Iowa City police Officer Rob Cash surveys the Pedestrian Mall with a twinkle in his eye on Nov. 14. He witnesses so much drunken debauchery downtown that in the end it all runs together, he said. On this relatively slow night, he had arrested a young man he said he spotted stealing nearly $1,000 worth of liquor from behind a bar.

ROB Cash stands out among the legions of college students lined up outside the bars on Clinton Street. Dressed in pristine navy blue, with neatly buzzed hair and a clean-shaven face, the 34-year-old nonchalantly bypasses a long line of 20-somethings, nodding his head at the bouncer outside the Summit Bar & Restaurant. For him, there's no waiting in line at any of the city's popular clubs.

Inside, Lady Gaga is blaring, the lights are low and colorful, and the place is packed with more than 200 patrons, but one look from Cash is enough to clear a walking path through the dancing mass. Smiles quickly fade, and heads turn as the husky 5-8 man makes his way to the back of the room. Some even point him out to friends. Cash knows they are staring — and he stares back, straight in the eyes, to see how they will react. After all, it's his job.

"We watch them drop their drinks," he says.

Cash is an Iowa City police officer, and at 11:30 p.m. on this particular Saturday, he's downtown on foot patrol, conducting a bar check, trying to identify and ticket underage partiers.

Those who drop their drinks are, presumably, under 21, and he will ticket them.

Those PAULA fines have become a problem for more than just young adults — this year, the Iowa City City Council has decided to deny liquor-license renewals for bars with PAULA rates greater than one per police visit.

The city councilors have denied those renewals for three bars: Et Cetera, 3rd Base, and the Summit. The owners of the first two have appealed, and they are awaiting a ruling by an administrative law judge. The Summit will also appeal, and the owner has sued the city over the constitutionality of the ordinance.

But the officers assigned to bar checks don't think much about the possible repercussions that might ensue for establishments. The two to four officers assigned to bar checks each night are only responsible for carrying out the law.

Lt. Bill Campbell, the night shift's watch commander, said the number of officers going bar to bar depends on how many officers are on foot and if there are enough to take care of downtown. From January to September of this year, police visited establishments 1,064 times and issued 580 PAULA tickets during those visits, according to the most recent data available.

UI cancels asking patients for money

Officials look to other ways to garner donations.

By ASHLEY OERMAN
ashley-oerman@uiowa.edu

After complaints from faculty, staff, and community members, UI officials confirmed Thursday they are canceling the proposed plan to solicit donations from hospital patients.

"We have decided to cancel our plan to initiate the program, and the review is still ongoing," UI spokesman Tom Moore said.

The announcement came after a UI faculty and staff committee wrote a letter voicing their grievances with the UI Hospitals and Clinics plan to UI President Sally Mason on Nov. 13.

Nancy Danvin, a pediatrics program assistant and member of the Funded Retirement Insurance Committee, which sent the letter, said she is not against asking patients for money, but doesn't want it to happen while they're being treated.

"I don't think [donation solicitations] should be intermingled with the clinic appointment," Danvin said.

About five years after a break-in at a UI lab that resulted in about $450,000 in damages, a federal prosecutor unsealed an indictment against a Minnesota man thought to be related to the incident.

Though the Nov. 14, 2004, break-in at Spence Labs in Seashore Hall isn't mentioned specifically in the grand-jury indictment, the nature of the allegations, location, and dates mentioned in the document correspond with the incident.

Prosecutors allege Scott DeMuth, 22, conspired with others to commit animal-enterprise terrorism and cause economic damages to the animal enterprise.

DeMuth and Carrie Feldman, 20, both of Minneapolis, remain jailed after refusing to testify before a grand jury earlier this week despite subpoenas. They are charged with contempt of court.

UIHC doctors work to prevent severe infections in premature babies.

By HOLLY HINES
holly-hines@uiowa.edu

During the first few days of Aebry Caughron's life, her tiny hand could barely fit around her mother's pinky fingernail.

But during a checkup at the UI Hospitals and Clinics on Wednesday, the now active 8-month-old sat curiously, looking around the doctor's office, easily grasping her mother's entire finger.

Doctors delivered the 1-pound, 8-ounce Aebry at the UIHC on March 8, around three months before doctors expected her to arrive. Shelley Caughron, her 34-year-old mother, found out she would meet her fifth child early just a week before going into labor.

"That first week was very scary," she said as she held her daughter on her lap. The baby wore an oxygen tube to help her breathe, but after the appointment, she was able to go home tubeless and breathing on her own for a one-month trial period.

Aebry is one of the approximately 600 babies the UIHC's Neonatal Intensive-Care Unit treats each year, according to the department's website. Since the facility opened in 1974, the hospital has treated more than 15,000 babies, around 40 percent of whom were transferred from other hospitals.

While many are born with life-threatening conditions, the survival rate of all premature babies treated at the UIHC is more than 95 percent.

Aebry has grown and developed with few complications since she went home to Waterloo earlier than anticipated after roughly three months in the hospital — in part because she never got an infection.

The neonatal unit has gone without a central-line-associated bloodstream infection for more than a year, said Jonathan Klein, the department's medical director.

Shelley Caughron of Waterloo holds her 8-month-old daughter, Aebry, before her clinical visit at the UIHC on Thursday. Aebry was born 15 weeks early and weighed 1 pound, 8 ounces. She now weighs 15.5 pounds.

Neonatal statistics

UIHC doctors and nurses have avoided premature birth complications in the past year:

- 90 percent survival rate for babies born at 25 weeks.
- Fewer than 15 percent of babies have developed any type of infection.
- No baby has suffered a fungal infection.

Source: Neonatal Intensive Care Unit

Central-line infections are severe and put babies at a greater risk of death, and the lack of them at the UIHC lately is likely due to officials' increased efforts to maintain a sterile environment, he said. It's common for such neonatal facilities to treat one such infection each month, he said.

Even with the achievement, Iowa received a D from a recently released March of Dimes 2009 Premature Birth Report Card for its 11.6 percent preterm birthrate — roughly 4 percent over the nation's objective percentage.

Most other states received a D as well, and no state received an A, according to the report. Klein said the grade looked at statistics, not the quality of care doctors and nurses provide for babies born prematurely. The UIHC has 12 neonatologists in addition to nurse practitioners and volunteers.

Shelley credits UIHC doctors for being able to bring her baby home.

Though she had no infections, Aebry underwent surgery at three weeks when a heart valve that should close on its own failed to seal, threatening to flood her lungs with blood. Doctors had to open the baby's chest when she weighed only 1 pound, 3 ounces.

"When you're looking at a baby that's the size of your hand, and her heart is the size of a nickel ... it's a scary, scary day," Caughron said.

After the successful surgery, Shelley Caughron stayed in Iowa City to look after her daughter for two months. Her husband, Matt Caughron, took care of their four sons while she was away.

He said having Aebry home early was amazing, adding it was a bit nerve-racking at first.

"The staff and the doctors at the [neonatal unit] are worth every cent that they earn," he said.

Group aids students facing disabilities

New disabled-student group formed for support, education, and awareness.

By EMILY BUSSE
emily-busse@uiowa.edu

Carly Armour had never earned a grade below a C.

So when Armour, who has been profoundly deaf in both ears since birth, was getting straight Fs by her junior year of college, she knew something was wrong.

According to her, it was discrimination.

Her small Georgia college had denied her a stenographer who would add "captions" to her classes, claiming it was beyond their "reasonable accommodations," she said. After taking her case to court, Armour transferred to the University of Georgia, where she formed a support group for students with disabilities, making it her mission to reduce discrimination.

Now she's bringing it to the UI.

"Throughout my whole life I've faced discrimination," said Armour, the webmaster for the UI Council on Disability Awareness. "I'm very passionate about making sure no one else has to. I know I can't stop it, but I want to reduce it."

This year, Armour started a group for UI students with disabilities to meet once a month and talk about their everyday life — hardships, medications, and ways to make the campus more disabled-friendly. The group's second meeting is today at 1 p.m. in the Blank Honors Center.

Chris Brus, the director of UI Women in Science and Engineering, will share her experiences as a college student with ADD and learning disabilities with those at today's meeting. Brus said she sees the group as an opportunity for community.

"It's great to have a group of people where you're not always trying to explain yourself," she said. "There's a baseline of understanding or at least acceptance that allows you not to have to actively filter everything you say or do. That's exhausting."

In 2008, 642 students registered with UI Student Disability Services, the most recent year available. Both the University of Northern Iowa — which has 230 disabled students — and Iowa State University have groups similar to the one Armour started in September.

But when Armour arrived at the UI a year ago, she was surprised one didn't already exist.

After sitting down with UI junior Ryan Bruner, the UI Student Government senator for disabled students, Armour said the need for a group was obvious. Though it has started small, the members said they hope the group will become an officially recognized student organization this year.

Bruner, also a co-head of the group, said he would have benefited from the organization when he arrived as a freshman with epilepsy.

"I want freshmen to know that when they come to the UI and they have disabilities, they're not going to be stuck in the corner," he said. "They're going to have a place to go."

While fewer than 20 people turned out for the first meeting, members said they're confident it will continue to grow. While waiting to receive student organization funding, the group is getting financial support from the Council on Disability Awareness for food at the meetings.

But Armour's life partner, Jan Warren, knows the work isn't over.

"[Armour's] ambitious and determined whether for her own needs or helping other people," Warren said. "This won't be the last thing you hear about her."

The group's other co-head, UI senior Teresa Ball, said she hopes their presence on campus will be just as lasting.

"There's some 300 groups on campus, but some things come and go," she said. "Disabilities are never going to go away."

U of California approves big fee hikes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The governing board of the University of California approved a $2,500 student-fee increase Thursday after two days of tense campus protests across the state.

The vote by the Board of Regents in a windowless University of California-Los Angeles meeting room took place as the drone of protesters could be heard from a plaza outside. Scores of police in riot gear guarded the building.

The 32 percent increase will push the cost of an undergraduate education at California's premier public schools to more than $10,000 a year by next fall, about triple the cost of a decade ago. The fees, the equivalent of tuition, do not include the cost of housing, board and books.

"Our hand has been forced," California President Mark Yudof told reporters after the vote. "When you don't have any money, you don't have any money."

Board members said the 229,000-student system had been whipsawed by years of state budget cuts, leaving no option other than turning to students' wallets. Yudof has said the 10-campus system needs a $913 million increase in state funding next year, in addition to higher student fees.

State Assembly Speaker Karen Bass, a Democrat who sits on the board, said she would push for higher taxes, possibly on higher-income residents, to finance education. The state could face $20 billion shortfalls during each of the next five years.

CASH

Cash has doled out a handful so far this month. It takes a certain type of personality to undertake foot patrol on a busy weekend night, Campbell says. And Cash, a police officer for nine years, is a serious example of those who watch over the deluge.

The Clear Lake, Iowa, native began working the third shift for the Iowa City police after he transferred from the Muscatine force in 2006. His shift begins at 11 p.m. and ends at 7 a.m., so he gets to observe swarms of bar patrons making their way to and from downtown. Cash prefers the night shift, but not because he takes pleasure in watching those underage drop drinks; it allows him to see his 2- and 4-year-old sons during the day.

"If I worked evenings," he says, "I'd completely miss them." He tucks them in before going to work at night and picks them up from daycare the next afternoon.

Emerging on the upper level, Cash spots his first victim walking to the dance floor: a wide-eyed, scruffy-haired, scrawny guy holding a clear plastic cup of beer. Cash furrows his brow and asks the man for his ID, inspecting it with a flashlight. His instincts were right: the suspect is 19.

Cash also appreciates that the night shift sees more action than days — even if much of it is "intoxication and impairment cases" — and less paper gets pushed.

The vernacular is as much a part of the job as spotting drink droppers. Iowa has a standard of 99 verbal codes for law enforcement, from 10-1 to 10-99 — much beyond the well-known 10-4 for "affirmative" or "OK." The department also has a set of phonetic codes to spell out names or license plates, such as "N-Nora," or "X-x-ray." Meanwhile, Code 4 means the situation is under control, while Code 3 means it needs emergency response. Cash is referred to as No. 29, and his partner on this night is No. 57, Dan Roth.

Then there's slang that isn't in the books, but it's useful on foot patrol. Roth, pointing casually, says, "Bogey," alerting Cash of the pile of orange-ish vomit underfoot.

When Cash is assigned to vehicle patrol, his office is a black Ford Crown Victoria with gadgets and an Internet-accessible computer. On foot patrol, however, his office is migratory: He fills out tickets on garbage can lids and car hoods and keeps everything within reach. In his jacket, for instance, underneath his bulletproof vest, Cash keeps a pad of blank tickets and papers in a Ziplock freezer bag. His vest, the papers, a jacket, and a tool belt make his upper body appear bulky, perhaps intimidating, but it's good insulation for a chilly night, such as this one, when the temperature hovers around 40 degrees.

Iowa City police Officer Rob Cash is reflected in the trunk of a patrol car as he fills out paperwork on a man charged with stealing almost $1,000 worth of liquor from behind a bar on Nov. 14. Cash works the 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift downtown, meaning he's well-acustomed to the behavior of drunken college students.

Having taken in the first floor of the Summit, Cash walks to the rear and past the restrooms, opens an unmarked door, and ascends a back staircase. The stairs, unlike the rest of the bar, are well-lit, revealing brown-stained walls. Emerging on the upper level, Cash spots his first victim walking to the dance floor: a wide-eyed, scruffy-haired, scrawny guy holding a clear plastic cup of beer. Cash furrows his brow and asks the man for his ID, inspecting it with a flashlight. His instincts were right: the suspect is 19.

"Is there any way you could not give me a ticket?" the man asks, shifting his weight nervously.

Cash unzips his jacket and pulls out his pad. "No. The reason is because you walked up to me holding a beer. You had a purpose in coming here, and you knew what you were doing when you came out tonight."

The young man slouches his shoulders.

"I knew when I saw you, you were going to catch me," he says. "But I appreciate you being nice." This is the first of two tickets Cash and Roth dole out at the Summit on this night.

Cash responds with a tone of certainty.

"I can't say I haven't been there; I went to college once," he says. "Let me see you take off your wristbands, and you need to call it a night."

He did attend college once on the campus in the town he now patrols. While attending the UI, he also worked as a bouncer and DJ for a now-defunct bar. Cash was a pre-med major but then decided to become a police officer and transferred to the Kirkwood Community College criminal-justice program.

He has no resentment toward the drunken bar patrons, but it's clear that dealing with them all the time gets wearisome. He rolls his eyes as he relates stories of the drunks he's encountered. One woman thought he was a taxi driver and tried to get into his police car. When she got belligerent and violent, he finally let her in and gave her a ride — to jail.

Another time, on New Year's Eve, he summoned an ambulance for a woman who wore such a minuscule outfit that she started to get frostbite while waiting in line for a bar.

Once a guy got mad that Cash was giving his girlfriend a ticket and called 911, but Cash phoned dispatch and said not to send anyone. He gave the man a ticket for obstruction of emergency communication. Every weekend, he says, is "sheer repetition."

Yet, his approach remains cautious. Campbell said the officers' goal is not to write as many tickets as they can but rather to get control of the drunks before potential violence ensues.

As Cash keeps watch over the Ped Mall, he talks with other officers but doesn't make eye contact, watching for fights to spark. Every time he or his partner spots a bottle on the ground, they pick it up and throw it away.

"It can become a weapon," Cash says.

And on this night, he has to stop several men from urinating in public.

The semi-sarcastic man sums up his job description more than once during the course of the night, saying, "I gotta go baby-sit some more drunk kids."

The mood can lighten, though, if a drunk is his friend, and Cash encounters one while filling out a ticket on the hood of a police car. It's a buddy about his age who played with him for the Pearl City Rugby Club Black Bears in Muscatine. The friend puts his arm around Cash and as they joke, a smile glints across the officer's face. When the friend leaves, Cash says he once arrested the guy for starting a fight.

"The next day he called me and was like, 'What happened, what did I do?'" Cash remembers.

Now after 2 a.m., the Ped Mall has quieted. Cash gets back into the Crown Victoria and patrols downtown for a bit. Then the radio sounds: "29, can you go on over to Iowa Avenue and start clearing cars for tomorrow?"

Cash pauses. "I guess," he says.

He has to start ticketing and towing cars for a charity race in the morning. It's not an exciting task, but it's his job.

A draft of the letter explained the committee was aware fundraising is an important activity and had no issue of raising funds from grateful patients. However, the letter also stated that fundraising should be conducted without invading the privacy of patients or affecting the quality of health care they receive.

Moore said concerns with the proposal were not voiced by just the committee but "a variety of respondents."

In the original plan, proposed by UIHC and UI Foundation officials, patients would have been given a letter — written by UI Vice President of Medical Affairs Jean Robillard — asking for their consent to receive information about UIHC progress as well as solicitations for donations.

Nurses and receptionists would have been taught how to hand out the forms and collect patients' information. They would have then given the letters to patients upon their arrival for treatment.

However, the forms would not have been given to everyone. Patients with Medicaid or IowaCare, which usually cover lower-income individuals, would not have received the forms.

Sheldon Kurtz told the DI on Nov. 1 that he believed that this could lead to unequal care.

However, hospital officials told the DI that same day that doctors would be unaware of which patients received information.

Susan Shullaw, a UI Foundation senior vice president, said officials developed the process to accommodate patients who wish to give to UIHC.

"Patients often seek us out and ask how they can help, so it's important to us to make that kind of info available to patients," Shullaw said.

Shullaw noted the UI Foundation is looking at other options to raise money.

Danvin suggested putting brochures in waiting rooms and exam rooms.

"They could have a place on the website where people could sign up to receive fundraising info in specified areas," she said.

Shullaw said the UI Foundation and UIHC will keep trying to find positive ways to recruit new donors.

"We're not going to stop; we're going to continue to talk about the most appropriate ways to do it," she said.

Law dean search underway

The UI College of Law Dean Search Committee has invited five candidates to campus to interview for the position and participate in a series of town-hall meetings.

The position became vacant when Carolyn Jones, the first female in the position, announced in February she would leave for a full-time teaching and scholarship position.

Jones succeeded William Hines, who served as dean for 28 years — the longest amount of time served by a dean of a law school in the United States.

The chosen candidate will begin in the fall of 2010.

Gregory Mark, the first of the five hopefuls, visited campus Thursday and participated in a forum in which participants could ask questions. Mark serves as a professor of law and associate dean for institutional planning at Rutgers Law School.

Officials will announce the next candidate Nov. 24; all of the meetings will conclude on Dec. 14.

City Council should consider increasing the hotel tax

Hotel visits are a great way to stock up on extra bottles of shampoo, conditioner, and paper-wrapped soap bars. However, they can — and should — provide a whole lot more for our community as well.

Iowa City has long contemplated increasing revenue by raising the hotel/motel tax from 7 percent to 9 percent. Unlike the franchise fee — a tax the city seems supremely focused on passing — a hotel tax would help the city's coffers without placing an undue burden on residents.

Taking this into consideration, the city should make a strong effort to increase the hotel tax in the near future.

Connie Champion, the only city councilor who has voted against the franchise fee, said she is in favor of increasing the hotel rate. In comparison, the franchise fee would push businesses out of Iowa City “because our industries are working at minimum balances already,” she said.

Joshua Schamberger, the president of the Iowa City/Coralville Convention and Visitors Bureau, said an increase would be a boon for residents.

“It’s a fairly substantial benefit for the citizens,” he told the Editorial Board. “It would still keep Iowa City and Coralville at or below the regional average for this tax.”

Iowa City would receive an extra $214,941 if the levy were 9 percent instead of the current 7 percent, he said. That would be an additional $200,000 to spend on vital public services — all at little cost to residents. And guests would only see an average increase of $1.62. Guests at the Iowa House wouldn’t be subject to the charge.

The City Council would first have to petition the state Legislature to increase the hotel tax, because the state must approve any proposed spike in local taxes. If the Legislature OK’d the tax hike, officials would then send the request to the Johnson County Board of Supervisors, and officials could set a special election date to decide the matter.

The funds would be available no earlier than fiscal 2012. Detractors may argue that 2012 is too far in the future to contemplate such a tax hike. But it is this failure to plan ahead and produce fiscally sound budgets that has left our city in dire financial straits. Councilors need to work proactively to develop this potential revenue stream.

For Schamberger, it’s only fair that visitors chip in as well.

“Thousands and thousands of citizens come here every year, and they take advantage of our services,” he said.

In contrast, Nancy Quellhorst, the president and CEO of the Iowa City Chamber of Commerce, contends that officials should jettison the proposal.

“Although we strongly support the City Council’s commitment to public safety, the Iowa City Area Chamber of Commerce does not favor a tax,” she told the Editorial Board. “We would like public safety to be the city’s highest priority, funded by budget cuts rather than tax increases or fees.”

The Chamber of Commerce’s stance is understandable. As a pro-business group, it would be shocking if it actually supported the franchise fee or a potential hotel tax increase. But in weighing the merits of a tax hike, we must consider its effects on the community writ large, rather than the concerns of parochial interests. Increasing the hotel tax would help the overwhelming majority of residents, who rely on city services that could be cut because of lackluster revenue.

If Iowa City officials want to stall on this issue, they will only be setting us up for additional failure in the future.

We urge councilors to petition the Legislature for this increase. If implemented, it would provide the city with a much-needed cash infusion — and at a minuscule cost to residents.

Your turn. Should city councilors explore raising the hotel tax? Weigh in on dailyiowan.com.

Long live downtown IC

CHRIS CLARK
christopher-p-clark@uiowa.edu

There is a way to change the perception of Iowa City’s downtown drinking culture that I think is neglected far too often: We have the power to improve it.

There is no way to deny that drinking is one of — if not the — most popular social activities on this campus. Drinking in college symbolizes college students’ rite of passage into the real world. It’s tradition.

But although our bars bring in a significant amount of revenue, the future of our downtown is in jeopardy because of officials at the UI and City Hall.

If they were here, you know exactly what the Beastie Boys would tell us. In fact, they would be screaming it directly into Herky’s ear.

So what’s the threat? The City Council has passed two ordinances in the past year that threaten the life of our campus: the 500-foot rule and the PAULA-ratio rule.

The PAULA-ratio rule requires Iowa City Police Chief Sam

Hargadine to recommend the non-renewal of any bar’s liquor license if the police issue an average of more than one PAULA per visit. After Hargadine’s recommendation, the council votes to refuse renewal of the license, and the bar owners (so far) then appeal to the Iowa Alcoholic Beverages Division. (Note: If the council votes to deny renewal, that DOES NOT mean the establishment may no longer serve alcohol.)

The 500-foot rule comes into the picture if a bar is stripped of its license. If a downtown establishment has its license revoked and the building goes without a liquor license for a year, it cannot regain a liquor license. It will never be a bar again because the rule restricts bars from opening within 500 feet of another.

The PAULA ratio is not a solution to the root problem of over-consumption and violence. It’s a way to force bars either to close or to turn 21-only. These ordinances have the power to accomplish the 21-ordinance and more.

The situation is urgent. The students have a reputation within the local community of being ignorant on the issues. Recently, Mike Porter, owner of One-Eyed Jakes, Summit, and Vito’s, filed a lawsuit against the city, contending that the PAULA ratio is too vague and arbitrary. Summit’s PAULA ratio is the highest in the city, but the bar is also one of the largest. The PAULA ratio is assessed the same way, regardless of its capacity.

While Porter said the most influential way for students to help the cause would have been to vote in the City Council election earlier this month, he thinks they can still have a voice.

“I’m not saying [students] should be overly interested in politics,” he said. “If they don’t like what’s going on or if there are issues out there that affect them, call the city councilors and let them know what their opinions are. The city councilors need to hear their opinions.”

Although the city is enforcing misguided alcohol policies, students should recognize that we are gaining a reputation for being out-of-control crazies — and we need to make an effort to act more responsibly.

Keep drinking and partying downtown, but make a concerted effort to avoid fights. Or if that’s too hard, try having fewer drinks so you don’t get to that point. Look out for the safety of others. Both Iowa City and UI police are understaffed and are facing massive budget shortfalls. They are overworked and aren’t properly compensated for it. Take a little bit of the responsibility off of them, and take it upon yourself. It will be a good thing for everyone.

So go ahead and fight — just don’t fight each other.

Fight for your right to party. ■

The importance of World Toilet Day

Thursday was World Toilet Day. While this little-recognized day might at first seem comical, it really is no laughing matter. There are plenty of statistics to cite about the global lack of adequate sanitation. Perhaps the most daunting is that an estimated 2.5 billion people — more than 40 percent of the global population — do not have access to basic sanitation, according to the World Bank.

Sanitation issues disproportionately affect rural populations in underdeveloped countries, where rural sanitation coverage is less than half that of urban areas. Diarrheal disease linked to fecal contamination of drinking water is often widespread in these areas and is one of the leading causes of death for children under 5 years of age.

World Toilet Day provides two opportunities: The first is to increase awareness of global sanitation deficiencies, and the second is to appreciate places with modern sanitation coverage. Do not take for granted the hygiene, privacy, convenience, and dignity that on all other days are simply an assumed part of your bathroom experience.

Sheriff’s letter was political hackery

As a resident of North Liberty and Johnson County, it is certainly refreshing to see Johnson County Sheriff Lonny Pulkrabek shirking his duties as the county’s top elected law officer. In regards to his Nov. 17 letter in The Daily Iowan, I did not realize that one of the sheriff’s duties was to question the rights of the citizens of Johnson County — that is, the right to call a special election after the retirement or passing of a county supervisor.

The office of sheriff, no matter what county, should concern itself with enforcement of laws and the protection of the citizenry and not become the office of a political hack. Pulkrabek needs to reassess his priorities and the priorities of his office and stick to the job he was elected to do.

Political hackery has no place in the Johnson County Sheriff’s Office. If Pulkrabek feels he needs to attack citizens based on their political leanings, perhaps he should resign his office and become more actively involved with the Johnson County Democrats. However, I am certain that the pay grade is significantly less than that of sheriff.

On Thanksgiving, recognize the contributions of Native Americans

By JACKI RAND

In 1789, President George Washington issued a Thanksgiving decree ordering a of national observance Nov. 26. The tableau entrenched in the American imagination of feasting pilgrims and compassionate New England Indians who saved newcomers from starvation is absent from the executive proclamation. Rather, Washington, like others before him, asked that Americans “[acknowledge] with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness.” The former speculator of Indian lands and (Iroquois) “town destroyer” continued, supplicating God “to protect and guide all Sovereigns and Nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us) and to bless them with good government, peace, and concord.” The referenced Sovereigns and Nations are unknown, but his actions as colonial leader and as president tell us he did not mean tribal nations.

We know that Indians and newcomers, or “visitors” as one elderly Northwest Coast Indian woman calls non-Natives, shared meals. When not feasting, however, colonizers — Spanish, French, English, other Europeans, and finally the United States — in the name of the Doctrine of Discovery, papal legal reasoning, and Manifest Destiny carried out inhumane acts of violence against scores of Indian people, villages, and tribes.

The Doctrine of Discovery imposed a kind of order on the parceling of Others’ lands during the discovery era. Native resistance was met with swift and violent death, deceptive paper signings, and vague explanations about God’s will. But the Doctrine remains the underlying principle that governs U.S. policies toward Indian tribes today, and its tenets have shaped persistent American attitudes and actions toward Native people.

Non-Natives frequently interpret Native behavior toward the colonizers from 1492 to the present as “naïve.” Why would Native people share their knowledge with intruders when it would only ensure their survival? The naïve assumption belies the difference between us and them. Native social values then and now are centered on a view of humanity, the natural world, and the spiritual realm as a whole.

This is not the distorted talk of new age-ism or the garbled Indian-speak of faux sweat lodge profit-makers and cultural appropriators. Native social values, based on an alternate calculation, have always been simply counterintuitive to a capitalist mind. The “kindness” of Native nations, sovereign then and sovereign today, not to mention their lands, rivers, minerals, timber, and other resources — for which they received virtually nothing — are the original source of United States “greatness.” Theft and exploitation of indigenous resources and labor, human-rights violations, and commodified African bodies, without which there would be no American ingenuity, created the big boost to U.S. world domination.

This Thanksgiving, I exhort Americans to honor their first president’s decree with petitions to the government of his and other founders’ creation “to protect and guide all Sovereigns and Nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us) and to bless them with good government, peace, and concord.” Recognize our treaties, humanity, and agency in your ancestors’ survival. Absent that, we will continue to meet you, treaties in hand, in the courts of the land.

Hy-Vee brand frozen French Fried Potatoes received a NuVal score of 13 out of 100 at the Waterfront Hy-Vee on Thursday. Hy-Vee is at present the only grocery chain in the Midwest to use the scoring system.

Nutrition on the go

By JOSIE JONES
josie-jones@uiowa.edu

Imagine a world without children crying in a shopping cart as they wait for their mothers to choose a healthy kids' cereal, or a world without nutrition facts and confusing labels, or even a world in which a grocery store provides helpful tips to guide nutritious customers to a healthier lifestyle.

Enter NuVal — a new nutrition scoring system.

"[NuVal] is independent and based on science," said Kym Wroble, the nutritionist at the Waterfront Hy-Vee. "It's not from a specific company, so there is no alternative motive."

NuVal is composed of 30 basic nutrients, some of which are favorable, such as fiber and vitamins, while others are "bad," such as sodium and trans fat. The nutrients are placed into an algorithm which results in a score between one and 100 — the higher the number, the higher the nutritional value.

"It's used to help consumers make more educated decisions," Wroble said. "It's quick and easy."

NuVal is based on overall nutrition — it isn't geared toward any specific diet or health concern. Developed over five years by system visionary Dr. David Katz and a team of nutritionists and physicians, NuVal's administrative panel uses the nutrition-facts label and list of ingredients to determine the recipe of a product. The recipe will help to determine the percentage of certain nutrients within in a product.

The presence or absence of what nutrients are in a food can affect the score. NuVal also takes main American health concerns, such as high cholesterol, and weighs them heavily in the scoring.

Hy-Vee is the only Midwest grocery chain utilizing the NuVal system. Wroble said there are approximately 16,800 products scored at Hy-Vee stores.

Items such as cereal, chips, canned fruits and vegetables, ice cream, and frozen pizza all have scores. The scores help to identify which products are healthier.

"The numbers don't lie," Wroble said.

Eventually, all food products will be scored with the exception of dietary supplements and alcohol. NuVal scores will be re-evaluated every two years.

Amy A'Hearn, a dietitian at UI Student Health Service, said she uses the NuVal system to compare cereals when in a hurry.

"It is nice to have something quick and easy to look at to help make healthful choices," she said.

A product's score can be found inside the pentagon-shaped NuVal logo displayed on both price tags and shelf sale fliers.

Although price isn't taken into consideration when calculating a NuVal score, Wroble noted that the customer can use price as a factor when deciding between two similarly nutritious products.

A'Hearn said she believes NuVal is a beneficial tool for everyone, especially college students who are busy and may not have enough time to compare nutrition labels before purchasing certain foods. College may also be the first time students have shopped for groceries on their own.

"The NuVal system can help guide them in making healthy choices," A'Hearn said.

Wroble agreed, noting that small changes in all food categories will influence a consumer's health.

"Over time, those changes are going to add up," Wroble said. "It will affect people and help them live healthier, even when they're in a hurry."

Craft heads to Carver

Artistry will replace athleticism in Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Nov. 22.

Shoppers and craftsmen of all varieties will flock to the arena's concourse at 9 a.m. for the Annual Fall Arts and Crafts show.

But according to promoter Tom Callahan, this is no "mom-and-pop sock knitting show."

"You'd be surprised at what you can find," he said. "It's not what a lot of people think it's going to be. There's a lot of talent and skill involved."

Among the featured works are hand-crafted jewelry, oak furniture, candles, food products, and clothing, as well as Hawkeye-theme objects to appeal to the Iowa City crowd.

Callahan started promoting arts and craft shows 20 years ago after managing the fairgrounds in Maquoketa, Iowa, a job that involved contact with other promoters and advertisers. When the Northern Iowa graduate decided to put together his first show at the UNI-Dome, it was a wild success. More than 16,000 people attended the bazaar to view and purchase from 390 vendors.

Since his "show biz" beginnings, Callahan said crowds have subsided a bit because of what he believes is interest in cheap, mass-imported crafts available at some retail stores.

"It's hard to compete with those prices," he said. "But they're not as well-made. People are always looking to save money, and that has hurt the craft-show business."

Many vendors, however, say Callahan's events and similar shows serve as a crucial platform for business development, as well as to form customer loyalty.

Jennifer Wilkins, who runs Iowa City's Downstairs Designs out of her home, sells linen-based wares in around 10 craft events each year, in addition to selling online and at farmers' markets. Through craft shows, she has been able to establish close connections with customers and other vendors.

"For customers, there is a real interest in buying directly from the makers," she said. "For me as a business person, it's an excellent way to get immediate feedback ... My customers always come up with far more creative ideas and uses than I do."

Wilkins said she has gained regular customers over her five years of participating in craft shows, something to which online shopping and whole-sale business doesn't necessarily lend itself.

"I've gotten to watch some kids grow up, from pregnancy to kindergarten," she said. "With shows like this, you get to form a real community with both the vendors and the customers."

Her sales also benefit from the expos. While her popular online and whole-sale items are geared toward adults, her biggest seller are chalkboard mats for children, which she sells en masse at the fairs.

Like Wilkins, veteran craftsman Rita Douglas said she loves the craft expo experience — in fact, she has been peddling her wares at shows since 1985. The Iowa City resident owns the Back Door Cat, a jewelry and clothing business she runs out of her home and through a craft mall in Bronson, Mo.

When: 9 a.m. Nov. 22

Douglas said the shows she has been to lately have not only been well-attended, they have also sold well, which she attributes to the desire for quality holiday gifts.

"Hand-mades" really stand the test of time," she said. "I think people are going back to the grass roots and not to the electronic things that you can find in any store."

Douglas attends approximately 20 shows a year around the Midwest, in which she sells button jewelry, yarn scarves, and cat-theme clothing. As a frequent vendor, she has seen some of the most out-of-the-box items on the market.

"I bought a flute that a gentleman had formed into the shape of a bird," the former music teacher said. "That was probably the most unusual item that I had ever seen."

Winfrey to announce show will end in 2011

CHICAGO (AP) — "The Oprah Winfrey Show," an iconic broadcast that grew from a local Chicago talk show into the foundation of a multibillion-dollar media empire, will end its run in 2011 after 25 seasons on the air, Winfrey's production company said Thursday night.

Winfrey, who became one of the most powerful women in entertainment from a seat on the couch of her set in Chicago's West Loop neighborhood, plans to announce the final date for her show during a live broadcast today, Harpo Productions Inc. said.

A Harpo spokeswoman declined to comment Thursday on Winfrey's future plans except to say that "The Oprah Winfrey Show" will not be transferred to cable television.

Winfrey is widely expected to start up a new talk show on OWN: The Oprah Winfrey Network, a much-delayed joint venture with Discovery Communications Inc. that is expected to debut in 2011. OWN is to replace the Discovery Health Channel, and it will debut in some 70 million homes.

CBS Television Distribution, which distributes "The Oprah Winfrey Show" to more than 200 markets blanketing the United States, held out hope that it could continue doing business with Winfrey.

The loss of "The Oprah Winfrey Show" would be a blow to CBS Corp. because it earns a percentage of hefty licensing fees.

Chuck Ford dances in front of the Big Ass Turkey Leg stand before the Iowa/Northwestern football game on Nov. 7. Ford has been serving his turkey legs for 13 years and has never missed a game. Ford said that though he normally doesn't make a profit, the people and atmosphere keep him motivated.

The legend of the turkey legs

Local legend has provided game-day tradition for 13 years.

By JORDAN FRIES

Hard-core Hawkeye tailgaters have met Chuck Ford — they just may not know it.

He's the booming voice on the megaphone, harassing passersby, sitting atop his 4-foot stool, and watching the early morning tailgate scene unfold.

"Get your Big Ass Turkey legs. Get 'em while they're hot," Ford shouts as Hawkeye fans shuffle past his tent. "You got the big ass, I got the turkey leg."

Nobody is immune from the playful jabs, Ford said.

By 6 a.m., Ford, the beloved baron of the "Big Ass Turkey Leg," is busy erecting a tent and watching his 5-cook crew fire up the charcoal grill. By 9 a.m., the Melrose Avenue tailgating celebrity is "in character," ready for the streams of Black and Gold faithful flocking toward the stadium gates — always walking right past him.

Ford — one of roughly 30 game-day vendors — has been serving his famous turkey legs for 13 years. It takes him and his crew nearly two hours to slowly roast all the piles of meat.

After the 67-year-old slathers the first batch of turkey legs with barbecue sauce, Ford clutches his megaphone and begins to work as smoke billows from the meat.

"I love bantering with all of the fans. These people are my family," Ford said. "I inherited them all. I especially love the kids; I make a lot of little buddies this way."

The fans are happy to return the favor.

game-day experience just wouldn't be the same without Ford, who claims to know 90 percent of his patrons and "all of the women."

"Chuck Ford is undeniably the pulse of the city," said Andrews, who comes back for two or three games a year. "He's an old-fashioned character who chats with everyone, and he always gives me an update on what's occurring at the UI. Seeing him barking on that microphone, getting people tuned up, really adds to the Kinnick atmosphere."

It's that love for the people that makes Ford so popular, according to Dewy Stewart, who has been cooking the turkey legs with Ford since 1996. Stewart, who always brings wife Sandy and their sons, Josh and Luke, (they man the grill), said he wouldn't change a thing about his fall Saturdays.

"We just create a fun atmosphere, with music, free margaritas, and all of the tourists excited to see us," he said, taking a break from roasting. "Nobody has as much fun as we do, and that's good, because there's no money in this."

The pair is not even likely to break even on any given Saturday. But on a busy day — and with a big rival team in town — they might make about $100 if

"The crux of the whole thing is the fun itself with the fans," Ford said, pointing toward one of his prized $8 slabs of meat. "The turkey leg is just part of the presentation. If I had it any better, there'd be two of me."

After the game clock shifts to zero, and as Hawkeye fans begin to file from the stadium gates, Ford remains in his customary stool. Though the contest is over, Ford is still having fun. Just listen for the sound of his megaphone.

Native association making comeback

Thirty-three-year-old student organization hopes to generate more interest.

Theresa Heitz shuffled continually back and forth from the kitchen to the long, family-styled table sitting in the middle of the room.

The UI junior, obviously excited, had her hands full with dishes of traditional Native American food.

As the small dining room of the Latino Native American Cultural Center began to fill with people Thursday night, Heitz said she was eager to unveil the food brought by students for a potluck dinner celebrating Native American Heritage Month.

"I brought waryati, a dessert made with rye bread," Heitz said. "It's a traditional treat from the Sioux tribe."

Heitz, a co-president of the UI American Indian Student Association, was one of almost 40 students who attended Thursday's potluck dinner. Heitz said the association — which started in 1976 — puts together a potluck each week, but because the end of Native American Heritage Month coincided with Thanksgiving, they decided to make this week's event more special.

"This is a fantastic way to celebrate our culture with food from the various tribes and reservations," Heitz said.

Latino students joined with Native Americans in the meal, and two German exchange students arrived with cultural dishes of their own. Luisa Orticelli, the manager of the Latino Native American Cultural Center, said the bond among different ethnicities is the most rewarding aspect of the events.

"There is a strong tie in this center between Latinos and Native Americans," Orticelli said. "The students do a great job of supporting each other and going to each other's events. These guys are best friends, and there's no who's who of race."

Heitz emphasized the importance of the cultural center in helping students adjust. She said many young Native Americans, who make up the smallest minority group on campus, at about 120 people, come from reservations in such far-off states as Arizona and New Mexico.

"You just don't see a strong Native presence on the UI campus," Heitz said.

Orriena Snyder, also co-president of the association, iterated the importance of having a "home away from home." The UI sophomore said she basically grew up in the center. "My parents were here from 1989-1998, and my mom would study here all the time when I was with her," Snyder said. "As co-president of [the American Indian Association], I'm just giving back to an important part of my childhood."

One of the ways Snyder is trying to do that is through organizing the Native American Powwow, a traditional cultural celebration that involves a dance competition and allows different tribes to gather together.

Snyder's parents helped organize the original UI Powwow in Carver-Hawkeye Arena in the 1980s, which was the largest student event on campus until Dance Marathon.

Starting in 2004, the event took a four-year hiatus before being resurrected at the IMU Main Lounge last year. The two-day event will be held at the Recreation Building this year during the second week of April.

"I want to help return the [American Indian Association] to its former glory," Snyder said. "It's important to help raise awareness that we have these minority groups on campus."

JURY

Grand-jury proceedings are kept sealed, but both individuals wrote on their blogs that they believed the subpoenas were related to the UI break-in.

It is the first such indictment related to the incident.

Seashore Hall, which contains Spence Labs, was closed for several weeks after four masked individuals obtained access to the labs with key cards. Responders found 30 computers and three offices damaged, as well as 400 rodents missing.

HAZMAT crews were called in to clean up chemical spills.

The Animal Liberation Front — a national animal-rights group — claimed responsibility in an e-mail message shortly after.

In 2004, several researchers and UI administration expressed outrage over the incident.

"This was not a political act or an act of civil disobedience. It was a felony crime and deserves nothing but condemnation," David Skorton, Michael Hogan, and William Decker — then the president, provost, and vice president for Research, respectively — wrote in a letter published in The Daily Iowan on Dec. 9, 2004.

All three have since left the UI and could not be reached for comment.

But Animal Liberation Front spokesman Jerry Vlasak condemned the investigation into the incident itself, calling it a "fishing expedition" five years after the fact.

"The fact they're using a grand jury to gather information generally speaks to the fact they don't have any credible evidence," he said.

That argument is a common one among opponents to grand juries, who fear they can be used to gather information rather than present evidence, and both Feldman and DeMuth have said they oppose the use of such a body.

The grand jury is used by federal prosecutors to present the charges and obtain indictments against accused individuals.

Other activists throughout the Midwest have set up websites and Twitter accounts in support of DeMuth and Feldman. One message asks the public to inundate the prosecutor's office with phone calls.

Why I am still pissed about the 9-2 Iowa Hawkeye football team

- Because unlike the basketball team, the football racked up nine straight wins before dropping two in a row.
- Because Iowa is playing in January AGAIN, whereas the Gophers are hoping they won't have to go to sunny Detroit.
- Because Iowa is a state stereotyped as wholesome, whereas Minnesota is stereotyped as South Canada.
- Because Minnesota's futility against Iowa necessitated Iowans to invent the collapsible goal posts.
 - Minnesota lost to Wisconsin. IOWA BEAT WISCONSIN.
 - Minnesota lost to Penn State? IOWA BEAT PENN STATE. AT PENN STATE.
 - Minnesota lost to Ohio State? IOWA BEAT PENN STATE. AT PENN STATE.
- Because Iowans don't feel the need to put roller coasters in their shopping malls. (That's what ice rinks are for.)
- Iowa's mascot inspires pride. Minnesota's mascot inspires a trip to the orthodontist.
- Because the last good coach to come from Minnesota was Hayden Fox.
- Because the Hawkeyes don't need to append precious metals to their name simply to create the illusion of being valuable.
- Because "Stanzi the Manzi" and "Vandenberg the Mandenberg" both sound better than "Weber the Manber." (Pig.)
- Because it's Minnesota.

- Andrew R. Juhl thanks his friend Erik J. for help with today's Ledge.

ARIES March 21-April 19 Financial transactions will lead to good fortune. Focus on contracts, investments, saving, and budgeting to build your assets. Don't allow your emotions to interfere with your professional decisions.

TAURUS April 20-May 20 You are being tugged in too many directions. You have so much going for you that you must stop and realize what's best for you. Learn from past lessons that if you don't take care of your own matters first, you will lose out.

GEMINI May 21-June 20 You'll be drawn to people who are aggressive and playful who will spark enthusiasm in you and push you to finish what you start. Set your mind on whatever needs to be done, and see where it leads. If you do a good job and are forthright, you'll end up with benefits you weren't expecting.

CANCER June 21-July 22 Your emotions will take over, causing problems when you need to make a personal decision. Meddling in other people's affairs will lead to repercussions. Take care of your own needs. Be careful while traveling.

LEO July 23-Aug. 22 Your ability to get others to listen to what you have to say will ensure that you get what you want and when. Don't let anything stand in the way of what you should be doing. There is no time to waste.

VIRGO Aug. 23-Sept. 22 Sticking around home will lead to personal problems, leaving you uncertain and questioning your motives. Through conversations with new people you meet, you will learn something about yourself and what you want.

LIBRA Sept. 23-Oct. 22 Keep a lid on the way you feel. You won't express yourself well emotionally. You aren't likely to win a disagreement, and you will probably end up giving in just to keep the peace.

SCORPIO Oct. 23-Nov. 21 Money can be made, changes to your home and personal life incorporated, and new friendships or business partnerships put into play. Let go of the past. It will slow you down, hold you back, or confuse you.

SAGITTARIUS Nov. 22-Dec. 21 Secret matters will surprise you, and the thought of having to juggle quickly will be intimidating. Reassess your situation, and you will realize what you want to hold on to and what you can part with.

CAPRICORN Dec. 22-Jan. 19 Emotional confusion will set in if you mix business with pleasure. Don't be afraid to delegate a little in order to get what you want. With someone's help, it will be easier to steady yourself and make a financial or professional move.

AQUARIUS Jan. 20-Feb. 18 Put your finest effort into something you know will please the people who care about you. Your success will give you the confidence to do more. A renewed look at your life and where you see yourself heading should give you increased incentive.

PISCES Feb. 19-March 20 The rewards for kindness, generosity, and genuine help will be recognized and will draw the attention of someone who can help you. A change in your status or your financial affairs is looking good. Love is apparent, but so are secret affairs. Tread carefully.

Swimmers hold 1st invitational in years

The Iowa men's swimming team faces four squads in the first-ever Hawkeye Invitational in the Field House today.

By PATRICK RAFFERTY
patrick-rafferty@uiowa.edu

The Iowa men's swimming team will host the Hawkeye Invitational this weekend, beginning today at 11 a.m.

Iowa head coach Marc Long said he doesn't remember the last time the Hawkeyes hosted an event such as this.

Formerly, the men's swimming team hosted the Iowa Invitational every year, but the event cut into the team's training. Usually during this time of year, the Hawkeyes can be found preparing for the championship season.

However, with this year being the last season Iowa will swim in the Field House, Long said, he planned the event in order to help his squad train for the national championships.

"We wanted this invitational to be able to host something in the Field House and get an opportunity to swim a championship-style event," Long said. "We haven't had an invitational in years from when I looked back. It's something we wanted to have. It's nice to be able to have an invitational that represents Iowa."

The Hawkeyes will host South Dakota State, Truman State, and Western Illinois. Iowa is no stranger to Truman State.

Earlier in the season, the Hawkeyes traveled to Kirksville, Mo., to take on the Bulldogs and won 27 of the 28 events.

"These teams are coming in here ready," Long said. "It's not a big field in terms of the number of swimmers, but we expect some good racing. It's preliminary/finals, so it's a great format."

Sophomore swimmer Paul Gordon said even with the Hawkeyes' strong performance in the previous meet, Truman State will have extra motivation.

"We know they're going to have guys who are going to be fully rested, who are going to their national cuts," Gordon said. "They're going to bring everything they have, so we're going to have to bring everything we have. It's important for us because we want to swim fast and see our times up there."

Recently, the Hawkeyes have also been resting for the meet. Gordon said the Hawkeye Invitational is a chance for the team and the coaches to see what improvements need to be made.

The meet will be similar to a championship-style meet with preliminary swimming in the morning and later heats for those who qualify. The top eight swimmers will move on to the championship heat, while the rest will be divided into a consolation and a bonus heat.

Gordon said Iowa is primed for a good meet.

"I think we've seen some good racing, and we got a lot of spirit right now. We're really excited about this season," Gordon said. "We want to go prove ourselves now and get some good times out there to see what we can build on these next few months and get ready for the rest of the year."

One Hawkeye swimmer's family will be torn between teams. Junior Sean Hagan has a brother who swam for the Bulldogs.

"I almost went to Truman State myself, too," Hagan said. "But I came here on a recruiting trip, and I loved it, so I decided to come here instead. So it's always kind of a family feud when we swim against Truman State. It's kind of fun, but I'm glad I came here."

Staying abreast of technique

A story with an improbable outcome is all too familiar to Iowa junior swimmer Sean Hagan.

By PATRICK RAFFERTY
patrick-rafferty@uiowa.edu

Imagine a student-athlete arriving to college needing to fit into a new role.

Now imagine having to switch to the most difficult position in the sport, one that requires years of refined technique and an increased attention to detail.

This story is all too familiar to junior swimmer Sean Hagan.

"I didn't even come to college as a breaststroker," he said. "I swam it on a relay in high school, and they thought it looked good. Then [the Iowa coaches] pretty much trained me at it. I became a breaststroker here."

When he swam for Boone High School, college coaches noticed Hagan's freestyle and relay racing. But after arriving at Iowa, he was asked to concentrate on the new stroke.

Last season, he led Iowa in the breaststroke at the Big Ten championships, and his best times in the 100 breast (54.93) and 200 breast (159.89), rank fourth on the school's all-time list.

The breaststroke is the only stroke in which a swimmer uses his legs more than his arms. The perfect stroke requires an immense amount of strength and timing.

"Breaststroke is probably one of the most picky strokes," Hagan said. "You have to have the technique down to get it right. If you're off a little bit, you can throw the whole stroke off. It takes a lot of practice and lot of working on technique to nail it."

Iowa head coach Marc Long said strength and technique is everything in swimming. However, applying that strength to the technique is what separates the great swimmers from the mediocre ones, he said. The sixth-year headman also noted how breaststrokers are different from the rest of the team.

"They tend to be our most studious swimmers as far as the actual sport," Long said. "They'll study their event, and for some reason, it attracts that type of mentality, and it does take a lot of technical work.

"We have a saying as coaches: The breaststrokers are a little bit different. I'm not sure if he falls in that category but for some reason it's a different mentality."

Hagan, an academic All-Big Ten honoree last season, agreed with Long.

"Swimming is a hard sport, and you have to put a lot of time into it," he said. "You have to be thinking all of the time and make sure everything is correct while you are swimming your technique. I think that applies to school, too."

Iowa assistant coach Kirk Hampleman, who works with Hagan on his stroke regularly, said the junior is a tremendous competitor.

Hampleman credits Hagan's success to the swimmer's ability. Despite swimming the breaststroke for only a short time, Hagan has seen his 100 time drop by more than six seconds since arriving on campus.

'Moving' is her middle name

Gabby Tinner has lived in around a dozen cities, and now, she speaks five languages and plays defender for the Iowa soccer team.

By ROBBIE LEHMAN
robbie-lehman@uiowa.edu

Gabby Tinner has called many places home, so it is no coincidence that she plays the "world's game."

She may be a sophomore defender for the Iowa soccer team, but that doesn't begin to tell her story. The road she took to come to Iowa City wasn't exactly a straight one.

"Actually, Iowa is really random," she said.

Her biography on Hawkeyesports.com says she hails from Quantico, Va., but that's not exactly true. She's from all over.

Her father is a lieutenant colonel in the Marines, so her family moved more than a dozen times during her childhood.

She squinted as she tried to recall all the places she's lived: Virginia (twice), North Carolina (twice), Memphis, Tenn., Mountain View and San Diego, Calif., Plano, Irving, and Carrollton, Texas, and a six-month stay in Stuttgart, Germany, when she was 13.

There's a story behind each city — just not enough time to tell them.

"It was exciting," she said. "I met a lot of friends. I have a lot of friends all over the place now. I moved at not always the best times, though."

Tinner, a history major, went to two "very different" high schools on opposite coasts in San Diego and Quantico, Va. She played soccer at each stop, the one constant she had.

"Playing soccer was a big

Iowa soccer player Gabby Tinner sits in the living room of her Delta Zeta sorority house on Nov. 11. During her childhood, she lived in around a dozen different locations, because her father is a lieutenant colonel in the Marines.

part of it," she said. "My coaches would make sure I had teams there, so it was always a good shoo-in for friends."

Even so, one of her Iowa teammates, Kelsey Sandon, from Urbandale, Iowa, cannot imagine living such an adventurous life.

"I think it would be really hard to adjust to new schools all the time," Sandon said. "It's not easy to fit in in high school — people already have their social groups. [Gabby is] outgoing and doesn't care what people think. She does fine, considering her personality."

Tinner's teammates also know about her obsession with Harry Potter books and movies, and she'll gladly talk about how she coordinates a pink phone, shoes, and sunglasses with the pink moped she drives around town.

There are perks to being well-traveled.

Tinner, a huge Dallas

Cowboy fan from her time in Texas, where her father is from, speaks four languages besides English. She's proficient in Spanish after speaking it fluently as a child — her mother is Latina. She also picked up German, French, and Italian when she lived overseas.

After moving from California to Virginia, she landed on the No. 1 team in the state, No. 7 in the nation. Her former coaches talked to other coaches in the areas she moved to, keeping her name fresh in the soccer world — which, she opined, is actually "pretty small."

When it was time to take her game to college, Iowa head coach Ron Rainey swooped in to score Tinner after she turned down Arkansas State and several D.C.-area schools. He has seen her game and personality evolve in her two years with the program.

"Gabby's travel background has given her the chance to be exposed to soccer in different places in the country," Rainey said.

Tinner saw action for the Hawkeyes in one game this year, a 3-0 home win over Northern Iowa. A case of plantar fasciitis limited her at times, but she never got down. Someone who has experienced as much as she has is able to overcome tough times.

Some might think that moving around would also cause Tinner to not become involved in a city that is just the next stop on her lifelong road trip. But she has welcomed everything about Iowa City and the university. In addition to soccer, she is a member of the Delta Zeta sorority.

Living a Midwestern state was strange for her at first. For instance, being in Iowa City is the first time in her life, at least in this country, that she has lived north of the Mason-Dixon line.

"I'm a hard-core Southerner," she said. "I've always believed in Southern beliefs and was raised that way. ... A lot of people here have that Southern hospitality even though it's not in the South."

She will call Iowa City home for the next two years; in the meantime, she said, she practically lives at Target. "I love Iowa," Tinner said. "I think Iowa is a really great place, especially Iowa City, for transitioning into the real world and into being an adult. I think it's a really good place for that."

Favre's Favorites and Loud and Slow play an intramural dodge ball game in the Field House on Thursday. Favre's Favorites won the game, 10-1.

Favre takes down dodge-ball match

Favre's Favorites made quick work of Loud and Slow Thursday night.

By MITCH SMITH
mitchell-e-smith@uiowa.edu

Favre not only excels in football, but dodge ball as well.

In the Field House on Thursday, Favre's Favorites, the All-University intramural flag-football champion, defeated Loud and Slow, 10-1.

Intramural dodge ball is a three-on-three event played with three balls. The first team to 10 wins is declared the winner, with the victor of each match starting the next one with two dodge balls.

The event has no referees, leaving the two squads to make judgment calls themselves. Despite not having officials, there were no arguments regarding any calls.

Extremely fast-paced, each contest lasted no longer than a couple of minutes. Anyone who decided to go to the bathroom would miss at least one or two matches.

Favre's Favorites defeated Loud and Slow in under a half hour.

The Loud and Slow players appeared shocked after the game, unsure of the massacre that had just happened.

"I feel that we battled hard," Loud and Slow player Cole Carrigan said. "They were just too tough."

Favre's Favorites is made up of fifth-year seniors Nick McCoy and Derek "White Chocolate" Johnson, and seniors A.J. Palash and Jed Seward.

This is not a true underdog story, though. Favre's Favorites was the odds-on favorite to win.

"We've got plenty of experience playing dodge ball," McCoy said. "It just feels awesome to conquer another team by hitting them with a ball."

He won intramural dodge ball three consecutive years at the beginning of his college career, and Johnson won the event last year as a member of Off Dan Whalen.

With the games being played on a cramped racquetball court, it appears the only strategy is to aimlessly whip the ball at opposing players.

But Johnson said that isn't the case.

"The main strategy is you don't want to be the one to throw the ball first, especially if you only have one ball," he said. "If you make the other team throw it first, then it leaves the thrower open to being hit, and you can end up with another ball."

The losing squad's name best described its play during the game. The sound of dodge balls hitting the Loud and Slow players mixed with disappointing yells that echoed loudly throughout the court.

Loud and Slow members couldn't avoid the bevy of dodge balls continually soaring at them. Favre's Favorites had control of at least two balls, and sometimes all three, for the majority of the game.

After taking first in flag-football and second in mini-golf, Favre's Favorites decided to make a run at the All-University intramural championship. McCoy and Johnson finished second to Team Chino in the All-U championship last season.

After Thursday, the squad appears poised to take down another intramural event.

"We've been practicing the five Ds of dodge ball," Johnson joked, referring to the tips given in the Dodge Ball: A True Underdog Story — dodge, duck, dip, dive, and dodge.

Volleyball as therapy

A 'scrappy' group of second-year physical-therapy students wins the intramural women's volleyball championship.

By IAN MARTIN

Usually a match between former UI club volleyballers and graduate students will end in a win for the ex-club players.

But on Thursday night in the Field House North Gym, the PT Pandas, a group of mostly second-year physical-therapy students, defeated the Iowa Club Alumni team in two-straight games to take the intramural competitive women's indoor volleyball championship.

Despite being a taller and more physically imposing squad, the Club Alumni committed 13 unforced errors during the two games. The team was also pestered by an opponent that Club Alumni players all agreed was tenacious.

"We were getting ahead of ourselves and trying to do things too quickly, and we didn't let plays develop," Alison Dietsch said. "[The PT Pandas] is a very scrappy team. The players seemed to pick up on the [tipped balls]."

Even after losing the first game by 12, the Club Alumni appeared poised to dominate in the second game, setting up opportunities for spikes and using the players' height advantage to block the ball at the net.

But the Pandas dug out almost every spike and kept points in play, seemingly using a "just-get-it-back" strategy to force the Club Alumni to make errors.

"A lot of volleyball is defense," PT Panda player Emily Muff said. "So if you can scrape up what they put down and just make them make errors, you'll have a good game."

The player of the night for the Pandas may have been Muff, who controlled almost every ball she touched even though she was one of the shortest players on the court. She recorded three kills, along with a few tips at the net, to help her team extend its lead and keep it.

Also playing well for the champions on the night were Sarah Nolte and Angela Horan. Nolte managed points using an impeccable court sense to place balls in hidden spots where others may have tried to create kills.

She also had a great kill on the penultimate point of the second game where she spiked the ball while close to the net on the left side, placing it close to the net on the Club Alumni's right side.

Horan, one of the taller players for the Pandas, got her team motivated with a block that would have made LeBron James proud in the first game, jumping up and deflecting a spike from Club Alumni's Christina Dal Porto for the point.

Likely the best player not on the stat sheet for the Pandas was Colleen McHenry, a former junior college player now at Iowa. McHenry anticipated where the Club Alumni hits would go, managing the setup bump and first hit.

"I move with where they're going to hit it," she said. "If you watch someone's shoulders or hands as they hit, you can usually move to where they hit it."

But even with all of the individuals on the team playing their roles, many of the players said it was just an effort as a whole, along with how they put the ball in play, that made the biggest difference in the win.

"We, overall, just played as a team, and scrapped up a lot of their hits," Muff said. "And we also got a lot of our serves over, so that always helps."

AquaHawks set for big meet

The Iowa women's swimming team hosts three teams in a three-day championship-style meet.

By MITCH SMITH
mitchell-e-smith@uiowa.edu

With four home meets remaining in the 2009-10 season, the Field House pool is nearing its end as the host site for the AquaHawks.

The Iowa women's swimming team holds the first-ever Hawkeye Invitational today with preliminary competition beginning at 11 a.m. and the finals starting at 6 p.m.

The squad will face Northern Iowa, Truman State, and Western Illinois in a championship-style format meet.

The event will continue on Saturday and Nov. 22 with preliminary racing starting at 10 a.m. Finals begin at 6 p.m. on Saturday and 4 p.m. on Nov. 22.

"It's been a while since we've had an invitational like this," Iowa head swimming coach Marc Long said. "We used to host an invitational called the 'Iowa Invitational' until the mid-90s. We've really wanted to get an event like this on our campus because it gives us such a great opportunity to race in a championship environment."

The Field House pool will be stretched to its limits this weekend, Long said, noting that the diving team won't be able to compete because of a lack of space.

The AquaHawks defeated Truman State earlier this season. Western Illinois heads to Iowa City after taking fourth at the House of Champions meet in Indianapolis, and Northern Iowa is coming off losses to Northern Colorado and South Dakota State.

"We have some teams coming in here that are really shooting for their cuts in their respective division," Long said. "They'll be hungry to beat some Iowa Hawkeyes that's for sure. As far as intensity of a Big Ten meet, probably not. But as far as experience, it gives our swimmers some great opportunities to race."

For some of the swimmers, such as senior Christine Kuczek and junior Verity Hicks, it will be an opportunity to prepare for the ConocoPhillips Short Course National Championships. Both women will compete in the event in Federal Way, Wash., on Dec. 3-5.

Kuczek has seven individual first-place finishes this season; Hicks has five.

"I'm looking to swim some good races and try to get some season best times," she said. "It will be nice to get some racing in before nationals to see where I'm at. Any more time I have practicing in the pool is always good."

Despite the 83-year-old pool's antiquity and its many flaws, the AquaHawks are poised to defend the pool they have long called home.

"This is the only invitational we've had since I've been here," senior Julie Feingold said. "It's the last season in the Field House, so coming out with big wins and winning races is really important because this is our Field House, and we like to defend it."

performing in their first home matches.

Metcalf noted that the practice environment is much different from the competition environment, but the Hawkeyes have been training for competition and shouldn't be fazed.

Beatty said the wrestle-offs were the coaching staff's way of shaking the rust off the wrestlers. He said stepping onto the mat in front of a crowd inside the practice room, singlet on and shoes tied tight, prepared the team for competition.

Last year, the Hawkeyes won the national champi-

The Gophers then lost, 35-32, to conference doormat Illinois the following week, which sparked renewed complaints about consistency woes. Quarterback Adam Weber turned in a one touchdown, one interception performance.

While the Gophers enter Kinnick Stadium this weekend with a 16-13 win over South Dakota State last week in the rearview mirror, Weber has continued to struggle in the absence of Decker. The junior from Shoreview, Minn., had just 94 yards and an interception against the Jackrabbits.

"We've had some great offensive performances this year," Brewster said earlier this week. "Last week certainly wasn't one of them. This week we've got to work really hard in practice at all areas... to have a chance against Iowa."

Of course, Iowa has its own problems to deal with, including a rash of injuries on offense.

Offensive lineman Dace

Richardson will miss Saturday's game nursing a broken foot, and junior quarterback Ricky Stanzi will miss a second-straight game with a sprained ankle.

Leading rusher Adam Robinson returned last week against Ohio State after missing two games with an ankle sprain. Robinson's backfield mate, true freshman Brandon Wegher, is expected to return as well after missing Iowa's game against the Buckeyes with "internal complications."

Despite the injuries, Iowa silenced some critics after going toe-to-toe with conference champion Ohio State on Nov. 14. Redshirt freshman quarterback James Vandenberg looked stellar in the loss, completing 20-of-33 passes for 233 yards and two touchdowns in the first start of his career.

"Now the next step is what [does Vandenberg] do in Week Two," Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz said. "We'll find that out this week, but we've got a lot of confidence in him."

"We had two difficult shooting nights, and you got to look at shot selection when that happens, if you think you're a good shooting team," Lickliter said. "We looked at that, and we feel like we took a lot of makeable shots, and they didn't go, so you deal with that."

One of the players that has really struggled thus far is sophomore Matt Gatens. The Iowa City native followed a 2-for-9 shooting performance against Texas-San Antonio with an unusual 2-for-12 outing on Tuesday against Duquesne.

Lickliter said Gatens' poor shooting could have been a result of tightness or anxiety, which he feels all his players get from time to time because of their determination to be successful.

"They care a great deal," Lickliter said about his players. "We've got to get them to understand that they have a lot of confidence in the skill that they've developed, and we believe in them."

While the Hawkeyes come into this evening's showdown 0-2 overall, Bowling Green comes into Carver-Hawkeye Arena at 1-1. On Tuesday, the Falcons were crushed at Xavier, 101-57.

One Bowling Green player that Iowa will have to keep its eye on is sophomore Scott Thomas. The 6-6 forward leads the Falcons in points and rebounds, averaging 14 points and five boards per contest.

"We're going to have to really adjust defensively, position-wise, to be able to maintain the right position," Lickliter said. "There's no question we got to constantly adjust to maintain position, we got to get them off the glass. It will be another good test for us."

Lickliter said that regardless of whether Iowa wins or loses, a degree of humility has to be shown after every game.

"There's always a response," the third-year coach said. "What's fun is when you can push a group of guys that you feel like are going to be focused on the right things, have the right approach of values, and you're going to watch them grow. And you know eventually, they'll be rewarded."

WRESTLING

"I think we all have high expectations of ourselves in the duals" senior 197-pounder Chad Beatty said. "I think we're all excited and ready to get going. We want to get wrestling, get on a roll, and start winning some matches."

Iowa head coach Tom Brands said he sees his squad getting anxious to compete, and he's looking for Iowa to begin to distancing itself from other highly ranked teams.

BASKETBALL

Women hoopsters head for N. Iowa

The Iowa women's basketball team (2-1) will play its first road game against Northern Iowa (0-2) in Cedar Falls at 3 p.m. Nov. 22.

Iowa head coach Lisa Bluder's Hawkeyes will try to gather themselves after suffering their first defeat against No. 19 Kansas on Wednesday night.

"I think it's always a little bit more added incentive" playing against in-state schools, Bluder said during her Monday press conference. "I know, every time you play a game it should be important, but there is something that amps you up a little bit more about playing an in-state school."

Junior guard Kachine Alexander enters the contest leading the Hawkeyes in both scoring (21.0) and rebounding (15.7). Alexander is the reigning co-Big Ten Player of the Week.

Iowa completed a sweep of its in-state foes last season, including a 72-46 victory over the Panthers in Carver-Hawkeye on Dec. 11, 2008.

Angerer a Nagurski finalist

Iowa senior Pat Angerer was named one of five finalists for the 2009 Bronko Nagurski Trophy on Thursday. The award, given annually to the nation's top defensive player, is voted on by the Football Writers Association of America.

Angerer leads Iowa with 119 tackles this season after collecting a team high 107 stops a year ago.

The senior from Bettendorf earned Big Ten Defensive Player of the Week honors in September after collecting 14 tackles, an interception, and a forced fumble in the Hawkeyes' win over Penn State.

On Nov. 5, Angerer was named a semifinalist for the 2009 Chuck Bednarik Award, which also recognizes the nation's top defensive player.

Tennessee strong safety Eric Berry, Alabama defensive tackle Terrence Cody, Texas Christian defensive end Jerry Hughes, and Nebraska defensive tackle Ndamukong Suh join Angerer as finalists for the Bronko Nagurski award.

The winner of the Bronko Nagurski Trophy will be announced on Dec. 7.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Dougherty to be new women's tennis coach

On Thursday, the athletics department announced that Katie Dougherty will be the new head coach of the Iowa women's tennis team.

Dougherty will be the seventh head coach in the history of the program. She has coached in the Big Ten for the last five seasons, previously holding the assistant coach and recruiting coordinator positions at Wisconsin.

The last two seasons at Wisconsin, Dougherty's recruiting classes received national recognition from Tennisrecruiting.net.

Prior to her position at Wisconsin, Dougherty was an assistant coach at Penn State from 2004-07 and American University in 2003-04. In 2004, she guided American to the Patriot League conference title and the NCAA Tournament.

She also played tennis at Wisconsin and was a four-year letter winner and a nationally ranked doubles player.

"We are extremely excited to announce Katie Dougherty as our new women's tennis coach," Senior Associate Athletics Director Jane Meyer said in a statement. "Katie brings coaching experiences from two other Big Ten institutions along with a Big Ten playing career."

Minnesota an enigma

Consistency problems haunt Minnesota as the Gophers make their way to Iowa City for a regular-season finale against the Hawkeyes.

By JON LINDER

jonathan.linder@uiowa.edu

The difference between chaos and serenity is in the eye of the beholder — especially if said beholder is a bronze pig named Floyd.

Iowa football faithful can complain in earnest of the maddening season the Hawkeyes have survived in 2009, but it pales in comparison with Minnesota's roller-coaster campaign. Still, the Hawks anticipate a ride.

"It's a great game. There's a lot of tradition behind it," Iowa junior Bryan Bulaga said about the Hawkeyes' rivalry with Minnesota. "We get their best shot [every] time ... But it's a big game for the state of Iowa, too."

The Gophers enter the annual "Battle for Floyd of Rosedale" after what has quite literally been an up-and-down season. Minnesota's schedule so far shows only one instance of back-to-back wins, which came during the first two weeks of the season against Syracuse and Air Force.

Since the Gopher's last win streak ended at home against California in September, the only streak they've managed is successive losses to Penn State and Ohio State in mid-October.

Aside from that rough patch, Minnesota has had a tough time finding any sort of momentum — positive or negative. To say the least, consistency has been a problem for head coach Tim Brewster's squad in his third year in Minneapolis.

The oddest aspect of the Gophers' inconsistency is that aside from two games, the season has gone as most expected it would.

Those two games, not surprisingly, came in back-to-back weeks against Michigan State and Illinois.

Michigan State came in as one of the hottest teams in the conference, winning three in a row before losing a heartbreaker to Iowa a week before. The Gophers, on the other hand, came in with a two-game losing streak in tow and without standout wide receiver Eric Decker.

By way of a late game-breaking touchdown catch that summoned flashes of the Immaculate Reception, Minnesota downed the Spartans.

Two games into the 2009-10 season, and the Iowa men's basketball team isn't having the start it anticipated.

Not only have the Hawkeyes lost their first two games — both at home against Texas-San Antonio and Duquesne — but in the process, they have struggled mightily in one area Iowa heavily relies on: shooting the ball.

Tonight, the squad will try to put on a better shooting clinic inside Carver-Hawkeye Arena when the Hawkeyes host the Bowling Green Falcons at 8 p.m., in a game sandwiched between CBE Classic contests in both Iowa City and Kansas City.

During a teleconference with the local media on Thursday, Iowa head coach Todd Lickliter made it clear he has not lost confidence in any of his players, saying he likes the team's overall character.

Quarterback redux

Minnesota will pose a threat with a dynamic quarterback duo in junior Adam Weber and freshman MarQueis Gray.

By BRENDAN STILES
brendan-stiles@uiowa.edu

For much of the season, the Hawkeyes have faced teams with more than one quarterback.

Against Michigan, the Hawkeyes got a taste of two true freshmen in Tate Forcier and Denard Robinson. The following week against Wisconsin, Curt Phillips played a first-half series in place of starting signal-caller Scott Tolzien.

And in Iowa's first defeat of the season, Northwestern showed the talent it possessed in both Mike Kafka and Dan Persa.

Now, in the regular-season finale against Minnesota, No. 15 Iowa will face a dynamic duo of Golden Gopher quarterbacks that couldn't be more different in junior Adam Weber and freshman MarQueis Gray.

"It's tough," sophomore defensive end Broderick Binns said about facing teams with two quarterbacks. "They're both great athletes, both good guys, and they're just different in everything that they do."

The QB more familiar to the Iowa defense is Weber, who has been a starter since playing as a freshman during Minnesota's abysmal 1-11 season in 2007. He has started two career games against the Hawkeyes, and in those two contests, he has passed for 37-of-69 and 317 yards. However, only one of those completions was for a touchdown.

He has also thrown three interceptions against Iowa, one of which was taken back for a touchdown last season by Hawkeye cornerback Amari Spivey.

This season, Weber has completed 159 passes in 295 attempts for 2,168

Ohio State quarterback Terrelle Pryor runs down the field during the fourth quarter of Iowa's game against Ohio State in Columbus on Nov. 14. The Hawkeye defense will face another athletic quarterback this weekend - Minnesota freshman MarQueis Gray.

passing yards. Through 11 games, he has thrown 12 touchdown passes, but he also has 14 interceptions.

"The guy is a veteran player. I really thought he was a senior going into this year," Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz said. "But he's starting three years, so that means the guy can throw the football. He's really good."

Complementing Weber is Gray. While the former is known more for his arm and setting Minnesota passing records, Gray is much more athletic and at times has played like Ohio State quarterback Terrelle Pryor and former Texas quarterback Vince Young, who was recruited by current Minnesota head coach Tim Brewster when he was a Longhorn assistant.

"It's tough. They're both great athletes, both good guys, and they're just different in everything that they do."

- Broderick Binns, sophomore defensive end, about facing teams with two quarterbacks.

This season, the Indianapolis native is Minnesota's fourth-leading rusher with 37 carries for 208 yards.

"Right now, with him, it's more athleticism than total quarterback package, but that will be something that expands and develops," Ferentz said. "They're not going to put him back there and throw it 25 times with him. He's not at that point yet, but he will be soon, I'm sure."

But as athletic a quarterback as

Gray is, the Hawkeyes might catch him at the right time. Just last week, they went up against Ohio State and held the aforementioned Pryor to a mere 29 yards on the ground to go with just 93 yards passing.

"It's just like getting two weeks of practice for it," Binns said. "I feel like our preparation won't be too hard to prepare for him just because last week, we were preparing for Terrelle. I think we'll be all right."

The term "Best of the Kirk Ferentz era" is nothing new to Iowa's senior class, which entered the program as the most highly touted recruits Ferentz had signed.

While the crown no longer rests quite so squarely on the collective head of this class, the members have an opportunity to leave a lasting mark on Iowa's program in their final home game against Minnesota on Saturday.

"I have huge admiration [for these seniors]," Ferentz said. "There are only 17 of them, and I don't know how many of them are on scholarship out of this group, but it's a tough tour of duty ... For our guys to make it to the finish line — that's a heck of a deal."

Rivals.com rated that class as No. 11 in the nation in 2005. Some of the players didn't pan out for the Black and Gold, and they left the program for one reason or another.

Of the several who left because of academic problems, most never returned to Iowa City. Shonn Greene was the only one to return to the Hawkeyes after being ruled academically ineligible. He earned Big Ten Player of the Year and consensus All-American honors last year at running back before leaving for the NFL.

Two players left on their own terms, but at different stages of their careers. Ryan Bain was the first to leave Iowa, citing a lack of playing time after seeing the field as a true freshman and sophomore. Bain is now a reserve defensive lineman at Akron.

The other transfer was quarterback Jake Christensen, who left after losing his starting spot to Ricky Stanzi a year ago. Christensen came to Iowa as a blue-chip quarterback, but he struggled in his only full year as a starter in 2007.

Lacking in quantity, not in resiliency

Iowa's 17 remaining seniors have taken a variety of routes to the final home game of their careers.

AMY OLESON/THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa tight end Tony Moeaki attempts to catch a pass during Iowa's game against Ohio State in Columbus, Ohio on Nov. 14. Moeaki is one of 17 seniors being honored as part of Senior Day on Saturday before the Hawkeyes' game against Minnesota.

Dan Doering joined the Hawkeyes as one of the most highly recruited offensive linemen in the history of the program, but he has failed to meet fans' expectations.

He played a substantial role on the 2007 team, but he was supplanted last year after suffering an early season injury. He started one game this fall for the Hawkeyes.

Fellow lineman Rafael Eubanks has experienced just about everything a person can while playing in the trenches. He jumped into a starting spot at center as a redshirt freshman and held that position for two years before Rob Bruggeman beat him out prior to last season.

Eubanks played guard at times in 2008 while battling injuries, but he has regained his starting center spot and performed well in his senior season this fall.

"I've been here through a lot of ups and downs," he said. "To get to this point in my last year, it just feels really fulfilling as a player."

Offensive tackle Kyle Calloway came to Iowa as the fourth-best offensive lineman in the class of 2005, according to most recruiting experts. The Belleville, Ill., product has since been a mainstay at right tackle for the Hawkeyes over the last three years.

A.J. Edds is the only senior starter not associated with the class of 2005. He stepped onto the field almost immediately as a true freshman in 2006, making his first start against Purdue. He has started 36-straight games at outside linebacker coming into Saturday's game.

Each week, DI Super Sims will preview three major games from around the Big Ten, including Iowa's upcoming contest. Games are computer versus computer simulations, which are run through the NCAA Football 10 game engine and played on Heisman-level difficulty with 15-minute periods. Default settings and playbooks are also used. Because some players are not available, rosters may not be up-to-date.

Seniors remain resilient

Fellow linebacker Pat Angerer has taken a different path, but brings plenty of experience of his own.

Since stepping into a starting role three weeks into the 2008 season, Angerer has made a difference for the Iowa defense. After nearly quitting football because of injuries early in his career, he has seen his NFL stock skyrocket in the last 13 months.

"Everybody on this team, every senior, has definitely battled through some hard times," he said. "I couldn't be more proud of the guys I'm going to be running out there with."

Angerer endured plenty of hardship, but some guys in this class just couldn't buy a break when it came to staying healthy.

'I've been here through a lot of ups and downs. To get to this point in my last year, it just feels really fulfilling as a player.'

- Rafeal Eubanks, lineman

That role unfortunately fell to Tony Moeaki, Dace Richardson, and Trey Stross.

Moeaki has played brilliantly, albeit sparingly, despite numerous injuries throughout his career. Stross emerged this year as a starter at receiver, but he was plagued by a slew of leg injuries in recent years.

Richardson, a high-school teammate of Moeaki, made an improbable return to glory this year before going down with a broken bone against Michigan State. The Wheaton, Ill., product is expected to return for the Hawkeyes' bowl game.

Call them underachievers, but they rallied Hawkeye Nation

Despite the injuries, the mini-exodus from the program, and the accusations of underachieving through the years, the Class of 2005 has been instrumental in turning the program around in the past two years.

They came to Iowa following one of the most successful three-year stretches in Iowa history, with three straight 10-win seasons from 2002-2004.

In the three years that followed, Iowa failed to win a bowl game, and rumors started to swirl about Ferentz losing his job. The Class of 2005, which was hailed as the best class in Hawkeye history coming in, was labeled a bust.

Then Shonn Greene emerged last fall, as did Angerer and Calloway, to spark what now looks like Iowa's legitimate re-emergence as a key player in the Big Ten. The Hawkeyes have collected nine wins for the second year in a row, and with two games left will likely earn the school's first 10-win season in five years.

The Class of '05 may never live down the "bust" label, but the members who remain to run out on Kinnick one last time this weekend don't seem to mind.

"I know there's only been like five teams or so, somewhere around there, that have hit the 10-win margin," Moeaki said on Tuesday. "So that's pretty special that we have a chance to do that."

Defying expectations

Iowa is exceeding expectations, seeking to get win No. 10.

By AMIE KIEHN
amie-kiehn@uiowa.edu

While Iowa's reputation has been marred in the past because players' discrepancies with the law, head coach Kirk Ferentz can finally see the forward progress his program has demanded.

"I keep calling it a virus or whatever, whatever we went through. I think we're back on the track we want to be on," he said at his weekly press conference Tuesday.

This year, the 9-2 Hawkeyes have the potential of garnering Ferentz's fourth double-digit win season since taking over for Hayden Fry in 1999. The last time the Hawkeyes were able to capture 10 or more wins was in 2004. Iowa tied for first in the Big Ten and defeated LSU in the Capital One Bowl, 30-25. The squad toted NFL-caliber players such as linebackers Abdul Hodge and Chad Greenway and defensive linemen Matt Roth and Jonathan Babineaux.

Since then, Iowa has struggled to gain a winning momentum, finishing 7-5 in 2005, 6-7 in 2006, and 6-6 in 2007. Last year, Iowa won nine games and nabbed a 31-10 victory over South Carolina in the Outback Bowl.

The interruption of off-the-field issues, spanning two years with 18 players running afoul in the law, has made returning to prominence for athletic ability that much more coveted.

On Saturday for Senior Day inside Kinnick Stadium, Iowa can play for win No. 10.

"It means a lot," senior center Rafael Eubanks said. "Especially since here, I've been through a lot of ups and downs, to get to this point — my last year — I'm just excited."

"It feels really fulfilling as a player,

JULIE KOEHN/THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz high-fives members of the special-team unit as they return to the sidelines after Iowa wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos' 99-yard kickoff return for a touchdown during the Hawkeyes' game against Ohio State on Nov. 14 in Columbus. A win over Minnesota on Saturday would give Ferentz his fourth 10-win season since taking over from Hayden Fry in 1999.

and for this team as a whole, that we can finish season off at the minimum with 10 wins."

Ferentz echoed Eubanks' sentiment. "I am thinking about [10 wins]," Ferentz said. "That's significant. Eleven is more significant, but I know you can't get to 11 if you don't get 10. If you don't get to 10 this week, it's impossible to do it this year."

Plagued by injuries to running back Adam Robinson, quarterback Ricky Stanzi, and offensive lineman Dace Richardson, the Hawkeyes have lost their last two games. The loss in key contributors has rippled throughout the team, but Iowa has demonstrated its persevering spirit, its next man in philosophy.

"I don't what else I could have expected from this team," Ferentz said. "They've handled every bump in the road pretty well. I just hope we finish out well. Again, It'd be nice to win, but I just want to finish out the way we've been playing."

This season, Iowa has capitalized on exceeding expectations, especially when heading into Columbus to vie for a Big Ten championship.

Listed as the underdog against Ohio State, the Hawkeyes trailed the Buckeyes by two touchdowns with just over 11 minutes remaining in regulation. Then Derrell Johnson-Koulianos' ran back a kickoff 99 yards for a TD, and quarterback James Vandenberg hit Marvin McNutt in the end zone to tie the game with under three minutes remaining.

Although Iowa fell, 27-24, in overtime, Ferentz reflected on his great fortune in the opportunity to do what he loves — coach football.

"I feel very fortunate," he said. "I love football, and I'm in Ohio Stadium. I'm in a great college environment. I felt the same way in Penn State. I feel that every time I'm in Kinnick."

"I feel fortunate."

BCS Commentary

Hawkeyes on to the Fiesta Bowl?

SCOTT MILLER
scott-t-miller@uiowa.edu

Nearly three weeks ago, all was right in eastern Iowa.

The beloved Hawkeyes were 9-0 for the first time in school history. They were dubbed a team of destiny — or some fluffy, make-mama-beam-with-pride thing like that. They were featured in national publications such as Sports Illustrated, which pictured wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos leaping over fullback Wade Leppert on one of its regional covers.

At that point, I predicted a Rose Bowl berth — or at the very least, another BCS Bowl — to be in Iowa's future. The Hawkeyes had Northwestern, Ohio State, and Minnesota remaining on their schedule, leaving me to believe they would finish at 11-1.

That was then.

This is now: Iowa sits at 9-2, after dropping two-consecutive games, and the Hawkeyes no longer have their quarterback, Ricky Stanzi, under center, after he suffered a high ankle sprain against the Wildcats.

Iowa's postseason destinations range anywhere from three places in Florida (Miami, Orlando, and Tampa), one place in Arizona (Glendale), or one place in Louisiana (New Orleans), after the Buckeyes sealed a spot in the Rose Bowl. A BCS bowl that was once a near-certainty is now anything but.

Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz has always said he won't campaign for his team, so allow me to do it for you, Coach.

I'll bill you later.

Here are the facts: Iowa is ranked No. 13 in the BCS, which is good news for Hawkeye fans, because a team has to be ranked in the top 14 to be considered for a BCS at-large bid. Penn State, a team Iowa beat, 21-10, on the road earlier this season, is one spot behind the Hawkeyes at No. 14. And USC, which has owned the Big Ten in the Rose Bowl recently, is out of contention for a BCS game after its most recent slip-up against Stanford.

All of these things work in the Hawkeyes' favor. So, too, does the fact that they beat quality opponents all year — Penn State, Wisconsin, Arizona, and Michigan State, to name a few — while also playing Ohio State to a three-point overtime loss.

By the way, three of these five teams are ranked in the top 16 of the BCS.

"Yes, we are," Sports Illustrated cover boy Johnson-Koulianos said when asked if Iowa was a BCS team. "We'll play anybody in the nation right now. We're not afraid of anybody, and we can beat anybody. I think we've proved this year [that if] you give us an opportunity to play the best opponent, we'll make it a hell of a ball game."

But the pollsters will continue bring up Iowa's two close calls against Northern Iowa and Arkansas State earlier in the year, as if to nullify the Hawkeyes' nearly impossible Big Ten road slate.

dailyiowan.com for more sports

I understand this sentiment. A Penn State team that squashed Eastern Illinois, 52-3, is far sexier than an Iowa team that only beat Northern Iowa and Arkansas State by four combined points. Simply, it comes down to what's more important to the bowl committees — playing a Rose-Bowl bound Ohio State team within three points on the road or nearly losing to two subpar opponents.

Penn State is not a better team than Iowa. That much was settled in State College, Pa., on Sept. 26. Neither is Oklahoma State — another team that could squeeze into a BCS bowl over the Hawkeyes if it beats Oklahoma on Nov. 28.

Here's another fact for you: The Cowboys play in a conference that boasts two teams in the BCS' top 25. Sorry, but that's not good enough. So put the Hawkeyes in Glendale, Ariz., home to the Fiesta Bowl — and a large contingent of Iowa fans. The Hawks have beaten enough quality opponents to earn that much.

You can thank me later, Coach.

Point/Counterpoint

Which seniors will be missed the most?

Tony Moeaki

With all due respect to the 16 other seniors playing their last game as an Iowa Hawkeye in Kinnick Stadium on Saturday against Minnesota, tight end Tony Moeaki will be missed more than anyone next season.

The 6-4, 250-pound cocaptain's effect on the Iowa offense is irreplaceable. He would have played in every game of his career, and started the majority of them, if it wasn't for injuries. He may be fragile, but when he is on the field, he is extremely effective.

The Wheaton, Ill., native has collected 72 receptions in his career, totaling 742 yards and 11 touchdowns to this point.

This season, Moeaki has gained 302 yards and four touchdowns on 26 grabs. He ranks fourth on the team in receptions and is second in touchdowns behind Marvin McNutt's seven.

What stands out most about Moeaki though, is his proficiency in both the pass and run games. His versatility enables him to block defensive ends, allowing the Hawkeyes to run the ball outside.

But there's no doubt his speed makes him a vertical threat that most tight ends simply are not. Iowa will gladly take the mismatch of Moeaki one-on-one with a linebacker any play.

He also spreads the field because he draws so much attention from defenses, which have double-covered Moeaki the second half of the season and allowing receivers such as McNutt to get open and make plays.

On Monday, Moeaki was named one of eight semifinalists for the John Mackey Award, given to the nation's top tight end. He has a chance to follow the footsteps of former Iowa tight end Dallas Clark, who won the award in 2002.

If Moeaki does, the Hawkeyes will miss him next season when, like Clark, he will play on Sundays.

—by Robbie Lehman

Linebackers

The foundation of Iowa's defense this year has been the linebackers. The secondary and defensive line have certainly been explosive at times (see Adrian Clayborn at Penn State, or Tyler Sash and Brett Greenwood at Iowa State), but the linebackers have been rock-solid through 11 games.

Two-thirds of said foundation, Pat Angerer and A.J. Edds, will be gone after this season.

Certainly, Tony Moeaki will be missed. His presence in the middle of the field has been superb for the Hawkeyes, and this season, he is a semifinalist for the John Mackey Award, presented to the best tight end in college football.

But Iowa is used to missing Moeaki. This season he has missed three games, last year four, and in 2007, he missed the last eight games of the season.

Neither Angerer or Edds have missed a game this season or last season, and Edds has started 36-straight games.

3. Which Iowa senior will you miss the most?	A.J. Edds, because he will probably be NFL commissioner or something.	Pat Angerer. A real interesting guy, who just does things the right way.	A.J. Edds - Always a good quotation and a really nice guy.	Pat Angerer. One of the best interviews ever.
4. Is Minnesota the Hawkeyes' biggest Big Ten rival?	No. Wisconsin. Duh.	It is if you ask Minnesota fans.	No. Not even close.	Yes, and I laugh at the Gophers' ineptitude on an annual basis.
5. Predict the Iowa-Minnesota score.	24-3, Iowa.	38-3, Iowa.	30-6, Iowa.	35-3, Iowa. Same final score as that other rivalry game last September.
6. If Iowa beats Minnesota, do the Hawkeyes play in a BCS bowl game?	Oh, yeah, boys and girls.	Tough to keep them out with the way fans travel. And who has been more exciting this year?	Yes. The Fiesta Bowl - on my 21st birthday. Wouldn't that be fun?	If Iowa wins on Saturday, I believe the Hawkeyes play in the Fiesta Bowl against Boise State.
7. Upset special in college football this week ...	Focusing only on Iowa.	I don't see it happening, but the Spartans have a shot at home against Penn State.	Michigan State over Penn State - the Spartans are tough at home.	Northwestern over No. 17 Wisconsin. Fitzgerald's team is clicking at the right time.

Solidarity and a diet tip

Iowa senior center Rafael Eubanks met with the local media this week to talk about the Hawkeyes' upcoming rivalry with his home state Minnesota Gophers, as well as what he looks to do in the future.

By AMIE KIEHN
amie-kiehn@uiowa.edu

DI: Talk about your emotion in playing your last game as senior.

Eubanks: It's going to be up and down. I am sure it's going to be pretty emotional in the beginning, you know running out, meeting my family in the middle of the field, but at the same time, it's exciting to hear the fans cheer and just a chance to reflect on the five years I've been here.

DI: What is it about this team that's different than any other team in the nation?

Eubanks: I think the biggest thing is that, no matter what point we are in the game and whatever is going on, we still have faith in each other. More than anything that, we still are going to work, push, still have an opportunity. It doesn't matter, we're down seven points, 10 points, 14 points, we're never going to give up. Knowing that the guy your going with, across from you or next to you, is going to give that same effort, that's not going to give up.

DI: Being raised a Minnesota fan, what moment sticks out between Minnesota and Iowa matchups?

Eubanks: In 2002, Iowa played up in Minnesota and the fans tore the goalposts down. They always talk about that, the Hawk fans and the Gopher fans. I think especially with the Coach Ferentz era, that's been one of the biggest moments that stood out.

DI: What attracted you to come to Iowa?

Eubanks: One — the staff. The coaching staff and program. I really believe in a lot of things they were talking about and believing in creating a successful program. And that's working hard and doing all the little things right. Doing all those things are what's going to make you successful, not if you are very talented or what not. It's putting in the work in the off-season and all that.

DI: When did Eric Johnson (Iowa's recruiting coordinator) first contact you?

Eubanks: It's something I'll never forget. It was my junior year, and I was sitting in math class, and I get asked to go to my head coach's office. So in my head I'm thinking, "Oh, no. What did I do?" He sits me down and says, "We're going to call down to Iowa and talk with the coaches," and it happened to be Coach Johnson. They told me they were going to offer me a scholarship. They were the first one to offer me a scholarship. I'll never forget that.

MINNESOTA AT NO. 15 IOWA	IOWA — Bring out the chips, salsa, and sombreros. It's Fiesta time.	IOWA — Just go Carl Spackler (or Pat Angerer) on these varmints, and I'll celebrate with some chips and salsa.	IOWA — Hawks win big.	IOWA — I want another shutout.	IOWA — A win here, and this season could be "magical" once again.	IOWA — Go-fers belong on movie sets.	IOWA — Impress the bowl committees, so I can go somewhere other than Florida. DO IT FOR ME.
NO. 9 OHIO STATE AT MICHIGAN	OHIO ST. — I like the Wolverines' upset potential, though.	OHIO ST. — No way (two words, Rob Miller) Ohio State loses to THIS Michigan team.	OHIO ST. — Ditto here. Greg Robinson's defense is so bad.	OHIO ST. — Because I don't like Michigan.	OHIO ST. — Both schools have terrible fans, but I'd love to see a Michigan bowl drought.	MICHIGAN — Goodbye, Columbus.	MICHIGAN — Why, you ask? Because I'm getting killed in the standings, and I believe in miracles.
NO. 10 LSU AT MISSISSIPPI	LSU — The Bayou Bengals got it on lock.	LSU — Boy, was I horribly wrong about Ole Miss this season.	LSU — The Tigers' defense is the difference.	LSU — Tigers are real good. Real good.	LSU — This is who Iowa likely plays in January — yikes.	YOUNG MISS — Winning one for Emileigh, who doesn't know they're playing.	OLE MISS — LSU is a year away.
CALIFORNIA AT NO. 14 STANFORD	STANFORD — This type of Cardinal doesn't mess around in the woods.	STANFORD — Such a shame Jahvid Best is hurt.	STANFORD — Where did this team come from?	STANFORD — Huge win. I like them trees for this one.	STANFORD — I've jumped on the Toby Gerhart bandwagon.	STANFORD — Cardinal numbers.	STANFORD — Don't forget the Cardinal rules.
NO. 13 PENN STATE AT MICHIGAN STATE	PENN ST. — Man, I wish the Lions would have beaten OSU.	PENN ST. — Difference here will be Daryll Clark.?	MICHIGAN ST. — Upset special.	PENN ST. — I still can't get enough of JoePa.	PENN ST. — Sparty's defense just hasn't been as good as advertised.	MICHIGAN ST — Sparta the problem redux.	MICHIGAN ST. — If you like big hits, tune in.
NO. 17 WISCONSIN AT NORTH WESTERN	WISCONSIN — When did Wisconsin move up in the rankings?	NORTHWESTERN — If Wisconsin really parallels Iowa, then this sets up perfectly for Northwestern, right?	WISCONSIN — This is a really, really underrated team.	WISCONSIN — Badgers better beat the Wildcats.	WISCONSIN — I'd love to see Northwestern win, but John Clay should run roughshod.	NORTHWESTERN — Badgers can't deliver tongue-lashing; Cats got their tongue.	WISCONSIN — Truck 'em, Bucky.
NO. 11 OREGON AT ARIZONA	OREGON — Ducks are quacking all the way to the Rose Bowl.	OREGON — Ducks are just going to run the ball at will on Arizona. Trust me.	ARIZONA — Same with this 'Zona team.	OREGON — Ducks. Quack.	OREGON — Had they not lost to Cal, I'd have probably picked the 'Cats.	OREGON — Quackery overtakes Pac-10.	OREGON — Arizona will finish 6-6. I've been saying it all along.
KANSAS STATE AT NEBRASKA	NEBRASKA — Is it just me, or is it still funny that the Huskers lost to Iowa State?	NEBRASKA — The Big 12 North is atrocious. That is all.	NEBRASKA — Honestly, who cares?	NEBRASKA — K-State won't pull away with a victory.	NEBRASKA — Winner gets the honor of being pummeled by Texas, congrats Huskers.	NEBRASKA — Herding Huskers harder than herding Cats.	NEBRASKA — Winner gets the chance to be mauled by Texas. Who wants it? Come on ...
