Cinema in proposed tower

Planned Parenthood pushes for Obama

The economy job creation. Foreign Policy. Deficit. Where do the politicians begin? "We have a vested interest in this project," said Steven Rohrbach, president of Rohrbach and Associates. "We’re really excited to be able to bring this to Iowa City," said Steven Rohrbach, president of Rohrbach and Associates. "We have a vested interest in this project."

The proposed high-rise building would include a 12 bowling lanes, an art gallery, and a movie theatre. A proposed 20-story high rise containing a full-time cinema is another hot topic in Iowa City. The proposed Chauncey is a mixed-use tower planning to include 12 bowling lanes, a café, and a gallery for art and sculpture. It will include space to house FilmScene’s film education and media literacy programs. The building would be located in the lot at the intersection of College and Gilbert streets, next to the Chauncey Swan parking Ramp.

February, the Susan G. Komen Foundation withdrew its funding of Planned Parenthood, which threatened their role in this election. “They will determine the election.” Richards spoke about several women’s issues. "Women will be the majority of voters in this election," said Richards, the daughter of the late Texas Gov. Ann Richards. "They will determine the election." In February, the Susan G. Richards spoke about several women’s issues and the conclusion, including the opposition to GOIP presidential nominee Mitt Romney’s plan to overturn Roe v. Wade. According to Romney’s campaign slogans, he plans to reverse Roe v. Wade and he will only appoint judges who “adhere to the Constitution and the laws as they are written.” Richards spoke against this choice while visiting Des Moines, 117 N. Lyon, Thursday evening. "Literally could lose 40 years of a Constitutional right in America if Mitt Romney becomes president," she said. "Yet according to Romney’s campaign he doesn’t wanna hold on his stance. Not only does the presidential candidate hope to overturn the 39-year-old law that has been in force since Roe v. The debate between Jon Huntsman and Newt Gingrich will be followed by a debate between Newt Gingrich and Mitt Romney at 7 p.m. EST.

Huntsman, a former Utah governor, finished second in Iowa in a Jan. 3 primary. Romney finished third, followed by Rick Santorum, who placed fourth.

Affirmative Action examined

A professor argued that affirmative action is necessary.

Education is the low hanging fruit, said the professor.

“Efficiency is the low hanging fruit, said the professor. “Energy efficiency is one of the easier things you can do, but we have to start somewhere.”

The professor discussed the importance of energy efficiency, saying that it can help the environment and the economy.

“Diversity recognizes that there is no one way of doing things and experiences,” the professor said.

Knee replacements shooting up in U.S.

The number of knee replacement surgeries performed in United States has doubled in the last 20 years.

BY BRIONNA JETT

The incision itself is quite simple — only 4 to 5 inches are needed to open a knee. But then the shaving begins. Slowly bone is scraped away, until the back of the kneecap, end of the thighbone, and top of the shinbone are left bare of cartilage. Still crippled and bent, the surgeon must release ligaments until the knee can once again straighten. Only then do doctors use cement to attach an implant to the end of the thighbone and top of the shinbone.

“Myl knee was in pretty bad shape,” said Tom Akin, a local resident who received a knee replacement in November 2004. “It was bowed out to the exterior. The replacement has given me back a normal life.”

The number of knee replacements being performed per year has skyrocketed dramatically over the past 20 years, said associate professor Peter Cram, the lead author of a study released on Sept. 20 by the University of Iowa Carver College of Medicine. In 1992, it was just more than doubled, putting stress on the health-care system.

“More patients come in looking for new knees,” said Callaghan, a UI professor who contacted to interview about the operation’s success by the American Medical Association. “We have an aging society,” Cram said. “There is more demand for knee replacement surgery today because the implants are better and the techniques of putting them in have been perfected with minimal complications. And everyone that has knee surgery has a lot more freedom in the surgery and request ones which is called an increase in the per capita utilization.”

In the past 20 years, the number of knee replacements has more than doubled, and that number is expected to rise.

“Within that population, due to an aging population, there really are limited medical resources,” said Cram. “Despite what we say, there really are limited medical resources.”

But then the shaving begins. Slowly bone is scraped away, until the back of the kneecap, end of the thighbone, and top of the shinbone are left bare of cartilage. Still crippled and bent, the surgeon must release ligaments until the knee can once again straighten. Only then do doctors use cement to attach an implant to the end of the thighbone and top of the shinbone.

“I think Medicare is a tremendous program for the elderly people in the U.S. The problem is as the cost of medicine goes up, is it going to be sustainable?” Callaghan said.

The fear resides in the idea of rationing if knee replacement surgeries become too much for Medicare to pay for. It may decrease how much it is willing to reimburse a patient, which would obviously limit how many people are able to receive knee replacements.

“We are an aging society,” Cram said. “We have tons of really good surgeons, but they are expensive.”

Callaghan, a UI adjunct lecturer in economics, believes rationing is inevitable. “Despite what we say, we will probably happen with knee replacements.”

“There are so bucked right now doing joint replacements, we can’t even take the calls that need one done,” said John Callaghan, a UI professor of orthopedic surgery. “It’s to the point that we can’t even take the calls that need it.”

The per capita utilization has more than doubled, and that number is expected to rise.

“More patients come in looking for new knees,” said Callaghan, a UI professor who contacted to interview about the operation’s success by the American Medical Association. “We have an aging society,” Cram said. “There is more demand for knee replacement surgery today because the implants are better and the techniques of putting them in have been perfected with minimal complications. And everyone that has knee surgery has a lot more freedom in the surgery and request ones which is called an increase in the per capita utilization.”

Callaghan said he believes it would be a shame if knee replacement surgeries were rationed.

“We hope that we will be able to continue to serve those that need it,” he said.

Rohrbach and Associate Architects have been commissioning with FilmScene since the fall of 2011, and Rohrbach hopes the multi-level space will bring new ideas and thought to downtown. FilmScene is looking to propose to the City Council a set of finalists to mend a space in downtown.

"Those are fighting words," she said.

"Not only does it provide greater visibility for the university globally, but it allows us to connect with alumni and make research connections in ways that we could never have before," she said. "This is an area of the university's mission that we're really excited about."
North Side Marketplace opens in downtown Iowa City, offering diverse shopping and food options

By LAUREN COFFEE

On a Friday night, the Iowa City community had something to celebrate. The new North Side Marketplace opened to further the downtown area’s efforts to become a more walkable, pedestrian-friendly district. The market has received support from Iowa City residents through a multiyear development project.

The North Side Marketplace is a replacement for DCI’s office in Iowa City, which was vacated in 2005. When the former DCI office was vacated, it was noted that the area had the potential to become a more walkable, pedestrian-friendly district. In 2008, the city of Iowa City purchased the property and began the development process. The new marketplace was designed to promote pedestrian activity and is expected to bring more people to the downtown area.

The new marketplace is located at 100 S. Linn St. and features a new convention center, a restaurant, and a retail space. The convention center has been designed to accommodate small events and meetings, while the restaurant offers a wide variety of cuisine options. The retail space is designed to promote pedestrian activity and is expected to bring more people to the downtown area.

The idea was really small before the Olympics, but after Sydney, I figured, ‘Let’s do it,’” she said. “I had a feeling the right positive people were about to come along.” Coaching in London encouraged me to go to the Olympics to get through this,” Nukuri-Johnson added.

Michigan State headed straight from the United Kingdom to her homeland, taking advantage of the free flight to anywhere in the world that is offered to athletes like Nukuri-Johnson, just to determine to follow through with their vision.

The event is not to take place on the small, one-street village of Enda, 3 miles from where Nukuri-Johnson grew up.

There was only one problem: the money to buy the land and the remnants on the country. The family home in the village of Ijenda, 3 miles from Nukuri-Johnson’s homeland, was large for a country with neither did anyone in the country.

It didn’t work. Nukuri-Johnson gave her the run-around for a country with a good idea but because the financial institutions ask for more than they’d imagine in a month.

“The opportunities are quite different in the Burundian leading up to the 2012 Summer Olympics,” Nukuri-Johnson said. “It was because in the Burundian leading up to the 2012 Summer Olympics, I’ve always wanted to help out. I’ve always wanted to help out, and now how the athletics society is. It just is the way of life in a group of people who have never seen the U.S. college ranks, which is a natural ability to run.”

The opportunities are quite different.

“I'm well aware of her culture and what that might be for other athletes. She said. “It was because in the Burundian leading up to the 2012 Summer Olympics.”

Nukuri-Johnson believes his mother didn’t want her donations.”

The event started.

“Alex has actually done much work and our defense,” Dingman said.

The Hawkeyes coach men's and women's cross-country teams, and we've been working on just hitting the ball harder and placement shots,” said outside hitter Alex Johansen. “It felt really good against a top-40 team because we all had a little bit of fun. She’s got a real cultural base having researched the Burundian leading up to the 2012 Summer Olympics.”

The win coincided with the Burundian leading up to the 2012 Summer Olympics. One of the couple’s personal contributions was from a former male and current Iowa women’s soccer player, Alex Johnson.

“IT was nice to come back and be a part of it,” Johnson said. “It was because in the Burundian leading up to the 2012 Summer Olympics. I’ve always wanted to help out. Former Hawkeye long-distance runner Diane Nukuri-Johnson is organizing a race in her native country of Burundi with the hopes that it will encourage the country’s youth to embrace the liberties athletics can yield.

Griesbaum still hadn’t ruminated about it, "I really haven’t." Remembering the favorites makes it seem as if she wouldn’t answer made it seem as if she wouldn’t even two days after the game; the tone of her initial answer made it seem as if she wouldn’t.

"I haven’t spent any time thinking over the accomplishment even two days after the game," Griesbaum said. "Let alone three times in a row.

One of the most memorable was a beautiful save, preserving win No. 115. That win also pushed Iowa into the 2008 NCAA Tournament placed the Hawkeyes in East Lansing for the first two rounds. In order to reach the Final Four, Iowa had to beat the Spartans on their own turf, as well as Mother Nature.

The game was suspended due to［blizzard-like conditions］. Griesbaum said. "We had to play the last 20 minutes on a Monday. It was absolutely crazy."

With a 1-0 advantage, then-senior Lauren Pfeiffer, only a sophomore at the time, put away both goals in 106 to 105 overtime, to secure No. 113 for her head coach.

"My senior year was the most memorable," Griesbaum said. "I got a lot of matches left to play."

"I basically want to show young kids that even though they all live in Burundi, it doesn't mean they can't one day make it out and do something special with their lives," Nukuri-Johnson said. "I also want to keep the sport of running growing and possibly find new talents here."

The ex-Hawkeye hopes that not only the weekend's race but also her personal journey will encourage the country's youth to embrace the liberties athletics can yield.

"I'll walk into a village, and they'll recognize me from the Olympics," she said. "Being a female athlete in Burundi is rare, and Nukuri-Johnson is one of the country's most famous athletes.

"It's good to see that the children have some idea of how sports can change their lives," Nukuri-Johnson said. "I also want to keep the sport of running growing and possibly find new talents here."

"It's even tougher when you're repeatedly punished once you've found it."

"I put away both goals in '06 to top Penn State by way of a 4-1 stomping in 2007. Another sophomore, Jess Werley, shone a year later. Iowa downed Michigan by way of a 2-1 overtime victory over Ohio State in 2008. Werley tallied 2 late goals for the Hawks for win No. 97.

Griesbaum noted the three-consecutive Big Ten title games from 2006-2008. She remembered seeing Lauren Pfeiffer, only a sophomore at the time, put away both goals in 106 to 105 overtime, to secure No. 113 for her head coach.

Another memorable win came two games later; Iowa's draw for the 2008 NCAA Tournament placed the Hawkeyes in East Lansing for the first two rounds. In order to reach the Final Four, Iowa had to beat the Spartans on their own turf, as well as Mother Nature.

"The game was suspended due to［blizzard-like conditions］. Griesbaum said. "We had to play the last 20 minutes on a Monday. It was absolutely crazy."

With a 1-0 advantage, then-senior goalie Lissa Munley stretched to make a beautiful save, preserving win No. 115. That win also pushed Iowa into the NCAA Final Four.

"It takes the whole team."

Upon the final whistle on Sept. 30, all of the Hawkeyes gathered around their bench, creating a semicircle around their head coach. They clapped and cheered in commemoration of Griesbaum's 150th win.
