21 REARING ITS HEAD AGAIN

A petition to overturn the 3-year-old 21-ordinance is headed to the City Council.

By QUENTIN MISIAG
quentin-misiag@uiowa.edu

The Iowa City bar scene is set for a shakeup.

For the third time since 2007, the bar-entry age issue could yet again go to the polls.

The Iowa City City Clerk's Office confirmed Thursday morning that a petition submitted several weeks ago by the operators of two downtown bars has garnered 2,604 valid signatures, all calling for the repeal of the city's 21-ordinance.

George Wittgraf, the owner of the Union Bar, and Josh Erceg, a manager at Martinis, led the petition initiative.

A total of 2,500 registered Iowa City voters were needed to initiate action by the City Council. In all, 5,716 signatures were submitted.

So what does this mean now for the law that bans those younger than 21 from being in most, but not all, establishments with liquor licenses after 10 p.m.?

The City Council must now do one of two things. The proposal will either be approved by councilors or the issue will be left to the discretion of local voters.

And with a council that largely favors the 21-ordinance, the former doesn't seem likely.

"I think it's highly unlikely the council would repeal the ordinance in light of the petition, and that means that we will likely see a ballot issue in the fall," Mayor Matt Hayek said.

Hayek and several city councilors say Iowa City has become not only a safer community, but downtown business-diversification efforts safety have improved.

The 21-ordinance can be largely attributed to that, they contend.

"I think downtown is the strongest it's been in decades," Hayek said. "... The business landscape is more balanced, the neighborhoods did not implode as was predicted, and our entertainment district is arguably more vibrant than it was before. It had a calming effect."

Hayek said the success of the ordinance is far-reaching, from the sidewalk cafés and new retail stores to added office and residential units.

Since going into effect in 2010, a number of additional ordinances, including those that prohibit a new liquor establishment opening within 500 feet of an existing one and entertainment-venue measures, have made it so a repeal wouldn't signal an influx of more bars.

City Councilor Connie Champion said, although she could only speak for herself, doesn't think fellow councilors would vote to return to a 19 environment, because the area has become safer without the 5,000 to 6,000 weekend visitors who came each weekend knowing they could get away with drinking underage.

"The bar owners choose not to obey the law, and I blame them," she said. "I don't want to go through it again, but I will."

University of Iowa Student Government President and longtime Iowa City resident Katharine Valde said she thought it was "pretty likely" that the

After continued discussions, Johnson County officials have reached a decision clarifying a policy regarding public restrooms.

During a Thursday morning meeting at the Johnson County Administration Building, 913 S. Dubuque St., the Board of Supervisors approved a resolution on transgender use of public restrooms in county buildings.

The resolution states that public restrooms in the county are available for use of people based on their gender identity, regardless of their birth sex.

The decision came as a response to a complaint filed with the Iowa Civil Rights Commission against the county by Iowa City resident Jodie J. Jones.

She was denied access to a public restroom in the Johnson County Courthouse by former employee Sue Henderson in November 2011.

Calls to Jones seeking comment were not returned as of Thursday evening.

The commission determined there was probable cause to believe Henderson was in violation of a state law that prevents the ability to deny someone public accommodations based on gender identity. Johnson County's human-rights ordinance has similar protections.

In a settlement, in which Jones will receive $7,000, the clarification was established. It states that Sheriff's Office staff will undergo additional training.

Henderson has retired from her position as a Johnson County sheriff's deputy since the 2011 incident and is unable to be reached currently.

Librarian makes a difference

University Librarian Nancy Baker leaves a lasting mark on the University of Iowa.

By ALISON CRISSMAN

While most University of Iowa students may not realize it, University Librarian Nancy Baker has likely affected their education in one way or another.

During her 13 years at the UI, one of Baker's main initiatives was the implementation and creation of the Digital Library Services, a library unit responsible for digital research services that serves as the coordinating unit for all digitization in the library.

Iowa City not just for youth

By JULIA SHRIVER
shriverjulia@gmail.com

Jacquelyn Sullivan opted to move to Iowa City in order to be closer to her family.

"I like the community itself," said Sullivan, a current resident of Melrose Meadows Retirement Community. "It's just the right size so that we can get to know the people that live here, and we become a real community."

Sullivan is just one of many elderly persons who have chosen to live among the nearly dozen Iowa City area retirement-housing developments in recent years.

Area officials say they expect the trend to continue for quite some time.

Just ask both CNN's Money and Forbes magazines, which ranked the city a top place to retire in 2012.

It may come as no surprise then, that Iowa City has been experiencing an increase in its elderly population. As a result, numerous retirement facilities have expanded, and Oaknoll is undergoing construction on a large addition.

Pat Heiden, the director of Oaknoll, 1 Oaknoll Drive, said the facility's most recent 235,965-square-foot expansion will cost approximately $42 million and will include 69 new residential apartments, new recreational facilities a restaurant, and a courtyard, when completed in 2015.

She said the expansion is expected to add 110 residents to the current 300.

"What precipitated this expansion is that we had a very, very large waiting list of people who wanted to make Oaknoll their home," Heiden said.

Melrose Meadows, 350 Dublin Drive, has also adjusted to the increase of elderly persons in the Iowa City area.

"We have a lot of retirees coming back here to be with their families and also, with the University of Iowa Hospital so close, it's such a great resource for health care," said Brook Easton, the marketing coordinator for Melrose Meadows.

Smaller than other retirement homes in the area, Melrose Meadows has 86 total residents, but its numbers are growing.

As a result, Easton said, the facility recently added nine more assisted living apartments in April, bringing it to its current total of 31. The addition has already met capacity.

"I think everyone at a certain point in their life wants their family closer, and so I think that that's another reason we are getting such an influx of residents here," Easton said.

Jeff Davidson, the city director of planning and development, has observed a similar trend.

He said that over the past 20 years, the trend has been to build new facilities on both Iowa City's East Side along Scott Boulevard and on the West Side in the vicinity of Benton Street and Melrose Avenue.

"We continue to get expressions of interest," he said of expansion efforts, noting a proposed $6.5 million 41-unit senior housing project in the Towncrest neighborhood.

Why Iowa City? Davidson says it is a combination of factors.

There is, of course, the demographics, a national phenomenon that extends beyond just Iowa City.

As baby boomers across the nation are now reaching retirement age, the elderly are accounting for an increasingly larger portion of the population, including in Iowa City.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau's most recent report, June 6, people 65 and older account for 8.2 percent of Iowa City's roughly 70,000 total population in 2010.

But that's still significantly less than the state and national figures of 14.9 percent and 13.3 percent, respectively.

And Iowa City has certain unique characteristics that have been attracting an especially high number of retirees.

"I think the demographics is one reason," Davidson said, adding that the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics and the Veteran's Affairs Hospital are also contributors.

In addition to the medical services, Davidson said, some retirees in the area may have attended the University of Iowa as college students and want to return and be surrounded with the familiar collegial scene.

He maintains that the national retirement boom "has tapered off a bit" but said he believes Iowa City will remain a popular place to retire.

Heiden agreed.

"It certainly is a wonderful community with arts and culture, athletics events, medical facilities — so it really is an attractive destination for retirees," she said.

Big Ten-Ivy brain summit nears

By ROBERT CROZIER
robert-crozier@uiowa.edu

Collaborative research on the impact of brain injuries sustained during athletics competition announced last year may finally begin after a summit scheduled for mid-July.

The project, announced June 19, 2012, in a Big Ten press release, aims to bring together athletic programs and research capabilities from the various institutions of the Big Ten and the Ivy League, in conjunction with the Committee on Institutional Cooperation, to study the effects of head injuries in sports.

Each year, more than 3.8 million sports- and recreation-related concussions occur in the United States, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

"We are excited by the possibilities of this collaboration between Big Ten and Ivy League institutions to continue our close examination of the effects of head injuries in athletics," said University of Iowa President Sally Mason, the Big Ten Council of Presidents/Chancellors head, in a June 2012 statement. "It will provide an incredible boost to our ongoing efforts while reinforcing the priorities of institutional research and reciprocity between some of the nation's top academic organizations."

"These are very, very big institutions," said Andy Peterson, the director of the UI sports concussion program. "This is not going to be a quick process."

University of Nebraska Professor and brain researcher Dennis Molfese wrote in an email that because the external funding process from agencies like the National Institute of Health have just begun, researchers plan on working through the process for at least four years to come.

To date, he said, most Big Ten schools have committed $100,000 to fund pilot testing.

The students met with University of Iowa medical students, participated in a mock diagnosis, and toured the anatomy labs. (The Daily Iowan/File Photo)

"At this point, it's an agreement to work together, to pool our resources, and to collaborate on concussion research in general," Peterson said. "But there's no specific study at this point. There isn't really a research question ... and that's the point of this meeting."

Peterson, also a UI sports-medicine physician, will be one of three

University of Iowa members to travel to a summit on July 18-19 at the Big Ten's Chicago headquarters. UI senior athletics trainer Doug West and neurology/psychology Professor Daniel Tranel will also attend.

Prairie Lights to start rewards program

To keep up in an ever-evolving industry, which includes e-commerce and digital devices, Prairie Lights, 15 S. Dubuque St., will introduce a new customer-rewards program.

According to a press release, the store's rewards program will launch on Saturday.

"We're seeking new ways to engage with the public in order to strengthen our bottom line," Prairie Lights co-owner Jan Weissmiller said in the release.

"Over the years, Prairie Lights has become well-known among writers and readers all over the country," Weissmiller said. "And thanks to the prestigious writing programs at the University of Iowa, we have fans around the world as well. I think many Prairie Lights customers, both past and present, will want to be members of our rewards program in order to help spread the word about the store and its value to the literary community."

Man charged with laptop theft

A man has been charged after he allegedly stole a laptop from an Iowa City residence.

Victor Varnell, 21, was charged May 9 with second-degree theft after he allegedly walked out of an Iowa City apartment complex with a laptop in hand.

According to an Iowa City police complaint, Varnell was at the residence with a coworker and another friend. The friend witnessed Varnell walk out of the apartment with the laptop in his hand around 4:30 p.m.

When contacted by phone, Varnell confirmed to police he was aware the victim thought he stole the laptop and denied the accusation. He stated that he wished to come into the Iowa City police station on the morning of May 10 to explain his side of the story.

No such visit or contact of any type occurred.

Second-degree theft is an aggravated misdemeanor.

County reaches SEATS deal with Coralville, U-Heights

SEATS, a more than 30-year-old transportation service for the disabled and elderly has been at the forefront of local government talks for months, with the service's funding future being debated.

Recently, county officials announced that they would no longer be able to subsidize funding for the service that serves Iowa City, Coralville, and North Liberty residents, as well as the county's rural population.

But a Thursday morning Board of Supervisors meeting may have settled that.

In a 5-0 vote, the supervisors approved paratransit contracts beginning July 1 with Coralville and University Heights. Under the agreements, Coralville would provide service to residents of both cities as well as North Liberty.

An Iowa City-Johnson County contract was approved last week.

Like Iowa City, Coralville intends on ending Sunday service starting in September. Throughout the discussions, the supervisors have criticized the decisions of local cities in cutting service, but the county already doesn't make Sunday rural-route trips.

Under the new contract, the city of Coralville will receive $46,000 from the county next fiscal year, and that amount could increase up to 3 percent each of the preceding fiscal periods of the five-year deal.

The city of University Heights, under a one-year contractual agreement, will pay the county $8,444 next fiscal year.

issue will appear on the ballot, but she was cautious about the controversial measure.

She said she expects the issue to arise in student Senate meetings when the fall semester begins. "It's going to be a tricky issue, and I think it might be a divisive one," she said. "... But I don't really know how they will vote."

UI sophomores Allison Levy and Shuo Chi agreed that a transition back to 19 would produce beneficial outcomes, such as fewer house parties, but they differed on the final outcome and reasoning.

While Chi said those under 21 should be accompanied by someone of age if the 21-ordinance is overturned, Levy said allowing underage patrons in the bars beyond 10 p.m. may actually bring in fewer citations and alcohol-related concerns.

"If it were 19, not as many [drinking] tickets would be given out because there would be fewer house parties getting busted," she said.

Wittgraf said people younger than 21 still frequent the bars, they're just starting sooner, around 7 p.m.

"[Opponents of the 21-ordinance] think it's a wonderful thing, but in my opinion, nothing's been accomplished," he said. "I think honestly, police would prefer to have the bulk of the students in the downtown area so they're not running around going from house party to house party."

He said once he sees the measure on the November ballot, a campaign will proceed.

"The kids basically rule this town," he said. "Iowa City wouldn't be the same without them. They're 18, they're adults, and they should be able to enjoy all the businesses, not just a few of them."

RESTROOM

"[Henderson] had a long, distinguished career and was respected by her peers," Supervisor Rod Sullivan said.

Sullivan suggested that perhaps the policy regarding transgender use of public restrooms was previously unclear.

"Sometimes, it is difficult to know how to obey the law," he said. "I hope [our decision] helps to clarify."

Issues such as these have been brought to the public's attention occasionally in the past, Sullivan said, which was enough to motivate the supervisors to take action.

Supervisor Terrence Neuzil hopes the policy sheds light on how employees are to treat the public as a whole, he said.

"We as a county decided to create clarity within our policy," he said. "Our county won't discriminate."

Despite recent advancements in ensuring equal rights to the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender community with the overturning of the Defense of Marriage Act, University of Iowa junior Quentin Hill, a member of the GLBT Allied Union Executive Board at the UI, spoke out on the UI Pentacrest rally Wednesday evening stating the importance of not excluding anyone from the LGBT community.

"I don't want us to forget the T [of transgendered in LGBT]," he said.

Sullivan believes that the supervisors' decision has been a positive step toward eliminating discrimination to all in Johnson County, he said.

"Anything we can do to clarify the fact that we support human rights is a good thing," Sullivan said.

He said he believes allowing transgender citizens

Johnson County responds to lawsuit

- Jodie J. Jones filed suit against the county in November 2011 after being denied access to a public restroom due to being a transgender individual.
- Under the settlement, the county must pay Jones $7,000.
- The Board of Supervisors clarified its public restroom policy, stating that people may use restrooms based on their gender identities regardless of their birth sex.

to use the restroom of the gender they identify with should be a uniform policy across the state.

"This is the law of the land," he said. "Iowa has human-rights protection. This should apply everywhere."

In a time when most student research is done with the aid of a computer, her initiative has allowed much of the UI Libraries' Special Collections to be accessed at the touch of a button.

"We realigned what we were doing in the library because this was the future, and we needed to embrace it," Baker said.

In addition to digitizing the library's special collections, Baker was also one of the driving forces behind the new Learning Commons being constructed on the first floor of the Main Library.

"Unfortunately, I won't be here when it's finished, but I will be back to see it," Baker said. "It will transform the first floor of the Main Library."

UI President Sally Mason said Baker's dedication to students has allowed the library system to make important advances over the last decade.

"Under Nancy's leadership, our libraries have made very impressive advances, such as the Digital Library Services and the current Learning Commons project," Mason said in a statement. "... Nancy's greatest strength was her intense focus on furthering the academic success of students and meeting the needs of faculty and staff during her 13 years at the University of Iowa."

As university librarian, Baker not only oversees the Main Library on campus, but the art, music, sciences, business, engineering, and health sciences libraries as well.

As a result, when the 2008 flood came, Baker was busy.

"The most memorable event that I've had to deal with since I've been here is the flood of 2008," she said. "We had to get a lot of books out of the basement one day when the forecast was pretty clear that we were going to have major flooding in Iowa City."

After stepping down in retirement on July 5, Baker will be replaced by John Culshaw, the senior associate dean for library administration at the University of Colorado-Boulder. Culshaw will take the helm at the beginning of August, and the current associate university librarian for information technology, Paul Soderdahl, will serve as interim university librarian until Culshaw begins.

Soderdahl, who works closely with Baker as a member of the library's administrative cabinet, said her contributions to the UI libraries have benefited not only the university, but others as well.

"She focuses a lot on working collaboratively, not only on campus, but with other Big Ten university libraries, and that makes for a pleasant environment that I think we've sort of just come to take for granted," he said.

Above all, Soderdahl said Baker's presence will be missed at the UI Libraries.

"I'm going to miss working for Nancy ... and I wish her well," he said. "I'm excited about John coming in. The library is on really solid footing for the future, and I think a lot of that credit goes to Nancy."

Welcome Donald Trump

By MIKE BEALL
Michael-beall@uiowa.edu

Attention citizens of Iowa: Donald Trump is taking some early steps toward a run for president. In August, he'll be in Iowa to speak at a major conservative summit, and he's also reportedly investigating a presidential run in 2016 by spending $1 million to research his political standing across the country.

I am unsure what this research entails except that it will look specifically at Iowa to see if Iowans view the Donald favorably. It is of the utmost important that for the next few years we all feign interest in the reality-TV star, lest we risk scaring him off before the 2016 Iowa caucuses.

If you don't think schmoozing Donald Trump is worth your time, let me put a few images in your head.

The Iowa State Fair. Yes, the fair is a common destination for all potential candidates, taking place five months before the actual caucuses, which means that it will probably be the nation's first taste of Candidate Trump. Now, this is a supposed New Yorker who eats pizza with a fork, so there's no telling how he will manage all of the fried food on a stick. A knife-and-fork corn dog, perhaps. I don't know about you, but I want to see that with every fiber of my being.

Babies. While kissing babies is not normal election behavior anymore, it is still common to hold them or at the very least be near them. President Obama is the perfect example of a candidate and elected official who has used this to his advantage. There are numerous pictures of the president holding smiling babies and stories of crying children being calmed down once the president holds them. Being a baby whisperer is a valuable trait in running for public office.

It is also a trait that I cannot imagine this particular comb-over enthusiast having. The image of Trump holding an infant at arms length is funny, sure, but also terrifying. Traumatizing infants is only one more reason of many to support Trump as a candidate.

And imagine all the silly things he will say. Iowa has long history as a hotbed of killer gaffes. Michele Bachmann confused John Wayne's birthplace with the serial killer John Wayne Gacy's. So flustered was Mitt Romney by the crowd at the Iowa State Fair that he spouted his immortal line, "Corporations are people, my friend."

And who can forget Howard Dean's scream after losing the 2004 Iowa caucuses?

Trump, a reality-TV star and notorious attention seeker, will certainly add to the state's tradition of teasing the absurdity out of absurd politicians. Remember, this is a man who is still convinced Barack Obama was not born in this country; the things he will say about his fellow candidates and the things he will do after his inevitable loss are unimaginable comedic material.

And any televised debate including Trump will be considered the debate of the century (to me, at least).

But for this to work, we must all pretend Trump is a serious candidate.

I'm looking at you, Gov. Terry Branstad — when reporters ask you about Trump's potential presidential bid, do not laugh as you did in a 2011 interview. An election including Trump is comedy gold, and it is up to us to ensure the entire country is able to enjoy the soon-to-be-immortal image of him riding in a tractor.

Congress' series of failures

Last week, the Senate-approved farm bill failed to pass in the House of Representatives, leaving the fate of the legislation uncertain. The current farm bill, which sets agricultural subsidies and funds the federal crop insurance and SNAP programs, is scheduled to expire at the end of September.

The collapse in the House is only the most recent setback to hit the farm bill. In 2012, a similar Senate plan died in the House. The size of the SNAP program, better known as the food-stamp program, is the usual partisan sticking point. The House Republicans would like to dramatically scale back the program, but the Senate bills have offered only modest cuts.

Congress's failure to renew the farm bill is but one of the many failures that threaten to damage the material well-being of millions.

Congress has also failed, for example, to address the impending interest rate jump on federally subsidized student loans. The rate on these loans will jump from 3.4 to 6.8 percent on July 1 if Congress does not act in the next few days, increasing the debt burden on many of America's college students.

With respect to immigration reform, the prospects are only slightly brighter. On Thursday, the Senate passed a comprehensive immigration-reform bill with bipartisan support. But the House's Republican leadership has expressed a desire to carve up the Senate's plan, leaving the future of immigration reform up in the air.

All of these fights are centered on issues on which there's at least some degree of bipartisan consensus. On other, more controversial issues, there is no hope of legislative debate, let alone action.

On Tuesday, the Supreme Court effectively struck down the heart of the Voting Rights Act — the rule requiring some parts of the country to seek federal approval to change their voting rules — on the grounds that the map identifying areas with a history of prejudice was outdated. Congress could reinstate this part of the law by drawing a new map, a prospect that seems impossible in a highly partisan era.

So, we are left without basic protections against discriminatory voting rules.

And on climate change, one of the most pressing issues of our time, Congress is entirely impotent. In many ways, the executive action-heavy climate change plan put forward by President Obama this week is a response to this inaction in Congress. The last, best hope for sweeping climate-change action was killed by conservative opposition in 2009, when it was still controlled by the Democrats.

All of this raises a troubling question: When Congress refuses to solve the problems that deeply affect the short- and long-term well-being of millions of people, what are we supposed to do in response? We've tried to "throw the bums out," but neither party has proven itself capable of answering the major problems of the day — immigration, climate change, civil rights.

It is a testament to Congressional inaction that the relatively conservative Supreme Court has become the most dynamic force for change in the United States. That alone should be an indicator that the system is not functioning properly.

Breathing in Beijing

By JORDYN REILAND
jordyn-reiland@uiowa.edu

BEIJING — I can't always tell the difference between night and day here.

There are some days where the smog chokes the air, masking the skyline, only to leave faint stencil outlines of the tall buildings that surround me.

It isn't always this way, and the sky has brightened up since I arrived in Beijing three weeks ago. When the Sun comes out, the cityscape comes alive, and the parasols are out in full force. I myself like to take in its glorious rays without any umbrella-like protection, but with each sunny day, usually a cloudy one follows.

I often catch myself checking the air quality numerous times throughout my workday on a website that measures PM_{2.5} in hopes of seeing green — an indication that the air quality is "good" today. I can only recall it being green once or twice. Almost every other time, it has been in the yellow or red, meaning the air quality is considered fair or unhealthy. Some people compare the air quality on "red" days to smoking an entire pack of cigarettes in one day.

PM_{2.5} is classified as an air pollutant that reduces visibility and causes the air to appear hazy. On the days when the air quality is bad, I often find myself short of breath and frequently coughing. Facemasks are popular and plentiful, ranging from ones that are as simple as a doctor's masks to full-on Bane masks [excuse my movie reference there]. I don't have one, and I probably won't invest in one during my time here. Besides, I already apologized to my lungs prior to my trip anyway.

The Chinese government recognizes that there are several regions of the country that have poor air quality, including Beijing. Several news outlets, including China Daily, have recently reported that government officials are developing new measures to try to reduce the air pollution. After the air-quality levels were recognized as an 800 on the scale in January of this year — four times higher than what is considered unhealthy — government officials started closely monitoring the levels of pollution and reported them to the public several times a day.

So why is the air quality still bad? China did host the 2008 Olympics here, didn't it?

All eyes were on Beijing because of the changes it was required to implement in order to even get the go-ahead to host the 2008 Games. However, after it was all said and done, officials realized how expensive it was to try to continue their efforts.

According to a study done by the Journal of the American Medical Association published in May 2012, the Chinese government spent roughly $17 billion in preparation for the games. The efforts included shutting down factories and limiting automobile traffic for the duration of the Olympics and the Paralympics.

It's probably also important to note that Beijing's population is 20 million as of 2011. Think about that for a second.

I brought my running shoes on the trip in hopes of doing a little extracurricular jogging.

I'm not a marathon runner, but I did hope to wear-in the soles a bit on the weekends. Unfortunately, that's not going to happen unless I am interested in coughing up my lungs.

I'm sure there were some people who risked it and got some exercise, but I'll save my lungs and run another day.

Return to traditional marriage

I am disappointed that the U.S. Supreme Court has decided to overturn the federal Defense of Marriage Act. Too many children are being hurt by our culture's strange and increasing inability to appreciate how important it is to bring together mothers and fathers for children in one loving home. Our society needs an institution that connects children to their mothers and fathers, and the only institution that does this is marriage. Redefining marriage changes the basic understanding of marriage from a child-centered institution to one that sees it as a temporary, revocable commitment that prioritizes the "romantic" happiness of adults over building a loving, lasting family.

The meaning and direction of sexuality is essentially to bring about the union of man and woman, and in this way give humanity posterity, children, future. This is a point we need to hold firm, even if it is not pleasing to our age. On the heels of this new ruling, we need now, more than ever, to work to rebuild a more loving and successful traditional marriage culture.

Paul Kokoski

Re: A victory for gay rights

I am delighted the Defense of Marriage Act has been repealed.

Although I happen to be heterosexual, I intend to march in the next Gay Pride Parade in support of the people who have been so hated, reviled, murdered, and discriminated against.

My 96-year-old mother still believes her brother is homosexual because her mother spoiled him too much. Nothing I can say will change her mind.

For those people who believe that every act should be dictated by the Bible, may I remind them that there is a passage in the Bible that says, "Judge not, lest you be judged." It would be nice if they would spend more time monitoring their own behavior rather than judging and meddling in other people's lives.

Rock Misconceptions (2/2):

- Detroit is the Motor City, not the Rock City; that distinction falls to Grand Forks.
- While it is true that my momma doesn't dance (grammar matters), my daddy does rock and roll.
 - It's really only about 500 feet to the summit, if you want to rock 'n' roll.
- The Crocodile Rock doesn't even rank in the top-10 biggest kicks Elton John ever got — and, to be honest, he couldn't have cared less about Susie.
 - Starship didn't build this city, the slaves of their forefathers did. The material used was, however, still rock and roll.
 - Huey Lewis is, himself, the reason the heart of rock and roll is still beating, having incurred massive medical bills in the early 1980s that he's still paying off today.
 - Bad Company's actual rock 'n' roll fantasy was sex with groupies, followed by a hot shower in a hotel with decent water pressure and a rousing fox hunt of Earth's most dangerous game: Man.
 - At no time has it ever been a long time since Led Zeppelin rock and rolled.
 - Rock 'n' Roll considers Joan Jett little more than a poorly judged one-night stand, regardless of her unrequited feelings.

Andrew R. Juhl thanks Tim Daly (not that one) for today's Ledge idea, as well as various friends for contributing ideas and feedback.

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasize love, looking good, and being happy. Avoid anyone goading you into an argument or tricking you into something that will complicate your life. Change can be good, but only if it is on your terms. Travel and romance are highlighted.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take a cautious approach to physical activity or travel. Mishaps will be due to confusion or uncertainty. Prepare properly, and you will turn any negative into a positive. Send an emotional message if you want to get your point across.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You'll face someone withholding information or not explaining what needs to be done. Ask questions, and make a point of showing your intelligence and knowledge. A change in plans will end up being to your advantage.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Set your goals, and strive to succeed. Your intuition will not let you down. Don't worry about what everyone else is doing. Your determination and dedication will lead to victory. Embrace friendships and partnerships.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Sit back, and wait patiently for your turn. Trying to impress someone by showing off or bragging will backfire. Humble and gracious actions will make the best impression. Romance is highlighted, and making self-improvements will enhance your life.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Enjoy working alongside others. Take pride in what you do and how you complement what is going on around you. Engage in finding solutions and making improvements that will impress someone you want to get to know better.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The busier, the better. Take extra courses that will heighten your earning potential. Interact with people who have something to offer you. A change with regard to a relationship will be to your benefit. Walk away from anyone trying to control or use you.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are heading in the right direction. Attend whatever will help you advance, but don't take on so much that you become physically exhausted. Gauge your time so you can do and be your very best. Talks will lead to bigger and better prospects.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Deal with emotional matters head-on. If you try to avoid a situation, it will end up costing you financially as well as emotionally. Put more into your future by tying up loose ends so that you can move on without guilt or barriers.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take control. Don't allow changes to happen if they are not going to benefit you. Problems with partners or dealing with expenses or a coworker will surface if you aren't direct about terms and agreements. Protect your assets.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Hard work will pay off. Ingenuity, innovation, and imagination will help you develop your abilities. Greater prosperity and good fortune can be yours if you offer a service that helps others. Accept a challenge, and give it your best shot.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Pay attention. Missing vital information will lead to arguments or complaints. Get whatever chores you have out of the way before you move on to pleasurable pastimes. Learn from experience, and choose your friends and activities wisely. An investment will pay off.

Oglesby. Missed shots and turnovers defined the sloppy first half; neither team could consistently put the ball through the hoop. Gesell produced 23 points, 8 assists, and 5 boards, which helped his team find a second-half rhythm and secure the victory. Anthony Clemmons and Jared Uthoff fueled their team to a 130-103 victory in the third game of the night. They were the undisputed best players on the court, and it was apparent from the opening tip. Uthoff showcased the sound, fundamental skills that make up his arsenal, registering 15 points and 8 rebounds. His ability affected the game in more ways than the stats will show, and he became the focus of the opposing defense, which was short-handed due to the absences of Aaron White and Darius Stokes. Clemmons continued to impress observers during what has been a strong summer for him. He looked more confident when shooting from the outside, connecting on 6-of-9 3-point field goals en route to collecting 29 points, 12 assists, and 8 rebounds. "I have to be confident," Clemmons said. "As long as I come in with good confidence level, I'm pretty sure I'm going to have a good game." Uthoff and Clemmons have established themselves as a formidable duo in just three games so far this summer — they've led coach Randy Larson's team to an undefeated start in this year's Prime Time League. "I talked to him the very first game and said we're going to run the league," Clemmons said. "That's what we're doing right now."

bench, became a force in his sophomore campaign. From his poster-worthy dunks in pregame warm-ups — and in game — to becoming a terror on the boards and blocking shots, the London native's game has noticeably improved since April. "He was attacking in [the post]," forward Zach McCabe said. "He had opportunities inside, and he was taking them. That's what he's been working on all summer, and he's been improving every day." The 6-10 center called for the ball inside the perimeter Thursday night, passing it out to open teammates at the top of the key. Oleseni even brought the ball up the court on a few occasions. It made no difference who was guarding him — and many did — because Oleseni's shot looked confident. This is something he's been working on nearly every day. Incoming freshman Peter Jok said Oleseni is already practicing when he arrives to Carver-Hawkeye Arena for practices, working on his jump shots, dribbling, hook shots, and free throws. "It was a good game between those two," Jok said. "They were going at each other. At practice, they always go hard at each other, and that's how you get better." On Thursday night, with Woodbury on the bench, Oleseni received the ball at the top of the key. Oleseni, normally a pass-first kind of player, pushed off his feet, took his big frame into the lane, cocked his arm back, and delivered a one-handed slam-dunk that left the rim rattling. "He's getting better every day," Woodbury said. "He's capable of doing a lot of things. He's getting more confident. The repetition he's putting in is really paying off." Woodbury also showed signs of improvement — including a jumper from 20 feet out, even though it came with Oleseni resting on the bench. Woodbury believes that playing against Oleseni makes him a bigger force in the post in game situations. Woodbury moved more fluidly under the basket as well. He asserted his dominance in the second half when he received the ball, pivoted under the basket, and finished with a left-hand lay-up over Oleseni — a good sign to see after the center struggled posting up against other bigs in the Big Ten. "It's literally the same [matchup] as practice every day," Oleseni said about guarding Woodbury. "We even try to compete against each other in the weight room, even running to the weight room. "It brings out the best in us ... but once we step off the court, it's all love."

Ex-Hawk Harris struggles in Open

Former Iowa women's golfer Chelsea Harris didn't have an ideal start at the 2013 U.S. Women's Open on Thursday. Harris enters today, the second day of competition, at 9-over par — she's tied for 145th place — after carding an 81 on the first day at Sebonack Golf Club in Southampton, N.Y. Ha-Neul Kim leads the pack after shooting a 66 on the first day of competition. Inbee Park sits just a shot back in second, and four other golfers are tied for third at 4 under. Harris began the day with three-straight pars before posting four-consecutive bogeys. She recovered with a birdie on the eighth and a par on the ninth, posting a 3 over score on the front nine. The Normal, Ill., native then parred the 10th but recorded bogeys on the next five holes, including a double-bogey on the par-5 13. Harris parred the final three holes of the day, ending with a 6-over score on the back nine. Harris will tee off on the 10th hole at 11:30 a.m. today with the same two players she played with on Thursday — Ayako Uehara and Jamie Hullett, who posted first-round scores of 3 over and 6 over, respectively. To play over the weekend, Harris needs to finish among the lowest 60 scores after today's competition. Those in 60th place after the first round posted scores of 2 over. — by Cody Goodwin

HAWKEYE AUSTIN TO RUN FOR USA

Iowa track All-American Justin Austin will be a part of Team USA in Kazan, Russia, at the 2013 World University Games, one of 16 athletes on the U.S. squad. The games will take place July 6-17.

Austin will compete in the 200 meters and in the 400 relay — both events that he met the qualifying standards in at the 2013 NCAA meet.

Austin will run the 200 on July 9 and the 400 relay on July 11.

Team USA will be coached by South Carolina head track coach Curtis Frye and Southern Illinois head track coach Connie Price-Smith.

Austin joins Gavin Sam Kendricks (pole vault), Joe Kovacs (shot put), Ahmed Ali (100-meter dash, 4x100-meter relay), Mike Woepse (pole vault), Derrick Vicars (shot put, discus), and Montez Blair (high jump) on the men's team.

ESPN will provide more than 40 hours of coverage throughout the University Games on ESPN2 and additional coverage on ESPN3.

Hawks shine in Prime Time

Guard Mike Gesell makes a jump shot during Prime Time action in the North Liberty Community Center on Thursday. (The Daily Iowan/Shi Chen)

The third set of Prime Time League games showcased a variety of matchups and results, ranging from close contests to blowouts.

By DOMINICK WHITE
Dominick-White@uiowa.edu

The Prime Time League early contest Thursday night in North Liberty featured a matchup among five Iowa basketball players. Zach McCabe's team took on Peter Jok and Company in an action-packed contest — ultimately, McCabe's team came out with a 96-91 victory.

McCabe's squad jumped out to an early 12-2 lead behind the senior's hot hand from beyond the arc. The squad extended the lead to 27-11 behind the strong interior play of Gabe Olaseni and former Upper Iowa forward Tucker Wentzien.

But Jok's squad answered with a 13-4 run, closing with in 7 points. The first half ended with Jok making three free throws, and the team trailed just 43-35 at the intermission.

A heated matchup between the two Iowa big men stole the show in the second half. Adam Woodbury and Olaseni went basket-for-basket, giving fans a glimpse of the competition that will take place in the paint during the 2013-14 campaign.

"We play against each other every day, so we know what each other brings," Woodbury said. "He's a tough matchup, so it's always good to go up against guys like that."

Olaseni displayed an offensive arsenal with a confident shot to go with his stout defense. But Woodbury retaliated with his improved strength, finishing through contact and giving the Olaseni all he could handle down low.

"We're always competing with each other," Olaseni said. "He's one of my best friends. I think healthy competition is always good."

took down coach Kevin Sanders' squad, 107-87. Sanders' team was, again, without Iowa hoops players Devyn Marble and Josh Iowa big men Gabe Olaseni and Adam Woodbury use the matchup against each other to improve their games.

By MATT CABEL
matthew-cabel@uiowa.edu

Gabe Olaseni and Adam Woodbury are only inches apart in height. And that's where the similarities end.

"It's like yin and yang," Olaseni said. "I'm the 6-foot-10 athlete, he's the 7-foot, back-you-down-low kind of guy. He's got a good low-post game. We complement each other."

The two centers were primarily matched up against each other in Thursday's Prime Time League early game, and they demonstrated that earning playing time in the post will be extremely competitive during the 2013-14 Hawkeye season. Olaseni tallied 17 points, 11 rebounds, and 2 assists, leading his team to a 96-91 victory. Woodbury turned in 23 points, 12 rebounds, and 1 assist.

Hawkeye swimmers fall short

Hawkeye swimmers Mike Nelson and Grant Betulius completed part of their competition at the 2013 Phillips 66 National Championships in Indianapolis, Ind., on Thursday evening.

Nelson, a sophomore at Iowa, finished 13th in the men's 50-meter breaststroke, touching the wall at 28.71 in the "B" final of the event. The Tempe, Ariz., native finished ninth in the preliminary round, posting a time of 28.59 seconds to qualify for the "B" final.

Betulius, a junior at Iowa, finished 16th in the men's 50-meter backstroke with a time of 26.17 in the "B" final. The Naperville, Ill., native posted the 15th-best time in the preliminary round of the event, hitting the wall at 26.03 to also qualify for the "B" final.

The event serves as the World Championship Team Trials for the 2013 FINA World Championships. Neither Hawkeye finished in the top three of his event, which is required to earn a spot on Team USA.

Both Nelson and Betulius will compete again in the 100-meter breaststroke and the 100-meter backstroke, respectively, today.

Hawkeye senior Emily Hovren will swim in the 200-meter individual medley on Saturday. Hovren is a school-record-holder in three events — the 200-meter individual medley, the 200-meter freestyle and as a member of the 800-meter freestyle relay team — for the Iowa women's team.
