Council sets Vine hearing

The city is considering new apartments and a historical designation for the Vine Tavern Building.

By NICK HASSETT
nicholas-hassett@uiowa.edu

The Vine Tavern Building has been in Iowa City for more than 100 years. And now, the Iowa City City Council is taking steps to immortalize it as a landmark.

The City Council set a public hearing for the designation of the building, 330 E. Prentiss St., as a historic landmark.

The council also set a hearing on the issue of allowing apartments in buildings designated as historic landmarks, a classification that the Vine would fall into.

Both resolutions will be discussed at a public hearing on March 19.

City Councilor Terry Dickens thought the building was important to preserve. "There's a lot of historical value in that area; that building has been around as long as I can remember," he said. "It's important to save those buildings."

An employee from the Vine was not available for comment Tuesday evening.

The special exception that's required to allow apartments in historic landmarks is already allowed in CB-10 zoned buildings. The amendment would extend this option to landmark buildings located in the CB-5 zone, like the Vine Tavern Building.

The zoning code amendment would allow the Board of Adjustment to consider allowing apartments on the ground level floor of a building located in the CB-5 zone that is designated as an Iowa City landmark.

City Councilor Rick Dobyms thought the council should look at the decision carefully.

Etheredge elected as supervisor

John Etheredge won with 51 percent of the vote.

By QUENTIN MISIAG
quentin-misiag@uiowa.edu

For the first time since 1962, when Oren Alt last served, a Republican has taken a seat on the historically Democratic Johnson County Board of Supervisors.

By a 51-to-49 majority, Johnson County Republican and Kalona resident John Etheredge claimed the fifth and final supervisor seat. With 3,102 votes, he overtook Johnson County Democrat Terry Dahms, who brought in 2,974. A difference of 128 votes was the deciding factor.

elected

A proponent of thriving small business and farming sectors, Etheredge said he is an active opponent of raising taxes for all individuals, and bonds used for county projects should not be implemented if money is readily available in the budget. He most recently campaigned as an independent in the 2011 election. He has had no former political experience.

"It's fantastic to win, especially here in Johnson County, and I'm looking forward to doing exactly what I said I would do," Etheredge said. "I'm going to be jumping right into the current agenda that the board has put together."

Etheredge said his first steps as a supervisor include the compilation of an alternative to the current justice-center proposal and improving affordable housing availability.

"You don't do anything suddenly because it leaves a vacuum," he said. "I will do my best to represent Johnson County. I'm looking forward to being a voice for

'Pet' play benefits students, animals

Petland welcomes a large number of local college students every day.

By LAUREN COFFEY
lauren-n-coffey@uiowa.edu

Despite recent thefts at the Iowa City Petland, officials at the store say the benefits of offering an open atmosphere for people to come in and interact with animals outweighs any risks.

Petland, 1851 Lower Muscatine Road, receives 30 to 40 visits each day from local college students who play with animals, and that number is expected to increase as the winter months come to a close.

Petland officials say the heavy traffic of students does not concern them, despite a few incidents at the store recently. One theft case involves a former Petland employee, 21-year-old Robert Schick. He was charged Feb. 27 with allegedly stealing $1,600 worth of merchandise.

A second recent theft involved a local woman, 46-year-old Diane Chance, who was charged Feb. 28 with allegedly stealing a miniature poodle and a dachshund from Petland. The dogs were valued at $1,799.99 and $1,499.99, respectively.

"That was a shock," said Rogan Barkhoff, a kennel manager at Petland. "It literally happened in just a few minutes. We just wanted to get the puppy back. It was one of those strange coincidences. We have great security, which is why we found the

District weighs budget

The School District is uncertain about the allowable-growth rate for fiscal 2014.

By STACEY MURRAY
stacey-murray@uiowa.edu

The Iowa City School Board faces some uncertainty following new budget recommendations for fiscal 2014.

The board received the proposal Tuesday evening and set a date for a public hearing on the budget, which features a 4 percent increase in potential allowable growth rate that will lower property taxes 24 cents per $1,000 of property valuation.

But the board ventures into uncertainty — the Iowa Legislature hasn't yet set the allowable-growth percentage.

Iowa City outlines road to future

Heavy snowfall and high winds disrupted downtown on Dec. 20, 2012.. (The Daily Iowan/Adam Wesley)

Members of the Iowa City community will be able to comment on the updated comprehensive plan up until March 20.

By NICK HASSETT
nicholas-hassett@uiowa.edu

Though the Iowa City City Council usually discusses issues immediately pertinent to the city, a new plan for the city allows them to look ahead. Way ahead.

The Iowa City Comprehensive Plan, last adopted in 1997, will be updated by the city with "Iowa City 2030." City officials hope the updated plan will guide Iowa City growth and development for the next 10 to 20 years, and they're looking for public input.

Iowa City residents can leave their comments up until March 20. The Planning and Zoning Commission will hold two public input sessions, one taking place this Thursday.

City Councilor Terry Dickens thought the plan was important in guiding the city.

"It's something we work toward over the next few decades," he said. "There are always changes over time, but it's a good blueprint to follow."

City Councilor Jim Throgmorton said his priorities had to do with long-term success of the city.

"I think of [my priorities] in terms of long-term prosperity and sustainability, and I think the plan does that," he said. "But the devil's in the details."

The comprehensive plan itself is split into sections, in which the city lays out the goals and policies that will "guide change, development, and growth."

Growth and land use

"Creating and sustaining healthy neighborhoods" is the focus of this section. Goals include re-investing in established neighborhoods, affordable housing, parks, trails, and open space.

Housing

The plan encourages a diversity of housing options to be available for neighborhoods, while maintaining and improving the safety of all housing, as well as creating more energy-efficient development methods.

Economic development

The city hopes to attract new businesses and encourage the expansion and retention of existing businesses, as well as supporting a "healthy mix" of locally owned and national businesses.

Transportation

Accommodating various methods of travel is the priority in this section of the plan, encouraging use of walking, biking, and public transit and maximizing the safety of the transportation network.

Environment, energy, and resources

The vision for environmental protection and sustainability in Iowa City is outlined in this section. The goals include working to raise awareness and protecting the local environment.

Comprehensive Plan

"Iowa City 2030" describes the city's vision for the next few decades. The city outlined several goals in the Community Vision Statement, including:

- Fostering a resilient local economy
- Protecting and enhancing the environment
- Providing safe and efficient modes of travel
- Creating attractive and affordable housing for all people

Parks and open space

The plan calls for new and old neighborhoods to have adequate access to parks, with public awareness of parks also highlighted.

Arts and culture

The city aims to increase funding for arts and culture programs, as well as recognizing and supporting the economic potential of the arts in Iowa City.

Sycamore Mall avoids foreclosure

Sycamore Mall announced Tuesday that it reached a new financial agreement with Great Western Bank, successfully removing the foreclosure previously filed against the Iowa City mall.

According to a press release, the North Liberty office of Great Western Bank negotiated the terms of the new loan agreement with Sycamore mall officials over the last few months.

Wells Fargo Bank filed foreclosure against CORE Sycamore Town Center in December 2012 for an outstanding payment of roughly $12 million. The Daily Iowan has previously reported.

"Sycamore Mall is extremely excited to partner with Great Western Bank," General Manager Kirk White said in the release. "The excitement and enthusiasm it has shown during the processing of the new loan illustrates the confidence that businesses within the community have in the future of Sycamore Mall."

Council OKs redevelopment agreement

The Iowa City City Council on Tuesday authorized an amendment to a redevelopment agreement by a 7-0 vote.

The developer, MDK Development LLC, entered a redevelopment agreement with the city on June 22, 2012, and the original improvement entailed a private redevelopment of one building of 14,850 square feet.

The revised plan includes a time extension for the developer as well as a change in the redevelopment plan, which now includes improvements that consist of two buildings with a total of 14,500 square feet.

City Council discusses budget

The Iowa City City Council on Tuesday authorized an amendment to a redevelopment agreement in the Towncrest Urban Renewal Area by a 7-0 vote.

The hearing was set to discuss the proposed operating budget, the three-year financial plan for fiscal 2014 through fiscal 2016, and multiyear capital-improvements program through fiscal 2017.

Several community members spoke during the hearing, addressing topics such as the revitalization of Twain Elementary School and the maintenance of brick sidewalks in the North Side neighborhood, as well as the elimination of services from the SEATS program.

The state requires the budget be sent to the Johnson County Auditor's Office by April 15.

Council approves levee project

The Iowa City City Council on Tuesday approved a resolution allowing the city to move forward with the West Side levee project by a 7-0 vote.

The resolution directs city staff to notify contractors bidding on the project following the meeting.

The project includes the construction of an earthen levee, riverbank stabilization, and interior storm drainage improvements, extending approximately 3,000 linear feet along the western bank of the Iowa River from the CRANDIC railroad bridge to McCollister Boulevard.

The estimated cost of construction is $5.6 million and will be funded with Community Development Block Grants.

but it can also detract from a neighborhood if it's not part of a future vision," he said. "In a historical district, it's hard to make changes."

Because the building is located in the Riverfront Crossing District, Dobyms thinks the area is subject to change, which may be difficult if it is designated as a historical landmark.

He also emphasized that the decision to allow apartments in the building should fit within the overall vision of the city, providing affordable housing.

In a work session before the formal City Council meeting, city staff members presented several buildings located in Des Moines as an example to which they believe would be good models for affordable housing in Iowa City, particularly in the Riverfront Crossing District.

However, city staff drew a contrast between workforce housing and off-campus student housing, and emphasized that their focus in the presentation was on the former.

"The distinction between student housing and workforce housing is

The Planning and Zoning Commission will move forward with the next step of the process, considering the amendments for the historic designation and apartments at their March 7 meeting. It is anticipated they will make a recommendation to the city on both measures prior to the March 19 city council meeting.

Time to define what it really means to be an American Pulitzer-Prize-winning journalist and immigration activist Jose Antonio Vargas spoke Monday night at the Englert Theatre about America's need for immigration reform that moves the country's 12 million undocumented immigrants toward legal status.

Vargas himself is not a documented American citizen; he was brought to the United States at age 12 and found out upon applying for a driver's license four years later that his green card was a fake. He hid his undocumented status — even as he built national reputation as a journalist — until 2011, when Vargas wrote openly about it in the New York Times.

In his current role as an immigration-reform advocate, Vargas fights for the rights of the undocumented, who, he believes, deserve a path to legal status. His message and the message of the nonprofit organization he started, Define American, revolves around a central question: How do you define an American?

This question takes the immigration debate beyond questions of policy: How many resources should we direct toward border enforcement? How broad should our guest-worker program be? and into more abstract questions of national identity and morality.

As the battle over immigration reform plays out, we as a society will have to answer Vargas's central question: Who is American, who is not, and how should that difference affect how we treat people?

The cut-and-dried answer is clear enough. Citizens and documented immigrants are Americans with access to the full gamut of freedoms and services afforded to Americans; undocumented immigrants are lawbreakers who belong to a lower, un-American class by virtue of their illegality.

This is the worldview that colors much of the current immigration policy debate and large swathes of public opinion. The Daily Iowan Editorial Board believes that it is wrong.

The undocumented are a group of people who made a tough decision to come here or, in many cases, arrived as children. They have as many internal problems as any other group, of course, but they have as many virtues, too. They contribute to American society — they're a part of American society — but they receive comparatively little in exchange.

More importantly, the undocumented are individuals who live and work and raise families in the United States like anyone else. But on top of the stress of daily life, undocumented workers often live in constant fear of being found out and without many of the protections afforded to legally recognized members of society.

We will ultimately be judged by how we treat people of every kind. As it stands, we treat our undocumented neighbors poorly; the undocumented in America are too often denied the basic protections we take for granted and too often denigrated in our politics.

We support a path to full legal status for America's undocumented immigrants; anyone who chooses to live and work in the United States deserves a chance to do so freely.

As another set of political campaigns begins to take root in Iowa, we're going to hear a whole lot of rhetoric about immigration. There will talk both ways about "amnesty" and "waiting their turn" and "a path to citizenship," but it's important that we don't lose sight of what's at the heart of the debate: 12 million real people.

Your turn.

Do you think undocumented immigrants should be given amnesty?

Raise awareness

By BRIANNE RICHSON
brianne-richson@uiowa.edu

National Eating Disorders Awareness Week may have come to a close on March 2, but the reality is that eating disorders are a year-round, seven-days-a-week, stifling preoccupation for those who suffer from one.

Another reality: Many of those affected don't even realize the cycle they have fallen into is classifiable as a disorder, largely because the fact that the most-prevalent eating disorder form, EDNOS (eating disorder not otherwise specified), is a mishmash of not anorexia, not bulimia, but a detrimental equation of compulsive behaviors that often varies by victim.

"When does an eating disorder become an eating disorder?" said Eva Schoen, the assistant director for evaluation and research at the University Counseling Service.

The prevalence of eating disorders is generally much higher on a college campus, she said, where anxiety to maintain good grades, a social life, and a desirable outward appearance runs rampant.

"One of the hallmarks of an eating disorder is that it revolves around control," Schoen said.

Because college is a time when so many things about the future feel uncertain, this unfortunately adds up.

What doesn't add up, however, is that at a certain elusive point, an eating disorder transitions from control to obsession. The ability to control is lost to the addiction.

This is why awareness of eating disorders is so critical, because if they are not socially defined, how can people blinded by their compulsions begin to seek help?

A recent study conducted by the University of Michigan titled "U-SHAPE" reported that more than one half of surveyed students agreed they would "like" themselves more if they were thinner.

But, again, where's the turning point between thinner and eating disorder? Is there one?

The study also found that almost 28 percent of the undergraduate females surveyed had an eating disorder, and of those who screened positive, nearly 82 percent had not sought treatment in the year leading up to the survey.

It may not even be clear to those students who did screen positive that they have a problem, as the line continues to be a blurry one. ■

A night of 1,000 dinners

March 8 is just another day. Another day in which a woman is killed every six hours in South Africa by an intimate partner and a woman in Brazil is sexually assaulted every 15 seconds. A day where on average, 36 women and girls will be raped in the Congo as a tactic of war. March 8 is part of another year in which the cost of intimate-partner violence in the United States alone exceeds $4.1 billion for direct medical and health-care services, and the productivity losses reach nearly $1.8 billion.

But this day is not just another day of statistics.

March 8 is International Women's Day, a day to stand up, speak out, and celebrate the economic, political, and social achievements of women. This is a day to recognize the role that women play in every aspect of every society in every corner of the globe and commit to striving for further change.

Violence against women is a global phenomenon. International Women's Day is a time to recognize the strength women have and the strides they are making on a daily basis, despite the discrimination and violence they face.

On March 8 every year, thousands of cities around the globe, including Iowa City, choose to participate in International Women's Day by hosting events and rallies to speak out against violence against women.

To celebrate the lives and progress of women, the Iowa United Nations Association will host a Night of 1,000 Dinners at 6 p.m. Thursday. We will recognize U.N.-funded organizations that are working every day to end the violence and provide women with critical resources to promote recovery, prosperity, and advocacy. A silent auction will be held at the Night of 1,000 Dinners to benefit the U.N. Trust Fund to End Violence against Women and promote the idea that local initiatives to stop the violence can have a significant global impact.

By hosting this event in honor of International Women's Day, the Iowa U.N. Association and the Iowa City community have an opportunity to bring the issue of violence against women into the spotlight and highlight the importance of local advocacy and action for a global cause.

RE: 'Undocumented immigrant, Define American founder speaks on immigration reform at UI'

Eight million illegal immigrants are continuing to break our laws by using false, or stolen, Social Security numbers to work in non-agricultural, on-the-books, American jobs. Only 6 percent of employers are presently using E-Verify. For every illegal immigrant working, an American isn't. Mandate and enforce E-Verify for all jobs, for all employees, and for any entitlement. Department of Health Services receives continuing employer/employee Social Security number no-match lists from the Social Security Administration.

The Social Security Administration also sends out thousands of no-match letters to employers, but because of the lack of any real enforcement by Human Services, these notices are largely ignored. Make the employer/employee no-match list available to the individual states, if not to the public, and we, the people will address the problem.

"I feel like so many citizens of this country don't appreciate what they have," Flores said.

There is a lot less to appreciate than there used to be when your president, along with most other politicians, is flooding the supply of labor with illegal aliens.

Ms. Flores, please tell us how many immigrants America should admit every year. America currently admits more than 1 million every year. How many would we have to admit for you and Mr. Vargas to be satisfied?

Any proposed reform that does not include mandatory jail terms for employers of illegal aliens will be a complete failure just as the '86 amnesty was a failure.

RE: 'Debate over Johnson County SEATS funding heats up'

SEATS is a prodigious waste of taxpayer money. Fifteen riders per month. For that kind of paltry ridership, the taxpayers are asked to purchase and maintain a whole fleet of expensive buses? To say nothing of paying for drivers, administrators, etc., etc.? Privatize the whole operation — issue vouchers to needy individuals to be redeemed by private taxis, minivans, etc. That approach encourages private enterprise and vastly reduces the burden on taxpayers. And improves the quality of service to those in need.

"I would love to be more set, but at this point in time, that's not possible," said School District Chief Financial Officer Craig Hansel, who presented the recommendations on Tuesday.

The proposed budget will be available for public comment on April 2, when the board will also vote on the budget. It will be filed with the county auditor on April 15.

The allowable-growth rate determines how much the state and district spend per student from one year to the next. Gov. Terry Branstad has proposed a 0 percent allowable growth, which would cause the districts to spend the same on each student as the previous year.

The projected expenditure budget per student for fiscal 2014 is $10,282 per student, but Hansel said this isn't necessarily what the district would spend. It serves more as a cap on spending.

The majority expenditures on students come from instruction, administration, and maintenance.

The district currently spends substantially less per student than other districts across the country. In order to raise the money spent per student to the national average, the state would have to use an allowable-growth rate of 16 percent.

The Iowa House of Representatives proposed a growth rate of 2 percent, and the Senate proposed a 4 percent rate, but School Board members said they might settle somewhere in the middle.

"It's a guessing game," board President Marla Swesey said.

The board members are hesitant about publishing a rate before the Legislature comes to a decision, fearing public disapproval.

School Board member Tuyet Durau proposed publishing a rate of 4 percent — a likely maximum rate — to not surprise taxpayers who might pay more than anticipated.

"Strategically, I don't know if that would be an enviable way to go," Durau said about the idea of publishing a lower rate. "I always like to have things go down rather than up when it comes to tax rates."

The Legislature could set a different growth rate; a rate from 0 to 4 percent would still lower property taxes, but the amount would vary.

Hansel suggested 4 percent was an appropriate rate.

"We can publish that number, and it will probably be a little softer than when it hits," Hansel said.

Durau said publishing a lower rate that's subject to change could harm community members who live on tight budgets.

Board member Jeff McGuinness also suggested the board set the rate of 4 percent, but he hoped the state government would take notice.

"I just personally am on the side of asking for 4 percent," he said, in hopes the Legislature would take the published rate into consideration, providing the district with more funds per student.

The district looks to the community for input on the proposed budget.

"We'll be able to have that conversation in front of the public," Superintendent Steve Murley said.

puppy so quickly. We're more aware now. It's just one of these things that just happens."

Although most of the students spend only around an hour with the animals, Petland officials say those minutes are very beneficial for the pets.

"It definitely helps with the socialization of the dogs and the animals in general," said Jessie Dubolde, the manager at Petland in Iowa City. "They aren't as nervous, and it helps them get used to having people around."

In addition to helping animals, socializing with the pets is also beneficial to students, giving them what Dubolde calls "puppy therapy."

Barkhoff, a former University of Iowa student, agrees with Dubolde and said she thinks the puppies relieve college students' stress.

"As a college student in a small apartment, and with little time, I would come here all the time with my boyfriend," Barkhoff said. "After a hard test or a long day, it's nice to come to something that will always adore you and snuggle up with you. It's definitely a stress-reliever."

The UI Hospitals and Clinics offer its own pet program called Furry Friends. It is one of the only programs in the country that allows patients to bring in their own pets from home for visiting hours. The program is celebrating its 10th year at the hospital.

"Obviously, it's a win-win program for the staff, and it's designed for the patients to have a positive response," said Linda Monroe, a UIHC senior activity therapist. "There's research to back it up that it's beneficial for patient interactions. It helps the patient relax, and sometime the dogs even fall asleep, too."

Kathleen Staley, the assistant director for outreach at University Counseling Service, said stress is one of the largest issues she sees with college students, and playing with animals is one of the ways to help the students relax.

"Playing with animals can help relieve stress, absolutely," Staley said. "Animals can help calm us down. Petting an animal is very common to do and calming."

Barkhoff said the number of student visitors at Petland has risen in the past five months she has worked at Petland. She believes it will continue to rise with the spring temperatures.

Kirkwood junior Selma Pepic spent some time with animals at Petland Tuesday evening. She said she visits Petland a few times each month to relax.

"It relieves stress. I was stressed earlier about school," Pepic said as she pet a rabbit in her arms. "They're just so adorable, and [playing with the animals] just helps you feel the love."

people that haven't had one."

Dahms said he thought the loss was surprising, considering Etheredge's unspecific plans, but he intends on remaining an active community member and leader.

"I don't know what we're going to see from him," he said. "He has been pretty much invisible in this campaign ... He's never mentioned the justice center, he's never mentioned reorganization of mental health. The only thing he's talked about are property rights, and by that I assume he means land-rights issues ... I'm not sure how he views that."

Despite the confusion, Dahms said he will give credit where credit is due.

"I have to give credit to the Republican Party for organizing people to get out and vote," he said. "I was active in campaigning, and I'm not sure about the winner, frankly, but he did win, so somebody did something right."

Johnson County Supervisor Janelle Rettig said that although she has yet to meet Etheredge, she believes the newly formed board will operate fine.

"I have absolutely no idea what he stands for," she said.

"He's ran twice and to my knowledge he's never attended a public forum. He's never been to a Board of Supervisors meeting. I have no idea what he stands for, so I'll be anxious to meet him."

Rettig said continuous work on Etheredge's part will be needed, given a steep learning curve presented to him.

"I'm sure we'll work fine if he's a hard worker and conscientious and does his homework," she said. "I was a Republican before, too, so my problem is he hasn't been interested or involved in any county functions ... It's going to take him a lot of work to get up to speed."

In other eastern Iowa election news, Linn County voters approved a controversial and long-debated gambling referendum Tuesday evening by a 61-to-39 percent majority.

A previous proposal in 2003 was shot down by voters by a 6-point margin.

There are more than 60 investors in the casino project, which is slated to be built across the Cedar River from downtown Cedar Rapids.

Officials must now submit a gaming license application to the Iowa Racing & Gaming Commission.

Election Results

- Republican John Etheredge of Kalona took the fifth and final Board of Supervisors position by 51 percent to 49 percent, or 128 votes.
- This will mark the first time since 1962 that a Republican has served on the board.
- Etheredge has held no previous political position.
- He emphasized small business and farming growth.

UI faculty get privacy briefing

University of Iowa officials hope to break the illusion of privacy.

By BRIANNA JETT
brianna-jett@uiowa.edu

For faculty and staff at the University of Iowa, privacy is part illusion.

Because the university is a public institution, most work-related materials are available if the public requests them. This includes emails and password-protected material.

"In looking at the policy as it currently stands, [and] I think one can be misled as to the amount of privacy one has in terms of IT resources at the university," said Kevin Ward, the assistant vice president for Human Resources. "We felt it was important to update that to make it more accurate for faculty and staff to understand that point."

Officials hope the policy will become better understood across campus.

"Before I had this position, I did not know as much about emails and the idea that pretty much anyone who wants to look at your email can do that," said Professor Linda Snetselaar, the president of the Faculty Senate. "That's just something that we need to keep in mind."

Ward presented the new document to the Faculty Council at Tuesday's meeting and emphasized that just because something is protected by a password doesn't necessarily mean it is off-limits to the public.

"We are trying to break past that illusion that just because it's a password-protected drive, it's always going to be private," he said.

The revised version of the Acceptable Use of Information Technology Resources Policy was revamped in an effort to reflect both the advances in technology and in an effort to be transparent.

"We are trying to use more flexible language around information-technology resources to recognize not only the tech we have now, but perhaps some we don't even perceive from the future," Ward said.

One council member, professor Katherine Tachau, expressed concern in how the document explained that anything done on a university computer, with a few specific exceptions, is subject to release by the UI.

"Most faculty don't know the law," Tachau said. "They are going to read that and are suddenly going to think that all of their personal, copyrighted material, is subject to being released by the university."

Another Faculty Council member hopes the document will become clearer.

"Mostly you talk about documents and records and emails," said Associate Professor Bob McMurray. "But there are all sorts of implicit documentation computers are doing that people aren't aware of, and if any of that implies, it might be helpful to bring it out for faculty that don't spend a lot of time thinking about that stuff."

Another point officials are hoping to educate faculty and staff about is that, even on private computers and private accounts, if something is work-related, it is subject to subpoena.

"I, in the past, thought that your private email was your private email," Snetselaar, said. "It's a little bit scary that anything you're doing with email can be looked at when pretty much anyone wants to."

Snetselaar hopes faculty will read the policy and come to understand that point.

"I think that policy will help make that clear to faculty," she said. "That's why I think it's a very good policy, very timely, and something that is really needed."

Council votes to move ahead with trail project

The Iowa City City Council on Tuesday authorized the city staff to apply for funding assistance for the development of the Iowa River Trail along the Iowa River.

The resolution, which passed 7-0, will enable city staff to apply for grants from the Iowa Department of Transportation, using the State Recreation Trails Program, Federal Recreation Trails Program, and the State-wide Transportation Alternatives Program.

Once funds are awarded, they will be used to develop a 10-foot wide trail along the west bank of the Iowa River from Benton Street to Strugis Ferry Park.

The total estimated project cost is roughly $2 million. Each grant requires a local match between 20 to 30 percent, which would be reduced if awarded numerous grants.

Council OKs Mission Creek funding

The Iowa City City Council on Tuesday authorized funding for the 2013 Mission Creek Festival by a 7-0 vote.

The resolution provides $5,000 in funding for the festival. The City Council Economic Development Committee approved the measure 3-0 and recommended approval of the request by the full City Council.

The festival will take place April 2-7.

Council sets hearing on park shelter

The Iowa City City Council on Tuesday scheduled a public hearing on the replacement of a City Park shelter.

The hearing will be held March 19 and focus on plans, specifications, form of contract, and estimate of cost for the construction of the shelter, located in Lower City Park.

The project would include a prefabricated wood and steel shelter structure, with concrete footings and slab. The estimated construction cost is $135,000 and will be funded through the Parks Annual Improvements account.

turnaround jumper with 48 seconds remaining gave the Hawkeyes the lead, then junior forward Zach McCabe hit a lay-up as time expired to give the home team to a 31-28 advantage at the intermission.

"A little disturbing we held them to 26 percent shooting in the first half but were only up 3," McCaffery said. "But we settled down in the second and did what we needed to do."

Carver-Hawkeye Arena Tuesday evening as a throng of Illini fans stormed into Iowa City to witness another renewal of this heated rivalry.

But the most important emotion felt on this night would be the sigh of relief from the 15,400 in attendance who knew their Hawkeyes held on to a much needed NCAA Tournament résumé-boosting victory.

"They were top-30 RPI team, almost ranked and have great players, so this was a good test for us," Marble said. "But it was very important because it was our next game."

Iowa guard Josh Oglesby shoots a 3 against Illinois at on Tuesday. (The Daily Iowan/Adam Wesley) going in. I think he does, too," McCaffery said. "I asked him at halftime, I said, 'How did they feel?' He said they felt good, so I said, 'Just keep shooting, and we'll keep coming to you.'"

After Oglesby's back-to-back 3-pointers, Marble hit the dagger to seal the win with a drive to the rim, making the basket and drawing a foul. That wasn't how the play was drawn up, but Oglesby had a hand in it, nonetheless.

"We were running that play for Josh, and Brandon Paul tried to reach in on me," Marble said. "I was able to get past him, and once I saw that, I knew I had a clear path to the basket."

"The big men were so deep into the paint, worried about Josh coming off screens, I knew they wouldn't be able to take a charge."

Oglesby couldn't deny the extended slump he has suffered this year, and he said it can be difficult at times to remain confident in his shot. But he focuses on having a short memory.

"It's hard, especially during the game," he said. "It's in the back of your head when you miss a couple shots. But I've really tried to forget about that this year, with the struggles I've had. Just to refresh my brain and believe that the next one's going in."

Sophomore Gabe Olaseini threw his arms around Oglesby after the teams shook hands and had a few words for his teammate.

"I said, 'It's about time,'" Olaseini said with a grin. "He works so hard, and he gets on himself a lot more than [other] people get on him. Obviously, when you're struggling, you feel like nothing's going to work."

"So when those two [3-pointers] went in, I felt really good for him."

TENNIS

erholt, who are ranked No. 13 nationally — provided a stiff test.

The Black and Gold duo were leading Nebraska's No. 1 doubles team (7-5) before the match was abandoned because the Cornhuskers' No. 2 and No. 3 doubles teams had clinched the doubles point.

Iowa women's tennis head coach Katie Dougherty thought her team played well, but she was disappointed with the results. The loss marks another missed opportunity for the Hawkeyes.

"This was a close match," Dougherty said. "Look at No. 1, No. 2, and No. 4, we took them all to three sets. We had some different combinations out there today in doubles. We competed well, and they are a very good team. You know why they are a top-10 team in the country, and they proved that today."

Hawkeyes reel in big win

Iowa guard Devyn Marble drives to the hoop against Illinois in Carver-Hawkeye on Tuesday. (The Daily Iowan/Adam Wesley)

Devyn Marble's big night, Josh Oglesby's big shots and Gabe Olaseni's big blocks led the Hawkeyes past the Illini.

By TOM CLOS
thomas-clos@uiowa.edu

The Hawkeyes knew they had to sweep both of their remaining home games if they were to have any chance at breaking the school's seven-year NCAA Tournament absence following a loss at Indiana.

One down, one to go. Junior guard Devyn Marble led all scorers with 21 points, 6 rebounds, and 4 assists as the Iowa men's basketball team picked up a big 63-55 victory over Illinois in Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Tuesday evening.

The Hawkeyes (19-11, 8-9 Big Ten) have won two of their last three games and pulled into a tie with the Fighting Illini (21-10, 8-9) for seventh-place in the conference standings with the win.

Sophomore Josh Oglesby scored 10 points off the bench, but none were bigger than the 6 he scored in the final stages of the contest.

With the Hawkeyes clinging to a 48-46 lead, the much-maligned Oglesby — who was 0-for-5 from 3-point range at the time — hit a contested trey as the shot clock wound down to jolt Iowa's lead to 5 with 4:01 remaining. He wasn't done.

On the next trip down, the sophomore found an opening and drained another shot from downtown, pushing the Black and Gold to an 8-point advantage they would never relinquish.

Marble, who is just 2 points shy from joining his father as the only father-son tandem in Big Ten history to score 1,000 career points, said Oglesby's big-time baskets were a huge load off the star player's shoulders.

"Josh was able to give us a little breathing room by making those shots," Marble said. "Because of it, we were able to withstand their run late."

The Hawkeyes shot only 28 percent in the second half but were able to pull away down the stretch thanks to a supreme defensive effort, primarily by the team's big men.

Iowa tied a school-record with 12 blocked shots, thanks mostly to sophomore forward Gabe Olaseni, who surpassed his total block mark in conference play entering tonight by swatting away 6.

"The coaches gave me four things to focus on: running the floor, rebounding, playing good defense, and finishing around the rim," Olaseni said. "I finished around the rim once or twice and obviously defended well, so I'm pretty happy with the way I played."

Iowa head coach Fran McCaffery was amazed with Olaseni's performance and noted that the Hawkeyes' depth has really helped them grind out games this season when their offense has dried up.

"Last year, we would have lost 77-63 if we shot 28 percent in the second half and played the defense the way we played last year," McCaffery said. "So it's showing you the team has really grown and we're obviously much deeper."

Freshman center Adam Woodbury scored the game's first 4 points, and White scored the Hawkeyes' next 5 as Iowa jumped out to an early 9-3 advantage.

The lead ballooned to as much as 11 at 15-4 after a Marble dunk at the 8:40 mark, then the Hawks led by 10, 22-12, with 6:31 remaining.

Illinois responded, however, with a 16-6 run during the latter stages of the half to claim a 28-27 advantage before Iowa jumped ahead in the final minute.

Oglesby comes through

Josh Oglesby has struggled to hit his shots all year, but he put it all together when it counted against Illinois.

By TORK MASON
tork-mason@uiowa.edu

Josh Oglesby rose up from the left wing with four minutes remaining in the game and the Hawkeyes clinging to a 2-point lead over Illinois. He lofted a 3-pointer over the outstretched arms of a pair of defenders and watched it fly toward the hoop.

Oglesby had hit just one shot all night. He missed five others — all 3-pointers — including several wide-open looks.

But on arguably the biggest shot of the night, he found nothing but net.

"I was just thinking, 'Hopefully, that goes in,'" Oglesby said. "But all my shots tonight felt good."

He followed that up moments later with another trey from almost the same spot — this time, wide open — and buried it again, bringing the Carver-Hawkeye crowd to its feet in riotous applause. The shot gave the Hawkeyes a 54-46 lead with 3:10 left to play.

The Hawkeyes didn't hesitate to keep hunting for shots for Oglesby, and junior Devyn Marble smiled as he reminded reporters of a promise he made last week.

"I told you I was going to keep giving him the ball; it's up to him to make the shots," Marble said. "I've got faith in him, the team's got faith in him. We know he's going to knock shots down. We're just trying to let him go about [getting out of his slump] his own way."

Oglesby has been a lightning rod for criticism for much of this season. He entered the year expected to be the team's go-to sniper, but the Cedar Rapids native was shooting just 26 percent from behind the arc.

But, much like Marble, Iowa head coach Fran McCaffery never wavered in his support for Oglesby. The two shared an emotional hug after the game, and the team mobbed him following his second 3-pointer.

"Every time he shoots it, I think it's Hawks play tough but lose to Neb.

By MIKE MAIENZA
Michael-maienza@uiowa.edu

The Iowa women's tennis team lost its Big Ten opener Tuesday afternoon to No. 10 Nebraska, 7-0. The Hawkeyes weren't able to garner a team point but did show plenty of promise against a tough Cornhusker squad.

Three of the singles matches went to a third set tiebreaker, and the Hawkeyes were leading one match in the doubles point before it was abandoned because the Cornhuskers won the other two doubles.

One player who struggled to find her groove early was Iowa's No. 2 singles player, sophomore Shelby Talcott. After losing the first set (6-1), Talcott rediscovered her stroke to take the second set from her opponent (6-4) before ultimately losing in a third-set tiebreaker (10-7).

"I think staying focused; a lot of times if I come out in the first game and play really well, I tend to relax and tend to cool off," Talcott said. "The big thing for me in the second set was focusing on making a lot of balls, where as in the first set that wasn't my focus."

The Black and Gold's No. 1 singles player Ruth Seaborne found herself up against reigning Big Ten Player of the Year, Cornhusker senior Mary Weatherholt, who is also the No. 16 player in the country. Seaborne played well against her opponent — the Hawkeye forced a third-set tiebreaker but lost in the end

(7-5, 5-7, 10-5).

Pushing the Big Ten Player of the Year is no small task, and Weatherholt was impressed with what she saw on the courts today from the Hawkeyes.

"They definitely brought it, but we knew they were a tough team and they were going to bring their best," Weatherholt said. "They came out playing really well, so we just tried to hang in there and pull through in the matches. We knew they were good, and they were."

One positive the Hawkeyes will take from the day is the continued solid play from their doubles team of sophomore Morven McCulloch and Seaborne, who are ranked No. 42 nationally. Their opponents — Patricia Veresova and Weatherholt.

Branstad pushes for Olympic wrestling

Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad released a letter Tuesday that was cosigned by a bipartisan group of 33 governors, calling for the International Olympic Committee to keep wrestling as an Olympic sport.

After asking Iowa's Congressional delegation to cosign a letter to the IOC, Branstad began bringing together governors around the country in an effort to keep "the great sport" in the Olympics, according to a release.

The letter is addressed to Jacques Rogge, the IOC president, and urges the committee to reconsider its decision to remove wrestling as an Olympic sport, effective in 2020.

"The Olympic Games are meant to provide a venue for people from all nations to overcome differences and forge lasting relationships, and wrestling has contributed to these Olympic attributes," the governors wrote in the letter, according to a release. "We believe that renewing or renovating the Olympics should respect key Olympic traditions. We would also encourage a transparent voting system for future votes on which sports should be included as part of the Olympic Games. As public servants, we hold transparency as a sacred principle and we would encourage the IOC to abide by that same principle."
