Magic may be lost this season

Residents expressed concerns about the move at a forum on Tuesday.

By LESLIE SIEVERS

Jeremy Freerks, one of the founders of tailgating crew Magic Bus, walked into a meeting room in the Iowa City Public Library on Tuesday night and shook his head.

“This is how big the room is?” asked Freerks, the former president of the Iowa City Rugby Club. “Good luck.”

Minutes later, approximately 30 people filled the room for a city public forum to address the Magic Bus’ planned move to a new, more residential location on the 100 block of Woodside Drive.

Several residents of the area expressed concern about the possible arrival of the Magic Bus in their neighborhood.

In the end, they handed a petition against the move to Doug Bevent, the Iowa City director of Housing and Inspection Services.

UI research funding jumps

The increase in funding includes more than 40 percent in stimulus funds.

Professor Michael Apicella has worked to find a cure for the bacteria responsible for most children’s ear infections — and the No. 1 cause children go to the doctor — for the past 30 years.

Last year, he was one of many University of Iowa researchers to receive funding for research — fiscal 2010 yielded a record number of $466.5 million in external funding for research, a 9 percent increase from the year before.

“We’re really getting close to developing an antibiotic that could fight the most resistant children against this infection,” Apicella said about the University’s antibiotic development.

Second Art Museum candidate visits

He is the executive director of the Figge Art Museum in Davenport.

By CLAY PERLMAN

At age 18, Sean O’Harrow had his life goal figured out. He would become a museum director. He finally achieved that goal in 2007, when he became the new executive director of the relatively new Figge Art Museum in Davenport. Three years later, he is a finalist for the position of director of the University of Iowa Museum of Art.

The native of Hawaii, the second finalist to visit Iowa City, spoke to a crowd of around 100 at a forum Tuesday in the Pappajohn Biomedical Center. He opened the talk with past experiences, including one at age 7, when he spent nearly every day at the Honolulu Academy of Art.

“I am a magnificent, magnificent art museum, and this was a museum where I look — I spent 10 years at this museum,” O’Harrow said. He went on to describe the artwork he passed every day, remembering one particular painting by James Abbott McNeill Whistler called Portrait of Emily, as “the most beautiful painting he had ever seen.”

His love for art continued through his college years at Cambridge University, where he studied art history from Cambridge University.

Pet therapy can reduce stress, lower blood pressure, and promote well-being.

Though she sat quietly in her chair at first, 5-year-old Emma Breitfelder’s freckled face brightened into a wide smile when Stuart approached her.

“The two are old friends.”

“Stu” — a black mixed-breed dog — visited Breitfelder in day that the city’s controversial regulation does not comply with state code, and he ordered the removal of the City Council’s decision to deny the renewal of the liquor license for 3rd Base, 114 E. College St. In his order, he noted the definition of a “police visit” is unclear and that the rates did not make clear if the person charged with a PAULA had consumed alcohol in the bar.

3rd Base, also known as the FieldHouse, and El Cattura, which has since closed, were the first two bars whose liquor- license renewals were denied by the council under the new rule.

Both appealed to the state, and Administrative Law Judge Margaret LaMarche sided with the bars at December 2009.

A different kind of banker

BY TYLER HARRIS

On a regular basis, Sarah Witry goes to two different places: a food bank and a shelter. She has a long list of things she enjoys about her jobs. She said her experience is rewarding.

"Food is really tied in with our culture and how we look at other people," said Witry, standing in the Food Bank's produce section where the smell of bananas lingered and bags of cereal boxes sat on tables above packaged pop cans.

But even though the 36-year-old enjoys her job, it is not an easy task.

Her husband, Matthew Witry, a graduate student at the UI College of Pharmacy, said social workers often call his wife to talk about their cases, so she answers; and Sarah's job is no different.

However, Witry, who received her bachelor's degree from the University of Iowa School of Human Services in 2009, pointed out that her schedule is a little hectic when more volunteers are available during the school year.

Witry was once a volunteer at the Crisis Center in Iowa City, starting in 2003 as a social work student and then interning at the center as a graduate student.

"I really wanted to kind of give back some effort," she said. "This really felt like what my passion is."

In the money, in the race

They say money can't buy happiness—but can it buy you a seat in Congress? Money may not grow on trees, but it can make or break a campaign if you want to win an election. Each election cycle is filled with stories of candidates who work tirelessly to raise funds, and how much these funds can affect the outcome of an election. But how much money is enough to win? At what point do donations stop being a form of expression and become a form of corruption?

In the last five years, the cost of running for Congress and the Senate has continued to rise, with the average campaign war chest growing to over $5 million for Senate campaigns and $500,000 for House races. However, the cost of running for office is not just limited to these large sums. Candidates must also consider the cost of advertising, staff salaries, and other expenses that come with running a campaign.

The National Institute on Money in Politics recently released a report that found that in the 2018 midterm elections, candidates spent an average of $1.4 million to win a Senate seat and $700,000 to win a House seat. While these numbers are concerning, they are not unprecedented. In 2016, Donald Trump spent $100 million of his own money to win the presidency, and in 2020, Joe Biden spent $90 million to win the White House.

In the end, while money may not be the only thing that matters in an election, it certainly plays a significant role. Candidates who have the financial resources to run a successful campaign are more likely to win than those who do not. But with the cost of elections continuing to rise, it is becoming increasingly difficult for candidates to raise the necessary funds to succeed.

It is important to remember that money is not the only thing that matters in an election. Candidates must also have a strong message, a clear plan for the future, and a passion for the issues they care about. But as we have seen in recent years, money can make or break a campaign. And in the end, it is up to the voters to decide who they believe has the best plan to fix the problems facing our country.

Steven and Reefka Schneider bring life on the Mexican border to Iowa City with a reading at Prairie Lights.

Steven and Reefka Schneider celebrate the launch of Borderlines: Drawing Border Lives at Nuevo Santander Gallery in McAllen, Texas, during April Art Walk.

Borderlines: Drawing Border Lives by Reefka Schneider and Steven Schneider is written in English and Spanish so that the people on both sides of the border can read and share the book together.

“The gallery is where we put all our drawings about our lives on the border. The way we put together the different art forms, art history, and poetry, is an evolving process,” Reefka Schneider said.

“This whole thing just grew from being an expression of the people around us on both sides of the border,” she added.

Through the drawings, people from more than 100 border residents, only 25 accompanied by Steven Schneider, poems are featured in Borderlines.

Both Schneider are knowledgeable for their work as individual artists, and there is little doubt whether their artwork and poetry can be said to be alike alone. But both also for the community, their work wouldn’t be near as strong without its counterpart.

“We can make powerful statement through our poetry and artwork,” Steven Schneider said. “So each poem is in Mexico, and each closely at the top with the other.”

Borderlines puts a human face on a subject that is often polarizing in the United States, where the largest number of immigrants is from Mexico. The book is written in both English and Spanish, with the goal of reaching as many people as possible. The images are in two languages, and the captions are in English and Spanish.

The book is divided into three parts: the lives of the subjects drawn in black, chalk, and watercolor; the subjects of the book was an evolvementary process,” Reefka Schneider said. “That whole thing just grew from being an expression of the people around us on both sides of the border.”

Although the people’s stories are so different from the people’s real lives or from his imagination in the book, both their hardships and happiness come true.

Both Schneiders are known nationwide for their work as individual artists, and there is little doubt whether their artwork and poetry can be said to be alike alone. But both also for the community, their work wouldn’t be near as strong without its counterpart.

“The hard thing, and what we’re getting good at, is to keep the energy alive,” Reefka Schneider said.

“I’m not always here. It’s always full of challenges every time,” he said. “There are no stereotypical answers to things, and that’s the fun.”

Derrek Lee hit a go-ahead run shot off Astro reliever Brandon Lyon (5-4) in the seventh inning Tuesday in Chicago. The Cubs came back from a six-run deficit to beat Houston, 14-7.

The win sets up a second-round game against the winners of an elimination contest, but it's an all-Iowa affair. Bradley's Mackenzie Diamond and Quay's Katherine Gibbons have also been selected for Cullen/Goodfellow's third-place field Tuesday in the summer league tournament. Long Beach State's Tricia Nesbitt's ability to create opportunities on both ends of the floor has earned it the top seed in the field.

Iowa's Weslynn Rose leads the nation — in the second point line — in the second point line after shooting only 30 percent in the first. The win sets up a second-round game against Northern Iowa forward Chip Hawkins of the University of Sioux City. Ramirez's/Gatens will be in town again. Ramirez said he wasn't consistently able to get shots because of Cully's penetration, and I think they finally relaxed a little and said, 'Hey, we're going to open up, and we're going to knock them down.'

The Cubs bullpen, however, got 18 hits for the win. The Cubs bullpen has been strong all season, and they did not disappoint in this game. The Cubs bullpen allowed only four runs in the final three innings to clinch the victory.

Despite the recent hot shooting, the Cubs are still the favorites to win the tournament. It's hard to blame them for being confident — they haven't lost a game since June 26.

"We've been loving this whole summer, and I think we're going to win every game we've been getting ready for," Ramirez said. "I think each other single game is a little bit different, but we're still the favorites to win it all." Ramirez said.

"We're excited about it and ready to play," Ramirez said.

Cubs' Pinella to hang up cleats

By ANDREW SEILDEN

CHICAGO — Manager Lou Pinella announced Tuesday that he will retire at the end of the season, ending a shared and often colorful career that included 18 years in the majors as a player and another nine as a manager.

The 66-year-old Pinella, who is in his 10th season with the World Series in his career as a manager, said his three chờship rings, said he was unapologetic in his response. "I've always been honest with myself," he said. "I think my career is over, but I won't keep the momentum going more than anything else, and win as many games as we can get back in this pennant run.

"Entering Tuesday's game against Houston, Pinella's overall record is 1,305-1,151 and he has been in only Tony La Russa, Barry Cox, and Joe Torre as active then the Chicago Cubs, slugger Derrick Lee, said he was sure that Pinella would be missed. "He's done everything," Lee said. "He takes the losses extremely hard." Lee said he had a great cause and put a lot of time into that game."

No surprises here. Both your Uncle Marc and Monica’s Iowa City Ready-Mix fell to L.L. Pelling/Goodfellow Printing, 69-67, dropping from playoff consideration with a league-wide 2-1 record Tuesday at the North Liberty Community Center.

An unexpected zone defense from Bob’s/Ready-Mix wasn’t enough to keep Iowa freshman Zach McCabe and sophomore Eric May from crushing through the paint and burying 5-pointers on the perimeter.

“I was just trying to take some struggles,” McCabe said.
