For many University of Iowa students, perfecting their class schedule means no Friday classes. But that may soon become harder to avoid.

Over the last several weeks, the UI Faculty Council and Faculty Senate have unanimously voted to support increasing the number of Friday classes, when possible. The draft was approved at the same time the Senate and Council also endorsed Iowa City’s 21-ordinance. The approved draft stated “evidence suggests that Friday morning classes lead to reduced alcohol consumption on Thursday nights and to reduced alcohol-related emergency-treatment-center admissions on Thursday nights.”

Michael Takacs, a UI clinical assistant professor of emergency medicine, presented his own research about local students’ Thursday night and Friday morning alcohol-related visits to the emergency room. His research was influenced by a study conducted at University of Missouri-Columbia, which analyzed alcohol consumption for every day of the week compared with class schedules.

Results from the Missouri study show that students with no early Friday classes — those before 10:30 a.m. — drank twice as much on Thursdays as students with those classes.

UI students’ Thursday night ER visits are down from 2007.

Iowa City officials research other cities’ efforts to regulate panhandling.

Iowa City officials have taken measures Iowa City officials have taken to collect change. Signs would urge pedestrians to put change in the meter, which would then be distributed to social programs, instead of paying the panhandlers directly.

Developers pitch green business park

The projected value of the development could be as much as $200 million.

By MARIE LYNES

Iowa City could soon be home to the nation’s first “Macaron Green” business park. City officials are considering a plan that could revolve around the campus of the University of Iowa’s business school and a new commercial section as well as offices. The project could provide a lot of job opportunities for Iowa City residents.

He also noted Iowa City’s property-tax base would increase because of the development and could be a source of economic development.

“Hopefully this will also help the UI’s budget in the state,” Pettis said.

Development Committees Chairperson Jennifer Brinkman said the Commission has recommended the idea to the City Council. The council will likely vote on the plan this spring.

The developer estimates the framework for the project will cost around $100 million, which includes installing sewage and water lines, a road, and a parking garage. The first office building could be ready by 2010, and the construction of the entire development should be completed within seven years.

Health reform could help

Iowa students using the university’s student insurance program are at risk of losing their coverage when they turn 20 as part of the national health-care reform. Health-care reform could help benefit students, as they may not be able to find a policy that meets their needs. The plan hinges on the UI’s health-insurance director of UI Human Resources, Pete Sanders.

“Namely, the law could extend parental coverage to young people,” Sanders said. “This is good for students,” he said.

Thursday night drinking is an important issue that affects the University of Iowa. According to the Daily Iowan, the newspaper of the University of Iowa, Thursday nights are referred to as "party nights" due to the high occurrence of alcohol-related incidents.

There have been concerns regarding the number of ER visits due to alcohol-related issues, with the University of Iowa Hospital and Clinics reporting 21.3 percent alcohol-related ER visits in 2007-2008. The number of ER visits due to alcohol decreased from 72 in 2007 to 69 in 2008. However, the exact cause of this decrease is not clear, as there were other factors that also affected the numbers.

Emergency Treatment Services, a student-run program, has seen an increase in demand for their services. The program provides support and resources to students who need assistance with alcohol-related issues.

The University of Iowa has implemented several initiatives to reduce binge drinking among students, including providing alcohol education courses for students. These initiatives are designed to increase students' awareness of the risks associated with binge drinking and to promote healthier drinking habits.

The University of Iowa has also taken steps to improve the safety and security of the campus. The University has increased the number of security officers and implemented new policies to address aggressive and panhandling behavior. These efforts are aimed at reducing the number of incidents that occur on campus.

In conclusion, the University of Iowa is committed to reducing binge drinking and creating a safer and healthier campus environment. The University has taken several steps to address these issues, and these efforts will continue to be important in the coming years.

Recent federal student loan legislation a win for simplification, higher-education accessibility

The recent changes to the student lending market will go a long way toward cutting the ranks of role private lenders in the student-loan market. Under the measure, the federal government will guarantee — money that was meant to make the private sector’s loans to students more profitable and more secure — and instead, funnel the money directly to students through the Federal Direct Loan Program. At the UI, there won’t be much of a direct effect, because the University of Iowa, an institution enrolled in the Federal Direct Lending program for years.

Many detractors have framed the legislation as a “win, win, win” takeaway of the industry. It certainly true that the legislation will substantially reduce the government’s role in the student-loan world. But hey, at least I’ll know what my $125,000 is going to make me. If it’s not true that the federal government makes college degrees more available and affordable

Warner said that in the years prior to the UI’s participation in the Federal Direct Lending Program, students and their families had to go through a range of parties with all of the paperwork involved in the process. For the Office of Financial Aid, said the amount of paperwork involved in working with the university and universities insured and guarantees a stifling. The measure will be a win for students who were relying on private institutions, Warner said, because it will allow them to apply for, the process and pay them back.

But what does any of this entail for the UI’s students? At least a metaphorically furious at him for thinking about it; when Obama’s approval rating last week in Iowa City: green, foggy, to use the polite term, a cause of death, a notion of morality with anti-sunny day protesters. Perhaps growing up in the health-reform bill is quite a bit like a sunny, Armageddon all the time. Well, maybe. But a culture of dangerism is, well, hilarious. I mean, people, come on —

Honoring a hero

Late Mexican-American activist César Chávez's legacy lives on in Iowa.

César Chávez ranks with Martin Luther King Jr. in his efforts to secure agricultural laborers' rights. His peaceful leadership and achievements have inspired many to continue his work in Iowa and beyond.

On Friday, March 26, the Latino Native American Cultural Center hosted a potluck celebrating Native American Heritage Month on Nov. 19. The event will feature photos of César Chávez and his life's work, as well as a presentation by Omar Valerio-Jiménez, the president of the UI Latino Law Students Association.

Valerio-Jiménez shared stories about Chávez's life and work, including his early life growing up in poverty and his eventual leadership of the United Farm Workers union. He emphasized Chávez's goal of creating a fair wage, decent working conditions, and respect for farm workers.

Valerio-Jiménez also discussed the impact of Chávez's work on the Iowa community, particularly in regards to labor rights. He noted the similarities between Chávez's struggle for immigrant rights and the ongoing fight for civil rights in Iowa.

The event also featured a raffle with prizes such as a gift card to Mondo Drag and a set of tickets to the Iowa City Jazz Festival. All proceeds went to support the Latino Native American Cultural Center.

Chávez's legacy continues to inspire people today. As Valerio-Jiménez said, "It's a progression of songwriting."
A passion for teaching and for film

David Gould devotes his time and creativity to students and film.

By TOMMY MORGAN JR.

David Gould, creativity and passion are key to the learning experience.

“The word I would probably use is passion,” said son Nathan Gould in describing his father. “He really brings that fully to every-thing he’s doing.”

As an undergraduate, Gould studied studio art at Northern Illinois University; then came to the UI to get an M.F.A. in painting. While here, he took a class in leisure studies, enjoyed the discipline, and eventually switched areas.

During his career, David Gould took time off from teaching to focus on other projects. One spring, though, one of his nephews, who was studying at the UI and wanted to take a class with Gould, was diagnosed with cancer.

“He had always wanted me to go back to teaching,” the 50-year-old said. Gould’s nephew died that summer, and the experience had a profound effect on him and his thoughts on his studies.

“The word I would probably use is passion,” said son Nathan Gould in describing his father. “He really brings that fully to everything he’s doing.”

“[That] very single student who comes in there is changed, is different, and that I’ve made a difference in their lives” is his goal for teaching, Gould said.

The passion for the arts that it seems his students may have hid is one that Gould wears on his sleeve.

In addition to teaching at the UI, Gould is also a renowned filmmaker. His films have been shown on HBO, and in 1999, he won a Regional Emmy for one of his first videos, The Search for Meaning. Gould is finishing a documentary that he hopes will premiere this fall about Hatun Surucu, a Muslim woman who was killed by her brother for “dishonoring” her family.

“It’s taken me to all kinds of learning experiences,” Gould said.

McAffery, who has yet to do his job contract, will do so in the coming weeks, he said, before the polished resume and a history of 10 years of coaching. His first season at Iowa, he led the Hawkeyes to their worst six games the year before to start the season.

In each of his last four seasons with the Hawkeyes, they went 20-plus games.

The base of the university that at Iowa, he will come on the recruiting trail and in the practice gym, McAffery said: "He has talked to the Hawkeyes' four signed recruits and plans to meet with 25 more prospects.

"I do know one thing every team wants, and that's that we are going to need the sequence," McAffery said. "We want to fill Carver again. We have six of the ten championships, and we want to go to all 10." McAffery said.

Described by his wife as a "troublesome teacher," McAffery sparred Benton Ball and St. Alkimos to become the Hawkeyes' next coach.

"It's going to be a place he could raise his family, a place in which he could recruit and compete and have a program in which he could restore a once-proud program to its former glory.

"I can promise you that We're going to compete," McAffery said. "We're going to play the game the way it's going to be played."

"We're still a very young team," McAffery said. "We're going to have to learn how to do some things differently. It was a lot of fun, we'll come back and improve our performance."

Those in Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Monday also watched Iowa's 10 regular-season games. The Hawkeyes are 0-2 against Michigan State and Michigan State is 2-0 against the Hawkeyes.

"I think this is going to fill the base," McAffery said. "I think this is going to fill the base."

The Iowa men’s golf team bounced back to earn second place at the Spring Break Invitational.

"I was completely calm. I felt what was happening, and I got really comfortable with one of those guys to get better so we can contend for a championship."

Hawkeyes have more confidence

By JESSE SMITH

The No. 42 Iowa men’s golf team entered the Florida Atlantic University Spring Break Invitational with a tough taste on the tongue after last year’s eighth-place finish. They couldn’t turn things around in the first round, landing a 295 (plus 9) in the first round of the 2005 event, a score that left Iowa comfortably tied for second going into the second day. That nine-shot-per-score was the Hawkeyes’ lowest round of last year’s tournament.

However, head coach Mark Hankins’ team did just the opposite in this year’s competition.

The Hawkeyes started off slowly with a first-round score of 295 (plus 11). But, the Hawks hit a roaring seven-shot jump in the standings. "I think we just had a better focus and better state of mind this year," Hankins said. "I feel like we just hung in there and let everybody else come in and do their rounds, but we got some help from different areas, and everyone just kind of came up with a good team score." Iowa broke back into the ninth-place spot by carding a second round 65 (minus 6) -- the third lowest 18-hole score in program history.

Sophomore Barrett Kalpin was particularly motivated after coming off an unofficial showing at the Callaway Collegiate Match-Play Tournament on March 21-22.

Kalpin added to the Hawkeyes’ historic weekend, when he fired home a second-round 65 (minus 6) -- the third lowest 18-hole score in program history. "Not only did the second round go well, I also helped boost the team into fourth place going into Sunday’s final round".

Kalpin said that as the tournament progressed, the team got more comfortable with the course, which led to a boost in confidence. "I got off to a great start in second round". "Kalpin said I got really comfortable with what was happening, and I was completely calm. I felt like I could do anything I wanted on the golf course. That confidence from that good start helped me through the rest of the tournament." The Hawkeyes struggled on the back nine, and the team finished the day with a 54-hole score of 860 (plus 8), 18 shots shy of tournament champion.

Last year, Iowa entered the final day of competition tied for eighth and never moved up.

This year, the Hawkeyes posted an even par at 284 to earn themselves second place. Iowa carded a 54-hole total of 860 (plus 8), 18 shots shy of tournament champion Illinois and a 24-stroke improvement from last year.

Hankins said the Hawkeyes are happy with the second-place finish, but they are definitely not satisfied. "As good as second is, it’s still second by a lot," he said. "So we need to find a way individually for each one of those guys to get better so we can contend for a championship."
