Students REACH success

The REACH graduation marked five years of the program for students with intellectual disabilities.

The auditorium in the Pappajohn Business Building echoed with sounds of laughter and the occasional crack in speakers' voices as tears slid down their faces. Twenty-two students sat in graduation caps and gowns, with smiles beaming.

This was a day many of the graduates, and their parents, worked toward for years — and they credit the REACH program at the University of Iowa for helping them achieve that goal.

"I would call today a steppingstone," second-year REACH student Jonathan Korsmeyer said. "I'm still working toward my goals, but it's definitely a milestone. I probably would not have had this opportunity [to graduate] if [the UI] didn't have this program."

The REACH program — Realizing Educational and Career Hopes — celebrated its fifth anniversary May 10. The program is in the UI College of Education and serves 18- to 25-year-old students who have intellectual, cognitive, or learning disabilities.

The program allows students to live in a dorm, attend social events in Iowa City, and learn skills that help their academic and personal lives.

One year ago, the two-year certification program added a third-year option for students to learn to live in a more independent environment. The first group of third-year students graduated May 10.

The third-year option will continue next year, serving its maximum of 50 students. There are currently 44 students in the program — six of which took advantage of the third-year option.

Julia Shaw, the coordinator of academic enrichment in the education school, said it has been extremely successful, having students learn more skills that will help

Eight downtown businesses received more than $1.3 million for the Building Change initiative.

Tattered awnings, chipped façades and leaky windows are evidence that the nearly 280 businesses in downtown and the North Side Marketplace have witnessed a lot of wear and tear in the last few decades.

But a newly introduced incentive program spearheaded by the Iowa City Downtown District hopes to change all that by offering building renovation grants as part of the city's 2012 strategic plan. During an April 17 meeting, the Economic Development Committee approved roughly $197,000 — ranging from $8,028 to $47,704 toward projects that will vary in cost — for the Building Change program.

In all, 16 businesses submitted funding applications.

Representatives from the city's Urban Planning, Economic and Community Development, and Housing and Inspection Departments formed a committee to determine which projects would create the biggest aesthetic impact.

The city awarded funding to Bo-James, Atlas, Quinton's Bar & Deli, Pancharo's Mexican Grill, Chait Galleries Downtown, Active Endeavors, Yacht Club, and the Grossix Building.

Wendy Ford, the city's economic-development coordinator, said individual business investment re-

Paul encourages an expanded GOP

Johnson County parties vie for attention as both begin preparations for 2014.

By BRENT GRIFFITHS
brent-griffiths@uiowa.edu

While the 2014 midterm elections are more than a year away, both of Johnson County parties' weekend events offered a small preview of what local Republicans and Democrats hope will lead them to victory.

Sen. Rand Paul, R-Ky., spoke at the Johnson County Republican's "Breakfast of Champions" on May 11, while county Democrats spent the night honoring long-term party members.

Paul used his weekend appearances — including the Iowa Republican Party's Lincoln Dinner on May 10 — to elaborate on his message of growing the party's base, although some raised speculation about Paul's intentions for the 2016 presidential race.

"I will tell you what you need to think through as Republicans, because you will have your own primaries for your Senate race, someday for a presidential race," Paul said. "You need to think about who you want to win your primary — your best candidate. You also have to think about they have to run in another election."

Seventy-eight Johnson County Republicans ate their breakfast as Paul expanded on Republicans' inability to win the White House, along with touching on the possible pitfalls in the primary process — something he himself had to survive to reach the U.S. Senate in 2010.

"What you want are candidates who represent what you stand for but can also talk to people who don't yet understand that," he said. "We need to be able to talk to those in the middle, on the other side,

Threading a charitable line

A charitable clothing line was recently launched from the University of Iowa's Bedell Entrepreneurial Learning Lab.

By REBECCA MORIN
rebecca-morin@uiowa.edu

Four University of Iowa students came together to create a company that not only benefited themselves, but it also gave back to the community.

Widespread Threads is a start-up online clothing company that was launched from the UI Bedell Entrepreneurial Learning Laboratory in April.

Widespread Threads donates to numerous charities locally and nationwide. The students have invested approximately $12,500 to start the operation.

Two UI students, Jake Thomas and Jerid Schumacher, initially envisioned a smaller company in August 2012. At first, they planned to sell bracelets and have the proceeds go to charity.

"Last summer, my partner, Jake Thomas, and I wanted to have a project for the summer, and we thought we could sell bracelets for charity," said Schumacher, a cofounder and chief movement maker.

Widespread Threads has a movement that supports the UI Children's Hospital's Silver Lining Program. The fund is designed to support families on extended stays at the Children's Hospital with everyday expenses.

However, their vision expanded after adding two new members to their team, UI students Levi Maxfield and Taylor Grote.

"When they started laying the groundwork for the company, I was with the Air Force in Afghanistan, so I wasn't a part of the initial stages," Grote said. "When I got back, I approached them about running their social media and some marketing, and it ended up being a good fit."

By adding a graphic designer and a social-media director, the company was able to expand its bracelet line to a full clothing line, Schumacher said.

"I thought bracelets would be cool, but I also thought that it doesn't reach enough people," Schumacher said. "So we decided to sell both clothing and the bracelets for charity."

One of the company's newest charities is Kids in Distressed Situations. For every shirt that is sold on the company's website, a children's size shirt will be donated to an approved event by the charity.

Its first shipment will be sent this summer to local partner agencies.

Widespread Threads is based in the Bedell Lab, in which students are allowed to use the center for free and have access to an office, computers, and Internet free of charge, said Lynn Allendorf, director of the Widespread Threads showcased a table at the Business Fair on May 10.

Although companies are housed at the center, officials let the companies have creative freedom.

"It's totally up to the companies what they do with their products," Allendorf said. "But it's been more and more common for entrepreneurs to not just sell their products but also give back to the community."

Widespread Threads' main goal is to become well-known throughout the community, Schumacher said. The company has a random act of kindness fund to help spread its name.

"The fund will allow us to give back to the community, so if we see a new charity coming up, we will donate $500 to kick-start it; it's even as simple as buying someone's lunch," Schumacher said. "Our whole goal is to gain supporters not just customers."

Group decries SEATS cuts, austerity

Johnson County residents have made their voices heard in council chambers across the county. But one local group sees the potential cuts as a symptom of a larger problem.

The Movement for Socialism met Sunday in the Iowa City Public Library, 123 S. Linn St., to "organize to defeat the cuts," including those in the Johnson County SEATS paratransit service and UIHC Patient Transport Services.

"Patient transport, SEATS — these things are life or death for people," Iowa City resident Christopher Clark said. "They might cut door-to-door service now, but what will it be five years from now? We have to draw a line in the sand."

SEATS provides door-to-door rides to individuals with disabilities, senior citizens, and other people in need of assistance accessing medical clinics, grocery stores, and other destinations.

David Arthur Smithers, who previously ran as the Green Party nominee for Iowa House District 89, said the services provided by the county were looked at in the wrong way.

"It's not welfare when we create the wealth," he said. "It's about what's proper to do; it's proper to fund SEATS and make it better. The lives of the most vulnerable people are bastardized inch by inch."

The group plans on sending a statement against the cuts to various city councils in Johnson County as well as the county Board of Supervisors.

"It's a blanket statement, and a call to action," group member Marlin Pierre-Antoine said. "It talks about the faulty logic of austerity and our alternative."

And though the group didn't think much progress would happen through the electoral system as it stands, Smithers said the organization would work to change the discourse.

"We need to stop the politics of fear that make people accept cuts," he said. "We need to generate politics against austerity and cuts and spend on our needs rather than just hold in the bank."

CR woman faces numerous drug charges

A Cedar Rapids woman has been accused of possessing more than 100 grams of marijuana in her vehicle.

Megan Costello, 23, was charged May 10 with five charges of controlled-substance violation, possession of a controlled substance in a structure or vehicle, prohibited acts of obtaining/attempting to attain prescription drugs, and two charges of possession/distribution of a taxable substance without a tax stamp.

According to an Iowa City police complaint, officials stopped Costello's vehicle and reportedly found that the registered owner of the vehicle had a revoked driver's license.

Costello was driving and matched the description of the registered owner, the complaint said. When officials made contact with Costello, officials allegedly noticed an odor of marijuana coming from the car.

Officials searched Costello's vehicle and allegedly located more than 100 grams of marijuana, more than 30 grams of cocaine, 3 grams of heroin, 17 "hits" of LSD, and several different prescription medications, the complaint said.

According to the complaint, officials also located packaging materials and a digital scale. No tax stamps were affixed to the cocaine or marijuana, the complaint said.

Man convicted of murder appeals to high court

A man sentenced to life in prison for the murder of a former Iowa City landlord has appealed to the Iowa Supreme Court.

Justin Marshall, 22, was sentenced on April 26 to life in prison for killing John Versypt, the former landlord of Broadway Condominiums, in October 2009. Marshall filed for an appeal on May 9.

Marshall was the second of three suspects in this case. At the time of the homicide, he was living in his aunt's apartment with his two cousins and his cousin's boyfriend, Charles Thompson, who was the first suspect in the case. Thompson's trial ended in a mistrial because of a mistake by the prosecution. He later pleaded guilty to accessory to a felony and signed a document stating he knew Marshall had killed Versypt.

The third suspect is Courtney White. White pleaded guilty to tampering with a witness on April 26. He was credited the time he has served, and his attorney, Jonathan Stensvaag, told The Daily Iowan he was to be released within a few days after the plea was made.

people who don't look like us, people who don't wear the same clothes — until we get to that, you may be getting great candidates in your primaries, but you're not going to be able to win your fall."

Iowa Democratic Party Chairman Tyler Olson said Paul was an interesting choice to lead off Republicans' "inclusion tour," given some of his policy stances. He further believes Democrats with their own caucus ambitions will travel to Iowa in the coming years as well.

"It's interesting that Sen. Paul is leading off the 2016 presidential search and push for inclusion, given this is the same guy who said he would vote against the Civil Rights Act," Olson said.

Olson also said the party is reaching out to neighborhood team leaders from President Obama's re-election campaign to develop an infrastructure of party support for 2014. These efforts, along with numerous party events across the state, will seek to solidify the structure for candidates who make it past the primaries.

Olson said the large attendance at the Johnson County Democrats' Hall of Fame dinner and other events show the party has the momentum it needs approaching 2014.

"We have a great base for the party to start from, and at events I go to around the state, the rooms are always full," he said. "Even though Barack Obama will not be on the ballot, the issues that were a part of 2012 will be."

Rep. Dave Loebsack, D-Iowa, said the general trend in American elections where the party of the president suffers a lower turnout was an issue he wanted Democrats to be particularly aware of — especially after the Republican wave of 2010.

"There aren't many things in political science that are science and that are laws, and that's one of them, folks," he said to the crowd. "That happens because there isn't as much enthusiasm when the president isn't on the ballot, and it doesn't have to be that way."

One political expert noted generally the party of the president does lose ground in midterm elections, but there are exceptions to the trend. However, how 2014 plays out will ultimately be up to the major issues both parties carry to the voters. Though right now, he believes Republicans are poised for a small victory.

"I think in 2014 you will see some movement toward the Republicans, although not very big, because of the big gains in 2010," said Tim Hagle, a University of Iowa associate professor of political science.

veals the confidence in downtown Iowa City.

"The window into the community is the downtown," she said. "When downtown looks good aesthetically, it's a great attractor for many different sectors of our economy. It's certainly not a place that looks the same from one place to the next."

Ford said all improvements must be completed by November.

Excluding work on the Grossix Building and Chait Galleries Downtown, more than $1.3 million has been awarded in façade, entryway, window, fire-safety, and upper-level renovations.

The city has eyed a number of second- and third-floor spaces for conversion into commercial space or workforce housing.

Nancy Bird, the director of the Iowa City Downtown District, believes along with building maintenance, the undertakings are meant to ensure that all buildings comply with modern safety codes.

"We're doing a lot of outreach and prospects with different properties down here that are available and making sure that we are connecting the dots," she said. "When you combine the improvements to the façades, parking meters, and the Ped Mall, we're going to really demonstrate to the community that we're keeping up with the times, and there is renewed interest in the area."

To downtown developer Marc Moen, the vitality of the city's core also results in positive gains for the University of Iowa.

"Downtown is a big deal for the university and is a big recruiting tool too," he said. "Iowa City is a unique place, and we're just so fortunate to have a successful downtown and a university that wraps itself around downtown."

Moen, whose company the Moen Group owns nine prominent buildings downtown, said the Building Change program is crucial because it encourages surrounding investment.

Tracy Hightshoe, the city's community development planner, echoed Moen's notion of a resulting "domino effect" and said although not a permanent venture, a two-to-three-year cycle will bring about much-needed historic preservation, all the while pushing development south of Burlington Street after the central business district is refreshed.

"A lot of these buildings are from the 1800s to 1900s and are in the need of significant rehab," she said. "... These business owners have been wanting to do this, although it doesn't always translate to their bottom line."

Chait Galleries Downtown owner Benjamin Chait said he is pleased with current progress from the newly formed initiative.

"It was a really short window of opportunity, and [businesses] acted fairly quickly," he said. "I think things are moving in a reasonable direction, and the kinds of things [the city] is doing, I think, will take time to play out."

Pancho's Mexican Grill is shown on Aug. 28, 2012. Pancho's is one of the downtown businesses that has been awarded funding from the city as part of a renovation project. (The Daily Iowan/Joshua Housing)

Sen. Paul understands GOP

Possible 2016 presidential hopeful Sen. Rand Paul, R-Ky., paid a visit to Iowa this past weekend, a mere two-and-a-half years before the next Iowa Republican caucuses.

Paul delivered the keynote address at the Iowa GOP's Lincoln Dinner in Cedar Rapids, which also featured prominent Rep. Steve King, R-Iowa, and Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa.

Paul is considered a leading early contender for the 2016 GOP nomination, and he's undoubtedly spending time in Iowa looking to build upon his father's base in the state. Former Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas, who sought the Republican nomination last year, performed well in the Iowa caucuses. He finished in third place with 21 percent of the vote and eventually carried a majority of the state's delegates to the nominating convention.

Although Rand Paul shares much of his father's libertarianism, he has adopted a softer, more mainstream ideology better suited for mass consumption than his father's. Rand Paul distances himself somewhat from his father's non-interventionist foreign policy and seeks only to audit, not abolish, the Federal Reserve.

That's not to say that Paul doesn't have his share of unpalatable positions. He opposes same-sex marriage, demagogues on the national debt, and advocates for dramatically scaling back the government by eliminating federal education funding and federal housing programs, among many others.

But Paul is a shrewd politician who recognizes the need for growth in the GOP. In his speech May 10, he stressed that Latino and African-American voters are crucial to the party's future. It's a view many politicians share, but Paul has become one of the Republican Party's leading political evangelists, placing himself at the forefront of the party's efforts to make inroads with new demographics.

For now, the road to a new GOP seems to run through Paul.

On May 10, before a crowd that included noted immigration critic King, Paul laid out a strong plan for immigration reform, indicating that he may be willing to sign on to bipartisan legislation in the Senate.

Paul's plan involves making the existing guest-worker program more attractive for employers and ensuring that the number of potential guest workers is not capped in order to make legal immigration easier and more accessible for low-skill workers.

Paul also suggested requiring annual security reports from the border for Congressional review. Implementation of immigration reforms would be contingent on the success of increased border-security operations.

We're skeptical about this aspect of Paul's plan. Reducing border crossings would require a massive deployment of resources to the Southwest. This has been done before, and it didn't work.

A 2010 study from the Brookings Institute found that since 2003, the undocumented immigrant population has risen along with increased funding for border security. Illegal immigration began to slow only after the onset of the Great Recession changed the economics of coming to the United States.

Given the history, fully establishing an improved guest-worker program would have a greater potential to reduce illegal border crossing than increased security. And it could be done without making the border even more dangerous than it is now.

In his speech, Paul framed his support for immigration reform largely as an effort to reach out to the Latino community. He stressed the importance of immigration and the need to maintain dignity and opportunity among the country's immigrant population.

He made another attempt at Republican outreach earlier this year when he spoke at the historically African-American Howard University in Washington, D.C. His pitch was based on the rather dishonest premise that Republicans were once the party of civil rights and the Democrats were once the party of Jim Crow. It's true but hardly relevant — the Republicans and Democrats essentially switched positions on civil rights during the 1960s.

Still, Paul deserves credit for trying. Rand Paul isn't a perfect ambassador for his party and his beliefs sure aren't perfect either. But he understands the current predicament of the GOP, and he's trying to solve it.

His efforts on immigration and outreach, at least, deserve some recognition. We await his return to Iowa.

With 2016 looming, it shouldn't be long.

Your turn.

Do you think that Rand Paul understands the problems in the GOP?

Support modern Bottle Bill

Believe it or not, as Iowans, we have the potential to take something that is both overwhelmingly successful and incredibly popular and make it even better than it already is. In the world of public policy, that may be rare, but this opportunity exists right now with the modernization of the Iowa Bottle Bill.

In 1978, Gov. Robert Ray and then-Rep. Terry Branstad championed the bipartisan landmark container deposit law—now known to us as the Iowa Bottle Bill. At that time, many saw the enormous potential this effort had for cleaning up our lakes and streams, keeping additional litter out of our landfills, and creating good jobs and economic opportunities for more hard-working Iowans.

That potential that existed in 1978 has more than exceeded our expectations today.

Looking back over the last 35 years, few can argue about the successes of the Iowa Bottle Bill. Our state became recognized as a worldwide leader in recycling, hundreds of good jobs created, and more than 90 percent of plastic and glass bottles and aluminum cans make it back to redemption centers. Countless civic and community organizations, schools, and churches have used this law to make a difference in the lives of those around us. As a result, we are keeping Iowa beautiful, preserving our bountiful natural resources, and guaranteeing generations of Iowans the ability to enjoy our beautiful parks and trails without the blight of unwanted litter.

With that impressive track record, it should come as no surprise that a recent February Iowa Poll shows that the law remains incredibly popular across all political spectrums and a strong supermajority — 64 percent — of Iowans not only support Iowa's existing bottle bill but also support modernizing this important legislation. Iowans know the program, and they like it.

However, there is more that can and must be done.

Our technology has vastly improved, our lifestyles have evolved, but there are many new beverage containers for water, juice, and sports drinks that did not exist when Iowa's Bottle Bill was initially adopted. That is why the Iowa Recycling Association is passionately calling on Republicans and Democrats in the Iowa Legislature to work together this session to pass, and for Branstad to sign, a better and more modern Iowa Bottle Bill without delay.

Modernizing Iowa's Bottle Bill will have a direct and positive effect on Iowa's economy not only by preserving hundreds of Iowa jobs but adding important new jobs to Iowa's economy. For instance, more than 500 million new containers that Iowans now use, which largely end up in landfills, would be covered by modernizing the Bottle Bill to include non-carbonated beverages such as water, juice, and sports drinks. According to a 2012 study by Iowa State University economist Dermot Hayes, these additional containers would create more than 300 new Iowa jobs and protect more than 870 jobs that already exist.

This is not a new issue, but it is an important one. We have a golden opportunity to take something popular that works well and make it even better. By acting on legislation this year to expand Iowa's container-deposit law, we can help create Iowa jobs, clean up our environment, and make our great state an even better place for generations to come. The time for action is now.

One feminist's manifesto

By SRI PONNADA

sriharshita-ponnada@uiowa.edu

An Economist and YouGov poll released early this month revealed that fewer than 30 percent of Americans consider themselves to be feminists.

That's not very surprising to me. I frequently hear people, including some of my own friends, say things like, "I'm not a feminist ... but I believe in equal rights for women."

Statements like that really bother me. What's so wrong with being a feminist?

"There's a lot of negative stigma that goes along with being a feminist," said UI senior Kat Lohse.

Do people even know what a feminist really is?

Lohse, like many people, said she used to believe the stereotype that feminists are "angry lesbians who hate men and don't shave their legs."

She said she came to learn that she was wrong.

Being a feminist simply means that you believe in equal rights and opportunities for women and men.

Shocking, I know. This may be disappointing, but not all feminists burn their bras.

I think bras are too expensive to burn, anyway.

Now that we know the truth about feminism, why aren't we all feminists? We should be.

Nearly 50 percent of women think that feminism isn't needed anymore, according to a poll conducted by CBS in 2009.

It's a thing of the past. We're living in a time where women can go to school; they can have a family and a job. Women can have it all — right?

Let's take a look at present situations in our society.

The gender wage-gap problem — an issue Americans have been battling since 1963, when President Kennedy signed the Equal Pay Act to end wage discrimination based on sex — is still very much alive and profoundly affects the lives of women, particularly those of color.

Violence against women is also a huge issue.

Nearly 1-in-5 women in America have reported being raped.

Just a couple weeks ago, many women of the UI community gathered around the Pentacrest to share their experiences with sexual violence at the annual march and rally, Take Back the Night.

We have to have intense legislation to try to prevent gender violence — legislation that Congress failed to renew two years in a row, and which our very own Sen. Chuck Grassley voted against.

The United States is also one of the seven countries that have yet to ratify the U.N.'s Convention to Eliminate All Forms of Discrimination Against Women. Of the 194 U.N. nations, 187 countries have ratified it. The United States, Iran, and five other countries have not.

I agree that women have made advancements in social, political, and economic realms, but the extent to which we think their conditions have improved is sadly just an illusion.

Take voting rights for instance.

Women gained the right to vote in 1920 and have been a part of Congress since 1917, but the U.S. still has yet to elect a female president. Forget the president — Iowa still hasn't sent a woman to Congress.

And what about reproductive rights?

We have national leaders opposing abortions even in the case of rape.

As former Missouri Rep. Todd Akin said, "If it's a legitimate rape, the female body has ways to try to shut that whole thing down."

Where is the utopia in which gender equality has been achieved?

Considering the status of women in America, it seems that it would do us much good to embrace the ideas of equality that feminism entails.

Remember, ladies and gentlemen, the feminist checklist doesn't include: having hairy legs and armpits, harboring a hatred of men and all things associated with them, and having intense feelings of anger.

To determine whether or not you're a feminist, take a look at the following statements.

You believe in equal rights and opportunities for men and women. You have taken a course in the Department of Gender, Women's and Sexuality Studies, and it caused you to question society. You wonder why men are paid more than women doing the same job, with the same qualifications. You are agitated by the way that the media often portray women. You don't see anything wrong with watching "chick flicks." You think the swimsuit section in the Miss America pageant is unnecessary or ridiculous.

If one or more of the statements apply to you, congratulations — you are, indeed, a feminist.

And for those of you who still fear to embrace the feminist label — remember, there is power in words. ■

Students and parents agree that without the program, the students would have had a more difficult time living in a college environment.

"It definitely provided a climate of support, when he succeeds and when he fails," said Mary Gunderson, the mother of a second-year student. "[REACH] gave him tools he needed to learn and to grow to become independent, have social skills, and academic skills."

Gunderson said the program not only helped her son but also their family.

"This last year was his best," she said. "He used to come home, and we would be in separate rooms, because he'd be angry and I would micromanage. Now, we'll be walking on the street, and he'll come right up and join the conversation. This is just another jump-start he needs."

Alex Roling, who will go into the third-year option, said the opportunities at the UI are ones he could not have gotten anywhere else.

"I feel so proud," Roling said. "It's been over two years, and it's been a climb of a journey. I'm going to miss Iowa so much. I've been living here and doing more and more independent things that I can take back to Minnesota."

Jane Palmer, also a second-year student, spoke at the convocation ceremony, noting that REACH has helped her not only with life and academic skills but also make lifelong friendships.

"I got here and saw how many people were on campus, and I just thought I wasn't going to make a single friend," Palmer said as her eyes welled with tears. "But I met two of my roommates on the first day, and we've been best friends ever since. I know I'll miss my friends, but now I have new friends from all over the world to talk to."

selections.

Co-owner of InBox, 114 S. Clinton St., Toomey said the new venture will sell sustainable brands previously unknown to Iowa City, including Tru Blooms Chicago, Free People Special Occasion, and Amadi, while delivering unparalleled customer service to young women.

"We're focusing on nationally made apparel and accessories while also pioneering a path for new and upcoming designers," she said. "We try to bring the most trends-worthy styles to the cities we're in."

Named in honor of her daughter Eleanor, Toomey said she has a deep passion for introducing new brands to customers that are unavailable online or at department stores. When looking into opening an additional Iowa City business, she said noticed a true lack of local, American-made brands and representation for her age demographic.

"When I opened InBox, I was a single 25-year-old lady," she said. "Now, I'm a married 29-year-old. My style and concept have evolved. I want something a little more sophisticated that my friends can shop at."

She described nori as more than just a clothing store, ranging in price from $80 to $300.

Toomey said the quick decision-making in opening the Iowa City location came out after creating strong business relations with building owner and developer Marc Moen, coupled with ideal timing and the opportunity to land a downtown address.

"I took the space because I love the energy that the downtown has," she said. "InBox is doing awesome, and [Iowa City] is a dream market... I have customers that have grown in the four years I've had InBox, and I want to be able to keep those same customers and keep the same style with different merchandise."

Moen said the introduction of nori and the limited availability of property further demonstrates the demand, interest, and excitement occurring downtown. He noted that talks with downtown merchants have told him that the introduction of a national retailer will help drive more shopper traffic.

"I think the addition of another retailer demonstrates the strength of the downtown market, especially for high-quality locally owned and operated stores," he wrote in an email. "... I also believe the consensus is that a predominance of locally owned stores is very important to the unique charm and appeal of downtown."

Over the past few months, a number of businesses have expanded or are set to expand their downtown footprint, including Running Wild, 121 E. Washington St., Velvet Coat, 118 E. College St., and Buzz Salon, 115 S. Dubuque St.

Sandra Navalesi, the owner of women's clothing boutique Dulcinea, 2 S. Dubuque St., said the women's clothing market has become "flooded" with options but declined to comment further on how the addition of a high-end clothing boutique would affect her business's bottom line.

UI freshman Maggie

Martin said after visiting such stores as White Rabbit, Ragstock, and Cheap & Chic, nori could prove to be worth a look.

"The higher-end stores usually have a great selection of jewelry that is in my price range," she said.

Martin said downtown has a good "mix" of retailers, although she said affordable women's clothing appears to still be lacking.

"I definitely think if they had a Forever 21 or H&M downtown, they would do really well," she said. "College students don't have a lot of money to spend while they're here, so having an affordable store would be beneficial."

During his sophomore year, his playing chances dropped — he appeared in 15 games. His average dropped to .228, but he still drove in 10 runs.

Niedbalski had only started in three games before last weekend's series against Michigan, but he has taken his various roles on the team in stride.

"I'm a junior so I've seen it all," he said. "I've played with older guys who have been in similar situations who have helped me through it."

From experienced freshman to brick-wall defender to clutch hitter, Niedbalski has fit into whatever role Iowa has needed. Late in the season, he's been the player Iowa has needed to win games.

"He's a grinder," said fellow infielder Jake Yacinich. "You can see it. He'll just grind out an at-bat and do whatever it takes to get it done. He's really important to the team."

Austin and fellow seniors Larney, Ethan Holmes, and Jordan Mullen also took first place in the 400-meter relay with a time of 40.21. Senior javelin thrower Matt Byers earned second place with a toss of 72.45 meters.

"It was a real thrill to go out there and win the individual titles and the relay," Austin said in a release.

"You always want to compete at the Big Ten meet, and I was disappointed last year, so it feels good to show up and meet the expectations."

Holmes also earned a first-place medal in the 400-meter hurdles. The Clinton, Iowa, native posted a time of 50.78 to earn the Hawkeyes its first victory in the event since 2010.

'As far as the 400 hurdles go, it was windy out here and I knew the conditions weren't great," he said in a release. "I knew I just had to get out as fast as I could. When I saw I was in first-place coming around that final turn, I just tried to stay as calm as I could. I could see the Michigan guy coming, and I just tried to stay as composed as possible."

But Holmes was not pleased with all of his performances. His 14.44 time in the 110-meter hurdles earned him seventh place in the event, slower than the 13.97 he posted in Des Moines. Mullen finished second in the event with a personal-best time of 13.76.

"The 110 hurdles didn't go as well as I wanted it to, but I couldn't be happier for Jordan," Holmes said in a release. "He is healthy, running great, and we are ready for regionals."

The women's team did not crown any individual champions and finished in last place. However, the team did earn two second-place finishes in Columbus.

Graduate student Marreike Schrulle finished second with a time of 16:12.66 in the 5,000 meters, and senior Majesty Tutson earned a runner-up finish in the discus with a throw of 170-8.

Freshman Lake Kwaza set a personal best with a time of 11.56 to finish fifth in the 100-meters. Sophomore Khanishah Williams jumped 5-6½ in the high jump to finish eighth. Williams finished third in the indoor Big Ten championships in February.

Despite the lack of championships for the women, head coach Layne Anderson was pleased to see the level of competition his team displayed at the meet.

"The kids competed hard; we have some things to be excited about," Anderson told The Daily Iowan. "We didn't have as many individual and relay champions, but when you have runner-up finishes; that bodes well for the team."

St. John's record was marred once again at the Big Ten wrestling championships in March when Nebraska's James Green got the better of St. John in the semifinals. The result pushed the Hawkeye to the backside, where he came up with a third-place finish.

The losses were a result of St. John's wrestling style — a very workmanlike manner that posted more decisions than bonus-point victories. He often kept matches closer than the fans would have liked, and it came back to haunt him as the season progressed.

But that didn't faze St. John. If anything, it helped him learn from those minor miscues. This was evident in his season's final two matches — the Parnell, Iowa, native squeaked out a 3-2-overtime victory over Oklahoma State's Alex Dieringer in the semifinals before winning the gold over Welch.

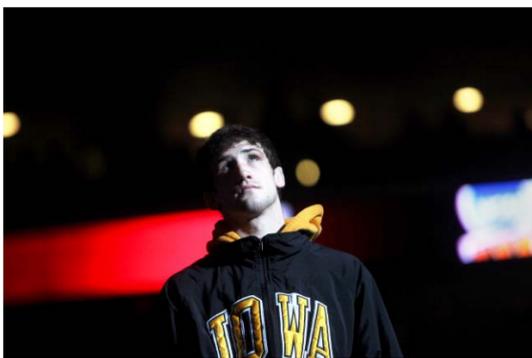

"I'm in the corner there, and the only thing that's going through my head is 'tough.'" Iowa wrestling coach Tom Brands said after watching St. John muscle through another tough victory on Dec. 6. "That guy is tough."

Tough might be an understatement. Before St. John reached the podium's highest platform, he had back-to-back disappointing finishes — by his standards, at least — and both came at the hands of two of the country's toughest wrestlers.

St. John's title run during his freshman campaign was cut short after Penn State's David Taylor topped him, 6-3, in the 157-pound quarterfinals. St. John came back to grab fourth.

In 2012, St. John's title hopes were dashed on the stage to Cornell's Kyle Dake in the same weight class by a 4-1 score. Both Dake and Taylor moved up to 165 pounds after defeating St. John in consecutive years.

But it all came together for St. John this past season. His calm demeanor, much like his grappling style, ultimately won out.

This kind of mindset has been picked up by some of his teammates, too.

"You can't get frustrated," 133-pounder Tony Ramos said on March 22 after reaching the NCAA finals. "If you do that, you're letting other things into your wrestling."

fly ball but was not able to keep control.

"We came not with a whole lot of energy right away," infielder Nick Day said. "Coach got on us a little bit about it. We did a better job there in the middle innings, but we came out flat [Sunday]."

Iowa had an opportunity to even the score in the eighth inning. A RBI single from designated hitter Keith Brand brought in Yacinich, making the score 4-2. Catcher Dan Sheppard then stranded two runners by a grounding out.

The Hawkeyes came up empty in the ninth inning, getting only a single from Eric Toole.

Brand put himself in the Iowa record books in the sixth inning, where he was beamed for the 21st time this season. That broke the previous record of 20 held by Kevin Hoef from the 2008 season.

The weekend brings Iowa's record to 19-27 overall and 7-14 in the Big Ten.

"[Sunday's] main focus was on the seniors," pitcher Sasha Kuebel said. "We're glad to have them, and we're proud of everything they've done for us. It was good to be out here with them. It feels great. Anytime you can win a series against a team like Michigan State, it feels good. It's even better that it was on our last weekend here with the seniors."

Rangers force Game 7

By IRA PODELL
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Henrik Lundqvist slammed his stick in disgust when an overtime loss in Washington put the New York Rangers on the brink of elimination.

Two days later, the star goalie pumped his arm and let out an emphatic yell when his shutout kept the Rangers alive and set up a Game 7 in the nation's capital.

Lundqvist was the difference Sunday in stopping 27 shots for his seventh NHL playoff shutout. The reigning Vezina Trophy winner was perfect in making Derick Brassard's second-period goal stand up in a 1-0 victory over the Capitals that forced a deciding game in the first-round Eastern Conference series.

"We needed it. There was desperation out there," Lundqvist said. "We showed a lot of character and worked really hard. It was that type of game where you pay the price — big saves, physical. Great win."

Despite having little room for error, the Rangers stayed composed and played a disciplined game in which they took no penalties until a big scrum after the final buzzer.

Now the Rangers hope that can carry over to Game 7 tonight in Washington, where they have lost three times in this tight series. The home team has won all six games.

"They play really well at home, and they're confident," Lundqvist said. "The games we've played in that building, special teams have played a big part. We played a really disciplined

New York Ranger right wing Ryan Callahan (24) and left wing Carl Hagelin (62) look for an opportunity as Washington Capital goalie Braden Holtby (70) defends the crease in the second period of Game 6 of their NHL Stanley Cup hockey playoff series in New York on Sunday. game, and that's going to be key for us because they have a really good power play, so you have to respect that.

"Play hard, but play smart."

The Rangers earned Game 7 wins at home in last year's playoffs over Ottawa and Washington. If they pull out this victory, it would give them just their second series win after falling behind 0-2.

"We are just going to have the same mentality we had coming into this game," Brassard said. "We just played our game, had fun. The guys were relaxed, and that's what we need to do (today)."

Special teams were a factor Sunday, but only in keeping the Capitals in it because of the Rangers' ineffective power play that went 0-for-5 and is 2-for-26 in the series. New York had a failed 5-on-3 advantage that lasted 44 seconds in the first period.

"Some were deserved. Some weren't deserved," Capital forward Troy Brouwer said about his team's penalties. "We killed our momentum."

Washington didn't get a chance to improve on its 3-for-14 output in the first five games. Two Rangers power plays in the third cut out precious time the Capitals could have had to net the tying goal.

"We battled the whole way," Capital goalie Braden Holtby said. "Disappointing, but we move along. Our [penalty-killing] is doing great, holding us in the series. Our guys kept their composure. We knew this could go seven."

Brassard handed Lundqvist the lead at 9:39 of the second period, with a goal that was originally credited to struggling forward Rick Nash.

Defenseman Mike Green left Washington short-handed when he took a retaliation cross-checking penalty on Derek Dorsett with 6:14 remaining.

"There are a lot of emotions. You can expect scrums and things like that," Dorsett said. "You've got to play your game. You can't just go out and think you're going to scrum it up and win the game."

Warriors, Curry battle back to even series

OAKLAND, Calif. — His spirits down, his left ankle limp, and his team's season hanging in the balance, Stephen Curry wondered whether he could recover for the biggest game of his career until a text message popped up on his phone around 2 a.m. May 11.

Curry called back his mother, Sonya, and vented his frustrations about his latest — and most inopportune — injury setback. Finally, she spoke up to calm his concerns.

"She just reminded me and battled-tested me to rely on my teammates for support," Curry said.

What followed was a Mother's Day masterpiece.

Curry scored 22 points to go with 6 rebounds and 4 assists on a bum ankle, rallying the Golden State Warriors past the San Antonio Spurs, 97-87, in overtime Sunday to even the Western Conference semifinal at two games apiece.

"It seems like every time you get on a roll and feel somewhat healthy, there's a setback," said Curry, who shot 7-of-15 from the floor, including 5-of-10 from 3-point range. "And it just tests you. It changes your routine. It changes your outlook on the game, your preparation. You've got to deal with the injury and the adjustments you're making as a team."

Game 5 will be Tuesday in San Antonio.

Curry and the Warriors overcame the obstacles with contributions from all over.

Rookie Harrison Barnes had a career-high 26 points and 10 rebounds, Jarrett Jack added 24 points in reserve, and Andrew Bogut grabbed 18 rebounds to help Golden State erase an 8-point deficit in the final five minutes of regulation. The Warriors scored the first 9 points of overtime to whip the yellow-shirt wearing crowd of 19,596 into a frenzy and give this topsy-turvy series yet another twist.

Even Warrior coach Mark Jackson doubted whether Curry could play, especially after his star point guard took an anti-inflammatory injection in the morning to ease the soreness in his sprained ankle and still had trouble getting loose. Jackson cornered Curry outside the chapel service at the arena to see how he felt.

"He said, 'I'm going to give you what I got, coach.' That's not the language he speaks. I knew right away that he was not 100 percent," said Jackson, who conferred with general manager Bob Myers in his office before letting Curry play. "Once again, it's that same spirit flowing through that locker room that refuses to quit."

Even for all of the theater Curry provided, the Spurs seized control of a sloppy slugfest at the start until going cold shooting when it mattered most.

Softball misses NCAA cut

After an up-and-down season and a 30-24 overall record, the Iowa softball team failed to make it to the NCAA championships in the selection show Sunday evening.

Iowa, which boasted a 19-9 record before commencing conference play, saw some national recognition in the beginning of its season. The Hawkeyes defeated then-No. 11 Louisiana-Lafayette on Feb. 9 and held its own in two bouts with then-No. 1 Alabama on Feb. 22 and 23. Iowa then defeated ranked squads Louisville and Kentucky in late March to stick one last feather in the metaphorical cap.

Then came the Big Ten season.

Iowa stumbled out of the gate to begin conference play, losing five of its first six contests. The team hit its low note of the season, losing six games in a row over the course of April 14-23. The Hawkeyes finished the season with 8-15 mark in conference, capped off by an early exit of the Big Ten Tournament — an 8-4 loss to Ohio State on May 9.

Iowa's pitching fell apart as starting ace Kayla Massey slumped to a 17-13 record and a 3.09 ERA, and the offense struggled all year long — to the point where All-Big Ten selection shortstop Megan Blank's blistering .437 batting average and 11 home runs couldn't salvage the season.

The Hawkeyes did have a slim chance to make it to the 64-team field, though. Iowa boasted the 33rd best RPI in the country, which takes into account schedule strength and wins against quality opponents. Iowa went 6-9 against ranked teams all year.

Iowa wins war, not battle

What began as a successful start to the weekend quickly turned sour. The Hawkeyes were unable to sweep Michigan State, falling short in the Sunday matchup, 4-2.

Iowa took the May 10 game by a 6-2 score, thanks to a big seventh inning from the Hawkeye bats. The Black and Gold squeaked out a 2-1 victory on May 11, securing its first series victory of the season.

The outcome of Sunday's game was caused by three Hawkeye errors, giving the Spartans 2 unearned runs. Iowa accumulated 7 hits and 2 runs against the Green and White's 6 hits and 4 runs.

"I was hoping that we'd find a way to sweep and get a win [Sunday] for the seniors' last day here," Iowa baseball coach Jack Dahm said. "I thought the pitchers did throw the ball very well, but we were just not able to get the bats going."

Michigan State jumped out to an early lead on the Hawkeyes, pushing 2 earned runs across the plate in the third inning. An error by leftfielder Dan Sheppard gave the Spartans another run in the frame.

The Black and Gold then responded by taking advantage of Spartan mistakes. A hit-by-pitch put leadoff hitter Nick Roscetti on base. A pickoff error by Michigan State's Nick VanVossen advanced Roscetti to third, then a fielder's choice sent him home. That run made the score 3-1, Spartans.

Starting pitcher Andrew Hanse took a hit to the elbow by a line drive off the bat of Kevin Goergen in the fourth inning. Hanse didn't return following the hit, allowing freshman pitcher Josh Martsching a chance on the mound.

Dahm said he was hoping to get five or six innings from Hanse, but Martsch-

Coming up clutch

Bryan Niedbalski became Iowa's go-to clutch hitter late in the season.

By TOMMY REINKING

thomas-reinking@uiowa.edu

The Iowa baseball team has been in need of clutch hits all season. The squad is second-to-last in the Big Ten in runs and has missed more opportunities than big hits.

Lately, however, the club received game-winning hits from an unexpected source: first baseman Bryan Niedbalski, who was hitting .083 only a week ago.

"He struggled a little bit there early on," Iowa baseball coach Jack Dahm said. "He kept working, staying positive, and staying active in the dugout. He's been outstanding in the last week and a half."

Before coming in as a defensive replacement against Michigan on May 4, Niedbalski had only 1 hit in 13 games. Since then, he has caught fire to the tune of a .333 average with 7 hits and 4 RBIs.

The first baseman did more than just connect for hits for the Hawkeyes, though. Niedbalski delivered game-winning at-bats that the squad has lacked this season.

With the bases loaded in the top of the 12th on that May 4 game against the Wolverines, Niedbalski hit a sacrifice fly that gave Iowa the lead and eventually the win. On May 11, he delivered an RBI single in the bottom of the eighth that gave the Hawks a 2-1 lead that was enough to down Michigan State.

"I'm not trying to do too much," Niedbalski said. "I think when I was pinch-hitting earlier this year, I was trying to do too much. I started relaxing and not thinking about the results."

One thing that hasn't been surprising about Niedbalski's play has been his flawless defense. The St. Louis native hasn't had an error since April 26, 2011. His streak of 60-straight games without an error is longest on the team.

In fact, being a strong defender was Niedbalski's role throughout the first three-quarters of Iowa's season. In five of the 13 games he played in, he entered as the first baseman and never had an at-bat.

"When the ball's hit at him, he's going to make the play," Dahm said. "He's very good with balls hit at him, and he's good at picking the ball in the dirt. The only thing we wish is that he had a little more range."

Changing roles has been nothing new for Niedbalski during his three years at Iowa. As a freshman, he started the

Hawks' 'quiet man' wins in the end

Derek St. John was the Iowa wrestling team's only NCAA champion this past season.

By CODY GOODWIN

It was the same for most of the season. No matter the outcome for his matches — win or lose, pin or decision — Derek St. John displayed the same expressionless face. It became a trademark, of sorts, as he was the guy who never really celebrated or panicked.

And then he won the 2013 national championship.

The normally quiet St. John was caught pumping his fists after his 3-2 victory over Northwestern's Jason Welch. He even displayed a grin, an unusual showing for the ordinarily inscrutable Iowa wrestler.

"It's unbelievable," St. John said after winning the 157-pound NCAA Championship on March 23. "It's awesome. It's what I've worked the last four years for, and I finally, finally got it."

capped a 31-2 junior season and was his third trip to the All-American podium in as many years. St. John had previously taken fourth and second in the same weight class.

But a glossy 94 winning percentage did not come without a few tests. St. John had a stranglehold on the 157-pounder's No. 1 ranking for most of the season but relinquished it after losing to Missouri's Kyle Bradley at the Cliff Keen National Duals in late February.

Tracksters snatch four titles

The men's track team compiled four first-place finishes and one second place, while the women's team earned two second-place finishes.

After failing to take home numerous titles in April's Drake Relays, the Iowa men's track and field team responded in the finals Sunday of the Big Ten championships in Columbus, Ohio, to the tune of four Big Ten titles. The Black and Gold finished fifth place overall with 85 points.

Senior sprinter Justin Austin earned three of the honors himself. He won the 100- and 200-meter dashes with times of 10.27 and 20.86. Senior Josh Larney finished second in the 100-meter dash with a personal-best time of 10.39. Austin also took first place in the 200-meter dash in 2011, and he is the first Iowa athlete to take first place in the event since star football player Tim Dwight in 1999.
