UI recreational facilities continue to provide options for students.

Even though a plethora of students flock to their hometowns at the beginning of summer vacation, UI recreational facilities remain in business.

From the Campus Recreation & Wellness Center's 2010 opening at a cost of $70 million to the continued use of the 1927-era Field House, UI officials say facilities continue to satisfy the needs of both students and community members.

Users seem to agree. "We've seen heavy use of the building; more use than expected," said Rod Lehnertz, the director of planning, design, and construction for UI Facilities Management. "... Attendance has maintained its pace."

He said prior to 2009, the university's predominant recreation facility was the Field House and the purpose in the creation of the Rec Center was to provide people with services that were lacking at other facilities.

"Having a new facility designed to address all the current and developing interests of students made it an immediate hit," he said. "Seeing other people participate in those activities encourages people to try

UI seeks some answers

UI aims to improve communication with new survey.

By JULIA SHRIVER
shrivertjulia@gmail.com

While one University of Iowa communication and marketing official maintains that the institution remains in contact with the students through a variety of media sources, the most effective way at communicating with them has yet to be determined.

The department is currently conducting a survey of UI students and staff members to gather information about how they prefer to get information from the university as well as what they would like to be informed about.

The department sent out a mass email to all UI students enrolled in the 2012 to 2013 academic year last week, and officials have received approximately 600 responses. The survey is being conducted using Qualtrics, a UI-supported private research software company, so the project is of no monetary cost.

"I think it's essential that units across the university be able to communicate with students ... I think we do a pretty good job of communicating with students before they get here during the recruitment process, [and] I think we do a pretty good job communicating with alumni," said Lin Larson, University Communication and Marketing's director of creative services. "We're looking at what we might be able to do better to connect with students while they are on campus."

The short survey takes roughly five minutes to complete and asks participants to provide basic demographic information before answering a series of questions including how often they use social media and what are the best media to contact them through. Participants are also asked to rank UI news services such as the After Class and Iowa Now news websites and other news services not provided through the university, such as the Iowa City Press-Citizen.

Ruling's effect unclear

The ultimate effect of Monday's supreme court decision won't be clear until lower courts weigh in.

By ROBERT CROZIER

Although the U.S. Supreme Court chose on Monday not to strike down the University of Texas-Austin's affirmative-action program, it did emphasize in a 7-1 decision that universities have a heavy burden in using ethnicity as a factor in admissions.

Several officials at the University of Iowa say the effects of Monday's decision are not yet known.

Todd Pettys, an associate dean and professor at the UI College of Law, described the ruling as fairly anticlimactic.

Project seeks downtown improvement

With the launch of a new campaign, Iowa City community members will have a direct role in downtown improvements.

By EMMA WILLIS

Despite its continued popularity, city officials and local residents say downtown Iowa City needs to be refreshed.

An upcoming yearlong initiative will launch today, bringing with it a series of community think-tank workshops.

Inspire Downtown, a joint venture among the city, the Downtown District, and various community outlets, will seek to develop a blueprint of the future look of downtown spaces.

Kids Count

30% OF IOWA CHILDREN HAVE ONLY ONE PARENT IN THEIR HOUSEHOLD

4,730 MORE HIGH-SCHOOL STUDENTS GRADUATED ON TIME IN 2009-10 THAN IN 2005-06

43,000 MORE CHILDREN ATTENDED PRESCHOOL IN 2009-11 THAN IN 2005-07

Kids Count: State pushes forward slightly in report

Parents, take note. Iowa is now the seventh-best state in which to raise a child, according to new data from the Annie E. Casey Foundation's annual Kids Count report. The standing, a one-place jump from 2012, is just one of the handful of criteria considered every year by the Baltimore-based private charitable organization, founded in 1948. According to the reports' 2013 Data Book, the state fared better in education over previous information in 2005-06, 2005-07 and 2009-10. For example, an additional 4,730 high-school students graduated on time in 2009-10 than in 2005-06 and approximately 43,000 more children attended preschool from 2005-07 and the 2009-11 levels. But in regards to economic measurements, Iowa saw declines in well-being standards. The state dropped from third in economic well-being rates in 2012 to fifth this year, as childhood poverty and an insecure job market weighed in.

MidAmerican seeks rate hike

By ALISON CRISSMAN
alison-crissman@uiowa.edu

Proposed electricity rate increases by MidAmerican Energy Co. may lead many Iowans to tighten their belts in the coming months.

MidAmerican has proposed an increase in its Iowa electric base rates that would total approximately $135.6 million over a three-year period, according to documents on the Iowa Utilities Board website. The hikes are contingent on approval by the board.

This equates to three $45.2 million increases, with one taking effect on Aug. 15, the next on Jan. 1, 2015, and the third on Jan. 1, 2016, according to the board's website.

Across the state, Mid-American provides electricity to 513,000 residential customers, 50,400 commercial customers, and 1,800 industrial customers, said Abby Bottenfield, a MidAmerican spokeswoman.

For the average residential customer, electricity bills would rise by approximately $2.73 (3.6 percent) in the first rate increase, approximately $2.75 (3.5 percent) during the second, and about $2.68 (3.3 percent) in the final increase for a total increase of about $8.16 after three years.

For one Iowa City business owner, the proposed rate increase would bring an unwanted rise in monthly bills.

Craig Carney, the owner of Racquet Master, 620 S. Dubuque St., said the proposed rate increases would affect his business, especially in the summer.

"I'm lucky that I have such a small shop so that my bills aren't that high, but a 9 to 10 percent increase over the years is quite a bit," he said. "It's going to affect me because air conditioning costs more in the summer than heating in the winter." Bottenfield said the proposal is the result of unchanged rates for the past 18 years.

"Current electric rates are based on 1995 business-related expenses, so the company looked at its 2012 business-related expenses when determining the final amount [of rate increases]," she said.

MidAmerican has invested more than $5 billion in infrastructure improvements since 1995 to more efficiently generate and deliver electricity to customers, she said.

In addition to these improvements, she noted that the rising costs of daily operations, maintenance, labor, and evolving environmental regulations have contributed to the proposed rate increases.

Bottenfield said the drought of 2012 and the recent flooding in the area did not play a role in the proposed increases, but previous severe weather events were factored into the $5 billion figure. To inform residents of the proposal, MidAmerican has held a series of meetings across the state. The first was held in Iowa City on June 13 and the next will be held in Sioux City tonight.

"All comments become part of a permanent record, and [the utilities board] takes this into consideration when considering approval," she said.

Around Iowa City, reactions to the proposal seem to be mixed.

Iowa City resident Tyler Stutzman said he understood reasoning behind the proposed increase, citing the nearly 20-year period over the last set increases.

The rate increases would not necessarily force him to change his budget, he said, but it would likely make him more energy conscious.

Woman charged with using a juvenile to commit crimes

An Iowa City resident has been charged after using juveniles to commit certain offenses.

Saira Jacobs, 26, was charged on June 13 with contributing to the delinquency of a minor and using juveniles to commit offenses.

According to an Iowa City police complaint, Jacobs and a minor allegedly found or stole a wallet containing a credit card. The subjects then reportedly went to the Den, Cheap and Chic, and Modern Nail and put minutes on a phone using the credit card. The total costs of these products and services charged to the credit card amounted to more than $200, the complaint said. The juvenile allegedly forged the credit card at two locations. Forgery is a Class-D felony. Jacobs allegedly forged a credit-card receipt in at least one location, the complaint said.

Contributing to the delinquency of a minor and using juveniles to commit offenses is a Class-C felony.

Sales tax to fall

In less than one week, Iowa City's sales-tax rate will drop for the first time in nearly four years.

After an increase was approved by voters in May 2009 to help flood protection and recovery efforts, the 1-cent local-option sales tax will drop 1 cent, meaning the sales tax will fall from 7 percent to 6 percent on July 1. In a Monday news release, the city reminded businesses not to collect the tax after June 31.

To date, the tax has helped raise more than $34 million in flood-mitigation projects as well as providing subsidy funding for two large-scale public infrastructure projects: the $33 million "Gateway Project" on Dubuque Street and the relocation of the North Wastewater Treatment operations, 1000 S. Clinton St., to the South Wastewater Treatment Plant, 4366 Napoleon St. S.E.

The completion of both projects will result in the elevation of flood-prone sections of Dubuque Street, the reconstruction of Park Road Bridge, and new city parkland.

new things.”

The inspiration to try something new is not limited to the Rec Center, it has influenced those using the Field House as well.

Lehnertz said the opening of the Rec Center has pushed up the overall recreational use across campus, notably in aquatics. He said campus recreational facilities positively affect each other in many ways, from providing convenient locations for citizens both east and west of the Iowa River to offering different facilities.

One example, he said, is eminent in the shared facility use between the Field House and Rec Center.

“We actually see more use of the Field House pool since the construction of the [Rec Center],” he said. “It wouldn’t work if we didn’t have some of the other facilities around.”

As the Rec Center continues to thrive, UI officials and partnering developers are currently thinking ahead to what they say is a probable expansion in the future as the closure of one facility becomes a reality.

“We feel fairly confident that in the long run we will expand to the south,” Lehnertz said, pointing to the area serving as university landscaping services and engineering and modeling facilities. “The use of the land southward would come into play as we would look at terminating the use of the Field House. But there are currently no plans to do that.”

The UI has no official or immediate Rec Center expansion plans on the table, Lehnertz said.

But despite peak attendance levels during the academic session, Kerry DuBay, associate director of UI Recreational Services, said the transition period between the academic year and the summer-school session typically sees a significant decline in overall recreational campus attendance.

“I can say that historically, our summer-use numbers decrease between 25 to 30 percent compared with our use during the school year,” she wrote in an email.

One UI employee and frequent gym-goer said after seeing an initial slowdown at the beginning of the summer, a noticeable return has been maintained at one fitness facility in particular.

“... Now, it’s pretty close to what it was during the school year,” Andrew Rinner said about Rec Center attendance.

Even though a return of fitness use has resulted, Lehnertz said numbers are well off their school-year highs.

“There are roughly 10,000 students during the summer and 30,000 during the school year,” Lehnertz said. “There’s certainly less traffic.”

The campaign includes a Mindmixer, an online community engagement website on which community members can express their ideas and opinions pertaining to the progress they wish to see downtown, as well as a series of three public input meetings.

The website lets community members log on and share their ideas by uploading pictures and giving feedback on upcoming proposals.

The first meeting will be held at 5:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Iowa City Public Library, 123 S. Linn St.

With the primary steps of the project in the beginning stages, several closed meetings will take place during the next two days to gather input from businesses, city of-officials, and others. The master plan will focus on “public-space components necessary for a successful, contemporary streetscape,” according to a city press release.

Since the last major design update for downtown and the Pedestrian Mall took place in the late 1990s, Assistant to the City Manager Geoff Fruin said there is much needed maintenance to be had.

“This is a project where public involvement is absolutely critical,” he said. “We want to know what they like about the current downtown and what they’d like to change.”

To help with the project, the city has hired Des Moines-based Genus Landscape Architects and the Denver-based studioINSITE planning firms as consultants. Genus has gathered data from recent weeks of research to help provide concept suggestions, which will be presented in upcoming meetings.

Components of the streetscape plan include updated public seating and lighting, future accommodations for automobile, bus, bicycle, and pedestrian uses, expanded trees and planting options, and signage and special-events improvements.

The money for the project will come from a $285,500 general-obligation bond and will pay for consulting costs and design selection.

Fruin said this online extension of the campaign allows officials to reach more members of the extended Iowa City audience, including University of Iowa alumni as well as students who are away over the summer months. He said he ready for a range of perspectives in the upcoming months to come forward.

“There are a lot of strong feelings about downtown Iowa City,” he said. “We want to hear what those are, good or bad.”

As the process continues throughout 2013, the plan is for Genus to take the suggested concepts and create three different designs, which will then be presented at a public meeting. From there, community members will be able to give their input, with a final decision set to be reached in November, and the goal of project completion ending in early 2014.

Nancy Bird, the executive director of the Downtown District, sees the community input aspect as a great opportunity for the district, and she said her hope is for the public to go away with a better understanding of the initiatives in place.

Although Bill Nussler, the president-elect of the Downtown District, agreed, he said he ex-

“This is a town where everybody has an opinion,” he said, “No two opinions are the same.”

City Councilor Susan Mims said the unfortunate side of the downtown master plan was in the hiring of outside consultants.

Tom Fabiano, a 1988 graduate of the University of Iowa, said he sees Iowa City’s downtown as an already great place for business and infrastructure but liked the idea of additional festivals.

But for two UI students, still more remains desired.

“We definitely don’t need more bars,” UI senior and management major Ashley Kostos said. “I’d like to see more stores, like Forever 21, or even a grocery store like Hy-Vee.”

UI sophomore and business major Lindsey Lovik said she’d like to see one current relationship grow further.

“Iowa City needs to work more with the university to create an atmosphere that’s not based around drinking,” she said.

Additionally, the survey asks students to provide feedback on what university events and services they would like to be informed about, including student-oriented events, academic programs, campus resources, and basic news.

“We want to know what channels connect with students, but we also want to know what kinds of things students want to know about,” Larson said.

Once the project has been completed, which Larson said should be by the end of the summer, the department plans to deliver recommendations about how to improve communication throughout the university.

“We will deliver some recommendations to the VP of Student Life, the VP for Strategic Communication, and the Associate for Undergraduate Communication,” Larson said.

Whether the recommendations will result in any specific projects is uncertain at this point.

“Right now, it’s very much a research project,” Larson said.

So what do UI students think about how the university communicates with its students?

For current student Lauren Sesemann, it gets an “OK” rating.

“Emergency communication isn’t great, but day-to-day communication works just fine,” she said.

UI student Tyler Cooper agrees that the UI’s departments communicate fairly well with students. Both Sesemann and Cooper also said they get the majority of their information about what is occurring at the university through their UI email accounts.

court’s prior rulings, today’s decision might not change anything,” he said.

UI spokesman Tom Moore said university officials would have to fully review the ruling to determine if it affects admissions policies.

Undergraduate admissions at Iowa’s three public universities are based on the Regent Admission Index.

Some UI policies do favor minorities.

“The Iowa Edge program is one of those programs that especially targets first-generation students — many of whom come from underrepresented groups,” UI President Sally Mason said in a 2012 interview with the DI. She said university officials do their best to use a holistic process to admit students.

Mason also confirmed that the Advantage Iowa program, which gives scholarships to minority students, is an example of affirmative action in the same interview.

“Everything we do is affirmative action,” Georgina Dodge, the UI chief diversity officer, told the DI in 2012. “Anything we do to help anyone could be affirmative action.”

One political expert at the UI also said Iowans must wait to see how this ruling may affect them.

“What this means right now is that the lower courts are going to take another look at this, and we kind of have to wait and see what they do,” said Tim Hagle, a UI associate professor of political science.

Jessica King, a UI senior studying music and English, said her opinion on affirmative action is nuanced because it is such a tricky issue.

“To give someone an advantage based on their race, whether it be black, Hispanic, Asian, or even white ... it shouldn’t be a factor,” she said, however stating she believes those policies are necessary today.

Citing the possibility of reverse discrimination, UI senior Reed Palmer said the time has come to start dialing affirmative-action policies back, even though they were needed in the past.

“I think we can see that in the Supreme Court’s decision [Monday],” he said. “They’re taking away some of the leeway that was granted to universities earlier.”

Palmer, who is studying political science for pre-law, said he believes discrimination is a big problem at some universities but not at the UI.

“We need to keep an eye on the policies and habits of those universi-

Cracking down on Iowa City art

Mike Beall
Michael-beall@uiowa.edu

As part of a new summer initiative, the Iowa City police are cracking down on graffiti. They hope that their new plans, which involve putting to work kids from the juvenile-court system and a city youth program, will help to erase graffiti more quickly than in the past.

But should the city crack down on graffiti?

Some people see graffiti as a public nuisance or find the stuff visually unappealing. But whether they conform to personal or institutional tastes, graffiti are art forms that have gained much prestige in the art community in the last few decades. Graffiti artists such as Jean-Michel Basquiat and Banksy have had a huge impact on art in our time, and many other successful artists have started out in graffiti.

Aside from the standing illegality of vandalism, one strong reason graffiti are looked down upon as art is because of the perception they are connected with other criminal activity. But this is a false accusation. While graffiti and more dangerous crime can be correlated, one does not cause the other. Criminals do not see graffiti and then believe that they have a green light to commit crime.

With respect to the plans in place in Iowa City, I find it disturbing that these youths are being corralled into anti-graffiti brigades to scrub away what is essentially art, especially as art education becomes increasingly marginalized by today's society. Art can be an important way to express one's self, especially for those in the juvenile-court system who may feel alienated by the system they are in, and the adults in charge of them, and the work they are being made to do.

To counteract these problems, the city and business owners should invest in a creative outlet for these kids and any other aspiring local graffiti artists. They should encourage more public art by creating public-art walls and getting artists to paint pieces or large murals on the side of their businesses.

Public-art walls would be controversial, and there is some question about whether such a program could succeed. But the main reason it has failed in other cities was because the cities do not invest enough in the project and only make a few small legal walls. Iowa City would have to invest heavily in creating legal walls throughout the city.

There are already several murals in downtown. More business owners reaching out to local artists to create murals on their businesses would create a more vibrant, colorful atmosphere that would add to the local art scene and the culture of our city. Not only would it be visually more appealing than blank walls, but businesses would have a say in what would be allowed to be painted on their buildings.

Investing in public art could be very helpful to the youths being used in graffiti removal. The removal of graffiti is teaching could them responsibility and work ethic, but being involved in the creation of art could do a great deal more.

Good news for economy

As the national economy moves in fits and starts, Iowa continues to enjoy an economic recovery that has outpaced that of the much of the country.

On June 20, an Iowa Workforce Development report pegged statewide unemployment at 4.6 percent, down from 5.3 percent a year ago. The national unemployment rate, according to the Bureau of Labor and Statistics is 3 points higher, at 7.6 percent.

Alternative measurements of unemployment that factor in workers who have stopped searching for jobs and underemployed part-time workers are also well below the national average in Iowa.

Another report from the Annie E. Casey Foundation ranked Iowa fifth in the nation in terms of economic well-being. The report, which focused on the well-being of children nationwide, took into account many economic factors, including unemployment rates, poverty rates, and the relative cost of living.

On top of all the positive trends in the economic data, Iowa has also recently announced a number of major economic-development projects, including a $1.9 billion MidAmerican Energy project to increase the state's wind-energy capacity. Last week, the Iowa Economic Development Authority announced that Microsoft will invest nearly $700 million in its West Des Moines data center.

These economic developments are certainly something to be happy about. But what is perhaps most notable about Iowa's economy is what it lacks.

In a country in which income inequality has expanded rapidly for more than three decades, Iowa has relatively little inequality.

According to a November 2012 analysis from the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, Iowa has the lowest ratio between low-income earners and high-income earners of any state in the country. On average, the top fifth of Iowa earners make about 5.6 times more than the bottom fifth. In Illinois, the top 20 percent make about 8.3 times more than the bottom 20.

Iowa's economic success should dispel the too-popular notion that rapidly growing income inequality is a natural, even necessary out-

Iowa economy on track

While the national recovery lags, economic indicators point to a relatively healthy state economy.

- Iowa unemployment rate: 4.6 percent
- Federal unemployment rate: 7.6 percent
- Iowa poverty rate: 12.8 percent
- Federal poverty rate: 15 percent

Source: U.S. Census Bureau/Bureau of Labor Statistics

growth of a healthy capitalist system. In fact, given the research into the corrosive effects of income inequality, Iowa may be evidence that relatively low inequality can help preserve the health of a local economy.

But all this is not to say that Iowa's economy is raising all boats. Iowa's poverty rates have remained stagnant during the recent recovery.

While the state's poverty rate — 12.8 percent in 2011, the most recent year for which data are available — is still below the national average, it hasn't been falling along with unemployment. Since 2007, Iowa's poverty rate has climbed from 11 percent to 12.8 percent.

This seems to indicate that though our state is recovering more robustly and more equally than most others, we are not all benefitting from our state's economic good fortune.

Just as Iowa quiets the notion that income inequality is a necessary consequence of growth, so, too, must we dispose of the idea that poverty is an inexorable side effect of our economic system. In reality, poverty is an economic drain, and it should be treated as such.

In the next act of our state's recovery, we should set our sights on fighting poverty. By working to lift more Iowans above the poverty line, we can continue to succeed economically while making sure that our recovery raises the prospects of all Iowans.

What's up with our friendly GOP?

By BEAU ELLIOT
beauelliott@gmail.com

So what's up with Republicans? I wonder as a thunderstorm rages through — well, over, technically — Iowa City and the sky turns that black-green color that never means anything good.

(I remember that sky color well from April 2006, which I understand sounds very much like the Paleozoic to many of you. We had a tornado on April 13 of that year, which turned some of our fair city into something less fair.)

But what is up with Republicans? Or down with Republicans. It's always hard to get your directions straight when it comes to the GOP.

Well, for many of us, it's hard to get directions straight even when Republicans are nowhere in sight.

I speak, of course, of the fiasco otherwise known as the farm bill. (Yes, I know — "farm bill." Roll over and hit the snooze button. Which I would do, except that I don't happen to own a snooze button, which makes it difficult to hit it. Hitting is probably overrated, anyway. I look at the Red Sox lineup recently, and hitting definitely seems to be overrated.)

But the farm bill. It contained many things, including a provision to allow tightrope walkers to wander over the Grand Canyon. (OK, that's not exactly true. It just seems as if it should be true, because it's actually impossible to read all the items in the farm bill without wanting to hit the snooze button.)

What happened with the farm bill is the House Speaker John Boehner, the top Republican in the House, promised he would get it passed. By hook or by crook or by Sandy Hook, or some such something.

But a measure in the bill cutting the food-stamps program (which, in the mysterious ways of Washington, has a much fancier title — the Nutrition Assistance something something something — but let's face it, it's the farm bill) enraged Democrats, so they, for the most part, voted against the bill.

What killed the bill were the 25 percent of House Republicans, mostly associated with tea-party leanings, who voted against it, despite the best efforts of Boehner and Majority Leader Eric Cantor, R-Va. The vote was 234-195.

Cantor immediately blamed the Democrats for the defeat, to the surprise of no one but the chipmunks on the Capitol grounds. But you don't have to be a mathematics professor to do the arithmetic. (You don't even have to be a math graduate student.)

If the House GOP leadership guys can't hold their own party together, that means the House can't get anything done. Unless, of course, said GOP leadership can garner some Democrat votes — which it can't do if it includes such items as drastically cutting funding for food stamps. (Did I mention that the sky is a sickening green-black color and the rain is pouring down sideways? Fitting.)

That food-stamps cut was a sop to the conservative Republicans, who voted against the bill anyway.

Meanwhile, Gallup reports that the public-approval rating for Congress has fallen to 10 percent. Well, pinch me sideways; I'm extraordinarily shocked.

Well, not as shocked as learning the Patriots' Aaron Hernandez is a person of interest in a homicide investigation, and Celtics' coach Doc Rivers is heading to Glitter Town, and the Red Sox are trying to kick away first place.

(Actually, that last doesn't shock me at all; the Red Sox continually try to kick away first place, and they so often succeed. It's kind of like having tornadoes in Iowa.)

So, what's up with Republicans? Or down. Or sideways.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR/ ONLINE

RE: Steering committee narrows down School District facility options

My comment from above: "I can't wait to see what the total bill is," he said of the current proposals. "That's money out of the general fund and when we do that, that's [cutting] teachers. Is this worth teachers?"

Was in regards to the bill from BLDL since this has extended past the initial thoughts of the end of April. And I am a current candidate for the School Board as well as having ran in the last election.

Late warning not a warning

On Monday afternoon a line of severe storms swept through Iowa City. I'm very concerned about the amount of time it took the Hawk Alert to be distributed to the university community.

The Storm Prediction Center reports that the average lead time of a tornado warning is 14 minutes.

This represents the time difference between tornado-warning issuance to the moment a violently rotating column of air makes contact with the ground from a cumuliform cloud. If all the events from Monday are confirmed, we are looking at an National Weather Service lead time of 15 minutes. Unfortunately, the Hawk Alert was sent 18 minutes after the first warning went live and three minutes after the tornado developed. The University of Iowa community expects nearly instantaneous Hawk Alert messages for exactly this type of situation. Every lead time second counts in a tornado warning. If the Hawk Alert for a tornado warning isn't sent out promptly, then it does no good for warning the community to take action to protect life and property.

Clemmons was a 3-star recruit out of Lansing, Mich.

"It's a great matchup," redshirt sophomore Jarrod Uthoff said. "It makes them much better and our team much better."

The drive between the teammates in the Sunday Prime Time League matchup was clear with every possession. Clemmons was there to snatch the loose ball after Gesell missed a pair of free throws. Gesell drove right past Clemmons and through the lane for a lay-up seconds after Clemmons missed a jumper.

Gesell carried the ball at half court and looked to penetrate the lane for a buzzer-beating lay-up to gain some momentum back for his team with 15 seconds remaining in the first half. But Clemmons was there any time Gesell saw an opening, matching every pivot and dribble.

"My job with [Mike] is to stick to him all the time," Clemmons said. "He's very hard to guard, because he has so much energy. He's on the go-out all the time — you never know what you're going to get out of him." For Gesell, guarding Clemmons is all about getting after his teammate and playing close defense. Clemmons said defense on Gesell involves forcing him to finish his drives over his defenders.

"[I] try to make him uncomfortable," Gesell said about Clemmons. "Just like any other guard in the Big Ten, you just have to work your butt off and try to outwork him." The duo even shared the starting lineup at an early point last season, with Clemmons starting 13 games at the 1 spot and Gesell moving to the 2. Prime Time Commissioner Randy Larson believes that head coach Fran McCaffery should feel comfortable about his guards heading into the 2013-14 season, with the capability of Devyn Marble moving to the 3 spot. "I'm just excited to see what kind of players those guys are going to be," said Larson, who coaches Clemmons in the Prime Time League. "It's rare, I think, to have two point guards like that who both want to play defense and are both very confident offensive players who are also team-first guys. It's a great luxury, and I give credit to Fran for that."

sion II District B finals appearance while averaging 22 points, 5.1 rebounds, and 3.1 assists per game. She was named a National Junior College Athletics Association first team All-American in the process.

Thomas transferred to Iowa to play basketball for head coach Lisa Bluder and the Hawkeyes after that successful season.

But as a Hawkeye, Thomas had to adjust to a new role. She had limited playing time and a smaller role than what she was used to, seeing the floor for just over six minutes per contest.

Thomas saw that things weren't going to change as the season progressed. At the conclusion of her sophomore year, she asked for and was granted her release.

"It's just really a basketball decision that I had to make for my future," said Thomas. "Staying here limited me in some aspects."

Iowa women's basketball assistant coach Jan Jensen said the coaching staff met with Thomas for a meeting in which they spoke with her about the pros and cons of the situation.

"You try to arm them with as much information as you can before they make a decision like that," Jensen said. "We had a good meeting, and at the end of the day she was looking to try to be closer to home and in a situation where she could maybe play more. We wish her well."

Thomas is unsure of what school she will transfer to, but said she is looking for a place where she will play right away and feel like family. She added that at this point, her options are open given the recent nature of her release.

Thomas will find herself in a situation that has become familiar next season. She will suit up for a new team in a different city for the third year in a row. Until then, she hopes to take advantage of her final opportunity to compete with and against her teammates during the Game Time League in North Liberty.

Prior to the start of the summer league, Thomas asked her teammates if they would feel weird playing alongside her in light of her situation.

"All of them said no, and they accept me as their sister, and I still accept them," she said. "My plan is to spend as much time with them as possible before I leave."

Blackhawks' rally seizes Cup

The Chicago Blackhawks celebrate their 3-2 win over the Boston Bruins in Game 6 of the Stanley Cup Finals on Monday in Boston. (Associated Press/Charles Krupa)

By JIMMY GOLEN
Associated Press

BOSTON— Bryan Bickell and Dave Boland scored 17 seconds apart in the final 1:16 of the third period, and the Chicago Blackhawks won the Stanley Cup for the second time in four seasons with a stunning comeback, 3-2 victory over the Boston Bruins on Monday night.

Patrick Kane of the Blackhawks won the Conn Smythe Trophy as playoff MVP.

Jonathan Toews scored his third goal of the playoffs to tie it for the at 4:24 of the second of Game 6 — exactly two minutes after teammate Andrew Shaw was penalized for roughing.

Boston, needing a win to extend the series to a deciding Game 7, came out aggressively and led 1-0 after one period on Chris Kelly's second goal of the playoffs. The Bruins outshot the Blackhawks 12-6 in the first period, but the margin dropped to 18-15 through 40 minutes.

Each team got one of its best players back when Toews and Boston alternate captain Patrice Bergeron returned to the lineup after leaving the Blackhawks' 3-1 win with injuries on June 22.

Toews scored when he got past Boston defenseman Zdeno Chara along the boards in the neutral zone. Chicago's captain skated up the right side and fired a hard shot from the right faceoff dot that beat goalie Tuukka Rask between his pads.

It was Toews' second goal in three games. Of Chicago's last 10 goals, Chara was on the ice for nine.

Boston right wing Jaromir Jagr was shaken up in the first period. He returned for the second but left the bench, and Tyler Seguin replaced him on the second line with left wing Brad Marchand and center Bergeron.

The play that led to Kelly's goal began after a faceoff that rookie defenseman Torey Krug rushed in to tip toward a teammate. The puck went to Daniel Paille, standing about 40 feet on the left. He passed to Seguin, who caught the puck with his right glove in the slot and dropped it.

Seguin then passed to Kelly, who scored his second goal of the playoffs 7:19 into the game.

It came just seven seconds after a whistle stopped a scrum in front of the net that followed an extended period of pressure by the Bruins.

Just two minutes after the goal, Chicago had one of its best chances of the period when Michal Frolik skated in with the puck behind the defense and fired a 15-foot drive from the left, but Rask made the save.

Boston had another solid chance at 12:24 when Milan Lucic took a 15-foot shot from the slot that Corey Crawford stopped.

After having no power plays in Game 5, the Bruins had four failed advantages in the first two periods.

With 4:01 left in the first, Shaw was struck in the face by a puck when it deflected off the shaft of his stick after Boston's Shawn Thornton shot it. He lay on the ice before getting up and skating off slowly.

Toews was on Chicago's first shift of the game. Bergeron had left Game 5 with an undisclosed injury after playing just 49 seconds in the second period.

Five of the last nine Cup finals have gone seven games, including in 2011, when the Bruins overcame a 3-2 series deficit and won their first championship since 1972 by winning Game 6 in Boston and Game 7 in Vancouver.

In 2010, Chicago won its first NHL title since 1961 on Patrick Kane's overtime goal in Game 6 against the Philadelphia Flyers. As they did this year, the Blackhawks won Game 5 to take a 3-2 series lead.

This year's finals have been extremely tight, with three of the first five games going to overtime. Chicago won the opener in three overtimes, then Boston won 2-1 in one extra period and 2-0. The Blackhawks regained home-ice advantage with a 6-5 overtime win in a wild Game 4 in Boston before returning home for Saturday night's win.

Teams that have won Game 5 after splitting the first four have won the Cup 15 of 22 times since the best-of-seven format began in 1939. But the loser of Game 5 the past six times has won four championships, including the Bruins against the Canucks.

Last season, the Los Angeles Kings beat the New Jersey Devils in six games. This season, the Blackhawks beat the Kings in five games to reach the Cup finals, clinching the series on Kane's goal in overtime.

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work on what you can fix, not the impossible. Listen to others' complaints and sympathize. Coming up with workable solutions will put you in a good position. Change may be opposed, but it is probably necessary. Secure your position.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Express your feelings, and detail future plans. Take in a seminar, or pick up information, that will help you reach your goal successfully. Short trips will enable you to get a view of the existing possibilities. Love is on the rise.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You have more control than you realize. Step up, and put your plans in motion. Don't limit the outcome because someone is putting unnecessary demands on you. Make the changes that will ensure your success. You can improve your financial future.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get a grip on what's important to you and what isn't. Taking on too much will be your downfall. Focus on your partnerships or family members who may need your help. Giving back will ensure that you will have no regrets.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Look, see, and do. Being decisive and recognizing what you are capable of doing will help you make a difference. Refuse to let fear or someone less generous stand in your way. A contribution you make will bring high returns.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A financial setback is likely because of a joint venture gone sour. Think before you get involved with anyone who shows signs of uncertainty or unpredictability. Help a cause you believe in rather than someone trying to take advantage of your kindness.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may confuse some people and upset others, but it will be necessary if you want to reach your goal. Now is not the time to show uncertainty. Take control, and do whatever it takes to change whatever is standing in your way.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Put your own spin on whatever you pursue. Be creative, and let your imagination lead the way. Love and romance will inspire you to take on new responsibilities. A change in your financial situation and contractual obligations looks positive.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Concentrate on your personal papers and finances. Making changes at home or buying or selling something that will help you balance your budget should be considered. You need to be realistic about what you have and what you can do.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Focus on partnerships. Whether it is a business or personal deal you are working on, you must not jump to conclusions or make snap decisions that can interfere with important relationships. Put love first, and plan a romantic evening.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A challenge will boost your morale and get you pumped up for the future. Don't sit back or get down because someone is being negative. Concentrate on yourself and being your very best. A change of attitude will enhance your reputation.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your concern should be with your accomplishments, not someone else's. A trip or special plans that encourage someone you care about to meet you halfway will lead to success.

EX-HAWK IN WOMEN'S OPEN

Former Iowa women's golfer Chelsea Harris will take her talent to the 2013 U.S. Open Championship this week in Southampton, N.Y., at the Sebonack Golf Club. Harris, the first Hawkeye to compete in the event, will open play in the 68th running of the tournament in the first group at 5:45 a.m. (CDT) Thursday. She'll tee off with Ayako Uehara and Jamie Hullett. The trio will play together again on Friday, when they'll tee off at 11:30 a.m. on hole No. 10.

The lowest 60 scores, with ties, will advance to play through the weekend. The tournament will begin with a field of 156 players. Harris advanced through the Wheaton, Ill., qualifier, in a one-hole playoff on May 14 to earn a spot in the Open. She finished with a 36-hole total of 145 — good for 1-over par — at the Cantigny Golf Club to finish tied for second place, where she went on to defeat Mexico's Ana Menendez in the first playoff hole.

Harris was a member of the Iowa women's golf team from 2008-12 and competed in 40 tournaments in her career. As a senior, the Normal, Ill., native played in 11 events, posting a team-best 76.28 scoring average — good for the ninth-best scoring average in school history.

The first and second round of the U.S. Women's Open will be broadcast on ESPN2, with coverage running from 2 p.m. through 6 p.m. The third and final round will be broadcast on NBC, running from 2 p.m. through 5 p.m. All times are central. — by Cody Goodwin

Guards pump up defense

Sophomore guards Anthony Clemmons and Mike Gesell make each other better by defending each other on the court.

By MATT CABEL
matthew-cabel@uiowa.edu

Anthony Clemmons and Mike Gesell know each other — and their basketball skill-sets — well.

That's how it's been, and that's how it will continue to be for Iowa's top two point guards. The elevation of their games has come, in large part, because they "battle each other every day" on the practice court — at least in Gesell's words. Clemmons concurred, saying the two push and help each other, whether in practice drills or scrimmages.

"To push me to get better is to try to guard [Gesell] all the time," Clemmons said. "Every single play, never taking a play off."

Off the court, Clemmons and Gesell are roommates, along with center and fellow sophomore Adam Woodbury. Gesell said that the three have their "fair share of fun" and are "always giving each other a hard time."

While primarily basketball players, the two also dabbled in filmmaking on the popular social-media craze Vine. One video, in which Clemmons cleans his face with a "Michael Jackson face wash" and transforms into Gesell, has garnered more than 1,000 likes on the app.

"[Mike and I] got famous from that," Clemmons said. "Hey, we're funny. We're two funny Hawkeyes."

But on the court, it's all business. It seems that fate would pit the two against each other. They arrived in Iowa City as members of the same recruiting class, both vying for playing time at the same spot — Gesell was a highly recruited South Sioux City, Neb., native, and After one season with the Hawkeyes, Kathy Thomas was granted release from program, and she is free to transfer.

If Kathy Thomas plays college basketball next year, it will be for a team other than the Hawkeyes.

After just one season at Iowa, the Flint, Mich., native has been granted her release from the Iowa women's basketball program, leaving her free to transfer to another school.

"I really would like to thank the coaches for the opportunity and hope they can see that I just made a basketball decision," said Thomas. "Looking forward from here I would still like to communicate and call these guys my family."

Most fans who followed the past Iowa women's basketball season would recognize Thomas as a role player coming off the bench for the Hawkeyes. Few would know that just a year earlier, she was thriving on a team in the midst of its most successful season.

Thomas attended Highland Community College in Kansas following a high-school career that included two Michigan state championships. She led the Highland Scotties to a 28-4 record in her freshman season — which was, at the time, the most successful season in the history of the program.

"She was a great worker for us and a good scorer," said Highland Coach B.J. Smith. "She was really good at getting to the basket, a really crafty scorer."

Big Ten, Pac-12 to be featured in Bay Area bowl

The Big Ten and Pac-12 will face each other in the Bay Area's annual postseason bowl game starting in 2014, according to a release from the Kraft Fight Hunger Bowl.

The Kraft Fight Hunger Bowl announced a six-year agreement on Monday that will establish a new partnership with the Big Ten and improve the bowl's selection rights in the Pac-12. The agreement runs from 2014 through 2019.

The bowl will be played in the new Levi's Stadium in Santa Clara — the future home of the San Francisco 49ers and site of the Super Bowl in 2016. The facility seats 68,500.

"Our objective entering negotiations for the next bowl cycle was to elevate the game," Bowl Executive Director Gary Cavalli said in the release. "Specifically, we wanted to move up in the Pac-12 and secure the highest quality opponent possible. We're thrilled that we've been able to achieve both goals."

"With a Pac-12 versus Big Ten matchup and a new world-class stadium, we've positioned our game very well for the future."

Terms of the new agreement with the Pac-12 give the bowl the No. 4 pick, within established parameters by the conference — which comes after the Rose Bowl/playoff group, Alamo, and Holiday Bowls — a jump from its current No. 6 pick.

The bowl will work with the Big Ten to arrange the best possible matchup for the Pac-12 and ensure that at least five different Big Ten teams visit the Bay Area during the six-year term.

"The opportunity for the Big Ten conference to play an annual bowl game in a world-class city like San Francisco, in a state-of-the-art, new NFL stadium, and in an area rich in football tradition appealed to our Directors of Athletics and head coaches," Big Ten Commissioner Jim Delany said in the release.

Though the game venue will move to Santa Clara next year, the team headquarters, hotels, and most bowl-week activities will remain in San Francisco.

"We are delighted to continue the Pac-12's relationship with the Kraft Fight Hunger Bowl and thrilled to build on our postseason partnership with the Big Ten conference in the Bay Area," said Pac-12 Commissioner Larry Scott. "Having the opportunity to showcase the two conference with a quality matchup in the San Francisco 49ers' new state-of-the-art stadium is a win-win for our teams and fans."

The Big Ten is unbeaten in the Kraft Hunger Bowl — Illinois defeated UCLA, 20-14, in December 2011.
