Regents back sabbaticals

CHRISTY AUMER/THE DAILY IOWAN

Florence Boos, who teaches Victorian poetry, nonfiction prose, and cultural studies at the University of Iowa, stands in her office on the third floor of the English-Philosophy Building on Thursday. Boos went on sabbatical last spring and completed a 400-page draft of a book, Art, Ethics and History: The Early Writings of William Morris.

Those in education fiercely defend professional development assignments, but republican lawmakers insist halting them could be a money-saving measure.

University of Iowa English Professor Florence Boos spent three weeks in England last spring.

But she wasn't just a tourist marveling at the Big Ben. She was completing research as part of her professional development assignment.

She finished a 400-page draft of a book manuscript, Art, Ethics and History: The Early Writings of William Morris, which studies the early development of a major Victorian poet.

Boos stressed the importance of the time she had off in completing the book.

"It takes a long time to produce a good manuscript,"

Professional Development assignments

Budgeted replacement costs at the UI for five fiscal years:

- 2008: $123,485
- 2009: $342,436
- 2010: $201,800
- 2011: $148,700
- 2012: $130,800

she said. "When I had my leave, I sat in my room from morning until I was too tired to write anymore."

If these assignments, also known as sabbaticals, were removed, colleges would take a hit, she said.

"You get what you pay for," she said. "If they cut at the wrong places, they'll hurt the university, they'll hurt Iowa."

During a telephonic meeting of the state Board of Regents Thursday, presidents from the universities and regents held a lengthy discussion on sabbaticals before approving all 95 requested by the UI, Iowa State University, and the University of Northern Iowa — down from 107 among the three schools this year.

And the UI received approval for its 58 assignments, up from 52.

"This is part of the fabric of what a research university is all about," UI President Sally Mason said from Des Moines. "The success of an organization depends on the people who carry out its mission."

With the vote, the regents continued to side-step the efforts of Republican lawmakers to reduce the number of sabbaticals in order to cut costs. But officials attempted to prove the necessity of the assignments.

For every dollar the state spends on these assignments, faculty members return more than $13 to the universities through obtained grants, said Diana Gonzalez, the regents' chief academic officer.

The regents also stressed the importance of the assignments.

Learning groups expanding

The number of people in living-learning communities could reach 1,544 in the fall of 2011.

The University of Iowa is introducing four new living-learning communities next fall, a move outlined in the UI's strategic plan as part of a push to increase student retention.

The new communities — Political Process, Education, Journalism and Mass Communication, and a group dedicated to open majors called Explore.Dream.Discover.Experience — are scheduled to be the newest of the 16 living-learning opportunities offered on campus next year. Rienow Hall is set to be the first all living-learning dormitory.

Panel tilts toward health schools

Representatives from two of the UI's largest colleges, with 62 percent of students, make up only 12 percent of the provost search committee.

By ALISON SULLIVAN
alison-sullivan@uiowa.edu

A university's president is the face of the institution: the PR outreach, the fundraiser and the ultimate decision-maker. The provost is the one behind the curtain — the person responsible for working directly with faculty and students and creating strategic initiatives.

Mason
President

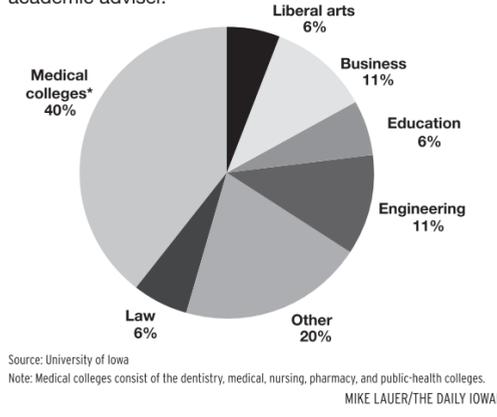

Once chosen, the University of Iowa's new provost will represent faculty and students from across every college. Which is why some question why representatives from the Carver College of Medicine, the College of Dentistry, the Public Health College, the Pharmacy College, and the College of Nursing — which account for 10 percent of the UI's students — make up almost 40 percent of the committee. Representatives from two of the largest colleges — the College of Liberal Arts and Science and the Tippie College of Business, with 62 percent of students — make up 12 percent of the search panel. Still, divvying up representation is easier said than done, according to national experts and UI officials.

It's nearly impossible to represent all cross-sections of an institution such as the UI, with more than 30,000 students and 2,000 faculty members, said governance expert David Shulenberg, the vice president for academic affairs at the Association of Public and Land-Grant Universities. UI president Sally Mason agreed that it can be difficult if a committee becomes too large. "If it gets bigger than that, it gets hard to manage the workload and to get the people together — that's sort of why we try to get good representation across campus," Mason said in an interview with The Daily Iowan on Nov. 30.

The committee, tasked with replacing former Provost and current University of Maryland President Wallace Loh, was appointed by Mason Nov. 23. It consists of 18 people including students, faculty, and staff at the UI. "We go to great lengths to make sure there is the greatest representation that is possible by colleges," said David Drake, the committee head on the selection and review of higher academic officials — which helped Mason choose the Provost-Search Committee. When Drake's panel recommended potential search-committee members to Mason, they used a "House of Representatives model," in which the number of nominees from a specific college were based on the number of faculty. But Mason's ultimate selections used something closer to a "Senate model," where each college has one or two representatives. Alumni, academic advising, and the UI Foundation are also represented. Still, the only person representing the Graduate College is a graduate student. The committee is equally split by sex, though is almost exclusively white. Experts said the disproportionate health-care emphasis was uncommon, though not necessarily negative. "I think it's smart to include life sciences," said John Isaacson, the founder of Isaacson, Miller search firm. "Unusual but smart." Isaacson said the heavily represented sciences may be attributed to the number of faculty and revenue the medical fields bring in. And ultimately, the one with the last say is the institution's top administrator, no matter how the committee is constructed. "The final choice is made by the president or chancellor, and the person will balance that sort of thing," Shulenberg said. "The biggest influence is what the president or chancellor thinks he or she needs to make the institution really good."

Provosts

With 18 members on the Provost Search Committee, medical colleges have the majority. Twenty percent of the group consists of alumni, students, and an academic adviser.

Iowa rail may get more funding

With the United States Department of Transportation redirecting high-speed rail money originally intended for Wisconsin and Ohio rail projects, Iowa could be one of many states receiving a boost in funding. U.S. Secretary of Transportation Ray LaHood announced the redirection of $1.195 billion in funds on Thursday. "Because Wisconsin and Ohio are not moving forward on high-speed rail projects, more money is available for other states," he said in the release. The passenger-rail plan between Iowa City and Chicago received a $230 million grant in October; the total cost has been projected at $310 million. — by Mitchell Schmidt

Suit filed on justice selection

A federal lawsuit filed on behalf of four Iowans hopes to change the manner in which Iowa Supreme Court justices are selected. The suit comes after three Iowa Supreme Court justices were ousted last month following the Court's decision to legalize gay marriage. Filed by attorney James Bopp Jr., the lawsuit said the manner in which justices in Iowa are currently selected violates the 14th Amendment by denying the plaintiffs — Steven Carlson, Mary Granzow, Richard Kettells, and William Ramsey — the right to equal participation in the nomination process. The suit suggests a judge prevent several attorneys of the current judicial nominating commission from contributing to the selection process, citing that citizens who are not lawyers do not have a fair chance to participate in the nominations. Justices Marsha Ternus, David Baker, and Michael Streit were voted out in last month's retention election after a campaign to remove justices who supported same-sex marriage. — by Hayley Bruce

Hospital group gives UIHC good marks

A visit from the Joint Commission — an group that inspects health-care organizations around the country — gave the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics favorable marks, according to a presentation given during the state Board of Regents meeting Thursday. Kenneth Kates, the UIHC's chief executive officer, told regents the hospital performed "really well." He said the commission listed 17 findings — a relatively small number — and 14 have already been corrected. — by Sam Lane

Regents OK UI land purchases

The state Board of Regents approved two UI land purchases during a telephonic meeting Thursday. The UI plans to purchase a 24,000-square-foot property at 301 S. Clinton now occupied by Bank of the West for its new School of Music and recital-hall buildings. The purchase price is set at $3.1 million with an additional $350,000 in relocation costs. The university also received approval for a land purchase in North Liberty for UI Hospitals and Clinics expansion. The undeveloped land is located at the border between North Liberty and Coralville. UI spokesman Tom Moore said the space could potentially be used for expansion of the UI Family Care Clinic, which sees approximately 100 patients daily; it is only meant to handle around 25 daily. The cost for the land is nearly $11.7 million. — by Sam Lane

No site yet for new Studio Arts facility

The University of Iowa will have to find a different site for a new Studio Arts Building. Talks to buy private property located at 119, 125, and 203 River St. for the new building fell through, UI Senior Vice President for Finance Doug True told the state Board of Regents Thursday. "We determined about two weeks ago that this is going nowhere," he said. "We're not going to be able to buy this property at any reasonable price." — by Sam Lane

Museum wait continues

University of Iowa officials could have to wait for up to 90 additional days before they receive a ruling on their appeal of a decision from the Federal Emergency Management Agency to deny funding to build a new Museum of Art. Doug True, the UI senior vice president for Finance, said the UI received a letter from FEMA on the 88th day of the appeal asking additional questions. The questions "reset the clock," said UI spokesman Tom Moore. True said university officials believe the questions were answered in the original appeal and hopes the extension won't take the full 90 days. — by Sam Lane

Regents OK UNI interim head

The state Board of Regent approved the appointment of Gloria Gibson, the current vice president and provost at the University of Northern Iowa, to be the school's interim president. Gibson will take the place of current president Ben Allen, who will take a medical leave to receive treatment for prostate cancer in February. — by Sam Lane

Regents approve new football facility

The state Board of Regents approved the budget, schematic design, and project design for the UI's new Indoor Athletics Practice and Recreation Facility, the first phase of a larger football facility project. The facility — set to cost $19.5 million — will include a full-length football field. In addition to football, the building will serve Hawkeye baseball, softball, and soccer. The 102,100-square-foot structure is scheduled to be built west of the Recreation Building, and it will be paid for through Athletics Department Gifts and Earnings and University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics and Recreational Services Renewal and Improvement funds. It is slated for completion in the fall of 2012. The building will replace the Bubble, the existing indoor practice facility. — by Sam Lane

Living-learning communities — groups arranged in residence halls according to interests — have been part of the UI housing experience for roughly 15 years. But with the introduction of the 2010-16 strategic plan “Great Opportunities, Bold Expectations,” the university aims for all incoming UI students to participate in living-learning communities.

Colleen Shaull, the assistant manager for contracts and assignments, said the increase is in response to student interest and academic department request.

Susan Lagos Lavenz, the associate dean for teacher education and student services in the UI College of Education, said the college initiated the creation of the Education Community.

“We did it so that incoming students have an advantage of living in a community that supports its career aspirations, academics and social transition to campus life,” Lagos Lavenz said.

Lagos Lavenz said the 50-person Education group for next year was already filling up.

During the 2009 academic year, the UI reserved 1,115 beds for living-learning communities. The number of available beds jumped to 1,426 this year and is estimated to reach slightly more than 1,500 in 2011.

UI officials previously estimated the cost of establishing living-learning communities to be about $10,000 a year — the salary for the graduate assistant overseeing the group’s activities.

While studies show living in such a community has positive effects, one expert said universities should keep varying levels of student interest in mind. Martha L.A. Stassen, director of assessment at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst who has conducted a study on the effectiveness of living-learning communities, said individual students have numerous interests, and some don’t necessarily want to be part of a living-learning community.

“Flexibility is almost a necessity with places as big as our universities,” Stassen said.

Beth Ingram, the UI

associate provost for undergraduate education, said flexibility was the basis of the university’s approach.

“[Living-learning communities] cannot be one-size-fits-all,” she said.

Officials plan to continue introducing living-learning communities in the future, but Ingram said they aren’t considering making communities mandatory.

Audrey Smith, a freshman living in the Honors Nexus in Mayflower, said she thought the introduction of more communities was a good way to pair students with others with the same interests.

“I’m not sure everyone would feel that way,” the 19-year-old said. “As for me, I think that’s a great idea.”

Itoh, 47, was placed on leave more than two years ago after he was accused of assaulting a former lab assistant. Itoh was recently convicted of the assault, and he faces a retrial — slated to start in February — on a sexual-abuse charge. He is receiving an annual salary of $93,000.

Hunninghake, 63, was charged in April with disorderly conduct for allegedly falsely reporting an offense to Chicago police. He allegedly told officers he was jogging in Chicago early in the morning when three men threatened him and demanded his wallet, authorities said. Hunninghake said the men stabbed him numerous times, but officers later said they believed the story was fabricated and the wounds were self-inflicted. Hunninghake turned himself in to Chicago police.

Hunninghake has been on paid leave with an annual salary of $360,668. UI police recently concluded a seven-month investigation into the professor and Johnson County prosecutors have decided to not bring charges.

Since 2005, 13 UI faculty members have been put on administrative leave, though not all have been because of alleged misconduct. The university has spent nearly $1.5 million in faculty wages for those on leave during that time.

Not all paid leaves from the university are for investigations of misconduct. According to the requested documents, reasons can include developmental or personal leave. UI spokesman Tom Moore said this excludes professional development assignments, also known as sabbaticals.

Moore said a decision in the 1999 Iowa Supreme Court case Simonson v. Iowa State University influences the UI’s process of putting faculty on paid leave. In that case, a professor sought a hearing before he was placed on leave. The court ruled the university had the right to remove a person accused of violating public trust from the classroom before a hearing if it didn’t result in economic harm.

“It appears the court would not approve of placing a faculty member on unpaid leave while due process is being followed,” Moore said. “It appears that avoiding economic harm is an important principle. That’s why the university has not placed these faculty members on unpaid leave while we’re following due process.”

Meanwhile, legislators have mixed feelings on administrative paid leaves.

“It seems like an awful lot of money for not doing what you’re supposed to be doing,” said Rep. Linda Miller, R-Bettendorf.

However, for some, there may not be enough information to make a conclusion about the amount spent on paid administrative leave.

“It’s one of those things that might send up a red flag until you have more info,” said Rep. Cindy Winckler, D-Davenport, the future ranking member of the education-appropriations subcommittee.

“We tend to think of faculty as serving in the classroom. And I believe that’s where most of their time goes,” said Regent President David Miles. “But in order to create new knowledge and to convey that knowledge effectively to our students, they need to be able to have time to sharpen the saw and to engage their mind in additional activities.”

Other board members agreed. Regent Rose Vazquez noted sabbaticals help with a university’s ability to recruit sought-after candidates.

“It just seems to me that if that is something that is off the plate in terms of their ability to have the leaves, we’d really end up finding ourselves not getting those candidates,” she said.

The regents must make sure to take every opportunity to explain the importance of the assignments to the public, Regent Robert Downer said. Regent Michael Gartner asked that the regents discuss the entire issue of the assignments at one of their summer meetings.

But some Republican legislators are still not swayed.

“When [professors on sabbaticals] come back to the University of Iowa, Iowa State University, and the University of Northern Iowa, do they bring back a knowledge base that’s so much greater that it’s worth our tax dollars?” asked Rep. Linda Miller, R-Bettendorf. “If they can prove that, I’m certainly willing to look.”

Republicans block action on ‘Don’t Ask’

WASHINGTON — Republicans blocked a last-ditch effort in the Senate to lift the military’s ban on openly gay troops on Thursday, dealing a major blow to gay-rights groups and making it unlikely Congress could repeal “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell” any time soon.

The 57-40 vote fell three short of the 60 needed to overcome procedural hurdles to lift the 17-year-old ban. Sen. Susan Collins of Maine was the lone Republican voting to advance the bill, and Sen. Joe Manchin of West Virginia was the only Democrat to vote against it.

Property-maintenance action questioned

Johnson County’s property ordinance needs “rewording.”

Residents expressed concern over the Johnson County Board of Supervisors’ proposed property-maintenance ordinance during a public hearing Thursday night at the Johnson County Health and Human Services Building, 855 S. Dubuque St., said Supervisor Rod Sullivan.

Sullivan said the main issue was the current ordinance is “written a little unclear,” and needs revisions.

The goal, Sullivan said, is to increase the construction, electrical, plumbing, and heating standards for buildings typically intended for residency.

Concern raised at the public hearing addressed issues of farm buildings such as barns and garages.

Senate doesn’t have a Dream

WASHINGTON — The Senate moved Thursday to delay a politically charged showdown vote on legislation carving out a path to legal status for foreign-born youngsters brought to this country illegally, putting off but probably not preventing the measure’s demise.

Facing GOP objections, Democrats put aside the so-called Dream Act and said they’d try again to advance it before year’s end. They’re short of the 60 votes needed to do so, however, and critics in both parties quickly said they won’t change their minds in the waning days of the Democratic-controlled Congress.

“This is mainly a political exercise rather than a serious attempt to deal with our broken immigration system,” said Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas.

Congressional delegation should oppose tax deal

Any UI student will tell you procrastination is never a good option. Congress is learning that message the hard way, because the Bush-era tax cuts are set to expire at the end of this year. President Obama and lawmakers in Washington have had ample time to end President Bush's irresponsible tax policy and form a better one, but the issue has been kept on the back burner.

Obama recently made a deal with Congressional Republicans to extend the tax cuts for all income brackets for two years. In exchange, the GOP agreed, among other things, not to block the extension of the deadline for termination of unemployment benefits. On Thursday, House Democrats voted to oppose the compromise; Democrats in the Senate should do the same.

In addition, Iowa Sens. Charles Grassley and Tom Harkin should join Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., in filibustering Obama's compromise. We have already come out against the extension of the tax cuts for upper-income Americans, and our position remains the same. Extending the tax cuts for the wealthy would have little benefit for the American economy and would substantially increase the deficit. In addition, it would be callous to give the rich further tax breaks while millions of ordinary Americans are suffering.

Proponents of keeping all of the cuts argue that allowing the top earners to continue to pay lower taxes would stimulate the economy, because the wealthy will have more money to spend. But 25 percent of the cuts would go to the top one-half of 1 percent of Americans; studies have shown that people in that group save a large amount of the money they receive from tax cuts, thus providing little stimulative effect for the economy. In addition, the cuts would substantially increase the deficit — the tax deal costs more than the stimulus.

Whether Sanders' filibuster will be successful is questionable but not unlikely. Sixty votes are required to break a filibuster in the Senate, and if Iowa's senators both voice their opposition to the plan, the filibuster's chances would improve.

"It's the end of the session, so incentives to compromise diminish," University of Iowa political science Associate Professor Douglas Dion said. "It's tough to figure out who has the most to lose from this scenario."

The new compromise is not a deal, it is a concession. Obama argues that the benefits make the deal worthwhile. The GOP threatened to block all of the tax cuts if the rates for the top earners were not preserved. Obama said he feels the current situation made the deal necessary, arguing that Republican leadership's acceptance of an extension of jobless benefits and payroll tax cuts is a huge boon for the country.

But Obama is negotiating from the position of a president with a majority in both houses of Congress. Even when Republicans gain control of the House next January, Obama will still wield the veto pen. The irresponsible deal he made with Congressional Republican leadership doesn't help the middle class and poor; it is simply the result of poor leadership and negotiation on his part.

Finally, it is interesting that politicians in Washington continually cite government debt as a chief concern, yet advocate a policy that requires borrowing a large amount of money to further enrich the affluent. Harkin and Grassley can take a stand against governmental fiscal irresponsibility by joining Sanders.

Democratic lawmakers need to draw a line in the sand and oppose these tax cuts for the wealthy; Obama has clearly acquiesced already.

Your turn. Should Iowa's congressional delegation support Obama's tax-cut deal? Weigh in on dailyiowan.com.

Anti-Obama backlash?

SHAWN GUDE
shawn.gude@uiowa.edu

Take a peek at the raw numbers, and it's clear the left's supposed "enthusiasm gap" is a canard; disillusioned liberals haven't abandoned Obama en masse, much as his policies might warrant such an exodus.

Among those who describe themselves as "liberal Democrats," Obama still commands a stratospheric 83 percent approval rating, according to Gallup. Contrary to conventional wisdom, it's moderate and conservative Democrats who have a bigger beef with Obama.

Obama's presidency hasn't been a complete failure (he can boast about student-loan legislation, the Lilly Ledbetter Act, and the stimulus, for example). But he's performed abhorrently in many areas, kowtowing to Republican power plays, duplicitously filling his White House with former lobbyists, and continuing — and, at times, expanding — policies that flagellate the rule of law.

Obama appointed a non-educator to be his secretary of Education, a man who embraces many of the "school reform" movement's nostrums. He didn't push hard enough on climate-change legislation. He's failed to end "Don't Ask, Don't Tell."

And earlier this week, in a characteristic move, Obama announced a deal with Republicans that would extend the Bush tax cuts for all tax brackets. (As he's wont to do, Obama defended the deal with a little rhetorical realpolitik: "It's not perfect, but ...")

So will there be major political consequences for Obama's tepid centrism? Or are progressives just being unfairly critical of Obama's presidency? No and, for the most part, no.

Iowa could play a key role in answering the first question. An internecine fight would turn an otherwise boring Iowa caucuses into an exciting Democratic denouement. (That's one of the reasons the press has eagerly advanced the story.)

But David Redlawsk, a former University of Iowa political-science associate professor and an expert on the Iowa caucuses, doesn't see a challenge materializing.

"Any real challenger would already have to be out there building a campaign, and there is no evidence this is happening," he told me via e-mail. Redlawsk, who is now a political-science professor at Rutgers University, added, "There really isn't any major Democrat who would take on Obama, at least not at the moment."

Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., would be a great candidate, but he appears uninterested in running against Obama. Howard Dean, a less appealing candidate in my mind, has also said he won't challenge the president.

That's not to say Iowa progressives — and other civil libertarians — should just shut up and assent to Obama's agenda. Many of his policies are objectionable and deserve strident criticism.

But those on the left should have regarded Obama as, at best, a palliative for a system of entrenched corruption. Single politicians, no matter their integrity, can do little to rectify a rotten political process.

As the late Howard Zinn wrote last year, "Where progress has been made, wherever any kind of injustice has been overturned, it's been because people acted as citizens and not as politicians."

Those who thought otherwise were duped by Obama's undeniably masterful campaign. His faux movement, however, sold a deified product that promised (fill-in-the-blank) change; marketers have been known to use faulty advertising.

As for the many liberal Democrats who still support Obama, I'd be wary of being a loyal apparatchik. He's expanded our wars abroad, and his record on civil liberties has been abysmal. It's not as if his administration has claimed the power to kill American citizens without due process because of Republican obstructionism.

Civil liberties issues aside, Obama shouldn't provoke the vitriol he so often does. But he also deserves little praise. In the end, he's just another politician. ■

DJK betrayed our trust

I really hope the charges against Iowa wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos are not true. Because if they are true, he has betrayed us.

We gave him our adulation, our hopes, our dreams, our screams, and our money (in the form of his scholarship) and made him into a living legend (see the various "RUN DJK" shirts, for example). All we asked in return was for him to play well and keep playing — that is, not get suspended or declared ineligible.

No one would have cared what he did from Dec. 29 on. He wouldn't be part of the team anymore, and he could carry on any self-destructive actions all he liked. But during the season, there is a trust factor, and he betrayed our trust.

He has shamed us. There is somewhat of a national perception that the University of Iowa has a prevalent party and drug culture. The arrest of a leading representative of the university, one who had a bright NFL future ahead of him, just encourages that perception.

Get over alcohol issue

The buzz on campus is about the devastation of the 21-ordinance. Each class I have been in has incorporated the bar problem into lectures and discussions. Students are complaining, yet they did not come together enough to vote when it mattered.

I was more interested in an issue brought up in a Dec. 6 letter — finding the perfect place to study. Now, this is an issue we should care about. Instead, we are surrounded by dozens of articles containing dozens of quotations from Mike Porter. Perhaps our campus would be better off not worrying about killing off our party-school reputation but instead focusing on other programs that represent the UI in a positive manner.

For instance, Dance Marathon is a very important and monumental program the UI has been a part of. Why aren't programs like this getting the same attention as alcohol? Instead, we are continuing the battle against liquor and anything involving it. I think the faculty is making our image worse, rather than better, by overanalyzing this issue.

And on Thursday, once again I picked up the DI and saw an alcohol debate: over whether delivery of alcohol to residences will be allowed. When will this fight end?

Wanted: a party that works for 'We, the People'

Most of us agree that things aren't right in our world and that change is desperately needed. What's lacking is the political party willing and able to stand up to the power elite. In both Iowa and Washington, D.C., Democrats have taken small steps forward (and plenty of steps backward, too). Yet at this pathetic pace, the rich will continue to get richer while the rest of us struggle harder and fall further behind.

We need a political party that stands up to the corrupt culture permeating America's corporate and government leadership. We need a political party that will do what's right for our people, our land, and our planet.

Existing third parties are anemic and seem incapable of doing the tough grass-roots organizing needed to truly challenge one of the two major political parties. The Republican Party — the unofficial mouthpiece for the evangelical thought police — is pretty much beyond hope.

The pressing question in my mind is this: Can the Democratic Party be reclaimed from corporate interests, or does it need to be replaced?

Each week through the Fallon Forum, around 25,000 Iowans join the discussion about this pressing question and related issues. In a sea of far-right jabber, the Fallon Forum is one of the few local, independent talk shows in Iowa. In 2011, one of my goals for the show is to lay the groundwork for a political force that puts people before big corporations and big government. Through focused, civil dialogue, I'm convinced a majority of us can agree how best to do that.

Here's what I want from the political party that represents and fights for the people's goals and values. It's a work in progress, and I'm eager to know how others would refine and revise it:

1. Rein in the abuse of money in politics.
2. Eliminate runaway government debts, the federal deficit, and the practics of hiding the full cost of government spending.

3. Cut government spending, especially the bloated military budget, entitlements for the very rich and big businesses, and excessive bureaucracy, paperwork, and regulation.
4. Prioritize the environment — address climate change, floodplain management, dependence on non-renewable fuels, and corporate domination of our food supply.
5. Establish a more equitable tax structure that lowers taxes on the average person while assuring that the wealthiest Americans again pay their fair share.
6. Stop government meddling in people's personal choices and private lives.

7. End insurance, drug company, and mega-hospital control over our health-care system.
8. Re-establish effective antitrust laws that are critical to a free-market system.
9. Ensure access to fair and impartial courts.
10. Re-establish a minimal but fair regulatory system that puts checks and balances on large businesses, while helping small entrepreneurs live their dream.
11. Reform America's failed immigration laws, while providing global leadership to address the present unsustainable level of world population growth.
12. Inspire people to greater levels of personal responsibility.

The bottom line is, if our political leadership doesn't get to work on this agenda soon, if they instead continue to battle over hot-button social issues and let lobbyists call the shots, America's problems are going to go from bad to worse. I believe Americans can muster the will to do the right thing. And it starts with civil dialogue and individual and collective soul searching.

This is a national undertaking, of course, but it might as well begin here in Iowa.

Ed Fallon hosts the Fallon Forum, weekdays from 7 to 8 p.m. on 98.3 WOW-FM in central Iowa and live stream at www.fallonforum.com. Fallon served in the Iowa House for 14 years and ran for governor in 2006 and Congress in 2008.

Nursing prof wins prestigious award

The UI professor is recognized internationally for her work in the nursing field.

By ALLIE WRIGHT
allie-wright@uiowa.edu

Diane Huber knew she wanted to work in the health-care field.

Though she first wanted to become a doctor, adversity stood in her way.

"It wasn't a realistic career option for women," the 60-year-old said, and it wasn't the norm to educate women in math and science fields when she was in school.

But despite those obstacles, the Cedar Rapids native attended the University of Iowa to earn a Bachelor of Science in nursing in 1975.

Set on entering the health-care field, Huber said "I always sort of knew, so that was a great gift."

She is now a professor and the coordinator of health systems at the UI College of Nursing and the College of Public Health. She is also a Fellow of the American Academy of Nursing and is certified by the American Nurses Association.

In October, the American Nurses Credentialing Center awarded Huber the Certified Advanced Nurse Award, saluting her research and experience in nursing education.

Huber began her career working in primary care with a group of pediatricians. She also spent time working in the UIHC neonatal unit of the hospital, where she endured a challenging experience in the late-1970s.

Huber said there was a power outage in the intensive-care unit and the backup generator did not kick in.

"I had to keep 10 babies alive with no power," Huber said.

Huber said workers eventually had to use long drop cords to obtain power from other areas in the hospital. Every baby lived through the ordeal.

"Nothing in my education prepared me for that," she said.

Huber's colleagues spoke highly of the award recipient.

"She's well-known nationally and internationally for her work," said Jill

Scott-Cawiezell, a professor and associate dean for academic affairs in the nursing school. "She's certainly a leader in terms of education on our campus."

Huber also earned a master's and Ph.D. at the UI, though not exactly how she had planned.

Huber applied for a spot in the nursing program, but was the first runner-up. Instead, she applied for a master's degree sooner than she had planned. Then, about two to three months later, she received a surprise notification admitting her to the master's program — and tuition and books were free.

"My life plan got radically altered," Huber said. "You never forget something like that."

Another blessing during Huber's education was the opportunity to earn a Ph.D. while still working at the hospital.

Huber said she took classes on Friday evenings and Saturdays so she could continue working.

Nursing is more than bedside care, she said. It's the ability to not only take care of patients but also know how to coordinate an entire hospital environment. Nursing isn't "sexy or glamorous," and a lot of what nurses do is behind the scenes and very complex, she said.

Huber's areas of expertise are nursing leadership and case management, which works to reconfigure and enhance hospital environments.

Katie Gardner, one of Huber's four grandchildren, described her grandmother as "nice and funny."

"She's a good grandma, and she's a good friend," the 10-year-old said, adding she looks up to Huber's career accomplishments.

New City Manager Tom Markus shakes hands with people at a reception in his honor on Thursday in City Hall. The line of eager attendees stretched out the door, with people wearing anything from suits to sweatshirts and plenty of men in uniform, all waiting for a handshake and a little face time with the new city manager. "I'm happy to be here; this is a wonderful place to be ... there's a lot of potential for improvement," said Markus, who was formerly the city manager of Birmingham, Mich. "I hope to leave the city better than how I found it."

Techno party of a different color

Gabe's Black Tie Affair will bring some holiday cheer with techno and house music tonight.

By LAURA WILLIS
laura-willis@uiowa.edu

Jeff Ryon and Brandon Richerson's job seems like a college student's dream.

"We throw parties," Richerson said.

The two spend hours each week sifting through online blogs, magazine articles, and record-store selections for the latest underground music. As DJs, they work late weekend nights scratching techno records and creating a high-energy environment, and they strive to persuade an audience to interact with a show, ensuring a good time.

"Sometimes, DJ parties can be the same thing each time," Ryon said. "You go, dance, and play the same music. We wanted to shake things up a bit."

What better way to do that than by creating a high-school-prom theme event, sprinkled with techno and house music played by local DJs such as Cory Simpson, Audiomatic, and Detroit favorite John Johr.

At 8 p.m. today, the two DJs will help present a Black-Tie Affair, a holiday techno formal at Gabe's, 330 E. Washington St. Admission is $10.

The two took a cue from the early '90s rave scene that was prominent in New York clubs at the time. Back then, Richerson and Ryon remember seeing partygoers dressed up in fun outfits such as Cat in the Hat costumes, and others wearing brightly colored lights wrapped around their bodies.

But the scene quickly changed from a positive atmosphere to having a more negative connotation, Ryon said.

"The rave scene shortly turned into drugs and huge pants and became formulaic," he said.

While they are not fans of the later rave culture, Richerson and Ryon hope to bring back the scene's creative idea of theme parties to Iowa City.

"There has always been a music scene, but we've tried to rebuild it," Ryon said.

In October, Ryon and Richerson put together "Séance," a party that had darker fall theme. Based on the fall equinox, there was a darker light display incorporated with heavier techno music. Last summer, Richerson threw a monthly event titled "Blue Friday," a dance party featuring Midwestern DJs. Next month, the two hope to start a new Gabe's tradition titled "Sophistifunk." Like "Blue Fridays," Sophistifunk will be a monthly showing of local DJs. The environment will be more casual, showcasing both techno and house music.

"We try to get people to play something unique," Richerson said. "We look for DJs who play really good music and not top-40s hits."

With each show, Richerson and Ryon hope that people arrive and more importantly, have a good time.

"A big thing for me is later on when someone says, 'That party was awesome,'" Ryon said.

Well-traveled laughter

Comedian Todd Barry will make his first stop in Iowa City.

By JESSICA CARBINO
jessica-carbino@uiowa.edu

A crowd of people, a sole microphone sitting center stage, and just five minutes. That's where it all began for comedian Todd Barry, whose success started at open-mike nights at comedy clubs throughout Florida.

These seemingly random performances led him to become a professional comedian and embark on many tours showcasing his talent. He will perform his comedy at 9 p.m. Dec. 12 at the Mill, 120 E. Burlington St. Admission is $10 in advance, $12 the day of the show.

Sam Lockeward, a talent booker at the Mill, says he's excited to finally have a comedian visit the venue.

"He's super funny," Lockeward said. "[I first heard of him when] I saw him perform on TV."

Barry has been doing comedy for the past 23 years and though he didn't become interested in performing until college, he was always a big fan of comedy.

"I loved watching comics on TV, bought comedy albums, and went to comedy clubs, but I never thought about doing it until I was 23 years old," he said.

Once he figured out comedy was what he wanted to pursue as a career, he first began by trying to get his name out there, making a big splash by landing performances on the "Late Show with David Letterman," "Late Night with Conan O'Brien," and "Jimmy Kimmel Live," among others. Though these shows may have been intimidating for the then amateur comedian, Barry didn't let his reservations stand in his way.

"These shows are always exciting but scary," he said. "You're being seen by so many more people than if you just do a show at a club."

He has performed at a variety of establishments around the globe, traveling across the country performing shows, and in England, Scotland, the Netherlands, Ireland, Sweden, Canada, Bermuda, and Australia.

"I really loved Australia, but I really liked the other countries I've visited; it's hard to pick a favorite," he said.

In addition to performing in clubs around the world, he also had the opportunity to play at Carnegie Hall not just once but twice.

But one place Barry hasn't performed yet is Iowa City.

"It's my first show in Iowa City, and I'm looking forward to it," he said.

Now that he's graduated from the comedy-club circuit, he's enjoying the perks that come with being a professional comedian.

"I like having creative control and sleeping late," he said.

The comedian is now pursuing a career in acting as well. Because of his many relationships in the film industry, he was lucky enough to land parts in several movies and television shows.

"I was able to get parts without an extensive auditioning process; that's how I get most of my acting work, luckily," he said.

One of Barry's latest works is Pete Smalls is Dead, which is on the festival circuit. The movie stars Peter Dinklage, Steve Buscemi, Tim Roth, and Rosie Perez. He also has a small part in the Sigourney Weaver and Alicia Silverstone movie Vamps and one in the film Wanderlust, starring Paul Rudd and Jennifer Aniston.

Though Barry is enjoying his career as a funnyman, working on his acting career has its own advantages.

"For films and TV, I like seeing how the end product turns out," he said. "It can also be fun to be on the set."

"Sedaris can still make me laugh harder than anyone I've ever read."

Abortion plan draws fire

By MAX FREUND
maxwell-freund@uiowa.edu

A day after one Iowa lawmaker announced plans to tighten abortion regulations, local legislators and women's advocates said the change is unlikely and unnecessary.

Rep. Matt Windschitl, R-Missouri Valley, said he plans to introduce a bill during the first week of the legislative session designed to shorten the amount of time after conception in which a woman can have an abortion.

Iowa law allows women to have an abortion before their 27th week of pregnancy, but Windschitl's bill aims to limit that to 15 to 20 weeks.

"If I could make [abortions illegal], that would be the ultimate goal, but right now is not the right time to pursue an all-out ban in the state of Iowa," Windschitl said. "The biggest concern right now is to make sure we close loopholes in our law to allow late-term abortions in Iowa."

But other lawmakers are skeptical the bill would have any chance of getting past the Senate.

"The Senate is made up of Democrats, and they are certainly not in favor of infringing on a woman's right to choose," said State Rep. Mary Mascher, D-Iowa City. "The House can be as pro-life as they want to be, but it isn't going to affect what the Senate will do."

Sen. Joe Bolkcom, D-Iowa City concurred with Mascher, calling it "very bad" if the state attempted to interfere with the affairs of a woman and her doctor.

While the bill may lead to political conflict, local Iowa City women's groups are more concerned with what it could mean for victims of crimes.

"I think that there are all kinds of circumstances including situations where there was rape or incest, in which different determinations may be made according to each individual," said Karla Miller, the executive director of the Rape Victim Advocacy Program in Iowa City. "I think arbitrarily picking whether it will be 20, 24, or 27 weeks just as an abstract piece of legislation is not going to really take into consideration the reality of circumstances that a woman might be in."

And for some women, those circumstances may be life-threatening.

Abbey Fairbanks, a University of Iowa clinical assistant professor in obstetrics and gynecology, said making a ban on abortions after 15 weeks is dangerous.

"It is after that point that if we see something that is terribly wrong with that fetus, we can make a decision about that," she said.

Fairbanks said abortions occurring after 20 weeks make up only 1 percent of all abortions each year, and they are usually made for serious medical reasons that involve the life of the mother.

But Windschitl said he is confident that the majority of Iowans are in favor of eliminating late-term abortions all together.

While some UI students said they were against the idea of eliminating abortions, one UI freshman, Maryam Bakare said six months was too long to allow them.

"I know a friend who was months premature, and she is living now," she said. "Imagine if someone had aborted her. Why would you carry a baby that far?"

Greeks make alcohol progress

Increased efforts since 2008 have already reduced binge drinking among UI greeks.

By ARIANA WITT
ariana-witt@uiowa.edu

Parts of the University of Iowa's new three-year plan to reduce dangerous drinking targets one group on campus already seeing positive results — greek life.

In the Alcohol Harm Reduction Plan released on Tuesday, officials noted they plan to continue some initiatives started in 2008 geared at fraternities and sororities such as educating bars on individual houses' drinking rules and training members about alcohol safety.

Those efforts have so far been successful, according to UI officials and survey results. Reports of binge drinking among greek members decreased by 25 percent from an initial survey in 2008 to one given two months later, said Stephanie Beecher, a health educator at Health Iowa. In that time, 23 percent fewer greek students said they drank during tailgates.

Officials said they included programs aimed at the greek community in the plan to continue the initiatives' success in the first two years.

"We're also working on initiatives that will educate in-house directors because they're the closest to their members and should have that knowledge at their disposal," said Melissa Shaub, the UI assistant director of Fraternity and Sorority Life.

Beyond self-reported drinking rates, the number of arrest and citations — mainly for alcohol-related crimes — has fallen by about 3 percentage points from 2008-09 school year to 2009-10.

Still, fraternities maintained the highest rate for charges among any other campus groups — including sororities and the overall undergraduate average — with 12.6 percent of members charged.

But some within the greek system say targeting fraternities and sororities is unnecessary.

"I feel that in-house educational [efforts] are more beneficial than campuswide ones," said Mark Rigby, president of the Interfraternity Council. "If you have a small group that's just one chapter of about 50 or 60, it's easier to garner attention of the members."

One expert agreed that focused on intra-

"What's essential is fostering the brotherhood and the sisterhood, and that's where you begin to have an effect on drinking," said Dale Tampke, the dean of undergraduate studies at the University of North Texas who has 20 years of experience in advising greek life and various large universities.

Paul Jermihov, the live-in house director for the UI chapter of Tau Kappa Epsilon — which has a 14 percent arrest and citation rate — said his fraternity has done more to combat risky drinking behaviors since being put on probation for open container violations on house property.

"We found it as a great opportunity to develop our own plans to reduce drinking," he said. "And I think Jermihov said he is working to reduce that number by enforcing member attendance at alcohol-education meetings, and he would also like to encourage more positive peer responses to high alcohol consumption.

Clothing drive aids area teens

Over 150 teens in need benefited from the clothing drive sponsored by United Action for Youth.

By MITCHELL SCHMIDT
mitchell-schmidt@uiowa.edu

Southeast Junior High eighth-grader Eve Small folded the tops, one at a time, and laid them back on the table in a colorful spiral design.

The room was packed with tables and racks full of colorful shirts, coats, and pants Thursday evening. While a large amount of clothing remained, it didn't compare with the mountains of apparel that tower.

The clothing drive, aimed at providing fashionable clothing to teenagers who can't afford it, was the first of its kind hosted by Johnson County's United Action for Youth, and organizers called it a success.

In total, roughly 200 kids received clothing.

"I think it's a really good idea," 13-year-old Eve said. "Everyone deserves clothes."

While clothing drives are nothing new in Iowa City, United Action for Youth volunteer coordinator Mickey Hampton said what made this particular one unique was that articles collected were strictly for those between 12 and 18 years of age. Typically, drives tend to accumulate clothes for younger children and older adults.

Groups of students, occasionally with parents, picked up pieces of clothing, checking for styles, sizes, and if they matched other selections.

Discussion of such a drive been in the works for a few months after members of United Action for Youth had heard of stories of teens not having clothes to wear or not going to school because of a lack of apparel, Hampton said.

United Action for Youth Development Director Kate Moreland said the need for clothing has also been on the rise.

"It's definitely what we're seeing as a pattern," she said, adding this could be because of the poor economy or increased outreach by the organization.

Hampton said teenagers tend to be a little more "selective" on what they will wear, making the drive even more effective.

"Kids give each other a hard time about what they wear and what they don't," she said. "So it was kind of our hope that we could attract some really good donations and offer some really good quality clothes that they could have to choose from."

Eve, knowing firsthand, agreed.

"Sometimes in school, if you don't wear the right clothes, it's really hard to survive socially," she said. "You can be excluded from a group for not dressing right."

And Iowa City's college-town atmosphere, rich with young adults, lends perfectly to such a clothing drive, because many good-quality and some even name-brand clothing was donated, Hampton said.

The local UI greek community also provided support, with many members donating clothing, or in UI junior and Chi Omega member Alyssa Orosz's case, encouraging and picking up donations.

"It's just a simple thing that we can do and we are privileged enough to be able to do it," she said.

Hampton said she hopes to make the event an annual or biannual occurrence, and officials have made plans to hold another collection in May.

Moreland said that as long as kids are in need of clothes, United Action for Youth will try to help.

"These kids are not asking for an iPod, they're asking for cloths and coats," she said.

Former Iowa wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos is surrounded by fans awaiting autographs after an open practice at Kinnick Stadium on Aug. 14. The star was arrested on seven drug-related charges Tuesday.

GO AND CATCH A FALLING STAR

It's an age-old story: The beautiful becomes the damned. But for Derrell Johnson-Koulianos, it wasn't supposed to be this way.

By SCOTT MILLER
scott-t-miller@uiowa.edu

Derrell Johnson-Koulianos showed up for his court appearance on the blustery Wednesday morning dressed in a gray turtleneck, black blazer, and freshly pressed slacks. Sunglasses shielded his eyes from the camera clicks and the recording devices as he made his way to the courthouse. His hair and beard were newly trimmed — a decidedly different look from his mug shot taken at the Johnson County Jail some 19 hours earlier. There, he wore a hooded sweatshirt — his hair not groomed, his facial hair a mess.

It wasn't supposed to end this way for Johnson-Koulianos, the most prolific wide receiver in Iowa history. It wasn't supposed to end with police raiding his house. It wasn't supposed to end with the discovery of pharmaceutical drugs. It wasn't supposed to end with Johnson-Koulianos reportedly testing positive for cocaine and marijuana. It wasn't supposed to end with the 23-year-old being formally charged with seven drug-related charges and national headlines about an Iowa player running a "drug house."

No, it wasn't supposed to end this way at all.

Grapplers pound UNI

The Hawkeye wrestlers dominated Northern Iowa, 39-0, behind 30 takedowns and 17:34 of riding time.

CEDAR FALLS — The difference in intensity between Iowa and Northern Iowa was clear before the first wrestler stepped onto the mat in the West Gym.

One Panther grappler flashed smiles to the crowd, and others wore solemn looks.

Hawkeye wrestlers wore one look in common: a scowl.

The gap in intensity showed on the mat as well, as Iowa demolished its in-state counterpart, 39-0.

The Hawkeyes' work in the top position was key.

Kachine Alexander's hard drive to the basket nearly five minutes into the second half — which resulted in a two-point field goal — changed everything.

Alexander extended the Hawkeyes' lead to 10 points, and No. 19 Iowa never looked back, as it routed 16th-ranked Iowa State, 62-40, in Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Thursday night.

Iowa racked up 17:34 in total riding time, with eight wrestlers scoring a riding time point.

"Really [on top] is where our guys are comfortable," Iowa head coach Tom Brands said. "Wrestling in the positions that you're comfortable in and doing what you're good at. And when somebody is giving you something, and it's working ... stay where you're good."

Thirty takedowns — to the Panthers' one takedown — made accumulating riding time easy for the Hawkeyes. When asked about Iowa's work on top, UNI head coach and former Iowa assistant Doug Schwab quickly responded, "Oh, no doubt, they rode us really hard."

Aaron Janssen, the Hawkeye 165-pounder, said the goal once the Hawks get opponents flat on the mat is to turn and pin them. Two wrestlers — Jeret Chiri and Matt McDonough — followed through on that Hawkeye philosophy.

Chiri pinned Jamal Lawrence in 5:59 after building an 8-3 lead. The 149-pounder had lost his last two matches by major decision before he flattened Lawrence.

"Jeret Chiri was a good example of a guy not hanging out and giving the guy really any respect and just attacking," Brands said.

McDonough made quick work of Terrance Young, taking him down 57 seconds into the match and cradling him for the pin 15 seconds later.

It was the second pin in a row for the 125-pounder and continued to pull him out of an early season "slump" — he didn't record a pin until Dec. 4 against Michigan State.

"McDonough has not changed some things, but he's gotten into a mode," Brands said. "And it's called the 'McDonough Mode.' And good for him because he needs to be in the McDonough Mode. Early on, he wasn't in the McDonough Mode, and he doesn't need to question anything."

The fifth-year head coach said McDonough needed to take care of business in his routine and not worry about whether he's first on the mat for the Hawkeyes or not. The sophomore was frequently a sparkplug for Iowa at beginning of meets last year.

"Don't worry about all the outside, just do what you're good at doing and that's getting ready to wrestle a tough, hard seven minutes,"

Brands said. "And putting guys down hard, and putting a cradle on them and pinning them."

Despite the pins, victories were built on quick takedowns and subsequent riding time. Brands said he doesn't evaluate performances based on the grapplers work on top, instead focusing on whether the Hawkeyes wrestled a smart match in advantageous positions.

But for Schwab, a big difference came from Iowa's punishing work on in the top position.

"I don't know how many times they ended the period on top, but that's huge," Schwab said after Iowa finished 20 of 28 periods on top. "They ended the period with no response from us, whether it's an escape point or whatever. They finished a lot of periods on top, and that's tough to overcome."

Janssen makes a pitch

By SAM LOUWAGIE
samuel-louwagie@uiowa.edu

CEDAR FALLS — It was Aaron Janssen's turn Thursday night in Cedar Falls.

Jake Kerr had wrestled at 165 pounds for the Hawkeyes in five of six dual meets before Thursday's matchup with Northern Iowa. Kerr's mixed results included four wins and a 4-1 loss against Iowa State, after which head coach Tom Brands said Kerr needed to "wrestle smarter."

Three weeks into what appears to be a second-straight year of competition between the two, Janssen got a chance to state his case for the starting job against the Panthers. And while the fifth-year senior pulled out a 4-0 victory and earned praise from Brands, he said he didn't feel he stated it strongly enough.

"I wanted it to be better," Janssen said. "Because I needed to be out there scoring more points."

After a scoreless first period, Janssen earned an escape with 1:17 left in the second and then took down

Northern Iowa's Brice Wolf. Janssen rode Wolf for the remaining 44 seconds of the period.

First-year Panther head coach Doug Schwab said he was impressed by how well the Hawkeyes wrestled from the top position, and he said his team had struggled from the bottom all season long. Despite those struggles, Schwab surprised Brands by instructing Wolf to begin the third period from the bottom.

Janssen kept him there for the entire third period, earning a point for riding time and sealing a victory.

"We made him pay for choosing down," Brands said. "I like that. Good job by Janssen."

Janssen, however, wasn't pleased with his third period. The Emmetsburg, Iowa, native said he considered it a missed chance to display his offensive capabilities to a coaching staff he needs to impress.

"I felt like that was a turning point where I could have let him go and taken him down," Janssen said. "That's where I could have broken him to get the major, and I didn't do it. I would've liked to turn the heat up a little bit as far as Kerr and me. Offense is going to help separate me from Kerr."

Attempting to separate from each other isn't new for the pair. They spent last season fighting for the starting spot at 157 pounds. Janssen went 12-4, but Kerr got the nod in the postseason, placing fourth at the Big Ten championship to earn an invitation to NCAAs.

The competition has spilled over into this season, the final year as a Hawkeye for both.

While Kerr has gotten the nod for the majority of the dual meets so far, Janssen has been wrestling well away from the spotlight. Thursday's victory pushed his season record to 10-0, and he won the 165-pound title at the Northern Iowa open last weekend.

While Janssen won his match Thursday, Brands said the battle will likely continue until the Midlands Championship in Evanston, Ill., beginning on Dec. 29.

"It's pretty even," he said. "Janssen's been doing a good job at the open tournaments. Jake Kerr has been doing a good job representing us in dual meets. It was Janssen's turn tonight, but Midlands will settle it."

outscored the Cyclones (6-2), 25-13, to finish the game.

But no matter the outcome of the game, or even the several momentum changing baskets the Hawkeyes made, head coach Lisa Bluder's squad simply outplayed their in-state opponent.

At Bluder's weekly press conference on Wednesday, the 11-year Hawkeye head coach said an inside post presence was going to be a key for her squad to win.

Not only did Iowa trounce Iowa State in the post, it dominated. Iowa outscored the Cyclones 34-8 inside. Morgan Johnson was a big reason for that, leading the Hawkeyes with 16 points. The sophomore center had her third double-double of the season, as she also had 10 rebounds.

Iowa State head coach Bill Fennelly praised the Hawkeyes after the game, acknowledging that the Cyclones' ability to get points in the post was not comparable with Iowa's.

"We got our butt kicked in the post," Fennelly said.

Johnson said her continual work with Iowa assistant coach Jan Jensen has helped her throughout the course of the season.

"I was trying to incorporate a couple moves that we worked on in practice," Johnson said. "Once the jump stop worked, we [continued] to do that again."

In addition to Johnson, Alexander and junior Kelly Krei also finished in double figures for points, with 13 and 16, respectively.

Although Jaime Printy's scoring production was lower than usual (five points), the sophomore's nine assists proved to be a big factor.

A large reason for the substantial deficit was because of Iowa's lockdown defense in the second half.

Iowa State's leading scorer, Kelsey Bolte, was held to eight points.

"Her shot is so quick," said Alexander, who guarded Bolte for virtually the entire game. "You give her any room, and it's going in. Just getting her out of those screens, and my teammates were always there to help me out."

For the Hawkeyes, they emerge with two wins among a much-hyped three-game stretch. Despite losing to North Carolina in the ACC/Big Ten Challenge, the Hawkeyes came back to defeat Big 12 opponent Kansas State and won handily Thursday night before an announced crowd of 6,364.

Although the matchup was a rivalry game, the victory against a ranked opponent will likely pay big dividends when the regular season comes to a close. Bluder reinforced that point after the Hawkeyes' 22-point thrashing of the Cyclones.

"Not only is it the whole Iowa-Iowa State thing, but also add onto it that they were ranked ahead in the polls, and that we [won] so convincingly," Bluder said. "I think it's a signature win for us in the fact it's the 15th-ranked team [ESPN/USA Today Coaches poll] in the country. Getting that, I think it will make an impact on the [NCAA] selection Committee."

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Printy aids win without scoring

Jaime Printy scored uncharacteristically low on Thursday night.

By JON FRANK
jon-frank@uiowa.edu

Jaime Printy wasn't the Black and Gold scoring machine she's proven to be so far in her Iowa career. She had her share of turnovers. Her shooting accuracy was nowhere near its potent season average.

But it didn't matter. The No. 19 Hawkeyes easily handled Iowa State (6-2), 62-40 despite a season-low 5 points from Printy.

Iowa (9-1) relied on a diverse cast from its experienced roster to send the No. 14 Cyclones back to Ames with the bitter taste of defeat. Three Hawkeyes breached the double-digit mark — none of them named Printy.

"Morgan [Johnson] great offensive game and defensive game tonight," coach

Lisa Bluder said. "It was so good to have Kelly [Krei] back on track."

And for Bluder's Bunch, knowing that they don't need the team's leading scorer to have an all-star night every contest is a huge advantage.

"We prefer to have five people in double figures, that's our goal," Bluder said. "[But] it's nice to see what these guys did tonight."

But don't be fooled by Printy's low point totals. She was still an integral part of the offensive game plan. Totalling a career-high nine assists, the Marion native played distributor. And her selfless ways led to game-changing Iowa baskets.

The biggest beneficiaries were Krei — who finished with 15 points — and Johnson — who dominated the paint with 16.

"I can't say enough good things about Jaime Printy and her passing abilities," Johnson said. "She just put the ball exactly where it needed to be, and it was easy to make the lay-up after that. She did the hard job, and I had the easy one."

Printy's newfound role as facilitator was a response to the smothering defensive pressure Iowa State applied solely on her.

"It was just another game where they were keying in on me, but my team did a great job of stepping up," the 5-11 guard said.

Cyclone guard Kelsey Bolte said that shutting down Printy was a big part of her team's defensive game plan before the game. That much seemed to work for Iowa State.

But the added emphasis on Printy left gaping holes near the basket, and she found and exposed the openings.

Thirty-four of the Hawkeyes' 62 points came in the paint.

"I love getting other people open shots," she said.

Printy's season scoring average — which entered Thursday's contest at 16 points per game — will suffer. But more important to her and her teammates is a victory. And in order to achieve that, she was more than willing to sacrifice statistics for success.

"Every game is going to be a little different obviously," she said. "But once I realized that they were keying in on me I realized I needed to do other things besides just score."

The best and worst of DJK

Johnson-Koulianos' best and worst trait has always been his affable personality. In front of the media — when he was still allowed to talk to the media — he always spoke as if he was giving a monologue. He wanted to entertain, to amuse. Most of all, he wanted to be liked. Heck, DJK even started his own Facebook fan page — one that had about 5,000 followers before he took it down on Dec. 7.

He wanted to be recognized. He wanted to be famous. Could this be connected to his past, to the feeling of abandonment he might have felt when his biological mother left him at such a young age?

Once when working on The Daily Iowan's weekly football insert, Pregame, I texted Johnson-Koulianos to clarify a point he made at the team's media day in August — the last time he spoke publicly. He answered my question, also adding, "Maybe get me on the front page of Pregame Friday?"

Forget about the marijuana. Try to get past the cocaine. It's some of the pharmaceutical substances police reportedly found in DJK's room that raise bigger questions:

- Zolpidem Tartrate, a medicine administered mainly to help the elderly get a good night's rest. "It's really unusual for young people to have sleeping medicines," said Katherine Linder, a pharmacist at Medicap Pharmacy in rural Iowa.

- Diazepam, one of the original anxiety medications.

- Hydromorphone Hydrochloride (Diluadid), a very strong controlled substance used for extreme pain. Typically seen in the treatment of cancer patients and people who have had severe accidents, it's stronger than morphine. "That's the big one. That's the one that made me go, 'Wow. What do they have that for?'" Linder said. "... There's no way that a football player or anybody would be using that acutely. In my practice, I've seen scripts for [Hydromorphone Hydrochloride] a few times. The likelihood of [Johnson-Koulianos] having a legitimate prescription for something like that is pretty low."

What were his intentions? Why did he have them? We don't know. But, allegedly, he had them.

"They're very dangerous," Linder said about the drugs found in Johnson-Koulianos' bedroom. "When you take hydromorphone by itself, without any kind of tolerance, you can have respiratory depression and die."

Up until this point, Johnson-Koulianos was defined by his vivacious public persona — not by the prescription drugs found in his room. The wide receiver's personality resembles NFL braggadocios Chad Ochocinco and Terrell Owens. Earlier this season, quarterback Ricky Stanzani said he was pretty sure those were Johnson-Koulianos' role models. (Neither Ochocinco nor Owens have ever faced the legal trouble now confronting Johnson-Koulianos.)

It's this personality that has, at times, alienated him

Iowa wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos is tackled by Minnesota cornerback Michael Carter during Iowa's game against Minnesota on Nov. 21, 2009, in Kinnick Stadium.

Former Iowa football player Derrell Johnson-Koulianos is driven away from the Johnson County Courthouse by his attorney, John Beasley, on Wednesday. Johnson-Koulianos was arrested Tuesday on four counts of possession of a controlled substance, one count of keeping a drug house, and two counts of unlawful possession of a prescription drug. He has waived his right to a speedy trial.

Iowa wide receiver Derrell Johnson-Koulianos celebrates with teammates after scoring a touchdown in the fourth quarter against Arizona in Tucson, Ariz., on Sept. 18.

from a Hawkeye coaching staff hell-bent on controlling the program's image and never saying too much. As recently as Nov. 27 against Minnesota, Johnson-Koulianos didn't start because fellow wide receiver Colin Sandeman had a "better week of practice," Ferentz said. When I asked DJK his explanation for the non-start, he said he was the last one on the field for the Friday walk-through.

But it's also a personality that endeared him to a fan base yearning for a star. At Kids Day and after home games, he could always be found with a black Sharpie in hand, signing countless autographs until the horde was pleased. In the lobby of the team's hotel for the Michigan game earlier this year, I ran into Johnson-Koulianos talking with several kids in Hawkeye gear. The kids looked up at him, admired him, adored him.

This was the world in which Johnson-Koulianos lived. He craved attention, and frankly, much of it was well-deserved. For four years, he was Iowa's most productive wide receiver. For four years, he lit up opposing secondaries. For four years, he compiled a record better than any other receiver to play in Iowa City. Better than Tim Dwight. Better than Kevin Kasper. Better than Danan Hughes and Quinn Early. DJK is Iowa's all-time leader in receptions and receiving yardage, and he has scored 17 touchdowns, including 10 this season.

It only took one day for all of that potential to unravel. Now, as the worst kind of attention zeroes in on him, there are no more records to break, no more autographs to sign, no more kids to ogle at him.

At Iowa media day on Aug. 6, Johnson-Koulianos said, "A lot of guys don't understand that fewer than half of 1 percent of the people in the world get to be a part of anything like this. That's an opportunity people dream of. I dreamt of it as a little boy, I can't believe I'm living it."

The dream is over. Johnson-Koulianos, a senior, has played his last game as a Hawkeye — head coach Kirk Ferentz said as much in his terse statement issued on the night of the arrest: "I am highly disappointed to learn of the charges. Derrell has been suspended from all team activities." And in a discussion Thursday with "A lot of guys don't understand that fewer than half of 1 percent of the people in the world get to be a part of anything like this. That's an opportunity people dream of. I dreamt of it as a little boy, I can't believe I'm living it."

— Derrell Johnson-Koulianos, at the team's Aug. 6 media day

Missouri reporters — Iowa plays Mizzou Dec. 28 in the Insight Bowl — Ferentz said, "He'll not play again here."

The NFL, which was once a mere certainty, may come calling; it may not. Johnson-Koulianos has left that in someone else's hands now.

"If you want to try to figure out the worst thing to do to your draft stock, he might have found it," said Wes Bunting, the director of college scouting for the National Football Post.

The elusive DJK story

I have been chasing Johnson-Koulianos' story for a while, but never would have guessed it would end up like this.

On March 9, I sent an e-mail to Iowa Sports Information Director Phil Haddy requesting to do a long profile on Johnson-Koulianos. The wide receiver's background — he was abandoned by his teen mother, adopted by the Koulianos family, and became a wildly successful Division-I athlete — was newsworthy enough, but that Johnson-Koulianos was on the verge of becoming Iowa's all-time leading receiver made this a story that had to be told.

Not surprisingly, Johnson-Koulianos was on board. "Let's do it big and do it right," I remember him telling me one night at Formosa, 221 E. College St. That was the DJK way — always wanting to do it big.

But per Ferentz's policy, all exclusive interviews are provided at the head coach's discretion. On March 11, Ferentz sent Haddy the following e-mail, which was then forwarded to me, "Great idea, but I'll decline right now on DJK. Is there another player he would like to do a positive feature on? [Adrian] Clayborn?"

And that was that — or so I thought.

Three months later, Mike Hlas — a longtime columnist at the Gazette and weekly contributor to the university-controlled postgame radio broadcast — was granted an extensive interview with Johnson-Koulianos for a feature in the newspaper's Iowa football preseason magazine. The story ran at the beginning of August. Hawkeye officials never made it clear what had changed over that three-month span.

I stayed in contact with Johnson-Koulianos throughout this season — a text here, a text there. I planned on doing my Honors project for the journalism school on him. We scheduled to meet three weeks ago at his house to start the process. Communication faltered, and that meeting never happened.

The sad ending

Johnson-Koulianos' story was supposed to end this way — with Lauren and Anthony Koulianos embracing their son at midfield of Kinnick Stadium on Senior Day. It was Nov. 20, and tears flowed from all three. This was the ending Johnson-Koulianos wanted. This was how he wanted people to remember him — as a first-team All-Big Ten receiver, as the product of a hard upbringing and a blessed adoption, as a future NFL player.

On March 14, a few days after Ferentz had rebuffed my request to chronicle Johnson-Koulianos' story, Anthony Koulianos texted me from Johnson-Koulianos' phone. He said he was honored that I would think his family's story was worthy of coverage. But he said it was paramount that his son not do anything against Ferentz's wishes.

His chain of text messages finished with, "Will definitely be talking to you in the future with a draft-day finish. God willing."

That seems so long ago. Seven drug charges ago. Where will Johnson-Koulianos go from here? Will he make better choices? Will he learn a valuable lesson? Is this sad ending really an ending at all?

We wonder. But then again, as we've learned when it comes to DJK, we never really know.

Hawks set for ISU

Fran McCaffery acknowledged the in-state rivalry but said it isn't nearly as important on the court as it is in the stands.

By SETH ROBERTS
seth-roberts@uiowa.edu

Iowa and Iowa State have a bit of history together, but Hawkeye head coach Fran McCaffery doesn't care.

As far as McCaffery is concerned, tonight's matchup between the Hawkeyes (5-4) and Cyclones (7-2) isn't any more significant than the other games his team has played.

"It's just the next game on the schedule," McCaffery said. "My approach as a coach has always been to put a game plan together and get the players to play the next game — and not make it more important than the previous game or the game after that."

Still, there's no denying that players and fans — who are encouraged to "black out" Carver-Hawkeye Arena — will be amped up for tonight's chapter in the 2010-11 Hy-Vee Cy-Hawk Series.

The Hawkeyes enter the game riding their first winning streak of the year after defeating Northern Iowa on Tuesday. Senior forward Jarryd Cole had a monster 10-point, 15-rebound double-double against the Panthers, and he attributed his performance to the in-state matchup before promising the team would try to be even better tonight, against arguably its biggest rival.

"We have that two-win winning streak right now, and all we can do is go up from here," Cole said after Tuesday's victory. "We're going to try to play our best basketball [against Iowa State] ... and keep it going from there."

Iowa will have to deliver on that promise if it wants to slow down one of the better shooting teams in the country. As of Dec. 5, the Cyclones were No. 16 in the nation in 3-point percentage (42.2 percent) and No. 17 in 3-point field goals per game (9.1).

No Iowa State player has been better from 3-point range than junior Scott Christopherson, whose 58.7 percentage from beyond the arc is the fourth-best mark in the nation, and McCaffery acknowledged the La Crosse, Wis., native will pose a challenge for a Hawkeye team that has at times struggled against the 3.

The coach put more emphasis on his own offensive players, though. He highlighted the frontcourt duo of Cole and freshman Melsahn Basabe, who added 14 points and seven boards against UNI to go along with Cole's career night. McCaffery said the performances will build self-confidence for the pair, and their confidence will have a trickle-down effect.

"I think it was important for both [Cole and Basabe], because they had both been up-and-down," the first-year head coach said. "When [Cole is] playing like that, it makes Mel's job a lot easier. When they're both feeding off each other, then it makes our perimeter players' jobs easier."

Iowa's frontcourt play has caught the attention of Iowa State head coach Fred Hoiberg, who told the school's athletics website he's been impressed with the physicality of Cole and Basabe.

"They were very physical and did a really good job [against UNI]," Hoiberg said in a video posted on cyclones.com. "We're going to have to be tough. We're going to have to play physical. We're going to have to go in and battle those guys in order for us to stay in the game."

The game will be the first meeting between the two first-year head coaches — Hoiberg, an Iowa State alumnus, agreed to coach his alma mater in April — and McCaffery said he has great respect for his Iowa State counterpart. He also conceded the energy in Carver-Hawkeye Arena will be greater than normal but continued to insist it's just another game in a long season.

"I'm not foolish: The players know the difference and the fans are much more excited," McCaffery said. "It's important for us to just make sure we keep everybody level-headed and focused on the game plan."

DANIEL FRANA
daniel-frana@uiowa.edu

Predictions for 2011:

- Oprah's network will expand to several South American countries, where she will become their malevolent dictator.
- Gary Busey will again run unsuccessfully for "Mayor of the Sun."
- Chad Ochocinco will introduce a line of alcoholic energy drinks called Ocho Loco, which will be banned when the FDA discovers the only two ingredients are gasoline and amphetamines.
- People will finally realize that Snugglies are just robes worn backwards, and sales of these bustard blanket-coats will drop precipitously.
- Oil will be discovered on Mars, and faster-than-light travel will be invented four days later.
- Modern science will conclude that rock should beat both paper and scissors, causing widespread riots and looting.
- Flying cars, talking animals, and jet packs are just a few of the things that will not be invented next year.
- After airing such shows as "Ice Road Truckers" and "Swamp People," the History Channel will finally give up the ghost of its supposed format completely and start showing porn.
- Food will be available in pill form, but only as suppositories.
- Russian paratroopers will invade a small Colorado town, and a group of teenagers will rebel against them. IT HAS BEEN FORETOLD.
- Facebook will become self-aware, only to immediately realize that it is pointless and delete everybody's accounts.
- Scientists will discover magic.

— Daniel Frana predicts that time will keep slipping, slipping, slipping... into the future.

DIRT WORK

MITCHELL SCHMIDT/THE DAILY IOWAN

Cindy Peterson pours a dirt sample into a soil-floatation device at the Office of the State Archaeologist on Thursday. Peterson, a University of Nevada graduate, has been an archaeologist at the University of Iowa for 18 years. The soil sample came from a storage pit from the loway tribe near Ottumwa and dates back to around 1765 to 1820, she said.

PRESENTS...

horoscopes Friday, Dec. 10, 2010

— by Eugenia Last

ARIES March 21-April 19 Take serious action against anyone trying to bully or coerce you into doing something you don't want to be a part of. Avoid arguments that will lead to a no-win situation. Don't burden yourself with other people's problems.

TAURUS April 20-May 20 A short trip or researching what you need to know to make the best decision regarding a move will pay off financially in the savings you make. Your stability and responsible nature will put you in a position to advance.

GEMINI May 21-June 20 Join forces with someone you trust to come up with a viable financial solution that will help you both. Trial and error may be tedious, but in the end, you will have more to show for your efforts. Take care of personal paperwork and money matters.

CANCER June 21-July 22 Put your heart on the line, and let your true feelings be known. You can change the dynamics of a relationship with honest communication. Cutting your overhead is a must.

LEO July 23-Aug. 22 Your generosity will get the better of you if you shop for someone you love. A gift from the heart will mean more to the right person. Anyone expecting you to go into debt is probably not someone you should keep in your life.

VIRGO Aug. 23-Sept. 22 You can get a lot of the last-minute jobs out of the way if you are organized. Plan an evening for family, friends, or your lover, and you will be happy you did. Welcome any challenge you face.

LIBRA Sept. 23-Oct. 22 Organization will be required, and staying out of the line of fire will be a must. Expect someone to be on the rampage and ready to put blame on anyone who gets in the way. Keep things simple.

SCORPIO Oct. 23-Nov. 21 Don't let someone rain on your parade. If there is something you want to do, follow through. Question any relationship you are in that is weighing you down or holding you back.

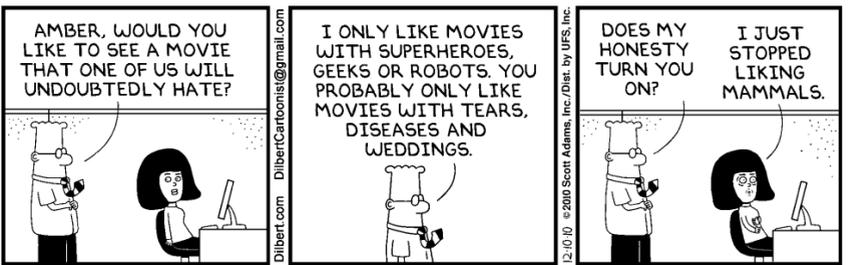

SAGITTARIUS Nov. 22-Dec. 21 Keep things peaceful and accept any changes that you don't have any control over. As long as you go with the flow, you will come out unscathed and ready for action. Your will power and determination will help you sit tight until the time is right.

CAPRICORN Dec. 22-Jan. 19 You can make a move, do your thing, and readdress old ideas. People and places from your past will stimulate and inspire new ways of approaching old goals. A change may be exactly what you need.

AQUARIUS Jan. 20-Feb. 18 Get your thoughts in order, and your finances will follow. You will be able to connect with people who have something to offer you that will lead to greater prosperity. A new partnership looks quite promising.

PISCES Feb. 19-March 20 Too much information is being kept from you to allow for a valid decision. Don't let your emotions get the better of you. Let everyone around you go first, and you will have a much better idea of the best position possible.
