Founder of John's dies

The grocer and his family have owned the East Market location since 1948.

By ARIANA WITT
ariana-witt@uiowa.edu

John Alberhasky was working as a bartender for his brother Bernie more than 60 years ago when a good friend sold him his future, recalled son Bill Alberhasky.

"The guy just said, 'John why don't you buy my store; I want to retire,'" Bill said. "So he did."

With that purchase in 1948, a staple of the Iowa City community began on the intersection of Market and Gilbert Streets. And though 28 other corner markets have come and gone since then John's Grocery still remains. Sons, grandchildren, and loyal customers alike say its success can be credited to one man — John Alberhasky.

"Every customer and every last bit of charity work, he cared about," said Alberhasky's grandson, Doug Alberhasky. "Iowa City lost one of its greatest icons and will be hard pressed to find another soul that is as caring as John."

John Alberhasky, the store's former owner, died Thursday.

City seeks diverse downtown

Some officials say a permanent 21-ordinance would result in fewer bars and more variety.

By CATHRYN SLOANE

A more diverse downtown.

That is what Iowa City city councilors have long said they want for the area currently dominated by bars. And now, city officials are working to start an organization specifically designed to help new businesses succeed.

Earlier this year, Iowa City officials invested $45,000 in a feasibility study to evaluate the economic climate of downtown. The study found that the city would benefit from establishing an organization — what it terms an "incubator" — to provide services and support for new companies, such as specialized equipment, government grant or loan assistance, and networking.

The study, prepared by the Regional Business Center at the University of Northern Iowa, suggested that the organization, which would be the fourth of its kind in Iowa City, should be in place by May 2011. This center would differ from others in the city by focusing on "attracting large numbers of early stage entrepreneurs," according to the study.

"We're looking at ways in which we could work with the community to provide these services that our study says would be successful," said Wendy Ford, Iowa City's economic-development coordinator.

According to a National Business Incubation Association report cited in the study, 87 percent of businesses helped by such organizations were still operating after five years, compared with 52 percent of the general business population.

The study was completed before the 21-ordinance took effect, but some say if the ordinance remains after the November election, many downtown bars will close and leave empty spaces for new businesses. Councilors said they are hoping to add more variety to downtown in the coming years.

Councilor Mike Wright agreed a permanent 21-ordinance would likely mean change to the type of businesses downtown,

The children, who all have difficulties

The Iowa City School District has roughly 305 paraeducators who specialize in helping students with special needs —

12th Latino Conference makes Iowa City return

The Latino Conference dances its way back to Iowa City this weekend.

By MAX FREUND
maxwell-freund@uiowa.edu

On the gray floor of a hot Halsey Hall dance room on Thursday, five University of Iowa dance students moved together, alternately holding hands, rotating around each other, and lifting each other into the air as they prepared for Friday night.

The group will perform the dance Loucura Mortal (Mortal Madness) — one of the many attractions of the 12th-annual Latino Conference — a state event held in Iowa City for the first time in 10 years.

"I think it was a huge honor to be asked to do this piece," said UI junior Kim Staniforth with sweat beading on her blue headband. "To bring it together and see other performers and everybody share the art is really an incredible thing to be a part of."

Dance won't be the only attraction luring cultural enthusiasts.

Today, a youth summit will be held at the IMU, with the keynote speech by Professor William Perez of Claremont Graduate University. Perez is an expert in the social and psychological development of immigrant youth.

In addition, workshops at the Summit will focus on serious topics such as gang involvement and access to higher education, as well as light-hearted dance-theme events. Organizers expect to have 200 high-school students from around the state in attendance, said

ELECTION 2010

Little effect seen in Obama endorsement

Obama encouraged volunteering in his endorsement of Gov. Chet Culver.

By ALISON SULLIVAN
alison-sullivan@uiowa.edu

Experts and opponents said President Obama's official endorsement of Gov. Chet Culver in the midterm election won't hold much weight, but Democrats said the move only emphasizes Culver's accomplishments.

Obama officially endorsed the current governor, a Democrat, Thursday through an e-mail to supporters.

University of Iowa Associate Professor of political science Cary Covington said a national figure's support in a gubernatorial race is unlikely to drastically change voters' minds.

"A more likely effect would be to encourage and motivate Democrats who are already supportive of the governor," he said.

Paid for by the Democratic National Committee, Obama's e-mail called on Iowa voters to be "allies."

"I've seen firsthand what Iowans can do when an election comes down to the wire — and I need you to give Chet the same effort this year that you gave me in 2008," Obama wrote in the e-mail, encouraging volunteers to spread the word.

Democrats appreciate the president's support, but they said they are not surprised. The endorsement just "underscores" Culver's accomplishments, said Culver spokesman Troy Price.

"There's no president in modern history who has been in Iowa more," he said. "He recognizes [Culver's] hard work."

But representatives of Culver's Republican challenger, former Gov. Terry Branstad, said the endorsement sheds a negative light on the incumbent's campaign.

"Gov. Culver, among his Democratic base, is so low that it has now become news when a president from his own party endor-es him 19 days before an election," said Branstad spokesman Tim Albrecht. "The only endorsement that matters is the one that comes from Iowans."

UI sophomore Nic Pottebaum, the head of Students for Branstad, also feels the endorsement will not have any great effect on voter's opinions.

"They're voting for a candidate and not for those who are endorsing [them]," he said.

Obama highlighted Culver's efforts in renewable energy, flood recovery, and Iowa's stake in the nation's economic recovery.

"Hopefully, it will inspire people to volunteer," said the UI Democratic head Margaret Murphy, noting that the campaign has had a large turnout of volunteers and students so far.

UI students see little change in their stances from today's announcement.

"Yeah, he is the president of the United States," said sophomore Ben Mackey. "That's a lot of credibility behind the name."

But ultimately, Mackey said, it's just a name.

"It doesn't add a lot to [Culver's] merit as a candidate," he said.

UI junior Erica Blair supports Culver, though she admitted the endorsement doesn't change her perspective too much.

"It only reaffirms my opinion," she said.

Emu the star of benefit

Despite the recent meat shortage, the emu cook-off was a success.

By LILY HENDERSON
lily-henderson@uiowa.edu

Through the doors of Old Brick stood numerous tables lightly draped in a turquoise-colored cloth — representing the natural color of large emu eggs.

Thursday night's event at 26 E. Market St. consisted of a cook-off of emu dishes, wine and beer tasting, and a silent auction — with all proceeds going to the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society.

The cook-off is the brainchild of Sandy McAntire, an emu farmer who near in Chelsea, Iowa. McAntire said the purpose was to reveal what a great bird emu is and also to support people diagnosed with blood cancer.

A turnout of around 25 people and plenty of well-prepared food made the night a success — they raised approximately $500.

McAntire initially planned the Iowa City cook-off for mid-August, but the event had to be postponed — there was a shortage of the meat because of the summer heat.

"When loading birds onto a trailer, hauling livestock close together in the heat is not fun for anyone, and I didn't want to put my emus through that, either," McAntire said.

The National American Emu Association held a convention earlier this summer and used up all the available processed emu meat, causing emu enthusiasts to wait until more birds were butchered.

Raising the large bird, a relative of the ostrich, in Iowa isn't as rare as some may think.

Donnie Bond, who participated in last year's event, owns an emu farm around 35 miles outside of Iowa City.

He said he's noticed an increase in the popularity of the meat.

In 1996, a fellow farmer told him she was only receiving $2 for each emu. Today, Bond is making $5 for every pound of meat and more for the oil.

Trilby Sedlacek, a Cedar Rapids practicing herbalist, said her new favorite oil to use comes from emu.

"It [emu oil] felt like it went deeper into my skin," she said. "I have extremely sensitive skin, and it didn't burn."

Chefs from Devotay, 117 N. Linn St., Leaf Kitchen, 301 Kirkwood Ave., and Zins in Cedar Rapids all competed in Thursday's emu throw-down.

All three participating restaurants won awards at the end of the night. But sous chef Jesse Duer and server Emily Qual of Leaf Kitchen left with the satisfaction that their cold tamarind and chili seared emu with shanghai shoots and pickled green tomatoes dish was the winner of the people's choice competition.

"I just like to cook good food and do my best," Duer said.

Local Iowa City restaurant Devotay also cooks the delicacy in its emu empanadas, a traditional Spanish pastry.

"Our [empanadas] are stuffed with emu, rice, peppers, cheese, onions, and a variety of spices," said Daniel Knowles, the chef de cuisine at Devotay. "They are rich, savory, and very wholesome."

Attorney: City did not discriminate

Iowa City did not violate the Fair Housing Act nor did it discriminate against minorities or families as the Housing Fellowship has alleged, City Attorney Eleanor Dilkes determined.

In response to further claims of discriminatory treatment on the part of the city, Dilkes said she found no evidence the city intentionally discriminated against minorities or families. Recent opinions in the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals support Dilkes' defense, she wrote.

The Iowa City City Council will take up the issue of affordable housing at its meeting on Oct. 25, she said.

Police investigate robbery

Iowa City police are investigating an incident on Tuesday where a victim was reportedly robbed and beaten by a group of men. Officers responded to the 400 block of South Johnson Street for a robbery report at 8:35 p.m.

Police said the male victim was walking in the alley behind 433 S. Johnson St. when he was approached by five men. One man grabbed his shoulder and punched him in the face, causing the victim to fall to the ground. Two men reportedly began kicking him in the head as the group went through his pockets, stealing his cigarettes before running northbound out of the alley.

The victim described the men as five black males. One was about 6-2, wearing a black T-shirt and shorts. Another was about 5-6 with a large Afro hairstyle, and a third was 5-4, weighing around 200 pounds and wearing an oversized shirt. He could give no description for the remaining two.

Police said the victim had no visible injuries but said his head was in pain.

whether it be mental disabilities, language problems, or emotional and behavioral issues.

They assist teachers with helping students communicate with fellow classmates, and teach self-care and independence, said Lisa Corr, a paraeducator at Twain, 1355 DeForest Ave. "This one-on-one individualized service is better for them than being in general education with 20 children and one adult," said Jordan Gilliam, a Twain paraeducator.

Iowa City School District officials have decided to spend $135,000 to hire 11 more paraeducators for the 2010-11 school year, with the funds coming from a $1.2 million federal grant. Federal officials awarded the four-year grant in 2008, and officials plan to hire paraeducators specifically in the areas of autism, early intervention, and early childhood special-education areas, said Cheryl Kiburz, the director of Special Services.

And while they mainly assist teachers by working with special-education students, they also supervise recess, study hall, and lunch periods, said Jim Pedersen, the district's director of Human Resources.

In another Twain classroom on Thursday, one teacher and three paraeducators worked one-on-one with students to help them learn how to deal with frustration and anger.

"It would be very different without paraeducators, especially in an environment like this," Gilliam said, referring to the students' behavioral challenges.

The class is designed for individualized attention, said teacher Lisa-Ann Johnson. The instructors sometimes work in small groups to help transition them to general education, she said.

The district will work with the Grant Wood Area

Education Agency to hire and train new special-education paraeducators, as they have done in the past, said Assistant Superintendent Ann Feldmann.

"It really is a team process, so it is a cooperation of general education and special-education teams working together," she said.

Nationally, the number of students in special education has increased gradually but steadily throughout the years, said Tom Parrish, a managing research scientist for the America Institutes of Research.

Approximately 14 percent of students are in special education nationally — up from 12 percent 10 years ago, Parrish said.

While the Iowa City district did not have exact numbers, officials said they have seen enough of an increase in the number of students needing special-education classes to warrant the hiring of new paraeducators.

"An extra pair of eyes, an extra supervisor in the room," said Twain paraeducator Louis Munoz. "Whether it's a regular classroom or special education it's always good to have a backup."

He was 92.

"He loved life, he loved to laugh, he loved to sing," said Jerry Alberhasky, another of his sons and one of his seven children. "I loved working for him."

John's Grocery, 401 E. Market Street, is still training Alberhasky's remaining grandchildren, Doug said, recalling his earliest memories of working revolved around "following grandpa at the apron."

But there's one memory that sticks with him — away from the store — when Doug was trying to jump across Ralston Creek.

"I was just about there and got stuck," he said. "Grandpa came around and said, 'What are you doing?' I said, 'I made a stupid,' so he said, 'I'll give you a stupid.'" of John's for more than 40 years, said he was surprised by Alberhasky's personality when they first met.

John, Doug said, used his humor to help people learn from their mistakes.

"I came here from Texas and wasn't use to having someone behind the counter who was as educated as John," Drum said.

John retired from the store in the late 1980s, but Drum said he still recalls his days behind the counter.

"I came in one day, and John was slicing cheese at the deli counter," he said. "I decided to ring the bell, but I knew he saw me. John says, 'Who do you think you are, Quasimodo?' That's just who he was, a kidder."

John enlisted in the Navy following Pearl Harbor, a little over year after he married Erna, to whom her remained married almost 69 years.

Upon returning, John attended the University of Iowa for two years after completing his tour.

But hoping to support two children and a wife, Bill said, he turned away from the bartending gig and to the grocery business.

"Once a grocery business gets in your blood, you're stuck with it," Bill said.

And every member of the Alberhasky family has been stuck with it, he said, including himself. Bill, started working along side his father when he was 8.

And those times, he said, could be rough.

There will be a traditional Aztec performance, a samba workshop taught by UI dance Professor Armando Duarte, and dances by members of the National Ballet of Mexico, among others. One performance by the National Ballet of Mexico, which waived its normal $12,000 fee for this event, was choreographed by UI dance Assistant Professor Eloy Barragán.

"I saw a painting of cicadas called Los Caminantes, and when I see it I envision people walking," Barragán said, describing the inspiration for the performance piece. "I see this piece is like a path with direction."

Barragán, who left his native Mexico City at 16, has spent much of his professional career traveling the world — dancing in New York, Germany, Belgium, and southern France.

"People leave their country and have to follow their own career and dreams," he said. "They get a lot of influence from different places; sometimes you go back, sometimes you don't, but the roots of your culture will remain with you and will be expressed in your art."

The events' festivities will last into the evening with the dance performance Celebremos, and there will be a full day of dancing, speeches, and workshops on Saturday at West High, 2901 Melrose Ave.

And the diversity within the groups represented at the conference is building excitement.

"I think that the matter of the event is really significant, not only to the Latin culture, but to the academic community, and the community outside of Iowa," said Duarte, a native of Brazil. "Any physical manifestation where you can bring an array of diversity to the existing environment brings attention, and enriches people's lives."

especially with the city ordinance prohibiting new bars from opening within 500 feet of existing ones.

This rule may give other types of businesses a chance to move in, but the large size of many existing bars may pose a challenge for retail stores.

That's why Councilor Regenia Bailey said she could foresee music venues using the locations, and Wright noted theaters could move into the spaces.

Councilor Connie Champion said she has no fears for downtown, despite an decrease in sales for some businesses.

"I don't see it to be doomed," she said. "I think it's going to be healthy."

But Al Risk, the owner of Pizza on Dubuque, 5 S. Dubuque St., said its weekend sales have dropped by nearly 30 percent since the 21-ordinance went into effect, and he wants the ordinance to be repealed.

"The future of my business depends on this vote," he said. "It's just killing us."

Pita Pit, 113 Iowa Ave., has also seen its business take a significant hit. Manager Jen Conway said sales have decreased a couple thousand dollars a week.

While food venues that serve a late-night crowd are suffering, retail stores haven't seen the same effect. And while things downtown may not change right away, an expert said there may be long-term effects.

Paul Heath, director of the University of Iowa Small Business Development Center, said he thinks if the 21-ordinance stays in place, lease rates downtown could be lowered, increasing accessibility to entrepreneurs.

"You can't change businesses overnight, but in the long-term, the mix of businesses will change," Heath said.

One Iowa start-up has recently taken advantage of some space downtown. Raygun, a novelty T-shirt shop with its first store in Des Moines, opened this month at 103 E. College St.

Owner Mike Draper said the location is prime because students are the store's target customers.

And Nick Arnold, the executive director of the Iowa City Downtown Association, said one of the most important things is to make sure downtown has plenty of activities to offer the community.

"That is always the goal, to have diverse options for downtown," he said. "That is what makes it the unique destination, having numerous options when you come down here."

UI officials should increase sexual-violence awareness efforts

Are students aware of the necessary steps and actions to take if they are sexually assaulted? Are University of Iowa officials doing enough to circulate education on these matters?

Earlier this month, a woman was reportedly sexually assaulted in Hubbard Park. The woman reported the incident to the UI University Housing and Dining Department, rather than the police; consequently, an investigation did not take place. The recent news only underscored the importance of knowing where to turn if sexually assaulted.

The UI website states, "At the University of Iowa, fostering a climate of safety and respect is an essential priority." But that priority should not just be restricted to a single webpage. While the community and UI have excellent resources such as the Rape Victim Advocacy Program, the Editorial Board would like to offer a few recommendations.

The UI offers educational services through Student Health, the Women's Resource Action Center, RVAP, and other small programs. Each April is National Sexual Assault Awareness Month, during which RVAP puts on campus events. This past April, the last two weeks of the month included prayer services, vigils, and wearing ribbons.

While these programs are admirable and beneficial, we have a few additional recommendations that could engender increased student awareness:

- The UI also needs to do more than just rely on an outside organization to disseminate knowledge about what to do after a sexually violent encounter. The university has its required Nformd course for freshmen, but again, these lessons are often overlooked or forgotten during times of distress. The UI should make informing students about how to react to these incidences a top priority. The information should be continuously available, out in the open, and clearly evident to the entire campus.

- Though students may have attended informational sessions or received fliers, one's mind does not easily recall such things after a horrific event. Lectures and informational booths at residence halls and prominent places should be permanent, rather than just a feature at the end of the spring semester.

- The rape crisis line number — 319-335-6000 — should be permanently posted in various areas and buildings. The number could also be placed on the back of all student ID cards and on the inside flap of student planners. That number should be as ubiquitous as the Hawkeye logo, so it is internalized and available whenever needed.

- Local bars and businesses could also get involved in such advertising measures. RVAP executive director Karla Miller noted collaboration is key to spreading the word. She also said more can always be done to improve efforts, and the UI, Iowa City police, and nonprofit organizations should never be satisfied.

Sexual assaults are one of the least reported crimes; making students aware of the services available to them can increase the number of students who seek out help.

If students experience any form of sexual violence while on the UI campus or anywhere in Iowa City, they should know where to turn for help and what steps and actions need to be taken. The UI owes it to its students to better inform them of these options.

Your turn. Are the UI's sexual-assault education and awareness efforts adequate? Weigh in on dailyiowan.com.

'How we are hungry'

KIRSTEN JACOBSEN
kirsten-jacobsen@uiowa.edu

"Food and water were our two most basic needs. Both existed in good quantity but were somewhat unevenly distributed," Jon Stewart deadpans in Earth (The Book). "While millions of us died of starvation, millions of others were so sated they could afford to use pies as comedic projectiles."

The passage highlights a scourge that has plagued humans since the advent of mankind.

As of 2009, an astounding 1 billion people worldwide experienced chronic hunger, as tallied by the World Food Programme. In order to feed our mushrooming population, food production needs to increase by an estimated 70 percent, according to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

There's a remarkable disparity between the levels of hunger in the developing and industrialized world, yet it no longer shocks anyone. Sure, we feel bad; but our efficacy in combating the problem is so limited, we often ignore the growing pile of skeletons in the closet.

Therein lies the importance of World Food Day, which will take place Saturday. The Food and Agriculture Organization uses the day as a "call to action," addressing the still-pressing needs of the hungry. It works in cooperation with more than 450 organizations worldwide to host events, participate in a mass teleconference, and to spread awareness on behalf of those struggling on a daily basis to subsist on little to nothing. (And you thought skipping lunch hour was unbearable.)

The World Food Programme, another arm of the United Nations, has worked vigorously since its inception to reduce the yawning gap in food availability and distribute nutrients during crises. Recognizing pressing needs, the UN declared the first of its Millennium Development Goals to be "eradicating extreme poverty and hunger." Its aim? Halving incidences of hunger by 2015.

But eradicating hunger involves infinitely more than simply growing more food. Political, economic, and environmental factors have all collaborated to turn this ongoing phenomenon into a ravenous, tangled mess. In addition, in inaccessible areas of sparse population, merely donating one-time rations does little to alleviate continual starvation.

Literally thousands of organizations are combating hunger, both in the United States and internationally. So why are there still Pakistanis and North Koreans starving, while we enjoy our abundance of Halloween-theme treats and sandwich shops on every corner?

By no means am I advocating mass food redistribution or some communist rationing scheme. Instead, I would strongly urge everyone to sign the 1 Billion Hungry petition, available at 1billionhungry.org, which exhorts politicians to act on this injustice. The signatures will be presented at the U.N.'s November meeting. Once you sign, you can track your effect, petition friends to sign via Facebook and Twitter, and find out how to participate further.

(Contrary to popular opinion, you don't need to adopt eight starving orphans to fight famine.) Food shortages, however, are not relegated to developing nations with unpronounceable names.

Earlier this week, the Iowa Hunger Summit was held in Des Moines. In 2009, Iowans collected some 15.6 million pounds of food to distribute domestically and internationally. Additionally, Iowans volunteered more than 451,000 hours to food charity and hunger advocacy groups. That may be why Ambassador Tony Hall, keynote speaker at the event and director of the Alliance to End Hunger, proclaimed Iowa the "hunger-fighting capital of the world."

So on Saturday, maybe we compassionate Iowans could all skip lunch hour and take the time to prove him right. ■

Atmosphere change in Iowa City

I am a freshman at the University of Iowa. Being a resident of Iowa City has been amazing. But I am starting to wonder if I have missed out on what Iowa City used to be like.

Since I have been here, many juniors and seniors have told me the atmosphere has changed. I listen to them reminisce about the great times they used to have downtown when they were freshmen. It only saddens me to think I will not have those same memories. This is because of the 21-ordinance.

When I applied to the UI, my big brother, Tim, a UI student, had already informed me about the culture of Iowa City. So far, I have not been able to make many experiences like he did his freshman year. I can't help but feel left out. Is this fair to all UI freshmen?

I am aware many people think the ordinance is working. But I do not want the ordinance to change back so I can go to the bars to drink. I want it to change so I can simply go to the bars.

I want the opportunity to meet new people and make amazing memories, just like my brother and other upperclassmen did. I don't want to speak for everyone, but I know many people feel the same way.

Vote 'no' — change drinking culture

Do I want Iowa City to be a destination spot for underage drinking? No. Do I want the University of Iowa to be known as one of the top party schools? No. Would I be upset if some of the bars in downtown Iowa City went out of business? No.

These are three of the reasons I will vote "no" on whether the 21-ordinance should be repealed. But there are more.

Earlier this week, I attended a Johnson County Task Force on Aging-sponsored forum on this issue. Let me share with you two of the items I heard that made sense to me.

An advocate for a "yes" vote talked about the role of parents, and it triggered this thought:

There are many times our youth want to do various things and we as parents need to say "no."

This is a time when we as a community need to say "no."

An additional argument was that kids are going to drink. So isn't it best for them to drink downtown in a somewhat controlled environment rather than at house parties?

Doug Beardsley, the director of Johnson County Public Health, stated he did not accept that line of thinking. Instead, he argued we need to change the culture. He pointed out that we have made great strides in reducing smoking and we can do the same with drinking. He said a "no" vote is a step toward changing the culture, and I agree.

A "no" vote makes sense to me, and I hope it makes sense to you.

Young people around the world fight against hunger

The laureates of this year's World Food Prize represent a shift from past winners. By honoring two grass-roots organizations, Bread for the World and Heifer International, the prize recognizes the need not just for science and technology development to solve global hunger, but that it's the people on the ground — young men and women farmers — who can improve food security and alleviate malnutrition and poverty.

In fact, young people around the world are working on the ground to not only solve these problems, but to make sure that youths have the opportunity to stay in their communities, rather than migrating to cities or other countries.

As part of the Worldwatch Institute's Nourishing the Planet, we've traveled to 25 countries in sub-Saharan Africa, visiting more than 200 projects. Many of these projects focus their efforts on making sure agriculture is an attractive — and economically viable — option for youth.

In Mukono District, about an hour outside of Kampala, Uganda, Edward Mukibi, 23, and Roger Serunjogi, 22, started the Developing Innovations in School Cultivation project. They began the project in 2006 with their own money and initiative as a way to improve nutrition, environmental awareness, and food traditions and culture in Mukono by establishing school gardens at 15 preschool, day, and boarding schools. By teaching these kids early about growing, preparing, and eating food, they hope to cultivate the next generation of farmers and eaters who can preserve Uganda's culinary traditions.

Betty Nabukalu, a 16-year-old student at Kisoga Secondary School, manages her school's garden, and she described how the project has taught the students "new" methods of planting vegetables, such as how to fertilize with manure and compost. And they've learned not only that they can produce food, she said, but that they can earn money from it. Thanks to the project, students no longer see agriculture as an option of last resort but rather as a way to make money, help their communities, and preserve biodiversity.

Dov Pasternak, a scientist with the International Crops Research Institute for the Semi-Arid Tropics, has spent a decade working with smaller farmers in Niger. He is now copilotting a project called Farmers of the Future, whose goal is educating young people about sustainable agriculture. He's noticed it's difficult to get farmers to adopt to this new way of doing agriculture — you have to address people's attitudes, traditions, and backgrounds.

And in South Africa, 24-year old Zimbabwean

Sithembile Ndema works with the Food, Agriculture, and Natural Resources Policy Analysis Network and as a spokeswoman for the Farming First coalition. She does so in order to promote the importance of agriculture among her peers and to help them understand their role in creating a food-secure, economically stable Africa.

The group uses Theatre for Policy Advocacy to engage leaders, service providers, and policymakers, encourage community participation, and research the needs of women farmers. Popular theater personalities travel to communities in Mozambique and Malawi and stage performances using scripts based on the group's research. After each performance, community members, women, men, and youths engage in dialogue, giving all a chance to openly talk about the challenges they are facing without upsetting the status quo.

The work of these innovative projects and individuals — spearheaded by youths in order to educate their peers — is fostering the next generation of farmers. They're spurring excitement and interest in agricultural development that will make Africa more food secure.

Danielle Norenberg and Brian Halwell are codirectors for the Worldwatch Institute's Nourishing the Planet project.

A life with animals

The animal services officer has loved animals since she was a child.

By SAMANTHA BAEHR
samantha-baehr@uiowa.edu

Caboose, a healthy-looking pit bull, playfully tugged on Willa Hamilton in hopes of getting an outside play date.

Although petite, Hamilton easily slip Caboose into his harness and led the dog to the greenery.

Caboose appeared to be a happy dog, but his past may not have been. The dog is missing part of his ear and has several scars, which may have resulted from being involved in dog-fights, Hamilton said.

"We would never have known this dog was suffering if someone had not called and told us," she said as she held Caboose close.

Hamilton, 28, is an animal services officer at the Iowa City Animal Care and Adoption Center; her job is to protect both animals and community members as well as educate people and enforce state animal laws.

She said she prefers the title animal services officer over her official title, animal control officer, because the latter can have a bad connotation.

Hamilton has held the position for three years. She used to be a temporary kennel assistant, and she volunteered at the shelter for six years before landing a job there.

Hamilton's love for animals has been a lifelong affair. Her father always brought home animals when she was a child — once it was a box full of kittens.

While volunteering at the shelter during her time as a University of Iowa student, she said, her desire to help the shelter continued to grow.

"I actually started to skip classes to be at the shelter," she said and laughed. "That's when I knew I had to make a career out of it."

Now that she has achieved her aspiration, her personality and passion makes her a good fit for the job, said Chad Mason, an animal services assistant at the shelter.

all animals," he said. "And she isn't afraid of anything or anyone."

Although Hamilton is trained for difficult problems, she said, it can be a little frightening walking into a potentially unstable situation. People aren't always happy to see a uniformed officer come into their home and take their animal, she said.

Misha Goodman, the director of the animal facility, agreed the job is challenging and always changing.

"Officers also have to be part psychologist," Goodman said. "They are dealing with people who may be emotional for different reasons."

But Hamilton wants to show the public she is there for them — that she's not a badge that wants to come and take away their animals. One of her favorite parts of the job is being a resource for people, she said.

"I want to educate people on pet ownership and help with their problems," Hamilton said. "The shelter is a place for people to turn to when they are in need."

It can be stressful when people refuse advice, and the number of animals at the shelter keeps increasing, Hamilton said.

But she said she wants to relieve the negative stigma of what people may think an animal officer is. For her, it's all about helping.

"It's important for me to speak up for those who do not have a voice," Hamilton said. "We need to help those that are in need."

Musical poetry

Writers' Workshop alum Kevin Gordon returns to perform at the Mill.

By JESSICA CARBINO
jessica-carbino@uiowa.edu

Kevin Gordon's love for music can be blamed on his family. Music was a constant presence in their Louisiana house, often played during parties the family threw and even today, the notes of Ray Charles and Jerry Lee Lewis continue to sweep through that childhood home. These Southern roots and memories have been Gordon's inspiration for his "Americana" music. "I was always attracted to music, since I was a little kid," he said. "My life as a musician just feels like a natural outgrowth of that love for music, not a career choice."

Gordon will perform at the Mill, 120 E. Burlington St., at 9 p.m. Saturday. Admission is $8.

"He has a great, gritty guitar sound, and his band is in top form," said Andre Perry, the venue's talent buyer and a fan of Gordon's music. "He will always be welcome here."

The Iowa Writers' Workshop drew Gordon to Iowa City just three weeks after finishing his undergraduate degree at a small public college in northern Louisiana. Jorie Graham, a former UI faculty member doing a short residency at Gordon's school, read some of his work and suggested he complete graduate studies at the Workshop. The experience changed his life, he said. Through the program, he sharpened his skills and was also able to focus on writing poetry.

"Just to be around that many people who took their work seriously was a gift; it gave me a kind of permission that I'd never felt before to work hard on my writing," Gordon said.

He began performing his music almost as soon as he slid into Iowa City. His talent led him to become a member of Iowa musician Bo Ramsey's band, the Sliders.

"Bo was the first professional musician I worked with closely, and he was/is a great mentor," Gordon said.

Many of his songs stem from real-life experiences in the artist's life. "Oil City Girl" is a song he began writing after fishing with his grandfather on Cross Lake, which is nearby the town his grandmother grew up in, Oil City, La. "Over the Levee" describes a place where he and his friends went to escape their parents. A song from a forthcoming new record, "Colfax," is based on Gordon's encounter with the Ku Klux Klan while marching in a Colfax, La., parade with his junior-high marching band.

"Over the years, I've written about things that hit me hard emotionally, be it a person, a place, a feeling, an experience," he said. "There has to be that emotional connection."

Admission: $8

Besides staying close to his Louisiana family, he loves returning to his Nashville home with his children and wife waiting at the door. Having a domestic side to his life keeps him grounded, he said. His son and daughter are both following in their dad's footsteps. Gordon recently woke up to the sound of his son playing the guitar, which made him laugh while his daughter sang a solo in the school choir.

"She nailed it and brought tears to my eyes in the process," he said. "I just hope music will remain a part of their lives."

The musician has several big plans in his future, with the upcoming release of Salvage & Drift, Vol. 1, a collection of previously unreleased recordings from 1993-2009, and Gloryland, a new record. The singer also plans to tour like crazy while also finding the time to continue a book project that's been in the works for the last year. Though he lives a hectic life, he feels fortunate for every minute of it.

"It's a difficult balance but a full life," Gordon said.

Thoughts on the Michigan game:

- Wait, this game is at Michigan? How am I going to spend my Saturday, "tailgating" at the IMU with my chemistry textbook?
- And how am I supposed to get through my Sunday morning run without dodging around empty beer cans, the smell of rotting turkey legs, or a headache?
- Simple inequality: tailgating > sleeping > studying. This weekend is going to be just plain mathematically incorrect.
- On the up side, maybe I'll finally have time to bedazzle my moped helmet.
- Other common names for the majestic wolverine include: glutton, skunk bear, and devil bear. Maybe Michigan should consider renaming itself the Skunk Bears. I think it has a nice ring to it. And I can actually envision a skunk bear. Wolverines just puzzle me.
- Do yourself a favor and Google "wolverine." Also, take a few shots of whiskey before you do. You'll need it.
- While you're at it, YouTube "baby cries when she hears the Michigan fight song."
- What are the cops going to do while they aren't giving out tickets during tailgating? On that note, I formally invite all police officers to my place for doughnuts and coffee. I'll be your friend this Saturday if you'll be mine when I'm tailgating at the Michigan State game.
- You know what marijuana and Michigan have in common? They both get smoked in bowls.
- I peed in Lake Michigan once. Take that, Wolverines.
- GO IOWA HAWKEYES! Show those Skunk Bears whose mascot doesn't stink, growl, and eat garbage!

- Carly Correll confesses she's never smoked pot in the USA, but what happens in Amsterdam stays in Amsterdam ...

- SAGITTARIUS Nov. 22-Dec. 21 You can focus on getting ahead and advance, or you can focus on what's going on in your personal life and take a step backward. There is nothing you can do to change the past, so own up to any wrongdoing and move forward.
- CAPRICORN Dec. 22-Jan. 19 Lift any burden that has been put on you. It's OK to say no if you don't have time or if someone is taking advantage of your generosity and good nature. Think of what's best for you and your family, and act accordingly.
- AQUARIUS Jan. 20-Feb. 18 There are plenty of possibilities, but you have to make a choice. You can remain in the same position, doing the same thing over and over again, or you can make the changes required to bring greater satisfaction to your life.

MCCAFFERY

The youngsters aren't shying away from the spotlight, either.

"I have high standards for myself," Basabe said. "I didn't come out here [from Glen Cove, N.Y.] to enjoy the ride, I came out here to maximize my ability and potential. I don't feel like there's pressure [to succeed], because nobody puts more pressure than I put on myself."

Even if his younger players don't start right away, McCaffery said, he expects them to see significant minutes. Creating this depth enables the coach to utilize his preferred playing style, which creates more up-tempo fast breaks than the defense-first mindset of former coach Todd Lickliter.

The quick play has been the main talking point of the Hawkeye off-season, and several of the players sounded excited to, as McCaffery put it, "establish an attacking mentality."

"Pretty much everybody on the team is going to benefit a lot from this offense," May said. "It gives everybody an opportunity to really get out and run, and not waste opportunities."

McCaffery said May will be the main beneficiary of the offense — his explosiveness was severely curtailed in the Lickliter era — and he praised Gatens for making the biggest adjustment to fit the mold. The shooting guard had bulked up to play as a forward under Lickliter, and McCaffery said the junior has lost 16 pounds.

"I said, 'You're going to get lean, and quick, and you're going to attack the rim,'" McCaffery said. "Now, we're watching Matt Gatens drive the ball to the basket and dunk the ball like he did when he was in high school."

While McCaffery hasn't yet decided on a starting rotation, Gatens will likely play another large role on offense this year after leading the team with 12.3 points per game last season.

With practice just around the corner, though, the first-year coach is focusing on acclimating his players to his system.

"It's time to get out on the floor and start working," McCaffery said with a smile. "We'll be breaking [film] down every day and trying to help each individual player get better."

May expects to be in the lane more this season.

"It's a lot different from last year, when I had to rely on shooting in the corner," he said. "Sitting in the corner shooting 3s, that wasn't really my style."

Aside from the role changes, the Dubuque native said he thought there were already two large team elements altered from last season.

"Changes in the sense of the style [of play] is huge," May said. "And energy. I think the players all have a lot of energy this year."

The lineup's new blood may be the source of that energy.

On a team with so many fresh faces — and so many freshmen — the first-year Hawkeyes will be expected to jump right onto the floor and mesh with their new teammates.

And the team's head coach expects just as much.

McCaffery specifically pointed to freshman forwards Melsahn Basabe and Zach McCabe, along with freshman guard Devyn Marble, as three who could make an immediate impact on the team despite their age.

The new head coach was sure to stress, though, that all the new faces and names on the back of Iowa's jerseys aren't there simply to please fans — they're for success.

"[It's important to] not only change our style of play," McCaffery said. "But we do it in a way that's going to help us win games."

Tough Badgers to test swimmers

The Hawkeyes will face heavy competition at its first Big Ten competition against Wisconsin.

By MAGGIE CUNNINGHAM

margaret-cunningham@uiowa.edu

The Iowa's women's swimming team hopes to benefit from improved team chemistry when it faces Wisconsin in the Hawkeyes' first Big Ten dual meet in the Campus Recreation & Wellness Center at 5 p.m. today.

"We are trying to come together as a team," junior captain Daniela Cubelic said. "As far as being more encouraging and just kind of supporting each other throughout the meet. Because it can be kind of daunting, and maybe at times even discouraging, seeing all of these nationally ranked swimmers."

"So I think the main thing is coming together and becoming each other's support."

On Thursday night, the women's swim team gathered at Cubelic's house for a team dinner in preparation for tonight's face off against the Badgers.

While loading up on carbs eating pasta and watching a movie for a "low-key night," the team talked about ways to mentally prepare for the tough competition. Last week the Hawkeyes dominated Division-II Truman State, 159-99, in their opener.

"I think it's a totally different mindset than something like Truman State," Cubelic said. "Wisconsin is a very tough team, one of the best in the nation. I think we have to go in there expecting to give them some good races. We have to take them seriously and execute our race strategies."

Sophomore captain April Allen said for the team to be successful, the Hawkeyes need to work especially hard against Wisconsin's nationally ranked relays.

"We need to be competitive and be supportive, no matter how the meet goes," she said. "And just have fun with it, because that's what matters most."

Wisconsin has owned the Hawkeyes in the dual meets throughout the last decade, and it will show its strength right at the start of the competition, when the Hawkeyes face the Badgers' nationally ranked medley relay in the meet's first event.

The Hawkeyes put up some strong times last season at Wisconsin, but the Badgers dominated the pool, finishing with a team score of 216 compared with the Hawkeyes' 83. Last season's highlights at Madison included Katarina Tour's first-place finish in the 100 butterfly and a second-place finish by the 400 freestyle relay.

"On paper, they are clearly a much stronger team right now, but we love the opportunity to race strong opponents," head coach Marc Long said.

He said tonight's meet will be a success for the Hawkeyes no matter what the final score says because competing against Wisconsin will help his team reach its ultimate goal of moving up in the Big Ten from last season's ninth-place finish.

The event will help him strategize for the Big Ten championships in February.

"What is great about this is it does expose us to the kind of competition we do need to be racing against," Long said. "And we have so many new faces, it is going to be good for them to try out all of their different events against a great team."

The 12-year coach cites the athleticism of Michigan's individual players, as well as its unique scheme that does some things a "little bit differently."

That uniqueness is apparent as soon as the Wolverines hit the line of scrimmage. They line up in a 3-3-5 defense, meaning the defense uses three defensive linemen, three linebackers, and — here's the unusual part — five defensive backs.

Senior offensive lineman Julian Vandervelde categorized Michigan's deceptiveness as "controlled chaos," something Robinson agreed with.

"They know what they're doing — they're all running around back there. The offense, we're kind of like, 'OK, what the heck's going on?'" Robinson said. "You have to get it figured out before the ball snaps."

Michigan's abundance of athleticism and individual talent may be even more confusing than the scheme. Ten of the squad's 11 defensive starters were ranked as three-star recruits by Rivals.com. Five were listed as four-star prospects.

Michigan surrendered 34 points in its first loss of the season last week against No. 13 Michigan State.

"I feel like they had a few mix-ups in their coverages, and they gave up the big play," senior tight end Allen Reisner said. "That's how they got beat."

Listening to the Marion native, it's unlikely those mistakes were the result of any deficit in speed. Reisner said the Wolverines are comparable with Arizona athletically — and may even be more athletic than the Wildcats, who handed Iowa its only loss of the season.

Despite facing such a frenzied scheme and athletic group, quarterback Ricky Stanzi said Iowa's Vandervelde to appear on 'College GameDay'

ESPN will air a piece on Iowa senior offensive lineman Julian Vandervelde on Saturday on its "College GameDay" TV program.

The "Renaissance Man," as ESPN has titled him, was filmed singing two opera pieces, in addition to what's being called a "surprise performance for Hawkeye fans."

GameDay airs on Saturdays from 8-9 a.m. (CDT) on ESPN and continues from 9-11 on ESPN. The feature on the Davenport native is expected to air around 9:30, but that is subject to change.

offense — similar to its defense — won't do anything differently.

"Nothing's going to change this week. We still have to prepare the exact same way," he said. "You just have to be aware of what their looks are."

Volleyball faces two 'struggling giants'

The Hawkeyes must try to take down Ohio State before facing volleyball behemoth Penn State on Saturday.

By IAN MARTIN
ian-martin@uiowa.edu

A new weekend brings another big chance for the Iowa volleyball team.

The Hawkeyes (6-9, 1-5) are in 10th place in the Big Ten, but they would be right back in the discussion for a .500 record with even one win this weekend. Iowa will travel to face two traditionally tough teams who are having relatively "down" seasons — Ohio State (14-5, 2-4) today, and No. 9 Penn State (13-4, 3-3) on Saturday.

While more fans will likely witness the matchup with the three-time defending NCAA champion Nittany Lions, the most important key to taking down the seeming-Goliath of college volleyball may be getting on the right track by beating Ohio State first.

The Buckeyes own a record superior to the Hawkeyes', but they have lost four out of their last five games. With her own team stuck in a drought — the Hawkeyes have won just one out of their last nine games — Iowa head coach Sharon Dingman sees some similarities between the squads.

"[Ohio State is] beatable," she said. "They look like us. They look like sometimes they're kind of questioning what's happening on the court a little bit."

Iowa is still working to fix some of its problems before this weekend's matchups, including communication and reducing errors, but the team will receive a boost with junior Mallory Husz returning to the lineup.

After sitting out five-straight sets because of a sore shoulder, Husz has had a long week to rest up and says she feels "97 percent" better.

And although the team lost both games that Husz didn't start, it may have been good for the team's long-term plans. Husz's replacement was freshman Chante' Thompson, who struggled the first part of the year at outside hitter. But after being moved to middle blocker to fill the junior's spot, Thompson thrived, netting 11 kills.

"She kind of just stepped out of her element. She's usually kind of a shy, introverted kind of girl. But being a middle [blocker] you can't do that," Husz said about Thompson. "You have to be talking. And she did a great job of that."

The team's coach has noticed the Hurst, Texas, native's improvement as well. Dingman said she's trying to figure out a way to put Thompson in the middle even as Husz comes back, which may mean moving Becky Walters — the team's leader in kills — to the right side.

And the freshman sounded very welcome to the move when told it may be permanent.

"I've played middle my whole life," Thompson said. "So I'm more used to middle than right side."

With the pieces slowly being put together, this weekend will be a pivotal point for Iowa's season as well as for the preparation for future years. Playing in two hostile road environments in as many days should prove to be great experience for a young lineup.

Of course, Dingman is making sure to let her team know that just because this weekend's opponents are having seemingly "off" seasons, the squad shouldn't expect two easy victories.

"They still have great talent on their team," said Dingman, specifically talking about the Nittany Lions. "They still have players who have won a couple national championships."

Male runners head for Bradley

Cross-country head coach Larry Wieczorek decided his team wasn't ready for the tough Pre-Nationals, so it will instead travel to the Bradley Classic.

By SAM LOUWAGIE
samuel-louwagie@uiowa.edu

The men's Pre-Nationals is "the biggest collegiate cross-country invitational of the season," according to the website of the meet's host school, Indiana State. Eighteen of the nation's top 30 teams — including four of the top 10 — will compete in the event. The high level of competition gives lower-ranked participating teams a chance to pull off an upset or two and earn points toward an at-large NCAA berth.

This year, Iowa won't take that opportunity.

Head coach Larry Wieczorek said the team changed plans when he determined it wasn't yet ready for a meet he called "as tough as a national championship meet."

"I don't think we're as ready as we'd like to be for that meet," he said. "We're going to be a good team. I have high expectations for us. But I think they're going to be realized later in the season."

So instead, the Hawkeyes will participate in the Bradley Classic in Peoria, Ill., today. While the competition at Bradley won't be easy — it includes Illinois State's Matthew

EUGENE CHUNG/THE DAILY IOWAN

The Iowa men's cross-country team warms up before going outside to run on Aug. 28. The Hawkeyes will used to this weekend's Bradley Classic as an opportunity for the younger runners to gain confidence.

Mrocynski and Northern Iowa's Thibault Vandenebelee, both of whom challenged for victories at Iowa's early season home meets — Wieczorek said it won't be as deep as the Pre-Nationals.

The 24-year head coach said that should allow the team's younger runners, such as freshmen Andrew Smith, Nick Young, and Jon Michael Brandt, to gain confidence.

The Iowa runners, while understanding Wieczorek's reasoning, expressed disappointment at not being able to face the nation's top teams this weekend. Sophomore Jeff Thode said it "kinda sucks," but he knew why his coach wanted to avoid the meet.

Senior captain Mark Battista had similar feelings.

"We were all a little disappointed because we wanted to go to the big meet," he said. "But we're not quite ready as a team, and we have a chance to grow and compete [at Bradley]."

A silver lining for the runners is that the Midwest Regionals are set to take place on the same course in Peoria on Nov. 13. Wieczorek said familiarity with the course, and the ability to visualize it, would help his team prepare for the crucial regional meet.

BRADLEY CLASSIC

When: 4 p.m. today
Where: Newman Golf Course, Peoria, Ill.

Thode also said he looked forward to experiencing the course — Newman Golf Course — and gaining an advantage for later in the season.

"I always try to choose the fastest path on a course," Thode said. "So I'll be able to plan out the next time, I messed up on this turn, maybe I can take it a little tighter, or hug the curve a little more, and put less strain on my body that way."

While Iowa will miss out on a chance to earn wins over ranked teams that would help their chances of reaching the NCAA national meet, Wieczorek isn't concerned. He said the Hawkeyes' focus is on the regional meet, and going to Bradley helps them prepare for it.

"I want to go the Pre-Nationals every year to go against the top teams," Wieczorek said. "But this gets us on that regional course, and it'll give us that focus for when we go back there at the end of the year."

Women harriers try to rebound

The women's cross-country team will try to get out of a slump and have a strong finish at Saturday's Pre-Nationals meet.

By MAGGIE CUNNINGHAM
margaret-cunningham@uiowa.edu

After a disappointing 13th-place finish at the Notre Dame Invitational, the Iowa women's cross-country team seeks a better showing in the Pre-National meet Saturday at the LaVern Gibson Championship Cross-Country Course in Terre Haute, Ind.

Eighteen of the top 30 teams in the country will be represented at the meet, and the competition will be similar to Oct. 1's Notre Dame Invitational.

Head coach Layne Anderson and the harriers attributed the disappointing performance to the strenuous training they did prior to the competition.

Anderson is making sure this does not happen again.

"We got back to some good training and things have gone well the past couple of weeks," Anderson said. "We are feeling more like ourselves and less like the team that went to Notre Dame."

Anderson coach

In order to keep his team from crashing at Saturday's meet, Anderson said he backed off a little and changed the emphasis in training.

"I think the race at Notre Dame signified that the group was maybe a little overworked and just needed some rest more than anything," he said.

Junior Betsy Flood said she thinks the rest will help the Hawkeyes have a successful race.

"I think we are pretty excited about this weekend," said Flood, who finished 45th with a time of 17:28 at Notre Dame. "The past couple of weeks, we have been taking it a little easier, and I think everyone is really a lot more rested and ready to go than last time."

Flood said in the past the Pre-Nationals meet has been a major factor in determining whether the Hawkeyes received an at-large bid to the NCAA meet, and she doesn't want to pass up the opportunity.

Senior Lauren Hardesty said if each of her teammates races to her potential, the Hawkeyes could surprise themselves with solid results against elite competition.

"It would be great if we could get some at-large points," said Hardesty, who finished 69th in the race at South Bend, Ind. "It would take the pressure off of us going further into the rest of the season."

Junior McKenzie Melander said it's important for her teammates to find each other at the start of the race and stick together for as much of the 6K as possible. This will ultimately help the Hawkeyes knock off competitors one by one.

PRE-NATIONALS

Anderson wants his team to take advantage of the opportunity to run another race of this caliber just two weeks after a disappointing finish.

"This is a chance for us to get back and run like we know we are capable of running because we recognized that Notre Dame was not a representation of the ability of this group collectively or individually," Anderson said. "It's just exciting to have a chance at another meet."

"When you don't run well, the next meet can't come quickly enough."

Whiz-bang offense, but that D

While Michigan's high-powered offense will challenge Iowa Saturday, the Wolverines' defense may be one of the weakest units the Hawkeyes will face.

By JORDAN GARRETSON
jordan-garretson@uiowa.edu

When asked Tuesday what types of challenges Michigan's defense presents, Iowa running back Adam Robinson took approximately seven seconds to think about it.

But that's an indictment of the Wolverine defense, not of the sophomore running back's football IQ.

As spectacular as the Maize and Blue offense has been — averaging more than 37 points

Robinson
running back

per game — its defense has been almost equally as bad.

As Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz put it Tuesday, "They've given up some plays at times."

That's a compliment — a huge one.

When No. 15 Iowa and Michigan square off at 2:36 p.m. (CDT) on Saturday, the Wolverines will field the Big Ten's worst defense.

Greg Robinson's unit also ranks among the nation's bottom 10 in total defense, surrendering a whopping 450.67 yards a game (112th in the Football Bowl Subdivision). Denard Robinson and the offense may have generated 137 first downs through the team's first six games, but the Wolverines have allowed 136 on the other side of the ball.

But as one would guess, Ferentz isn't putting stock into those numbers — or any other statistics at this juncture of the season.

DAVID SCRIVNER/THE DAILY IOWAN

Iowa head coach Fran McCaffery answers questions during men's basketball media day on Thursday in Carver-Hawkeye Arena. McCaffery said he will stress the importance of sustaining effort during practice this week.

Change blows through men's hoops

The men's basketball team hasn't done well in recent years, but first-year head coach Fran McCaffery says that's going to change.

By SETH ROBERTS
seth-roberts@uiowa.edu

Fran McCaffery is realistic. He knows the Iowa men's basketball program has had a few rough years.

He also knows he's going to try like hell to reverse that.

McCaffery begins practice as Iowa's head coach today, and he spoke about his most pressing goals at the team's media day Thursday afternoon.

"Right now, all we're trying to do is establish our style of play, teach what we need to teach, and get the kids competing, accepting one another, and understanding how to play with each other," he said.

Building that camaraderie will be particularly important because the team hasn't had much experience playing together. Four starters from the 2009 squad — Matt Gatens, Eric May, Cully Payne, and Jarryd Cole — return, but the bulk of the roster is made up of newcomers. The Hawkeyes feature eight players in their first year at Iowa, including four walk-ons, but McCaffery said he has high expectations for every member of the team.

"We need [the newcomers] to play well right away," he said. "They don't have time to be freshmen making mistakes — they have to play like veterans essentially immediately."

Three of those first-year players are expected to compete for a starting position in the post. Freshmen Melsahn Basabe, Zach McCabe, and Devyn Marble all have the length to play alongside Cole in the paint, although Marble is by far the lankiest of the group and is listed as a combination forward and guard.

Players excited by new style

Some changes are already evident on the 2010-11 Iowa men's basketball team.

By IAN MARTIN
ian-martin@uiowa.edu

Out of the 14 players on the Iowa men's basketball team, nine have not played a single minute for the Hawkeyes.

The roster has six freshmen, two new transfers, and former transfer Devon Archie finally recovering from an ACL injury that sidelined him before he could see any game action last season.

With all these new players, and some new attitudes, the message is clear: This is a much different team from the one when head coach Fran McCaffery took over.

"Obviously, we needed to bring in a couple of players, and we're really happy with our re-recruitment of [those who had committed to Iowa]," McCaffery said Thursday at the team's media day.

Bringing in all those new players, along with the fundamental change from former head coach Todd Lickliter's half-court style of offense to McCaffery's famed up-tempo ball, has revitalized seemingly every player — especially those coming back.

The new head coach spoke a lot about how the returning players would have more defined roles on the team, such as junior Matt Gatens. The guard lost 16 pounds this summer just to be leaner for the team's fast break.

Another returnee making a big change will be Eric May. The sophomore guard showed flashes of athleticism during the 2009-2010 season, but ended up doing a lot of shooting as well. More than half of his 259 shots came from behind the 3-point line.

around the big ten

inside a coach's mind

"I thought it was a very poor decision by a head football coach, and he'll have to live with that. It was wrong. Everybody in here knows it, and everybody in college football knows it. It was wrong."

— Minnesota head coach Tim Brewster about Wisconsin head coach Bret Bielema's decision to go for a two-point conversion with a 25-point lead

Power rankings

1. Ohio State (Previous rank: 1), Terrelle Pryor looked impressive again against Indiana and continues to build his Heisman hype.

2. Iowa (3), Iowa must follow the Michigan State's game plan from last week to shut down Denard Robinson in the Big House on Saturday.

3. Michigan State (5), Edwin Baker helped the Spartans hand Michigan its first loss. Michigan State will have to keep up its stellar play against Illinois.

4. Wisconsin (2), John Clay and James White have combined to become one of the best running back tandems in the country.

5. Michigan (4), Denard Robinson was finally knocked from his lofty perch, but he still accounted for more than 300 yards of offense.

6. Northwestern (6), The Wildcats were handed their first loss of the season by Purdue last week. The bye week comes at a good time.

7. Illinois (9), The Fighting Illini hammered Penn State and showed the rest of the Big Ten they aren't lying down anymore.

8. Penn State (7), Evan Royster was supposed to carry the team, but the senior running back has been disappointing.

9. Purdue (11), Despite injuries, the Boilermakers beat previously undefeated Northwestern. This week gets considerably easier against Minnesota.

10. Indiana (8), The Hoosiers were completely shut down by Ohio State last week. The perfect antidote for a struggling offense? A matchup with Arkansas State.

11. Minnesota (10), The Gophers were steamrolled by Wisconsin, and they continue to sink deeper in the Big Ten cellar.

Big Ten Power Rankings are voted on by Scott Miller, Jordan Garretson, Mitch Smith, and J.T. Bugos.

Offensive impact

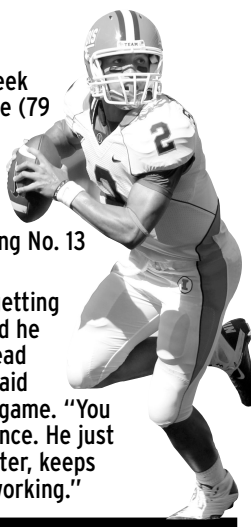

Name: Nathan Scheelhaase
Position: Quarterback
Year: Freshman

Illinois wasn't expected to surpass its three wins of a year ago, but under the surprisingly effective Scheelhaase, the Fighting Illini have already captured three victories while dropping close games to No. 1 Ohio State and No. 21 Missouri.

The 6-3 signal caller has thrown for 640 yards this season while tacking on 277 rushing yards — second best on the team. Illinois will need the Scheelhaase to play like he did last week against Penn State (79 percent completion percentage, no interceptions) to have any chance of upsetting No. 13 Michigan State.

"No. 1, Nathan's getting better like we said he would," Illinois head coach Ron Zook said after last week's game. "You can't buy experience. He just keeps getting better, keeps studying, keeps working."

Defensive impact

Name: Jay Valai
Position: Cornerback
Year: Senior

Valai will be leaned on heavily this week as Terrelle Pryor and Ohio State come to Madison, Wis., in a matchup worthy of ESPN's "College GameDay."

Two years ago, Valai made his presence known to the Buckeyes when he knocked both wide receiver Dane Sanzenbacher and running back Dan Herron out of the game with big hits.

After getting banged up two weeks ago against Michigan State and sitting out last week versus Minnesota, Valai will return to the lineup against the Buckeyes at full strength. He'll be expected to limit Pryor, Sanzenbacher, and DeVier Posey in this highly ranked showdown.

"Jay probably could have played [Saturday]," Wisconsin defensive coordinator Dave Doeren said after last week's game. "But for us to be where we need to be all season long, he couldn't have gotten through [Saturday] and be what we need him to be this week and next week."

games to watch

Time: 6 p.m. (CDT)
Location: Camp Randall Stadium (Madison)
Where to watch or listen: ESPN

KEY HIGHLIGHTS

After inheriting the No. 1 spot in the AP poll, Ohio State will face arguably their biggest test to date: a road game against Wisconsin. The Buckeyes have Heisman front-runner Terrelle Pryor, but the Badgers counter with a stout offensive line and a two-headed monster at running back with reigning Big Ten Offensive Player of the Year John Clay and freshman James White.

Time: 11 a.m. (CDT)
Location: Spartan Stadium (East Lansing)
Where to watch or listen: Big Ten Network

KEY HIGHLIGHTS

Which team has been the bigger surprise in the Big Ten? Not many expected the Spartans to be undefeated at this juncture, and nobody saw Illinois being able to match their win total from last season this soon. The Illini's two losses are to ranked and undefeated squads (Ohio State and Missouri). Expect a tight game in East Lansing.

Time: 11 a.m.
Location: Ross-Ade Stadium (West Lafayette, Ind.)
Where to watch or listen: ESPN 2

KEY HIGHLIGHTS

Purdue was expected to go into free-fall after injuries stripped it of its top quarterback and wide receiver, but the Boilermakers keep chugging along after an upset of Northwestern. Minnesota is desperately searching for its first win over a real opponent, but the Golden Gophers don't seem to be up to the challenge.

Iowa wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos is tackled by Penn State's Stephon Morris on Oct. 2, 2010 in Kinnick Stadium. Johnson-Koulianos recorded 64 yards in the 24-3 win over the Nittany Lions.

Remembering, No 'DJK' in 'team'

Derrell Johnson-Koulianos' thrilling Iowa career will likely culminate with a pair of Hawkeye receiving records.

By MITCH SMITH
mitchell-e-smith@uiowa.edu

The dreamer arrived as an 18-year-old freshman with two goals in mind: To win and to break records.
All of them.

Derrell Johnson-Koulianos first looked at the Iowa receiving records in the fall of 2006.

Before he ever made a catch. Before he ever stepped on the field.

Before he became a self-described "natural-born playmaker from Ohio."

Five years later, the senior wide receiver is a dreamer no more.

Johnson-Koulianos sits only 10 catches and 67 yards away from eclipsing the Iowa records for career receptions and receiving yards held by Kevin Kasper and Tim Dwight, respectively.

Accomplished receivers both at Iowa and in the NFL, Kasper had 157 receptions and Dwight totaled 2,271 receiving yards during their Hawkeye careers.

"I watched their films all the time, and those guys were exceptional. I have a lot of respect for them," Johnson-Koulianos said at Iowa media day on Aug. 6 — the last time he was made available to the media. "To even be in position to perhaps pass those guys up is just overwhelming."

Johnson-Koulianos' playing career has been a journey — sometimes magical, sometimes frustrating. And if nothing else, it has been illuminating.

"A lot of guys don't understand that less than half of 1 percent of the people in the world get to be a part of anything like this," Johnson-Koulianos said. "That's an opportunity people dream of. I dreamed of it as a little boy. I can't believe I'm living it. Every day, I try to find ways to remind myself where I am, how I got here, and how fortunate I am."

Top 25 players of the Ferentz era

With wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos poised to become Iowa's all-time receiver, The Daily Iowan football staff reevaluated the top 25 players under Kirk Ferentz.

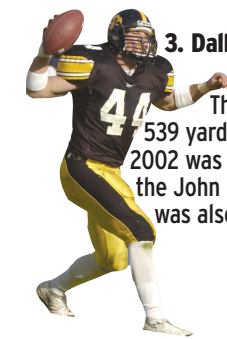

1. Brad Banks, QB (2001-2002)

Banks threw for 2,573 yards and rushed for 423 yards during Iowa's 2002 Orange Bowl campaign. He finished second in the Heisman Trophy race to USC's Carson Palmer but won the Davey O'Brien Trophy, given annually to the best college quarterback. Banks was also named Associated Press College Football Player of the Year.

2. Shonn Greene, RB (2005-2006, 2008)

After leaving the team before the 2007 season because of academic reasons, Greene returned to the Hawkeyes in a big way in 2008. The Sicklerville, N.J., native ran for 1,850 yards and set the Iowa single-season record with 20 rushing touchdowns. Green earned the Doak Walker Award, given annually to the best college running back, and he was named Big Ten Offensive Player of the Year.

3. Dallas Clark, TE (1998-2002)

Originally a linebacker, Clark moved to tight end in 2001. The switch worked out pretty well. He caught 38 passes for 539 yards in 2001, earning honorable mention All-Big Ten honors. But 2002 was his best season. He caught 43 passes for 742 yards, winning the John Mackey Award as the best tight end in the country. Clark was also named to six first-team All-American squads.

4. Robert Gallery, OL (1999-2003)

The best offensive lineman in the Kirk Ferentz era, Gallery finished his Iowa career with a streak of 44- consecutive starts. He earned first-team All-Big Ten honors in both 2002 and 2003. In 2003, he won the Outland Trophy, awarded to the nation's best interior lineman, and was named to 10 All-American teams.

5. Bob Sanders, S (2000-2003)

Earned Big Ten honors all four years of his Hawkeye career – All-Big Ten honorable mention in 2000 and first team All-Team Big Ten in 2001, 2002, and 2003. He led Iowa in tackles (122) and interceptions (4) in his sophomore season. Sanders followed up that success with 102 tackles his junior year and 72 tackles his senior year, earning second-team All-American honors by the Associated Press in his final season with the Hawkeyes.

6. Nate Kaeding, K (2000-2003)

2002 Lou Groza Award-winner. Was named to nine first-team All-American teams during his Iowa career.

7. Eric Steinbach, OL (1998-2002)

Earned Big Ten Offensive Lineman of the Year honors in 2002. Was named to five first-team All-American teams.

8. Chad Greenway, LB (2001-2005)

9. Fred Russell, RB (2000-2003)

Back-to-back 1,000-yard rushing seasons in 2002 and 2003. Earned first-team All-Big Ten honors in 2002.

Led the Big Ten and ranked third in the nation in tackles per game his senior season (13.2).

12. Matt Roth, DL (2001-2004)

A two-time first-team All-Big Ten player. Ranked second in the conference in sacks per game (0.88) as a senior.

The rise of DJK

Before the Campbell, Ohio, native had the opportunity to become a record-breaking receiver, he had to find a way to get on the field.

He wasn't listed on the depth chart following spring practice in 2007, and Johnson-Koulianos wondered if he would even be able to contribute.

"We thought when we came out here as freshmen, 'We're never, ever going to see the field,'" Johnson-Koulianos said. "These guys are too big, too fast. The playbook — everything was so complex. It was just like, 'How am I ever going to get out there and actually be productive?'"

But he got his opportunity and took advantage of it.

Fellow wide receivers Dominique Douglas and Anthony Bowman were suspended indefinitely before the start of the season, and a torn hamstring against Wisconsin cut Andy Brodell's season short only four games into the 2007 campaign.

With Iowa facing a lack of depth at wide receiver, Johnson-Koulianos stepped in against the Badgers and caught four passes for 45 yards, including a one-handed touchdown reception.

He started the remaining eight games of the 2007 season and led the Hawkeyes with 38 catches and 482 yards.

"He's a guy who can just always make a play, so you've got to keep your eye on him," said cornerback Shaun Prater, who routinely covers Johnson-Koulianos in practice. "You always have to go 100 percent, otherwise, he's making the catch."

After 2007, the DJK persona went mainstream.

His attire at a Tuesday interview session — sunglasses and a hat — sparked the ire of head coach Kirk Ferentz in 2008. His fascination with Twitter was quickly halted, with Ferentz saying on Aug. 6, "As soon as he moves out of the house, next January, he can Twitter away."

And his sometimes-too-revealing quotes got him benched

from all interview requests so far this season.

But Johnson-Koulianos attempted to clear up any misconceptions with an update on his Facebook page.

"Thousands have been convinced that I am all showboat and no sacrifice," he said in part of his entry. "Allow me to set the record straight. I am on a mission to go from the doghouse to the penthouse — determined to show our fans that there is no 'DJK' in 'team,' and that I am well aware of that fact. At Iowa, the success of our group far exceeds the importance of individual accolades."

Despite all of this, Johnson-Koulianos' performance on the field never stumbled.

He has missed only one game in his career because of injury, and he has continued to rack up impressive numbers — 44 catches for 639 yards in 2008, 45 catches for 750 yards in 2009, and 21 catches for 334 yards in 2010.

"Bottom line is he's been able to play four years, basically," Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz said Sept. 28. "That's not something you just take for granted, the fact that he's been able to stay healthy. He has been productive. He's come up with a lot of big plays for us, a lot of deep balls where he's made some good plays."

Since 1943, only Jim Gibbons, Tim Dwight, and Johnson-Koulianos have led the Hawkeyes in receiving yards for three-consecutive seasons.

No one has ever done it for four seasons during that span. And with Johnson-Koulianos being the team's leading receiver through five games, he looks to have another record within his grasp.

"Derrell has a knack for [when] he's in the game, the ball is going to come his way, make some plays, and go from there," offensive coordinator Ken O'Keefe said on Oct. 7. "You know, I think he has been able to do that over the course of his time on the field with us."

Approaching the records

Another dreamer arrived in Iowa City as a walk-on, and like Johnson-Koulianos, Kevin Kasper had distinct clarity about where he wanted to be as a senior.

"I didn't want to leave without holding the reception record," said Kasper, who now works as an adviser at Xtreme-Speed training facility in Plainfield, Ill. "That was something I wrote down from Day 1. It was something I was going to do my best to accomplish."

The retired NFL veteran currently holds a trio of Hawkeye records — receptions in a game (13), a season (82), and a career (157). After having the record for 10 years, Kasper is prepared to congratulate a new record-holder, and he's proud it's Johnson-Koulianos.

Kasper described him as a "fun kid and a heck of a player," and he said the two receivers have had the opportunity to talk whenever Kasper returns to Iowa City for a visit.

What stands out to Kasper most about Johnson-Koulianos is his playmaking ability. Of Iowa's 20 plays of 20-plus yards this season, six have gone to him.

His knack for making big plays and being a game-changer has even made a former wide receiver such as Kasper excitedly jump on the couch when he watches Iowa games.

"If somebody is going to break [the record], I'm glad Derrell is going to do it," Kasper said. "He's one of the best to play the position. There are a few receivers from the University of Iowa who can say they were the best one, and he's definitely one of them."

October 10

The 143rd and final win of Hayden Fry's historic coaching career came against Northwestern in a thrilling 24-22 game. Fry has 58 more wins than second-place Kirk Ferentz.

1908

October 10

Iowa scored 92 points in a season-opening win against Coe College – its second-most points ever in a game. But it was the beginning of a losing season for the Hawkeyes, who went 2-5 under head coach Mark Catlin.

1895

October 12

Iowa began the 1895 season with a 10-0 loss to Doane. It was the beginning of a year in which the Hawkeyes played without a coach. They got outscored 166-42 on the season, finishing 2-5.

October 14

After beating Penn 35-0, Iowa was well on its way to a special season. In fact, 1899 marked the Hawkeyes' first undefeated campaign in program history; they finished 8-0-1. Iowa has only gone undefeated on three other occasions.

2006

October 14

After losing to No. 1 Ohio State two weeks earlier, the 5-1 Hawkeyes let Indiana wide receiver James Hardy snag three touchdowns on the Hoosiers' way to a 31-28 victory. It was Indiana's first win against a ranked opponent in 19 years.

No. 15 Iowa at Michigan	IOWA How does Michigan defensive coordinator Greg Robinson still have a job?	IOWA The Hawkeyes' conservative scheme will keep Denard Robinson in front of the defense.	IOWA Denard Robinson will be contained for the second-straight game and Iowa will roll a weak defense.	IOWA Denard Robinson. Meet Adrian Clayborn.	IOWA Denard doesn't stand a chance against the Hawkeye defense.	IOWA How good would Denard Robinson be if he just tied his shoes?	IOWA (100%) Iowa's D struggles with the spread, but Michigan's D struggles with everything.
No. 1 Ohio State at No. 18 Wisconsin	OHIO STATE Not sure any team in the Big Ten has the horses to shut down the Buckeyes.	OHIO STATE Terrelle Pryor & Company are set to spoil "College GameDay's" visit to Madison.	OHIO STATE John Clay and James White won't be able to overtake the Buckeyes.	OHIO STATE The Buckeyes should be on upset alert. But they'll win a close one.	WISCONSIN Second week in a row the No. 1 team is upset.	OHIO STATE I want the Bucks to be undefeated when they come to Kinnick.	OHIO STATE (79%) The cheese will crumble!
No. 12 Arkansas at No. 7 Auburn	AUBURN I still don't trust the Razorbacks on the road after watching that Georgia game.	ARKANSAS Auburn should have lost to Kentucky last week.	AUBURN Cam Newton and home-field advantage carry the Tigers.	ARKANSAS Ryan Mallett will carry the Razorbacks to victory in a difficult road SEC test.	ARKANSAS Now that 'Bama lost, this is the game for the Razorbacks to gain ground in the SEC West.	ARKANSAS Razorbacks drop the Mallett on Auburn.	ARKANSAS (58%) How is Auburn still undefeated?
Texas at No. 5 Nebraska	NEBRASKA Could the Cornhuskers play in the national title game? The Big 12 is so weak that it could happen.	NEBRASKA If UCLA's quarterback did work on the Longhorns, wait for Nebraska's Taylor Martinez.	NEBRASKA Texas isn't good enough to stop Taylor Martinez.	NEBRASKA No one has even come close to beating the Huskers.	NEBRASKA Go Big Red!	NEBRASKA Nebraska should be a top-3 or top-4 team in the country. Texas is far from the team it was last year.	NEBRASKA (92%) Taylor Martinez takes the lead for the Heisman, and Nebraska grows closer to the national title.
Illinois at No. 13 Michigan State	MICHIGAN STATE I'm not a fan of picking freshman quarterback on the road.	MICHIGAN STATE Illinois is a lot better than we thought, but not good enough to beat Sparty in East Lansing.	MICHIGAN STATE Illini will put up a tough fight, as they did against Ohio State, but the Spartans' ground game prevails.	MICHIGAN STATE I'm not buying into Ron Zook and the Illini yet.	MICHIGAN STATE Don't let last week fool you; Illinois will get snapped back to reality this weekend.	MICHIGAN STATE Spartan will definitely challenge Wisconsin for the conference's third-best team.	MICHIGAN STATE (96%) Hope the Spartans are still undefeated when they come to Iowa City.
