Neuzil was the youngest person ever elected to the Johnson County Board of Supervisors. By Kimberly M. Blumenthal

Local residents probably only know Ter- rence Neuzil of the Johnson County supervisor — a position he held for more than 10 years. When he first ran for office, he turned his life around and focused on it.

“My life was out of bal- ance, and that’s something that had to change,” he said. “I did it, and I lost the weight, but my hair didn’t go back to being red.”

The 43-year-old Demo- cratic County Supervisor sits on the board of the Iowa Alumni and he’s earned a Bachelor of Science in physics and history from the University of Iowa. He also holds a masters of land management after he was elected to his county Board of Supervisors in 1996, and he has been re-elected numerous times since then.

Before committing to his full-time career in Ameri- can job, Neuzil worked for a number of years in the public and private sector, including as a senior policy advisor at the Department of Commerce.

He left the White House in 2006 to focus solely on his respons- ibilities as a supervisor, including managing a $75 million budget, 500 employees, and 11 county departments.

But he also left the white house when he told the board that he was going down a tough path of working too much. “I said, ‘I was busy 100 hours a week for all seven days. I can only sleep for three hours a day and I didn’t have time to exer-

But he was more interested in the people who were involved in the community and the people who in the past were interested in those who were involved in the community and that was something he wanted to do.

He is a member of the Democratic Party and he is well known as a community leader and activist. He is also known for his involvement in various community organizations, including the Johnson County Connect and the Johnson County Coalition for Education.

Bachmann wins mock vote at fair

The results of a mock election held at the Johnson County Fair placed Michele Bachmann as the leading Republican candidate if he or she disagreed with their decision.

Watanabe reported he may have been threatened with filing a false report.

Ryan Grant Watanabe, 30, was charged July 27 with providing a false report to law enforcement, a serious misdemeanor.

Professor of University of Iowa graduate student, told police he was assaulted June 14.

A Juvenile 10 press releases reported Watanabe told police he was assaulted by a black male in the alley near Clinton and Burlington Streets sometime before 7:30 a.m.

Watanabe said the man hit him in the face, causing him to fall back against the wall, sustaining cuts to his face, knee, and ankle. Watanabe also said the attacker yelled a gay hate crime.

The complaint detailing Watanabe’s charge said the report was then forwarded to investigations for follow-up, during which police said they began to question its validity.

Police also said Watanabe had led several people to believe he had been ‘horribly assaul ted, requiring surgery and hospitalization’ and also stated the offenses may have been a hate crime after the alleged incident.

The complaint said further investigation and interviews with Watanabe made it clear the offenses reported did not take place and the complaint said Watanabe eventually confirmed the report was false.

The Daily Iowan the situation is more complex than it seems.

It’s more complicated than it appears, and I’m looking forward to resolving it in court, he said.

The UIHC’s upcoming budget is predicted at $314 million; inclusively more than $710 million in state appropriations for transactions.

Robert Dower said the budget was designed primarily to offset growing outpatient activity.

Corporate-sponsored laws should not be tolerated

Corporate-sponsored laws, including Walmart, Bayer, Glassiano, and Reckitt Benckiser, have surfaced as issues of concern in this election season, threatening the health and well-being of the nation. The American Legislative Exchange Council is a quasi-political organization that has been advancing a platform of legislation, which includes the American Health Care Act and the American Taxpayer Relief Act. The American Legislative Exchange Council is composed of large corporations and their lobbyists, who often push for legislation that is not in the best interest of the citizens. This legislation is often written in a way that is not transparent and is designed to benefit the corporations at the expense of the general public.

Some legislatures are pushing bills based on—or even identical to—the American Legislative Exchange Council model legislation on their websites. The other legislation was written for the purpose of furthering the interests of the companies that sponsored the legislation, not in part by private entities is an effort to the democratic process and to the Federal Communications Commission to advance, lawmakers have a right to know which laws are being crafted by the big businesses, and they should reject these legislators and their agendas. The common theme, that dilutes the originality of the model legislation on its website. And, in accordance to hospitality, more than 100 volunteers have offered their homes to riders as hosts, said Ellen Habel, the Coralville assistant city administrator and RAGBRAI volunteer coordinator.

“We want to make sure that it’s a safe event, that people have fun, and that they’re able to find everything they need,” she said. “We’ve certainly done all of the planning and preparation we can in order to have a successful event.”

Cullinan, like other volunteers, has a history of volunteering for the event, having hosted riders and volunteered for RAGBRAI stopovers in three other communities in the past.

Cullinan will work another shift tonight at the beer garden.

Miller, a second-time volunteer, enjoys volunteering in general, as well.

“I think it’s a neat event,” she said, even though she is not a biker herself. “I have the time, so I’m filling the time by volunteering.”

That year, Miller is only able to donate one shift of her time to the event.

Huntsman sticks to ‘green’ guns

By PHILIP ELIOTT

WASHINGTON — Touting a record that could complicate his bid for the Republican presidential nomination, former Utah Gov. Jon Huntsman challenged his party Thursday to put the environment in its place and acknowledge climate change as a real threat.

Huntsman, who is trailing in the polls but is working to build a campaign that could deny front-runner Mitt Romney the no-brainer nomination, said that the science behind climate change and the government’s role in fighting it. He also suggested the message was unlikely to entice him to campaign in places that “seem to have great sway in the party’s nominating process.”

“I’m not going to waste my time trying to explain how well we can sustain atomic or nuclear weapons, or resources,” said Huntsman, a former ambassador to China who can use his experience to argue that his predecessor, President Obama’s ambassador to China, “is not an ambassador to China.”

“He’s calling for the American people to take an extraordinary burden,” Huntsman said.

Though Helman said he doubted some aspects of Braun’s platform, he called the candidate’s energy platform “interesting in its potential.”

While Braun said voter turnout is not as important to him as how much thought those who do vote put into their decision, Covington said passing laws by majority vote would be putting a strain on Americans.

“I can’t agree more with him on the power of lobbyists,” Helman said.

Braun said passage of the amendment would be a “democratic mandate” to the Constitution.

“A world is watching,” Braun said.

Although Helman said it’s unlikely to endear him toวนявข์ Chan, the chairman of the Iowa Democrats, and congressmen and give the Iowans the right to “petition the government for a redress of grievances.”

“This amendment is the key vote in both houses of the Congress delineates the authoritative jurisdiction of the states,” Braun said.

“I’m not ashamed to be a conservationist,” he said.

The Braun campaign’s energy platform includes:
• Reaching zero-emissions goal within 10 years and 50 percent by 2020
• Scoring a 10 on the American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy’s scale
