was a wide receiver.

"The defense goes as we go," Binns said. "So if we can stop the run — typically, that is when our defense plays the best."

ESPN's "College GameDay" was on the scene in State College, and commentator Kirk Herbstreit noted that Ferentz has had his best teams when the line play has consistently been dominant.

Binns forced a fumble in the end zone during the second quarter, resulting in a safety and significantly shifting the momentum to Iowa. Binns' success did not end there. He consistently bull-rushed Penn State's DeOn'tae Pannell so effectively that the offensive lineman was replaced by Nerraw McCormack.

JULIE KOEHN/THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa linebacker Pat Angerer and Iowa defensive tackle Karl Klug tackle Penn State running back Evan Royster during the first half of Iowa's game Penn State in Beaver Stadium on Sept. 26. Klug is among those on Iowa's front four having productive 2009 campaigns.

Iowa Front Four defensive statistics through four games:

	Year	Solo	Tackles	TFL	Sacks	FF	FR
Broderick Binns	So.	10	20	3.5	1.5	1	1
Karl Klug	Jr.	7	18	5.5	2.5	1	0
Adrian Clayborn	Jr.	6	15	1.5	1.0	1	0
Christian Ballard	Jr.	4	13	1.0	1.0	0	0

The Hawkeyes say they know last weekend is history — and history doesn't win any football games — and they are preparing for unranked Arkansas State by not dwelling on the victory over Penn State.

"It's time to turn the page," Ferentz said. "We need to move onto the next challenge, and we certainly have one coming in here Saturday."

It's not 'just a game'!

Each week, DI Super Sims will preview three major games from around the Big Ten, including Iowa's upcoming contest. ## Conducting the Hawkeye symphony

Kirk Ferentz's coaching has been something to marvel at this year.

By SCOTT MILLER
scott-t-miller@uiowa.edu

Here's the thing about Kirk Ferentz: He isn't flashy; he isn't a provocateur; he isn't least the bit interested in self-promotion.

Basically, he isn't Lane Kiffin.

That's why last year, when I approached the 11-year head coach about possibly doing a long profile story on him, he politely declined. It wasn't anything personal; it's just not his style to talk about himself. If his mug is going to be plastered on the front page, he wants it to be because of something positive he said about his players.

So he'd be the first to tell you his players won the Hawkeyes' last two contests, the more recent one being the "they-did-that-again?" 21-10 victory over Penn State in front of 100,000 Nittany Lion fans. He'd be the first to tell you his assistant coaches deserve all the credit for dissecting an equally well-coached Arizona team. He'd be the first to tell you players make coaches look good, not vice versa.

Well, Coach, I'd respectfully disagree.

Certainly, Adrian Clayborn's blocked punt and subsequent 53-yard return for a game-changing, lead-stealing touchdown was the result of the defensive end's effort. I don't think anyone would argue with that.

But people tend to forget Iowa faced a 10-0 deficit after Daryll Clark's 79-yard pass to Chaz Powell and the Nittany Lions' meticulous 20-play drive that ate up more than 10 minutes on the clock. Iowa ran all of six plays in the first quarter, one of which was a fluke interception.

At the time, the combination of Penn State's big-play ability and its methodical, let's-run-some-clock drive seemed as though it would demoralize the Hawks. But as long as the Hawkeyes have Ferentz on their sidelines, you know panic is the furthest thing from the players' minds.

Certainly, Pat Angerer's interception and ensuing 38-yard return was instinctive, but what about the halftime adjustments that put him in that position? In fact, what about Iowa's second-half play this year?

The Hawkeyes have outscored their opponents an astounding 64-13 in the game's final 30 minutes. The only way to explain that is good coaching, starting from the top on down.

Certainly, Adam Robinson's tackle-slipping 13-yard touchdown run that put the Hawkeyes up 18-10 in the fourth quarter was the result of sheer determination. Robinson and his costar, Brandon Wegher, have looked so good that it's easy to forget these weren't Ferentz's No. 1 guys coming into the season.

That spot belonged to sophomore Jewel Hampton, but after a knee injury forced the Indianapolis native to the sidelines for the season, the Hawkeyes again showed no panic — and playing two freshman running backs is panic-inducing. The same can be said for when left tackle Bryan Bulaga (illness), tight end Tony Moeaki (ankle), and wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos (hamstring) all missed the Arizona game.

"Really, I think this one goes to Coach Ferentz," Johnson-Koulianos said after the Penn State game. "If you sit in on one of his speeches or one of his meetings, it's something. He really did a tremendous, tremendous job of really just preparing us.

"He tried to set the tone for us. I felt like it was definitely a different approach, a [different] vibe that he gave us. I think the guys really felt it and came out and matched his intensity this week."

If you don't believe him or me, watch Ferentz roam the Kinnick Stadium sidelines on Saturday against Arkansas State. He won't chew out any referees; he won't get in his players' faces; he won't show the slightest bit of emotion. He'll just slowly, methodically plan.

No, Ferentz isn't flashy, but to call him any less than brilliant on the sidelines would be a lie.

Willing to take the fifth

With wins over Arizona and Penn State, Iowa is off to one of its best starts in the Kirk Ferentz era.

By JON LINDER
jonathan-linder@uiowa.edu

In Kirk Ferentz's first 10 years as Iowa's head coach, the Hawkeyes have traditionally started somewhat stagnantly and evolved to produce vigorous, season-closing winning streaks.

The 2009 Hawkeyes apparently chose to forego the tradition of dormant Septembers.

Following back-to-back wins over upper-tier BCS conference teams, No. 13 Iowa finished undefeated in September for the first time since 2001. If they beat Arkansas State on Saturday, the Hawkeyes will be 5-0 for the first time under Ferentz. The last time Iowa started a season with a 5-0 mark was under Hayden Fry in 1995.

"We've done all that we can right now to be in the best position [possible], and that's 4-0," junior quarterback Ricky Stanzi said. "A lot of [Ferentz's] good teams have had early losses and have responded. Now, it's kind of interesting to see how we will respond to having a good start."

The Hawkeyes finished 7-5 in 2001, which included Ferentz's first bowl win, against Texas Tech in the Alamo Bowl. Iowa started 3-0 before losing to Purdue to open October, and technically, the Hawkeyes may not have had an undefeated September had the Iowa State game not been postponed because of the 9/11 attacks. The Cyclones beat Iowa in late November that year.

If that loss to Iowa State is counted as a September loss, Iowa hasn't truly had an unblemished September since Fry's 1997 Hawkeye squad. That team also finished 7-5, struggling through Big Ten play and losing to Iowa running back Adam Robinson heads for the end zone during the second half of Iowa's game against Penn State in State College, Pa., on Sept. 26. This is the third time in the Kirk Ferentz era that Iowa has opened a season 4-0, but the Hawkeyes have never started a year 5-0 with him as head coach.

Arizona State in Fry's final bowl appearance.

A decade later, Iowa is in position to pair a solid start with Ferentz's annual firm finish. And the most intriguing aspect of Iowa's fast start is that it almost didn't start at all.

In a 17-16 win against Northern Iowa on Sept. 5, Iowa had to make Football Bowl Subdivision history by blocking two field goals in the game's final seven seconds to preserve the victory. Hawkeye fans reacted as if Kinnick Stadium were crumbling at its foundations after the performance, but they have since all but forgotten the near debacle after three-straight dominant, defensive-driven wins.

"We survived a close call [to start this season], and in years past, we haven't," Ferentz said on Tuesday. "Some of them haven't been so close. The Arizona State game [in 2004] wasn't real close, obviously."

The 2004 campaign Ferentz referred to was a perfect example of what fans have come to expect from Iowa teams throughout this decade. Following losses to Arizona State and Michigan, Iowa won its final seven conference games in 2004 to earn a co-Big Ten title. The Hawkeyes went on to win the Capital One Bowl that season in dramatic fashion on the shoulders of quarterback Drew Tate.

He emerged midseason as a savvy leader for the Hawkeyes, as did defensive stalwarts Chad Greenway and Abdul Hodge. This season, a host of Hawkeyes have stepped into similar roles, providing an early corps of leadership some players point to as a key to this team's early success.

"In the past, we've had fewer leaders," freshman running back Adam Robinson said. "We've only had maybe four or five guys who are leaders for the whole team. [Now] we have 10 or 12 real leaders on the team who are stepping up and leading through their play. I think the whole team feeds off that."

Q&A

Angerer may have been 'thinking to much'

This week, Iowa senior linebacker Pat Angerer spoke with the local media after receiving three different defensive player-of-the-week accolades.

By BRENDAN STILES
brendan-stiles@uiowa.edu

dailyiowan.com for more sports

DI: You talked about the interception return - were you head-hunting? Did you think you were going to run through that tackle?

Angerer: Yeah, I think that was the run I got over, and that hurt. I thought I just got right up, and apparently, I was lying there for a little bit, so I don't know. I don't really remember much after that.

DI: You picked up a couple of awards this week.

Angerer: Yeah, you know, I mean, it was pretty cool. I think it just shows how great our defense is. You know, everybody was doing his job running around. There are a lot of guys on our defense who should have gotten an award, too.

DI: What goes through your mind when you hear one day, you get the Big Ten one, then the next day, you get the Lott one, then the next day, you get the national one?

Angerer: I don't know. I mean, it's cool. Our defense, we've got a lot of guys who probably could've won the award. A lot of guys were flying around, having fun, and we had a great time last Saturday, and you know, we got to move on and continue to improve.

DI: You guys almost take on the Ferentz mentality, his personality. Is that the case?

Angerer: Yeah, he's the coach. I've been with him a long time, every day.

DI: Did you get banned from the postgame now with [Gary] Dolphin?

Angerer: We were feeling a little good after that. I was saying whatever came to my head.

DI: Do you ever think about taking your act on the road?

Angerer: Yeah, right. I'm not smart enough. I don't know about that. I'd probably have someone write my jokes for me or something.

DI: If you weren't playing football, what do you think you'd be doing?

Angerer: I don't know. At a bar or something. [Laughter] No. [Laughter] Sitting on the couch, watching TV.

DI: For you personally, at what point did that moment come of, Hey, I know what I'm capable of and what type of player I can be?

Angerer: I think the first two games, I was thinking too much. I don't know if I was trying to do too much, but I was probably thinking too much, and I just wasn't really getting the job done. And the key is to just go in there and relax, and you know, what happens, happens, and just react, rather than think or try to guess. And that's what happened on Saturday.

DI: What's it like to play behind a defensive line that's constantly getting pressure on quarterbacks?

Angerer: It's fun. It's very fun watching those guys, and you know, we don't have to cover our receivers for that long because we're getting pressure on them. We don't have to take on blockers that much because they're doing just a great job of taking on blockers.

DI: Did you hear any stories of anything happening in Iowa City when you guys got back from State College?

Angerer: No. We got back at like, what? I fell asleep at like 5 a.m., and so, I wasn't really thinking much about that.
