Volunteers sort through waste at the College of Dentistry on Thursday. The school held a "waste audit" to help lower the amount of waste students, staff, and faculty create. In 2006, the college averaged about 180 tons of waste — now, that number is roughly 146, officials said.

College gets clean for green

The UI College of Dentistry has reduced its waste output by 34 tons per year since 2006.

Under a white canopy tent on a cloudy, windy Thursday, Julie Reynolds was up to her elbows in trash. The smell of stale coffee grounds filled the air as she ripped open black trash bags, spilling dirty paper cups, banana peels, and other waste onto white tabletops.

Reynolds, a fourth-year dental student in the University of Iowa College of Dentistry, spent her morning in a white protective suit and gloves, sifting through used blue gowns, latex gloves, and patients' bibs outside the UI Dental Science Building.

"Dentistry is such a wasteful profession," said Reynolds, one of two student leaders for the dental school's Go Green Committee. "I think it's easy to just kind of forget and get so involved with your clinic work that you're not aware of your environmental impact."

The school's Thursday "waste audit" — involving students, faculty, and staff — aimed to help decrease the amount of waste they produce. The group combed through large bins of trash bags collected from four floors and three office spaces to see what the city could recycle.

"The goal is really to get better all the time," said David Johnsen, the dean of the dental college. "The big thing we want to do is lessen our environmental footprint and have less go to the landfills."

Thursday's event marked the college's second audit. Officials held the first in 2008 to assess sustainability efforts. In 2006, the college averaged roughly 180 tons of waste, said Dave Jackson, an assistant to the associate vice president for Facilities Manage-

Phillips guilty of lesser charge

Gregory Phillips originally faced up to 30 years in prison with an attempted-murder charge.

By HAYLEY BRUCE
hayley-bruce@uiowa.edu

After roughly 10 hours of deliberation, a Johnson County jury decided Gregory Phillips hadn't intended to kill his landlord.

Phillips, 57, was originally charged with attempted murder and going armed with intent after he allegedly put a gun to Mezher Beig's mouth at Dolphin Lakes Enclave Apartments on Sept. 4, 2008.

On Thursday, a jury of eight women and four men found him guilty of assault with intent to inflict serious injury and going armed with intent — a verdict with which prosecuting attorney Anne Lahey said Beig would be disappointed.

"He's understandably very afraid of the defendant — deathly afraid," she said. "I guess it's because he, more than anyone else, would know what he's capable of. I'm sure he's going to be upset the lesser charges were found."

However, acknowledging the difficulty of obtaining an attempted-murder conviction, Lahey said she was

Spreading harmony to the area

UI students are taking part in the Old Capitol Barbershop Chorus.

By JON FRANK
jon-frank@uiowa.edu

Approximately 20 singers in the Old Capitol Barbershop Chorus stood on bleachers in the center of the Social Hall at the Robert A. Lee Center on Thursday night.

A gray-haired man in an orange sweatshirt hummed his harmonica and, seconds later, the group filled the spacious brick-tiled room with an a cappella harmony.

The singers recited lyrics from an old Anthony Newley/Leslie Bricusse song called "What Kind of Fool Am I?" The song encompassed at least six different pitches, ranging from soprano to bass, and not one person was out of sync.

The Old Capitol Barbershop Chorus is an Iowa

City tradition spanning six decades. Some of the group's members have children, others have grandchildren. And then there are those who are still in school — the youngest member is 12.

Two University of Iowa students, Cody Via and Dylan Schutte, have been a part of the music for the past several months.

Via, a sophomore, joined the group March 2010. He was referred by a barbershop singing friend from his old barbershop group in Texas.

"It was a pretty life-changing thing the first time I came here. I was battling depression for a long time," the Lewisville, Texas, native said. "I don't leave here in a bad mood."

During Thursday night's rehearsal, the music and math education major

Board settles on tax rate

School Board members said it's best to assume the state Legislature will set a zero percent allowable growth rate, which the governor recommended.

By LUKE VOELZ
luke-voelz@uiowa.edu

The Iowa City School District property-tax rate has decreased, but district taxpayers will still see increased bills.

School Board members voted unanimously Thursday to set the 2011-12 property-tax rate at $14.59 per $100,000 of taxable property value. The rate will be 10 cents lower than this year's.

But the state has raised residential rollback rates next year by approximately 1.6 percent, meaning district school taxes will change from $689.08 to $708.19 per $100,000.

The property tax will support an estimated $128 million in general-fund expenditures for the upcoming school year, an increase of almost $7 million over this year's. Board members will receive an audit in June of this year's total revenue and expenditures. The overall budget will be about $162 million, also $7 million more than last year.

New property tax rates

Property tax rates per $100,000 of taxable land in Iowa United Education Network school districts for 2011-2012:

- Council Bluffs: $19.35
- Sioux City: $17.76
- Des Moines: $18.49
- Cedar Rapids: $15.16
- Iowa City: $14.59

Source: Iowa City School District

While the noon meeting was open to the public, no residents spoke during the public hearing.

Board members said that while they did not want to impose higher taxes on district taxpayers, the property-tax rate was necessary because of decreasing education funding and the state Legislature remaining undecided between a 0 percent or 2 percent allowable growth rate. The former would cause a general-fund deficit of up to $6.8 million.

"It's tough for people to come up with the same [level of] taxes, but at the same time, we have the responsibility to keep [the School District] on the same track," said board member Toni Cilek.

Mike Cooper, the board's vice president, agreed.

"It's a more conservative approach and a more logical action by the board at this time," he said. "We don't have enough information to make a different decision."

District Superintendent Steve Murley, who recommended the $14.59 rate at today's meeting, said he chose the option from the four presented Tuesday because of board members' concerns that lower rates would not cover unforeseen budget expenses and diminishing state funding.

"We want to maintain as minimum a tax burden as possible on our community," he said. "We're hoping [the $14.59 rate] is a good balance between the bookends of a flat tax rate and the potential of 0 percent allowable growth."

The $14.59 rate assumes tax dollars received in the upcoming year remain constant with last year, and it will also allow the board to levy the difference between the proposed allowable growth rates.

Funds from property taxes increase the district's cash reserves but not its spending authority, or how much the state allows it to spend. While this means the district cannot use that revenue to allay the potential cuts of up to 60 employees, Murley said the board is still able to spend the $1.8 million remaining from last year's Education Jobs Bill.

Still, he recommended the board act cautiously in budgeting for the 2012-13 school year, because Gov. Terry Branstad's 0 percent allowable-growth proposal spans two years. That and the elimination of some federal funding has led district officials to predict a $4 million to $5 million hole in that year's budget.

"We continue to plan for the worst and hope for the best," Murley said.

satisfied with the result.

"I'm happy," Lahey said to colleagues after 6th District Judge Nancy Baumgartner dismissed the jury. "I know the jury worked really hard and long, and it was obviously very tough, so we're pleased."

Phillips originally faced up to 30 years in prison — with a Class B felony charge for attempted murder carrying up to 25 years.

Now, his sentence could be up to seven years. Assault with intent to inflict serious injury is an aggravated misdemeanor, punishable by up to two years in prison and a fine of $6,250. Going armed with intent is a Class D felony, punishable by up to five years in prison and a $7,500.

The gun didn't fire, but Lahey told the jury in closing arguments her client said he felt he could have

During deliberation, the jury also requested to review a tape of Phillips' interview with police the night he was arrested, where he admitted to drinking 16 to 18 beers the night of the alleged incident.

Defense attorney Victoria Cole argued her client did not intend to kill Beig when he entered his office more than two years ago, and Phillips told the jury he only wanted to threaten him.

"If I say something, I'm going to do it," Phillips testified Tuesday.

As Baumgartner read the verdict, Phillips sat in his chair expressionless, staring down at the wooden table before him.

"Obviously, it was a relief that it wasn't attempted murder," Cole said. "Now it's time to decide post-trial motions and await the sentence."

Cole declined to comment on Phillips' behalf and said it was too early to determine whether she would challenge the verdict or file any motions with the judge.

After the verdict, she asked the judge to release Phillips from jail until sentencing — he has been incarcerated awaiting trial since the day of the incident over two years ago — but the judge declined to address any further motions Thursday.

In wake of rising food prices, question ethanol subsidies

Breadbasket or gas station?

Iowa's mythic role as the former would suggest that our job is to provide food for the country's population, not to power the country's vehicles. And while biofuels are a profitable product of our agricultural abundance, they are highly contested for a reason.

Ethanol, though it accounts for 58 percent of corn sales in Iowa, is in the sights of national lawmakers because of its continued subsidization.

Though subsidies profit Iowa farmers in the short-term, especially given the rising percentages of ethanol allowed in gasoline mixtures, it is highly destructive to the food industry in the long term: Using our high-quality farmland to raise ethanol corn (not to mention livestock feed) underutilizes it and takes away from the national 72.7 million acres of corn that should be used to feed the country. If we're going to take an honest look at world hunger and a sustainable future, we must be willing to reconsider Iowa's codependent love affair with ethanol.

In 2009, ethanol accounted for roughly 7.8 percent of American car fuel. And in 2005, according to Ethanol.org, the production of ethanol nationwide accounted for 150,000 jobs and raked in $32 billion — and that number can only have grown. While we laud attempts to provide clean energy and reduce dependence on foreign crude, increasing crop production of ethanol corn is not the way to do it.

Furthermore, if the industry appears to be so profitable, why is the federal government continually awarding Iowa ethanol producers nearly $6 billion a year in subsidies?

Calculations by Ethanol.org suggest that for each barrel of ethanol produced, "1.2 barrels of petroleum are displaced at the refinery." But a gallon of gasoline may contain 15 percent ethanol, and this fuel is largely used to power bulky American cars that average 20.4 mpg. This is making slow, costly gains, albeit utilizing a source of renewable energy that is preferable to increased consumption of oil — but as Francis Thicke, 2010 state secretary of Agriculture candidate, noted, increasing average fuel efficiency by just 1 mile per gallon would save as much gas as using ethanol. (Currently, no widely available vehicles run solely on biofuels.)

Not only does Congress throw billions at Iowa farmers to continue funding this practice and to appease agribusiness lobbyists, the undue amount of corn being grown to create ethanol is having worrisome side effects on food costs.

"The problem is complex, so it is hard to come up with sweeping statements like biofuels are good or bad," Oliver Dubois of the Food and Agriculture Organization told the New York Times earlier this month. He added, "[W]hat is certain is that biofuels are playing a role" in raising food prices.

But Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, disagrees. (As an elected state official, it would be political suicide not to.) "It hasn't been that we're taking anything out of the food chain. We simply have increased the productive capacity of corn," he said to the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources on April 8. He said, "Biofuels are — and will continue to be — our most important strategy for reducing dependence on imported oil."

Food prices across the globe have increased as populations inflate and turmoil erupts in political and environmental spheres. But what does Iowa have to do with the price of maize in Mozambique? According to an estimate by the World Bank, some 44 million people have sunk below the poverty line in less than a year as a direct result of the increased price of corn.

"The U.S. government should abolish all subsidies and mandates for biofuel derived from resources that could be used for food production," Per Pinstrup-Andersen, 2001 World Food Prize winner, told the Des Moines Register April 9, detailing how America could lessen food prices worldwide.

Thicke agrees, noting that the nearly $6 billion subsidizes an industry that can now prop itself up. "I think we have gone way too far in subsidizing ethanol," he told the Editorial Board. "It's not necessary anymore ... So much of Iowa's marketplace runs on ethanol now."

The Food and Agriculture Organization (a U.N. body) found this month that its Food Price Index has reached a 21-year high. The price of corn alone jumped 73 percent in the U.S. last year on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, prompted by "an increase in the use of corn for biofuel production in the U.S.A.," according to World Food Program USA.

"Aside from the disastrous economic investment the ethanol industry has been, we should consider the environmental problems ethanol brings with it," Thicke wrote in an e-mail. He stated that for one gallon of corn-based ethanol, about two gallons of soil are eroded.

Thus, the production of ethanol is not tenable long-term, nor is it any longer an industry requiring government subsidies. It artificially raises food prices worldwide and makes minimal decreases in the importation of foreign oil. We have too many ethanol-producing plants and not enough corn to ever satisfy the biofuels industry. It is time for Iowa to put people before profit, and take a critical second look at Iowa's biggest breadwinner.

Questioning ethanol may be political suicide, but it is increasingly necessary.

Your turn. Should the U.S. end ethanol subsidies?

Some
fatherly help

EMILY INMAN
emily-inman@uiowa.edu

Before I shut my eyes to take a nap with my dad, I wrapped my hand around the plastic heart-shaped necklace I'd bought for him.

I figured this would ensure a wakeful tug if he got up to leave, but when I awoke my plan had failed. He was nowhere in sight.

I was only 3, but my heart beat as if it had endured years of stress. In time, I learned that during these periods of absence, my dad was out buying drugs. I felt fatherless for years and needed someone to fill that role.

MAD DADS, Men Against Destruction Defending Against Drugs and Social Disorder, is an organization that provides fatherly role models for youth experiencing childhoods similar to mine. They also focus on decreasing gang violence, advocate for community development, and promote the sanctification of families. MAD DADS was founded in 1989 in Omaha by a group of African-American men hoping to give back to the community. Not only are these programs beneficial to the community, they are also essential.

Today, MAD DADS has chapters throughout the country and internationally, but it still maintains its grassroots structure.

I spoke with Cedar Rapids chapter President Isaiah Jones on Thursday. He said he and other members wanted to start the chapter in order to concentrate on current problems in Cedar Rapids affecting the youth and community, mainly the Southeast Side. Current projects include after-school Little League baseball and basketball teams, exercise walks, door-to-door education, and other like activities, all of which are conducted by minority fathers volunteering their time and efforts. MAD DADS is also collecting surveys from the community to find out people's needs and what they would like to see in the program.

But the group has many more goals in mind. The members would like to open a youth center in the area, a supervised environment in which youth can hang out and build positive connections. The community has a vital need for this center.

Many minority youth in the impoverished areas of Cedar Rapids return to an empty home after school because their single mothers work two jobs to make ends meet. They also return to an area that is not very safe for a youngster to be left home alone. In some cases, the home itself is unsafe because of drug and alcohol abuse or even child abuse and neglect. This results in children becoming lonely, neglecting their homework, and in many instances becoming involved in gang violence. The center would give kids a place to look forward to going to after school. It would also keep them active, engaged in homework, and safe away from gang and other violence.

Jones also hopes to get a program going in which kids could be hired for small chores or jobs — such things as cutting the grass, taking out trash, fixing up homes and community buildings, etc. The program would teach the kids responsibility, explained Jones, while at the same time beautifying the community and teaching them to appreciate the area.

Fathers are an important and essential part of a child's life, especially for minority youth and, specifically, young black males. As I gravely know, it's hard to grow up with a drug-abusing father. The situation hampers a child's ability to have fun, enjoy learning, and be safe.

Single-parent homes are equally as damaging. When the single mother, or in some cases father, works two jobs, the children need another figure in the home to not only take care of them but to serve as a guide and role model as well.

My "uncle" Earl, one of my dad's best friends, served as that father figure in my life for many years. He filled those voids left by my dad. Luckily my dad sobered up in 2001. But without uncle Earl being my fatherly role model during the years before my dad's sobriety, I know I would not be the woman I am today.

However, for many of Cedar Rapids' minority youth, a family member or friend is not available to fill that father void. That is why the MAD DADS program is essential. ■

It's time to enact federal corporate-tax reform

"The need for 'economic growth' that we hear so much about these days will be achieved, not by government harnessing the nation's economic forces but by emancipating them," wrote the late Sen. Barry Goldwater in The Conscience of a Conservative.

Here, Goldwater is certainly correct: Emancipating the economy from excess taxation and regulation will lead to economic growth. Historically, cutting tax rates across the board has proven successful, as demonstrated most recently by the Reagan cuts of the 1980s and the renewal of the Bush tax cuts. In order to restore both employment and the economy, policymakers must address tax, spending, and regulatory reform. Reducing the corporate-tax rate is one area that would encourage not only additional job creation but also create incentives for businesses to grow and develop within the United States.

The federal top corporate-tax rate currently stands at 35 percent, which is significantly higher than that of other nations. The high corporate-tax rate is stifling economic growth, especially as the economy is emerging out of the "Great Recession." The economy is still facing a weak recovery with high unemployment, escalating federal debt and deficits, and a massive increase in regulatory activity by the federal government including the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, all of which is causing uncertainty for businesses. All of these issues, including the possibility of high inflation and a falling dollar, are creating concern in the economy for both businesses and individuals.

Reducing the corporate tax should not be a controversial policy issue. In his State of the Union address, President Obama hinted at supporting some form of corporate-tax reform. Lowering the corporate tax would create a stimulus for the economy as well as provide an incentive for American businesses in a very competitive global market. A recent analysis by the Heritage Foundation found that lowering the corporate tax rate to 25 percent would create a scenario for significant economic growth.

Republicans in Congress are pushing to lower the corporate-tax rate and on the state level the Iowa Legislature, with the support of Gov. Terry Branstad, will consider lowering the state corporate-tax rate. The current top state rate is 12 percent, and the governor has proposed a 6 percent flat rate, which will not only simplify the tax by removing loopholes (which result in the loss of much state revenue), but also allow Iowa to be more business-friendly.

Further tax reform — as in lowering marginal tax rates across the board — along with reducing spending, paying down the debt, and eliminating unnecessary regulations will be essential to restoring the economy and encouraging business growth and entrepreneurship.

“There are some serious life-safety issues that haven’t been regulated in the past,” said Doug Boothroy, the director of Housing and Inspection Services.

In a memo to the City Council, Boothroy said Iowa City zoning laws do not support commercial vending along Melrose, which faces Kinnick Stadium to the south, and he recommends enforcing the law. Before, authorities didn’t crack down, he said.

Some fans and vendors decried the suggestion.

Vendor Chuck Ford, known for his “Big Ass Turkey Legs,” said he feels it isn’t fair vendors are being blamed.

“What’s offensive to me is that people are making the broadbased statements that the vendors are making the problems,” he said.

If officials decided to not allow vendors, fans would have to say goodbye to the turkey legs.

“I would be able to set up in my living room and watch the football game,” Ford said and laughed.

In addition to removing vendors, the panel proposed two other options: not changing the city’s current enforcement policies or requiring vendors to obtain special permits.

“I think it was tolerable in the past because I’m not sure that we were completely aware of the extent that it had grown over the last 10 to 15 years,” Boothroy said.

To support the argument, the memo cites several situations from the 2010 season, including issues with the Stadium Club. In that case, local realtor Tracy Barkalow had applied for a liquor license for a tailgating spot, called the Stadium Club, and was denied. He later was charged with bootlegging for serving liquor on the property.

Officials also noted the relocation of the Magic Bus, a popular tailgating site, in response to the Stadium Club’s attempt to open a venue on that property, and an incident in which a Gameday Iowa tent post punctured a gas pipeline.

Gameday Iowa owner Ron Christensen said his location has been on Melrose providing cold-weather gear, ponchos, and drinks for Hawkeye fans for 20 years.

“We take care of the Hawkeye fans,” he said.

The issue is set to be discussed at the April 18 City Council work session. City Councilor Susan Mims said though she hadn’t been able to read the specifics, she did not support the possibility of removing the vendors.

Jean Walker, a member of the Melrose Neighborhood Association, said people in the area noted disturbances such as urination, vomiting, and disposing trash and broken bottles onto peoples’ property.

“There is no respect,” she said in an email.

In a statement to city officials, the association proposed moving the vendors into the Kinnick Stadium parking lot, which would decongest the road for emergency vehicles and University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics workers.

UI spokesman Tom Moore said he wasn’t sure about the university’s involvement in the discussion.

“The university is committed to maintaining a positive game-day experience for its fans,” Moore said. “It’s far too early in the process to speculate any action the university may take.”

And while some UI students said they’re upset with the possibility, at least one said she understood.

“I feel like it wouldn’t be the same environment,” said UI junior Kaitlin Rite-nour. “But again, it is their property.”

Upon hearing the news, an outpouring of feedback erupted on various social networks, including one Facebook group called “Leave the Melrose Avenue Vendors Alone.”

On Thursday night, the group had more than 120 members.

Former Hawkeye football player Julian Vandervelde was outraged upon hearing the news.

“Oh my god, I’m pissed,” he said. “That’s ridiculous, and that’s insane.”

He said the fans aren’t the only ones who appreciated the atmosphere generated by the vendors.

“As football players, we love to see it, we love to smell it,” Vandervelde said. “If you get out of the locker room early, you grab yourself a turkey leg before you go home.”

EXEMPTIONS

The proposal by UI student Kyle Johnson would have eliminated the requirement that an establishment’s primary sales must come from food in order to have the exemption.

At present, a business must earn more than 50 percent of its gross sales from food. Under the 21-year-old’s proposal, though, a restaurant could be granted an exemption even if 99 percent of its gross sales come from alcohol, said City Attorney Eleanor Dilkes.

“I believe the proposal speaks for itself,” Johnson said.

Dilkes said the affidavit was “substantially the same” as the one filed when some voters sought to repeal the 21-ordinance in November 2010. That effort failed. Because of that similarity, it can’t be filed until Nov. 2, 2012.

The proposal also sought to remove the provision stating a restaurant includes a “cafe, cafeteria, coffee shop, delicatessen, ice-cream shop, lunchroom, or tearoom” and replace it with “a restaurant may include a bar, nightclub, pub, club or tavern, or other business on its premises.”

Johnson said he crafted the proposal after hearing numerous friends, both male and female, attending house parties and being placed in danger — men who were physically attacked and women who became too intoxicated.

“I believe it’s a necessary service,” Johnson said. “I have heard a number of very negative stories — people being in awkward situations.”

He said he believes offering students another avenue in which to socialize and a wider variety of establishments would provide much safer environments.

Iowa City City Councilor Mike Wright said he hadn’t been able to read any information contained in recently sent city documents and couldn’t comment on the matter.

Though his proposal was denied, Johnson said, he has other ideas he’s working on.

UI sophomore Chris Tabamo said he thought the change would be positive. He cited better food deals at night as a draw for underclassmen.

“I do think it’s safer in the bars because are things are more regulated in the bars,” he said.

Another UI student, Leah Goettsch, also acknowledged the dangers of house parties and admitted the late-night food could be beneficial for students.

“Maybe 19-year-olds get hungry in the middle of the night, and no where else is open,” she said.

Old facility returns

The 17-month renovation project marks the first renovated UI building to be certified by the Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design.

By SARAH BULMER
sarah-bulmer@uiowa.edu

Members of the University of Iowa community sliced a yellow ribbon, rededicating the newly renovated Stuit Hall as the campus' first "green" renovation on Thursday.

The calming atmosphere of the building, located near the intersection of Jefferson and Gilbert Streets, features new windows that allow more sunlight, a rain garden to capture storm water, lighting controlled by occupancy sensors, and new insulation, according to a UI press release.

The hall, which will now serve as an addition to the Department of Clinical Psychology, is a "Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design-certified" building, something that benefits the entire campus, officials said.

Regent Robert Downer praised the advantages of the sustainable, "cutting-edge" $3.7 million renovation.

"When buildings can be reused and recycled without expanding upon the campus, it is a great advantage for the institution," he said.

The ceremony honored Dewey Stuit, who served as the dean of the UI College of Liberal Arts and Sciences from 1947 until 1977.

"To my uncle Dewey, this was his family. The University of Iowa was his family," said Rick Imig, Stuit's great-nephew.

The facility was originally built as an isolation ward for the UI hospital (now Seashore Hall) in 1915. From 1928 to 1971, the building catered to UI music students, and it was then transformed into studios for art students.

When Linda Maxson, the current dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, came to the UI in 1995 on a tour of the campus, officials introduced the facility to her as one area needing improvement. She described its former dilapidated state Thursday.

"I'll never forget the tour because this building was indescribable," Maxson told the crowd. "The painters and graduate students had taken over."

Maxson said it is fitting Stuit Hall now houses the Clinical Psychology Department, one of the nation's top-10 programs in the field.

ON DAILY IOWAN TV

Check out a video feature from Daily Iowan TV on the Stuit Hall dedication.

Alan Christensen, a UI professor of psychology, noted the rundown nature of the building after the art students occupied its small rooms. When he first visited the building a couple of years ago, he said, dead birds lay on the ground of the studios.

"[The renovation of Stuit Hall] came about at a time when the department had some critical needs for building, inadequate space, function, and type of space," Christensen said.

He said the original location of the psychology department's mental-health clinic was inappropriate, because it was situated in a high-traffic area in the corner of the psychology research laboratory building.

"It really was problematic because those individuals partake in really sensitive work," Christensen said.

Anne Zhang, a UI graduate and clinical psychology major who gave tours to those attending the rededication, said she was pleased to see this addition to her area of study.

"I certainly think it increases the visibility of our program," she said.

UI President Sally Mason said she was also happy with the results of the 17-month renovation.

"Talk about turning a sow's ear into a silk purse," she told the crowd.

ARIES March 21-April 19 Diligence and hard work will prove you have leadership ability. Common sense, morals, and ethics will play a role in how you conduct business and deal with friends and colleagues. Uncertainties should be dealt with diplomatically.

TAURUS April 20-May 20 Take care of business, and don't let anyone undone. A good effort will warrant added respect, with the possibility of more responsibility and advancement. Get what you want or what's being offered in writing.

GEMINI May 21-June 20 Don't let your emotions take over when dealing with someone or something you cannot change. Your best recourse is to do your own thing. Volunteering to help a cause or a friend will take your mind off your troubles, allowing you time to put things in perspective.

CANCER June 21-July 22 Put all your time and effort into home and family. You will have added responsibilities that must be taken care of if you want to be able to take part in any form of entertainment. Don't let someone's pushy attitude stop you from participating.

Texas, UNC-Charlotte, and Wichita State.

After winning the tournament last year by 12 strokes, the expectations this weekend remain high for Iowa. "Just because it's Finkbine and we're so comfortable on this golf course, we kind of expect to win," India said. "The goal is always a top-three finish, but I think it'd be disappointing to come away without a victory this weekend."

Dirksen agreed, saying playing at Finkbine creates a "calming influence" for the squad.

Despite being at home, head coach Mark Hankins will treat the tournament as an away meet in the way his team prepares for competition.

The golfers will have a team dinner tonight, just as they do on the road, and they plan on eating breakfast together on Saturday and Sunday before they tee off.

"Whenever you play at home, there are advantages to it as long as you respect the golf course," Hankins said. "There are distractions, such as being in your hometown in front of people who normally don't see you play. [The Hawkeyes] needs to understand that this is important to them, and keep their priorities in the right place, and basically focus on doing the best they can on each hole with using the knowledge they have from playing out here."

One thing the Black and Gold will have to prepare for is the potential for inclement weather on Saturday and April 17. According to the National Weather Service, there is a 30 percent chance of rain on Saturday and a 40 percent chance April 17.

Still, that doesn't phase the Hawkeyes, because the competition has to deal with the same weather.

Dirksen said, "These guys won four tournaments in the fall, and I think every tournament we go to we expect to win or be in contention, and this week is no different."

example of her center fielder's growth as an offensive threat this year.

"She was hitting gaps and pushing the ball hard, and right then, I saw it in her eyes," Looper said. "That 'Wow, I can do this.'"

Akers was used primarily as a pinch-runner last season as a freshman. She appeared in 41 games and scored 20 runs. But 19 of those runs came as a pinch runner, and Akers recorded just six at-bats all season.

This season, she has 98 at-bats. And while her .265 batting average is unimpressive, Looper said Akers' confidence is growing, making her more of a factor at the plate as the season progresses.

It shows in Akers' .375 average in Big Ten play.

"At the beginning, it was a bit of an adjustment," she said. "But as the season's gone on, I've gotten more comfortable. ... I've been really working on staying through the ball."

Akers started the season hitting ninth in the Hawkeye order. But Looper recently moved her up to second in part because Akers is a skilled bunter, "which is what you need from a two-hitter." But the move was made also because Looper wants the Hawkeyes to occasionally force the action from that spot with more than just bunts, and Akers has flashed ability as a line-drive hitter.

"She's grown tremendously, and the reason she's getting the opportunities she's getting is because she's gaining confidence and getting a little more power," Looper said. "But she can drop a bunt with ease, too. She's become a table-setter for our big hitters."

Junior catcher Liz Watkins, who leads the team in RBIs, praised Akers' growth at the plate.

"She used to be a bunt specialist," Watkins said. "But now she's opened up her game where she can slap the ball through the gap, and keep defenses on their toes that way."

Despite the increased power in Akers' swing, she's remained an opportunistic bunter and base runner. Against Minnesota, she scored on a throwing error, and she's one of three Hawkeyes to have successfully stolen a base on every attempt this year.

"I don't really give myself a certain role, like a hitter or a base runner," she said. "I see myself doing everything I can every game to help the team get a win."

is out after off-season surgery.

But just because he's big, that doesn't mean he isn't athletic, defensive coordinator Norm Parker said.

"He doesn't look like a 300-pound slow guy out there," Parker said. "He moves his hands. He's athletic. He's a 300-pounder who can dunk a basketball and do all that stuff"

Strong Safety - Collin Sleeper (RS junior)

There may not be a more aptly named player on the roster than the walk-on from nearby Solon. The redshirt junior has emerged as the No. 1 at a position that, for Iowa, is as wide open as they come. The likes of Tom Donatell, Jordan Bernstine, and incoming freshman Nico

Law should ensure it remains a competition all the way into the fall, but for now, Sleeper is listed as the guy.

Walk-on or not, Parker said Sleeper has "a lot of ability."

"He can run like a deer, and he'll hit you," Parker said.

nastics her freshman year. But by her sophomore year, she and Gebeshian had become a pair.

"We were both all-arounders our sophomore year, and that was our job," Simbhudas said. "It wasn't really new for us, so we knew what we were doing, and through the year, we just got better together."

By the end of their sophomore year, Simbhudas and Gebeshian were constant all-arounders and helped carry the GymHawks. By their junior year, the two had become Iowa's "one-two punch," the inseparable duo consistently leading the team, ascending the podium, and now competing on a national stage together.

Simbhudas and Gebeshian will compete as individuals and will leave their team behind while competing in Cleveland this weekend. Their semifinal will begin at 5 p.m. CDT.

Gebeshian will rotate through the four events with Oregon State and Simbhudas with Alabama. The two GymHawks will have separate practice times and will compete in the same semifinal but rotate through the events at different times.

"It's totally new to me," said Gebeshian, who will make her first appearance at an NCAA national competition. "It's going to be completely different. I like being around the team atmosphere and having that support, so it will be weird without them. But I think the team I will be with, Oregon State, will bring me into their team so I'm pretty excited."

Simbhudas is a returning All-American on the beam, and she will make her second nationals appearance.

While they will compete for the last time wearing the Black and Gold, during their four seasons with the Hawkeyes, Gebeshian and Simbhudas became the team's stable leaders despite obvious differences between them.

"They're complete opposites," Libby said. "Houry's strengths are Becky's weaknesses, so they are the yin and yang of our team. It makes that complete package that leads the team. Becky really loves to compete; she's in her element in competition. But Becky hates to practice. Houry is super great in practice but doesn't really like to compete. They're different in everything, the way they express themselves, the way they speak, everything."

Because they're polar opposites, Gebeshian and Simbhudas have become effective team leaders because they show their squad two different ways to be a champion, Libby said. Simbhudas is the fun-loving, goofy, quirky personality, and Gebeshian is the fierce, focused, determined athlete.

"I think that it just provides the example that you can get it done both ways — that you don't always have to be serious and dominating," Libby said. "While it's a team sport, it's individuality that makes us what we are and what makes us great."

tonight's competition. Each placed in the top three in his event of the three non-qualifying teams— Iowa, Nebraska, and Ohio State.

The standout performer of the night was McGrath. The sophomore scored a season high 16.250 on vault to tie for fourth place in the session, first among non-qualifiers. Reive said McGrath's vault was the best he had seen all season.

"He had a fantastic vault," Reive said. "He has a real chance to get to individual finals."

HAWKEYE SPORTS

Law group to host 3-on-3 hoops

The UI College of Law's Sports Law Society will host a three-on-three basketball tournament at the Field House Main Deck beginning at noon April 17.

The event, which was originally scheduled to be held Saturday outdoors, was moved because of potential rain, will feature guest referee and former Iowa women's basketball player Kachine Alexander and possibly other former Iowa players. Alexander was drafted by the WNBA's Minnesota Lynx on Monday.

Currently, there are approximately eight teams signed up to play, but entry is still open at a cost of $25 per team with a maximum of five players per team. There is no official deadline to sign up and teams may enter the day of the event.

All proceeds raised by the tournament will benefit the United Way of Johnson County.

Those interested in signing up should e-mail event coordinator Alex Johnson at alexander-johnson@uiowa.edu.

Football full of new faces

The public will get its first chance to see the new-look Hawkeye football team in action Saturday at its annual open spring practice at Kinnick Stadium.

After losing 12 starters between offense and defense, the Iowa football team is sure to have some unfamiliar faces this season. The public will be able to see many of those new faces in Saturday's Coca-Cola Classic Spring Practice, scheduled for a noon start at Kinnick Stadium.

Here are some players to keep an eye on.

Wide Receiver – Kevonte Martin-Manley (RS freshman), Don Shumpert (sophomore)

Wide receiver may be the Hawkeyes' position with the least experience. With returning veteran Marvin McNutt sidelined this spring after shoulder surgery, less-experienced players such as Martin-Manley and Shumpert have seen more reps in practice. Junior Keenan Davis would seem to have the starter spot opposite McNutt on virtual lockdown, so one of these two will likely be Iowa's slot man in the fall. At 6-3, 185 pounds, Shumpert may be a better athlete, but quarterback James Vandenberg said last week he's been impressed by both.

Tight End – C.J. Fiedorowicz (sophomore)

Brad Herman will likely be — and is listed as — the team's No. 1 tight end, but Iowa has a propensity to use two-tight end sets, so Fiedorowicz should have chances to contribute. The 6-7, 265-pounder may have been a victim of outside hype as a true freshman, arriving in Iowa City with impressive measurables and slotted as the fifth-best tight end in the class of 2010 by Rivals.com. He didn't record a single catch.

Now, with a year in the program under his belt, offensive coordinator Ken O'Keefe said Fiedorowicz has better knowledge of the team's system and thus can play with "a lot more speed and a lot more confidence."

Fullback – Jonathan Gimm (RS junior)

Gimm is a player who has toiled in the depth chart as a backup tight end for three seasons. A switch to fullback might be the best thing that's happened to him since becoming a Hawkeye. With assumed starter Brad Rogers missing spring ball to undergo cardiology tests, Gimm has had a chance to show what he can do. Replacing the unheralded but ultra-effective Brett Morse — a three-year starter — won't be easy, but O'Keefe said Gimm has done well.

"He's another guy that we haven't quite found a home for, and now we have," O'Keefe said.

Defensive Tackle – Carl Davis (RS freshman)

At 6-5 and 310 pounds, there is nobody on the Iowa football team bigger than Davis. Like Gimm, he is another player that has probably benefited from a teammate's injury in the way of earning more opportunities — redshirt junior defensive tackle Steve Bigach

Golfers set to defend home turf

The Hawkeyes will try to exploit home-course advantage.

With all the success the Iowa men's golf team has achieved this season, one unique fact about the Hawkeyes remains: Iowa has surged to a No. 14 ranking without playing at home.

The closest to home the squad has competed was in September in Burlington at the Golfweek Conference Challenge. The Hawkeyes won by 15 strokes, and senior Vince India and junior Chris Brant shared co-medalist honors after both carded a 206 (10 under).

That will change Saturday, when the squad will compete in the 18th-annual Hawkeye Taylormade Invitational at Finkbine, the location the team normally practices at. Thirty-six holes are scheduled for Saturday, and the invitational will conclude with 18 on April 17.

"I think Finkbine is a course where we have a distinct advantage because the greens are pretty treacherous," junior Jared Walahoski said. "I don't think we'll put too much pressure on ourselves ... We're all comfortable here, and with the new tees, there's even more of an advantage."

Walahoski, along with senior James Reiss, will compete individually in their first tournament of the year. Junior Jed Dirksen, will also compete individually. The starting lineup will consist of seniors

Before Iowa's Rebecca Simbhudas performs her floor-exercise routine, teammate Houry Gebeshian is usually right on the sidelines, cheering for her. Gebeshian's voice overpowers the crowded and noisy arena and is the first thing Simbhudas hears as she calmly covers her palms and soles in a thick layer of chalk and poses gracefully for the start of her routine.

Simbhudas and Gebeshian are the Iowa women's gymnastics team's "one-two punch," head coach Larissa Libby said, but the pair will compete together for the last Simbhudas and Gebeshian first met in January 2008, when the entire women's gymnastics team was shuttled to the airport to greet Simbhudas' flight from Ontario "like she was the queen of the world," Gebeshian laughed.

Because she joined the team late in order to compete for the Canadian team at the World Championships, Simbhudas struggled to adjust to college gym-

5 Hawkeye men gymnasts advance

The Iowa men's gymnastics team finished fifth out of six teams in its national qualifier but sent five gymnasts to the second day of competition.

Iowa men's gymnastics head coach JD Reive knew his squad was unlikely to qualify for the team finals of the NCAA championships. His only expectation was for the team to perform their best meet of the year.

Reive said the team accomplished that goal Thursday night in St. John Arena in Columbus, Ohio. The Hawkeyes scored a 348.950, their second-highest score of the season, placing fifth of the six teams in the qualifier.

The Iowa coach said he was extremely happy with the Hawkeyes' performance in the biggest meet of the season.

"I'm very, very proud of them," said the first-year head coach. "We came out, had our best meet of the year, and had close to a 95 percent hit ratio."

Senior Michael Jiang, who qualified for the second day on pommel horse, said the team reached its peak for this meet.

"We didn't make a lot of mistakes tonight," he said. "It was a great meet for us."

While Stanford, California, and defending national champion Michigan qualified for tonight's team finals, the Hawkeyes qualified five gymnasts for Session 3 of the championships, which determines the team champions and individual finalists. All-American status will also be decided at 7 p.m. today.

Jiang, Ben Ketelsen, Matt McGrath, Anton Gryshayev, and Javier Balboa qualified for

'Bunt specialist' expands her game

After being used last season primarily as a pinch runner, Ashley Akers is hitting .375 in Big Ten play.

By SAM LOUWAGIE
samuel-louwagie@uiowa.edu

Ashley Akers stood at the plate in the second inning with two outs and runners on second and third base. Iowa had scored two runs in the inning.

Akers had bunted earlier in the game against Michigan State on April 10. The day before, she bunted twice, stole a base, and scored on a throwing error.

But this time, Akers didn't bunt.

She smacked a line drive to left center field that scored a run and continued the Hawkeyes' second-inning explosion. The team scored 6 in the inning, and it turned out it needed every one of them in a 9-8 victory.

Akers was 3-for-5 for the game with two RBIs, and Iowa head coach Marla Loper said that performance was an
