While University of Iowa officials say music- and art-focused enrollment initially decreased after the loss of several Arts Campus facilities in the flood of 2008, popularity of those programs is on the upswing.

Officials hope the start of a new wave of Arts Campus construction will attract more students than ever.

In celebrating the beginning of new facility construction for the UI School of Art and Art History, School of Music, and Hancher, the UI Foundation will hold "Arts & Minds: A Celebration of Partnership" at 3:30 p.m. today on the Pentacrest.

The ceremony is to feature remarks from government officials, university leaders, faculty, staff, and students, UI spokesman Tom Moore said in an email. He said the event will also thank state and federal leaders who have aided these projects.

Among the festivities include a preview performance by the Preservation Hall Jazz Band, which was the opening act for Hancher in 1972.

Partners include the UI College of Engineering, UI College of Education, the Interdisciplinary Flood Workshop, the Center for Global and

Pathways funding mullied

Citing rising budget constraints, the Johnson County Board of Supervisors may vote to eliminate subsidized funding for the adult health center.

By QUENTIN MISIAG
quentin-misiag@uiowa.edu

Although recent heightened focus regarding Johnson County governmental relations has been over the looming possibilities of cutting half-fare and Sunday service for the SEATS para-transit service, cuts to an additional entity could also be on the horizon.

In response to growing budget constraints, county leaders mullied subsidizing the future of the Pathways Adult Day Health Center during a Board of Supervisors meeting on Thursday. Some supervisors argued that subsidies for the center may not be available in fiscal 2014.

The nonprofit organization, whose mission is to aid in the aging of county residents, is also working to prepare the county for addressing the needs the agency will face.

"I fully expect things to be incredibly tight for the same time next year," Supervisor Rod Sullivan said.

SEATS Director Tom Brase said TMS Management Systems, the firm that manages a number of county entities, including Pathways, has had a contract with the county since Aug. 1, 2010. He said that the cost per trip for Pathways ridership under SEATS increased $1 from fiscal 2012, amounting to $1.40 per mile for each loading fee.

Champion won't run again

Local business owner Catherine Champion plans to run for the Iowa City City Council this fall.

By EMMA WILLIS

After serving for 16 years on the Iowa City City Council, Connie Champion says she will not run again in this year's election — but another Champion could be joining the council in her absence.

"We make decisions that affect a lot of people," said the outgoing councilor. "I think it's time for new blood."

Though new blood is not necessarily what Catherine Champion hopes Regional Environmental Research, and the Iowa Flood Center.

Sen. Bob Dvorsky, D-Coralville, said he is glad to see construction beginning on the new buildings.

"This is a pretty exciting time for the University of Iowa to move forward with getting some of these Art Campus buildings done," he said. "It's just another step in recovery from the flood, and it's a strong time for the university."

Rod Lehnertz, the UI Facilities Management director of planning design and construction, said in an email that the total estimated cost to the university following the 2008 natural disaster is expected to be between $700 million and $800 million.

School of Art and Art History

Following floodwater inundation on the Arts Campus, the UI School of Art and Art History relocated to a temporary space in an old Menards building, 1375 Highway 1 W., and renamed it the Studio Arts Building.

But soon enough, it will finally return to its original stomping grounds.

UI reports submitted to the state Board of Regents for its June 5 meeting indicate that construction on a replacement art facility is slated for completion in April 2016.

When open, both Art Building West — which reopened for classes in Spring 2012 as the only fully flood-recovered campus building — and the replacement art building will be located next door to each other, once again reuniting the program.

UI junior and graphic design major Chance Morgan said he is eager to see the completion of the new facility.

"Personally, I'm really excited about it because I've seen pictures of the projected building," he said. "The Arts Campus has its own area and personality. I really like the environment of it, and it really helps to know that I have one specific place where I can go to work on all my projects."

To date, the university has spent a little more than $8 million on the construction of the new art facility and demolition of the old building, the regents' report said.

Steven Holl Architects will design the new art building in collaboration with BNIM Architects, according to the art-school officials.

School of Music

While the 2008 flood shifted UI art operations into one primary location, the results for the UI School of Music have been quite different. Today, the school is housed in 19 different locations.

But, with preliminary work started on the new music-building site, university musicians will one day gather under one roof.

According to UI Facilities Management, the school will measure 90,000 square feet and among things will include a 700-seat performance hall and 200-seat recital hall on the building's second floor.

Seattle-based LMN Architects has been chosen to design the new state-of-the-art building.

Construction is scheduled for completion in May 2016, the regents' report said. Construction bids indicate that the project will cost roughly $98.24 million, Facilities Management said.

Hancher

Once known for its renowned musical and theatrical performances, Hancher now sits unused and forlorn. Today, it stands as only a reminder of what once was.

Prior to the summer of 2008, the building stood as an Arts Campus centerpiece along the Iowa River.

The new facility, expected to seat 1,800 with two balconies, will include a separate space for programming, UI Facilities Management said. The building will be designed in scale with the Levitt Center.

New Haven, Conn.-based Pelli Clarke Pelli, will design the new building, a Sept. 14, 2010, UI news release said.

The project is expected to total more than $175 million, the DI previously reported. Recent reports indicate that the facility will reopen in March 2016.

Looking to the Future

When construction is completed on the new arts buildings, university officials anticipate that the UI's arts program will have one of the most valuable arts campuses in the nation.

"We are anticipating that as we build the most modern, state-of-the-art fine arts facilities on a public university campus in the nation, if not the world, that the University of Iowa arts program will be back better and stronger than ever," Moore said in an email.

Moore said the new arts buildings will not only serve the university but the state as well.

"We are building a 21st-century arts campus that will define creativity in the university and serve our campus, community, and state for generations to come," he said.

In addition to receiving county subsidies, Pathways also receives funding through the East Central Iowa Council of Governments — a branch of the Iowa Department of Transportation. Currently, billing expenses to Pathways are made by Johnson County.

Comparing the current unknown Pathways funding situation with SEATS, Supervisor Chairwoman Janelle

Rettig said she was unsure whether adjusting ride fares is the right choice at this time.

The Iowa City Council voted to approve a resolution signing a contract agreement with Johnson County for para-transit services — one that would eliminate half-fare rides and Sunday service — in a June 4 meeting.

"Pathways is a social service, and I didn't know if we wanted to mess with fares, if it's going to be too complicated," Rettig said.

Her solution? Having the organization apply for community state block grant to help cover its operating expenses.

As discussions began wrapping up, one supervisor asked the board if it was being fair.

"I get concerned that we're not doing the same for elderly and disabled," Supervisor Pat Harney said. "We should try to be fair and equal to everybody."

The supervisors moved to continue discussions during a June 20 meeting, with a drafted letter expected to be sent out in the coming days.

"We don't anticipate doing this forever, but you need some time," Rettig said of the pending Pathways letter. "This is a one-year promise, and it's unlikely to happen again in a year."

As part of the Downtown District's Board of Directors and the owner of Catherine's Boutique, 7 S. Dubuque St., and Cheap & Chic, 105 S. Dubuque St., Catherine Champion said she believes she is ready to take on a new opportunity.

"I feel like I'm ready," she said. "I love being part of my community."

Hoping to better understand and serve the community, Catherine Champion looks to her mother as a role model in her endeavor to join the council.

"I totally respect her," Catherine Champion said. "She takes everything with humor and seriousness."

However, Councilor Jim Throgmorton sees the family tie as a potential obstacle.

"Voters probably will wonder whether it's good to pass a council seat to another person of the same family," he said.

With Kingsley Botchway now added to the election and more names likely to come, there is still a long way to go before a final decision is made.

Eager to dive in, Catherine Champion is now in the beginning stages of her campaign. With her team put together, she plans to launch a fundraising campaign in the next two weeks.

"There's going to be a big learning curve," she said.

The general election will take place in November, when seats for District B and two of the At-Large positions — currently held by Councilors Terry Dickens and Susan Mims — will be before the voters.

Connie Champion, who has lived in Iowa City for more than 40 years, has served on the council since 1998. Her fourth term, which started in 2010, will come to a close on Jan. 2, 2014.

She represents the city's District B.

Looking ahead to city initiatives, Connie Champion believes economic development is very important to the city's future growth. And even though she will not be directly involved in future decisions by the City Council for very much longer, she says she'll pay close attention. "I will miss it," she said. "It's been very rewarding."

City Councilor Rick Dobyns said he would be sad to see Champion leave the council.

"She has a great sense of the people who live in Iowa City," he said. "... How they think and how they feel."

Local man faces numerous charges

An Iowa City man was charged after allegedly breaking into an East Court Street apartment complex.

Charles Wilson Jr., 23, was charged June 7 with second-degree criminal mischief, second-degree burglary, and third-degree burglary.

According to Iowa City police complaints, Wilson entered the building at 1:35 a.m. and was recorded on surveillance video allegedly damaging mailboxes in the front lobby, opening numerous pieces of mail, and putting money from one envelope into his wallet. The damage to the mailboxes is estimated to be $6,000, according to the complaint.

Wilson also attempted to open numerous doors, entered one apartment, and stole money and a pair of pants, according to the complaint. The resident was sleeping in the apartment at the time. Wilson took car keys from the apartment, went to the parking garage, and allegedly took money from the resident's car, according to the complaint.

Wilson was identified by a police officer he had contact with around 2:57 a.m., according to the complaint, and he matched the description from the surveillance video and was wearing the same clothes.

Second-degree criminal mischief is a Class-D felony, second-degree burglary is a Class-C felony, and third-degree burglary is an aggravated misdemeanor.

Man charged with OWI, escaping

An Iowa City man was charged after allegedly speeding under the influence of alcohol with a revoked driver's license and escaping from police custody.

Pedro Gemartino, 21, was charged May 30 with OWI, driving while barred, and the escape of a felon. It was Gemartino's third OWI charge.

According to a Coralville police complaint, Gemartino had slurred speech and a strong odor of alcohol when he was pulled over for speeding at 2:06 a.m. A preliminary breath test showed his blood-alcohol content was .172, according to the complaint, and he refused the DataMaster breath test.

At 4:40 a.m., Gemartino fled the police when he was allowed to walk from the squad car to the receiving door of the jail, according to the complaint. He had slipped the handcuffs off of his right wrist, the complaint said, and was not located when police officials set up a perimeter and searched the area.

He had two prior OWI convictions, on June 22, 2011, and Feb. 2, 2012, according to the complaint.

Escaping from police custody is a felony; driving while barred is an aggravated misdemeanor.

According to Johnson County sheriff's records, Gemartino was booked Wednesday and is housed in the Johnson County Jail.

C'ville Strip recovers

By LARS HEADINGTON
william-headington@uiowa.edu

Just five years after floodwaters ravaged the business community along the Coralville Strip, commerce is bustling, and there's cautious confidence among many businesses that line the south banks of the Iowa River and Clear Creek that the city's mitigation efforts will protect them should floodwaters once again threaten them.

Debbie Bullion, who has been general manager of Heartland Inn, 87 Second St., for the past 14 years, remembers the devastation that the 2008 flood wrought.

"Driving down the Strip after the flood, it was just like a war zone ... there was not a light on," she said. "There was just nothing but mud and smell. It was desolate because no one was open."

Bullion said during the historic natural disaster, the hotel took on more than 3 feet of water but managed to reopen with 110 rooms on the building's second and third floors.

Twelve weeks and $1.5 million later, it became the first flood-damaged business along the Strip to fully reopen.

Rachel Schunk, the vice president of communications for the Iowa City Area Chamber of Commerce, said approximately 150 Coralville businesses were affected by 2008 floodwaters.

While many businesses were able to draw up on insurance and other resources to rebuild, she said, the Chamber of Commerce teamed with the cities of Coralville and Iowa City, the Community Foundation of Johnson County, and a number of private contributions to create the Small Business Recovery Fund. The fund offered grants of up to $5,000 to support cleanup and inspection expenses. In all, the fund provided $300,000 to 64 businesses in Coralville and Iowa City.

Now, five years later, a visitor new to the area might not imagine that it had sustained such damage so recently.

Josh Schamberger, the director of the Iowa City/Coralville Convention and Visitor's Bureau, said the area has experienced a "full recovery" and believes the town's flood-mitigation projects has created a very "sound plan" in place to protect the Strip from future floods.

"You can go up and down the Strip there, and businesses have returned," he said. "I think the community would have been very proud of the efforts taken over the last five years and just these past couple months, if the water had crashed over the spillway [this year]."

To date, Coralville City Administrator Kelly Hayworth said $64 million has been poured into mitigation efforts since 2008, and he noted that protecting local businesses has been a priority for the city.

Obama's moral decline

JEREMY ZIEMER
Ziemer22@gmail.com

In 2004, then-Sen. Barack Obama gave a celebrated speech to the Democratic National Convention.

Three years later, he announced his candidacy for president of the United States. Much was promised, including a stronger moral leadership from the community organizer, constitutional-law professor, and outspoken senator.

But we are now in the second term of Obama's presidency. There is no doubt whether Obama has an oratorical capability that could even persuade Cicero. But it is well beyond the time to take his words on faith. Now more than ever, we have to focus on his actions.

I was an active supporter of Barack Obama in 2007. I was there in Springfield when he announced his candidacy, and I was even a precinct captain and delegate to the state convention in Iowa. I was happy to see such a thoughtful individual rise to such great heights. It felt like my generation was doing something good.

But it is near impossible today — especially after the scandals of recent weeks — to see the moral change we were promised.

Leading up to the 2008 election, there was a collective nausea in the country thanks to the many ethical failings of President Bush and his administration. Sen. Obama tapped into that sentiment with his 2004 convention speech — “we don't like federal agents poking around our libraries” — and, at a later occasion, even promised to close Guantánamo Bay prison, a symbol of Bush-era excess. Obama has failed to deliver the moral leadership that he promised to effect.

Last week, it was revealed that the National Security Agency has been spying on American citizens to an unprecedented degree. You might say, of course the NSA is spying on us; all it has to do is take a look at Facebook or Google Plus.

But it turns out that its surveillance goes much deeper than that. The NSA can access citizens' information from the servers of big technology companies. It also can find out whom you are calling, and if it even suspects anything, it can go to the FISA court to gain explicit authority to listen in on the content of your calls. If you were wondering, the FISA court has rejected only 11 of more than 33,000 total applications.

Combine this with the multitude of scandals made public recently — especially the administration's intrusive probes of journalists involved in investigative journalism — and it is hard for this writer to stay on Obama's moral plausibility wagon.

Admittedly, Obama gave a rebuttal to his critics. He seemed to invite the debate and, in fact, I even felt a bit swayed by his heartfelt words and the plausible truths. But, it's hard not to believe that this is just the president claiming to invite debate to deflect criticism after a dirty truth has been revealed.

Unfortunately, it does not look like the surveillance issue will go away soon. Glenn Greenwald of The Guardian has lent a voice to this issue and shed light on the increasingly plausible argument that this type of government activity is not simply a Bush or Obama-only thing or simply bureaucratic inertia but rather a concerning trend emanating from the very logic of fighting a so-called “war on terror.”

It is worth considering whether our society needs the government so deeply involved in its people's lives and whether society would not be better off if our government used taxpayer money to foster projects to facilitate cultural and economic expansion, rather than closely monitor its people's personal lives.

Reform patent system

On Thursday, in a blow to many genetic drug monopolies, the Supreme Court unanimously ruled that sections of the human genome may not be patented.

The court's ruling — that patents on naturally occurring genetic material are invalid — seems obvious, but until Thursday, genetic medicine was dominated by gene patenting.

The case before the court — Association for Molecular Pathology v. Myriad Genetics — involved a Utah-based drug company, Myriad Genetics, that discovered and subsequently patented a number of gene sequences useful in predicting the development of certain types of breast and ovarian cancer.

The patents in question gave Myriad the exclusive rights to isolate, manipulate, and synthesize the genes in question. Because of this government-granted monopoly on a molecule that occurs naturally in the body, it was able to charge thousands of dollars for much-needed cancer tests.

The court's decision represents a major victory against anticompetitive behavior in the medical marketplace. The decision also frees up genetic research previously handcuffed by the threat of patent infringement.

Some opponents of the court's decision argue that disallowing gene patents will destroy profitable monopolies and thus disincentivize the research and development of new genetic medical treatments. But even with this ruling in place, drug companies will still be able to patent and profit from the methods by which they identify, isolate, and manipulate the genes in question.

Though the court's ruling puts to rest one major patent-law problem, there is still much to be done to repair the broken American patent system.

The deficiencies of American patent law are most visible in the tech sector, in which software giants and entrepreneurs alike are severely restricted by the constant threat of patent-infringement lawsuits.

Essentially, the current system is clogged with vague patents. According to the Electronic Frontiers Foundation, the U.S. Patent Office has issued patents on such basic online activities as the “sending and receiving of streaming audio and video over the Internet” and real-time multiplayer video games.

Virtually any new online product or service that could be conceived is likely to violate these overly broad patents. This wouldn't be a problem, if it weren't

Decision time

The Supreme Court will hand down rulings in a number of major cases later this month.

Fisher v. University of Texas — A challenge to the application of affirmative action in college admissions.

Shelby County, Alabama v. Holder — A challenge to the continued use of the 1965 Voting Rights Act in certain regions of the U.S.

Windsor v. U.S. — A case regarding the constitutionality of withholding federal marriage benefits from same-sex couples.

Source: Daily Iowan reports

Patent trolls — companies that buy up patents for the express purpose of suing companies and individuals for infringement — use these vague patents to extract millions of dollars from tech companies of all sizes.

In 2011, for example, Lodsys began pursuing action against many app developers, claiming that it held a patent on all in-app purchases and software updates.

The current system has created an environment in which online entrepreneurship is tempered by the constant threat of infringement litigation. The unfortunate state of the patent system has implications for inventors and entrepreneurs everywhere. In some cases, predatory patent litigation can sink small companies.

This is all to say nothing of the massive number of corporate resources being poured into patent-infringement fights among the world's leading tech companies, most notably Apple, Google, and Samsung, in a series of recent disputes over smart phone technologies.

The Supreme Court took action to curb anti-competitive behavior in the genetic medicine marketplace. The country should follow this restriction on gene patenting with an aggressive push for patent reform designed to unlock the potential of entrepreneurs currently discouraged by an unfair, often predatory system.

China says hello, in its own way

Jordyn Reiland
Jordyn-reiland@uiowa.edu

My plane hovered around the Beijing Capital International Airport before descending, and all I could see was a thick haze covering the sky. The woman next to me opened the screen to the window completely yet only a bit of light was let in. I was anxious to step off the plane, yet I listened intently to the instructions from the flight attendant as this could likely be the last time I heard English spoken for a little while.

As soon as I stepped off of the plane, anxiety set in. I was tired, hot, hungry, and ready to head to my dormitory for a good night's rest.

Little did I know listening intently to the flight attendant wasn't going to do me much good once it came to navigating the airport.

The director of human resources at China Daily told me a few days before I left that I was going to be picked up by one of her colleagues and they would have a picture of me to help with recognition. I was also directed by her to wait at Departure Gate 8 and without much hesitation, I assumed I would find it just as easily as I would in any airport in the United States.

That was a big mistake. Two hours filled with lots of pacing up and down the sterile-lit concourse and one $35 call on a payphone to my parents — the only way I could make communication to anyone at that point due to the lack of Internet and cell reception — finally paid off when I eventually made contact with the woman from HR. I was instructed to take a taxi to the China Daily campus.

I was a minority for the first time in my life, and it was completely terrifying.

The taxis flew by the pickup area as workers herded passengers into single-file lines. The taxi waiting area was located in the basement of the airport, and I patiently waited until one pulled up a few feet away from me.

The yellow and blue taxi looked pleasant enough, and the woman opened the trunk so I could set my luggage in the back.

One thing I learned while researching Beijing before my trip was that almost all of the Chinese taxi drivers spoke no English. This originally wasn't an issue in my mind since I didn't plan on taking one. After realizing that was going to be my only option, I handed the woman a piece of paper with the address to the building on it, and we went on our way.

There I was sitting in the uncomfortable, thin sheet covered backseat clutching one of my two suitcases, my eyes glued to the window looking for clues to my destination. The woman swerved in and out of traffic as she attempted to find a radio station suitable for the trip. Then she started to speak to me in Chinese, and after a few phrases I attempted to tell her I had no idea what she was saying. All she did was look back and sigh.

It was close to 7 p.m. Beijing time when I arrived at the gate of the China Daily building, and I nearly leapt out of my seat in relief. The guard at the front gate had a picture I sent to the newspaper for my ID card, yet he, too, did not speak English so we stared at each other for a while until a woman who worked in the foreign-affairs department of the paper noticed I was standing there. She let me borrow her phone, and a few minutes later I was escorted by the HR director to my room.

I was at the will of jet lag because I woke up much earlier than I needed to, but I was excited to see where I would be working and living for the next two months. A short walk through the courtyard was all it took to arrive to the office.

The newsroom was unlike any other I had seen. The lighting similar to a doctor's office, covered the ceiling with little to no colors on all of the walls. Rows of cubicles surround the room filled with the sound of typing and a few desk fans. There was no chatter as nearly all of the reporters rely on MSN Messenger to communicate with each other.

This wasn't The Daily Iowan newsroom.

It was the China Daily — a 32-year-old English daily newspaper with the widest print circulation of any English-language paper in the country. This is where I've been assigned to work in the supplements department for the next two months as a member of their staff.

And here I am more than 6,000 miles away from home sitting in my small cubicle typing away, waiting for a story to copy edit.

Each day my anxiety of being away from family, living on my own, and exploring an entirely different country tapers off a bit as I learn something new, and I take each day at a time.

RE: Artists getting benched

I'm responding to Mike Beall's opinion piece about the Iowa City Downtown District's and the UI Community Credit Union's BenchMarks 2.0 program. Beall is absolutely correct that last year's BenchMarks program was phenomenal, and we engaged hundreds of people across the region with direct artistry on every bench. Last year's program did have “original charm” — but if we did it the same way, it would lose the “original.” As the program ended last year, we gathered community art leaders for their feedback on the process and ideas for something new for the 2013 BenchMarks 2.0 program. This year's community art workshops have been really interesting, and Creative Lead John Engelbrecht has been super-accommodating of artists who want to get involved in the final curated work on the benches themselves; the process is just different. Because of the weather, the benches aren't quite finished but are prepped for something I hope the community finds not only artful and fascinating, but if nothing else, original. Give us another review after BenchMarks 2.0 rolls out by the end of the month. Art commentary is always welcome.

Why We Can't Have Nice Things:

- Because Nice Things Inc. has had to face the stark realities of the market and is closing its doors permanently.
- Because the baby would barf on them, or the dog would, or your cousin the drunk, etc. The inevitability of barf, basically.
- Because it would make it hard to tell the successful from the couch-bound.
- I can't see what's not "nice" about a futon made of pizza boxes, thank you very kindly.
- Because it's China's turn for a while. Why don't you go color a picture or something?
- Because of the datgum government, that's why.
- Because some douche-pocket on eBay outbid us at the last second.
- Because we'd only fetishize them and forget about what's really important in life: the latest season of "American Idol."
- Because Mom said so, dumb-butt.
- Because we'd hoard them in a vault and try to swim around in them, leading to all manner of wealth-related injuries.
- Because we'd just pawn them for beer and cigs.
- Because it was a hoax. As it turns out, the nice things we were promised are merely adequate things.
- Because we're poor, duh.
- Because our system of beliefs does not allow for the qualification of things as either "nice" or "less nice." (But really, because we're poor.)

by Eugenia Last

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): A trip or an adventure with friends or family will help you put your life back in perspective. Too much work and not enough play can result in your not giving your best. Look at the negatives in your life, and make adjustments.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get moving. Idle time will be your downfall. Take care of responsibilities at home in order to avoid criticism. Someone you deal with at work or school will capture your interest and your heart. Community events will lead to an interesting proposal.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make plans with friends. Digging into a project that helps others in your community will enhance your reputation but may also lead to being taken advantage of by a slick opportunist. Realize your potential and your value.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Take part in unusual events, or research information that will set you apart from any competition you face professionally. Making an abrupt move that will alter your status will not turn out as planned. Sit tight, and work on you, not others.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The more interest you show in what everyone else is doing, the better prepared you will be to take control and create solutions. Your leadership will improve your position, but it may hinder a relationship. You will face demands on your time.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Evaluate your situation. Before you make a move, present an understated assessment of what you plan to do. It's better to hold back some of your intentions until you are in a better position to avoid interference. Love and romance are highlighted.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Secretive action will give you an edge. Someone you deal with will not be straightforward. You must adjust your roster regarding who is valuable to you and who isn't. Problems at home are likely to overflow into your productivity at work.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Change things up a bit. Get out, and do something that will motivate you or spark your imagination to come up with new ways to use your talents. Diversification will be key to getting the most for the least.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Money matters will surface if you haven't been keeping tabs on your expenditures. Seeking adventure and keeping up with the people you want to play with will be costly if you aren't realistic. Size down, and budget wisely.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Put more time and effort into important partnerships. Don't let changes occur that will put you in a vulnerable position. Compromise coupled with a strategic plan will help you get past any pitfalls you face. Put love and romance first.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A move or associating with different people will change your life drastically. Make choices that will lead to a better future. Someone you love will offer support. A kind gesture must be countered with something you can offer in return.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Caution while traveling or dealing with authorities will be a must. Misunderstandings will lead to an argument or mishap that will be difficult to reverse. Stick close to home, and focus on keeping the peace and giving attention to the ones you love.

GRADES

"Balancing athletics with school is extremely tough," Tomlins said. "It's a battle between choosing to study for a test or going out for another practice session."

The Hawkeyes played nearly half of their tennis meets on the road during the 2013 spring season — they traveled to various destinations across the United States, including San Francisco and Columbus, Ohio. The most difficult aspect of playing on the road takes place off the court, when athletes try to keep up with their scholastic obligations.

"I would say that's when everyone's grades kind of take a hit," Tomlins said. "You miss class, and it's really hard to make it up."

White noted, "You always think you can study in the car, but it's so tough. But we're used to it; this is what we signed up for."

Each of the three is extremely proud of their accomplishments. The term "student-athlete" has been under question when considering the current landscape of college sports.

But the Iowa men's tennis players believe their academic success reflects the standards that the Hawkeye men's tennis program expects.

"One thing that the Iowa tennis team has really hung our hats on is a group of really good, high-quality kids who care as much about academics as they do athletics," Swank said. "The fact that we can be the face of that really means a lot."

And in athletics — where grades can often be overlooked for the amount of skill one athlete has — these Iowa men's tennis players are more than proud to show off their intellect.

"It shows that we're more than just tennis players," White said.

DISTERHOFT

time," Bluder said. "I think that the sky is the limit for her."

Bluder notes that sometimes, for freshman athletes, grades or homesickness can occasionally become a problem. But in Disterhoft's case, she doesn't see those becoming issues.

Disterhoft maintained a 4.0 grade-point average as a prep athlete and was a class valedictorian. She is currently taking two summer classes at the university, and she was a direct-admit to the Tippie College of Business.

"Obviously, I want to be the best basketball player I can be, but I want to be an even better person," Disterhoft said.

Current coaches and players have only been able to work with Disterhoft a few times since the start of summer workouts. But that limited time has proven to be helpful as the Iowa City native has adjusted rather well.

"She's doing awesome," sophomore Claire Till said. "She is out there competing in every single drill and playing with the same confidence she's always had."

Bluder's Bunch has had one hour-long team practice since the start of the week and several conditioning workouts littered throughout. But Disterhoft has also had many individual workouts this week, helping to improve her shooting and ball-handling skills.

"It's really just going through practice and seeing what she can show us and then going from there," Bluder said.

The Hawkeyes still have several months before their first game — and less than a week before the Game Time League begins — but Disterhoft is determined to make an impact, no matter how small it may be.

"Whether it's on the court or from the bench, I'm going to make an impact any way that I can," she said. "I'm going to give it my all every day."

PRIME TIME

playing time up front [for the guards] is going to be a real story line this year," Larson said.

The availability of guard Devyn Marble and forward Aaron White may also make headlines. The two will travel to Colorado Springs, Colo., for the 2013 USA Basketball Men's World University Games team training camp on June 24.

"I'm honored and excited to have this opportunity," Marble said in a June 3 release. "To be able to play alongside some of the country's best young players will be fun and challenging. Having Aaron [White] there, too, will be a great experience."

Forward Melsahn Basabe will also not participate in the summer league — the senior will spend the summer in his hometown of Glen Cove, N.Y.

Larson said both White and Marble will likely be chosen in the later rounds of the draft, primarily because their availability for the summer league remains unknown.

"I think each coach will have to think for himself, 'Is this one of the best 12 or 15 undergrad players in America?'" Larson said. "If you're the coach drafting in Prime Time, and you think they won't make it and pick them, and then they do make it, they're gone. The team would really struggle."

Fans will know after Sunday night's draft how much of a chance the league's coaches will take on White and Marble.

"Every coach will have to make up his own mind," Larson said. "Especially because Aaron White and Devyn Marble have been good enough at times to be picked [for the USA team]."

The Prime Time League offers Iowa basketball fans a break from the summer drought of Hawkeye sports and gives the players a chance to gain chemistry with their teammates and take their game beyond the summer workouts.

The league will also be a chance for some younger Hawkeyes to show off their talents on the hardwood — and for some, this has been a long time coming.

"Is [Peter Jok] as great of a shooter as they say?" Larson said. "Is he the player who was picked as the No. 1 best player in ninth grade, or is he the player who has been injured and wasn't quite at that level?"

Larson also showed interest in seeing redshirt sophomore Jarrod Uthoff — who will play in his first actual basketball game in two years come November — as well as true freshman Jok hit the community-center gym.

"I think the Prime Time League is a great opportunity to get out and play games over the summer," Uthoff said Wednesday.

SPORTS

Women's hoops adds recruit

The Iowa women's basketball team has added a fourth member to its 2014 recruiting class.

Chase Coley, a 6-3 guard from Minneapolis, committed to play basketball for the Iowa women's hoops program on Thursday. Coley joins Christina Buttenham (Hamilton, Ont.), Whitney Jennings (Logansport, Ind.), and Carly Mohns (Broadhead, Wis.) as part of head coach Lisa Bluder's Class of 2014.

Coley hails from Minneapolis Washburn, where she averaged 20 points, 17.3 rebounds, 5.2 assists, 4.9 steals, and 8.8 blocks per game. Her high-school team, coached by father Tylor Coley, went 23-9 last season.

Network features
'Iowa Day'

The Big Ten Network has dedicated a day's worth of coverage to Hawkeye athletics today as a part of its "School Days" series.

The appropriately titled "Iowa Day" features Hawkeye-only programming and includes six episodes of the Big Ten's Greatest Games, according to a release from the Big Ten Network. The schedule includes the Black and Gold's dramatic victory in the 2005 Capital One Bowl, when a 56-yard touchdown pass as time expired topped LSU.

The schedule also includes Iowa's 71-69 victory over Michigan State in the 2005 Big Ten Basketball Tournament. The Iowa Big Ten Network Live episode is also slated to air, showcasing various philanthropic initiatives.

Today is just the first date of two "Iowa Days" on the BTN. The other date for Iowa-only programming is July 8.

Hitting aces in classroom

Hawkeye tennis players Chase Collins, Joey White, and Michael Swank talk and joke on their porch Thursday. The three roommates all made the Academic All-Big Ten list. (The Daily Iowan/Mariah Green)

Iowa's men's tennis team excelled in the classroom during the spring semester — five players were Academic All-Big Ten honorees.

dominick-white@uiowa.edu

Hawkeye men's tennis players Garret Dunn, Andres Estenssoro, Michael Swank, Chase Tomlins, and Joey White were five of Iowa's 57 student athletes to receive Academic All-Big Ten recognition for the 2013 spring semester. Dunn, who served as Iowa's captain this past season as a senior, was selected as a third team Academic All-American after posting a 3.99 grade-point average.

Athletes need to be letter winners in their respective sports during at least their second year attending their current school while obtaining a 3.0 GPA or higher in order to receive this accolade.

Academic All-Big Ten honorees Swank, Tomlins, and White have been living together since their sophomore years. White is majoring in biology, and Swank and Tomlins are studying finance at the UI Tippie College of Business.

Swank and Tomlins have taken similar classes and often aid each other in homework and studying.

"This was the most classes we've had together during this past semester," Swank said. "We get to help each other out when projects and stuff like that come around. Anything I don't get, I can run to Chase and ask him for help."

"He usually doesn't ask me for help," Swank noted and laughed.

The three Hawkeye roommates have stood out in the classroom.

White achieved a 3.2 GPA in a tough biology field, and Swank and Tomlins impressively accumulated 3.4 GPAs during the spring semester.

Balancing school and athletics is difficult for any student-athlete, especially in season. Long days, filled schedules, and demanding practices are some of the challenges presented to student-athletes daily.

Hawkeye dream arrives

After one week, incoming freshman Ally Disterhoft is adjusting into her role with the Iowa women's basketball team.

Ally Disterhoft has a poster that shows her staring up at the 2004-05 Iowa women's basketball team.

On that poster, left of the 9-year-old Disterhoft, running vertical are the block words "Dream Big" in all capital letters. This is no coincidence: She has dreamed for a while of playing for head coach Lisa Bluder's squad one day.

And on Tuesday, that dream became a reality when Disterhoft started her first official practice with her new basketball team.

"I grew up in town and came to all of the games, so I've known I wanted to play here for a long time," she said. "This really is a dream come true for me."

Disterhoft hails from Iowa City West High, where she led her team to three state tournament appearances and the state title in 2012. She averaged 26.3 points and 7.7 rebounds per game her senior season, when she was named Miss Iowa Basketball and earned the Iowa Gatorade Player of the Year honor.

"I was never the fastest or the strongest player growing up," she said. "These awards are just a combination of my hard work. It's nice to see results in the end."

Disterhoft led the Women of Troy to a state championship when she was a junior. Shortly after, Hawkeye head coach Bluder called, and offered her a spot on the team.

"She had been on our radar list of players for a long

Summer hoops returns

The Prime Time League will be business as usual in the North Liberty Community Center again this summer, only without Devyn Marble, Aaron White, and Melsahn Basabe.

While the seats of Carver-Hawkeye Arena remain empty and the lights dim, Iowa City's newfound hunger for its basketball team will be fed when the annual Prime Time Basketball League kicks off play on June 20 in the North Liberty Community Center. On June 16, league founder and Commissioner Randy Larson, along with five other coaches from the Iowa City area, will sit down to draft players for their summer-league teams. Team rosters will feature players from Iowa basketball's past and present, as well as high-school and college players from around the state. "The progression of our big guys [in the past], and the competition for
