Commission backs possible Gateway

By QUENTIN MISIAG
quentin-misiag@uiowa.edu

The notion of self-described “new territory” for one local commission wasn’t enough to stop a recommendation for motions to push a controversial $40 million Iowa City roadway and flood-protection project forward for what many dub the city’s “front door.”

During a special meeting Thursday evening, the Iowa City Historic Preservation Commission voted 7-1 for the Dubuque Street Gateway Project to begin a still lengthy, and undetermined, construction process.

Pam Michaud of the College Green Historic District voted against the action, while at-large board member Frank Wagner abstained, citing a conflict of interest.

The project, more than five years in the making, has been at the center of contentious, confusing, and concerning examinations for city planners and residents as Io-wa’s fifth largest city continues to wrestle with flood-recovery measures and a growing population.

In June, the commission gave the project the initial green light but on July 11 chose to revisit the issue following the response by a handful of North Side residents and their request to block the project.

During that session, Ginalie Swaim, the head of the Historic Commission, maintained that the group, synonymous with encouraging and designating historic properties, is new to the transportation game, calling it “new territory.”

While staying firm to the park-like setting, city officials tout the project as a key component in reducing future closures on the flood-prone corridor with updating a “structurally deficient” 1950s-built Park Road bridge by elevating the road and bridge 10 to 15 feet.

Funding would include $10.5 million in

New plan for dentists

The University of Iowa’s Department of Periodontics has launched a new professional-development program. Officials don’t expect the program to grow beyond two students each academic session.

By CASSIDY RILEY

Creators of the new professional-development program in the University of Iowa Department of Periodontics say the offering will bring many benefits to not only the students but also the school.

This month marked the first year of the new professional-development program for dentists in the field of periodontics in the UI College of Dentistry. Periodontics deals with the treatment of gums and gum disease.

“The purpose of the program is to open opportunities for already graduated dentists who are interested in extending their knowledge of periodontics,” said Assistant Professor Gustavo Avila Ortiz, the program’s mentor.

Avila Ortiz managed a similar curriculum, modeled after a residency program, at the University of Michigan before coming to the UI two years ago. Participants in the program will share in a lot of activities with the residency students including taking classes, doing research, and shadowing professionals in the clinic. The major difference between the residency program and the professional-development program will be the end result.

Students who complete either the six-month or 12-month professional-development program will receive a letter certifying their completion and students from the United States will also receive continuing-education credits required by the American Dental Association.

Avila Ortiz also said residency program can be difficult to be admitted to and completion of this program could serve as a bridge that could help a student get into a residency program.

Juan Gonzalez de Buitrago Garcia is the first to participate in this program. He studied dentistry in Spain at the University of Granada, and he is in the

Greens head for Iowa City

The third-party delegates will gather this weekend in Iowa City for their annual national meeting.

By ROBERT CROZIER

Green Party faithful from across the country have converged in Iowa City for their annual national meeting this weekend after local Greens submitted the most compelling bid to the political party.

It was also the only bid. Last year in Baltimore, the party nominated Jill Stein in its failed 2012 bid for the White House.

This year, a political off-season as far as the presidency is concerned, the Downtown Sparti’s eyes Old Capitol mall opening

An area fast-casual Greek restaurant has set its eyes on the downtown restaurant scene, with the hopes of a slightly different name allowing it to cash on both the daytime and nighttime student appetites.

Sparti’s Gyros, with locations in Kenosha and Racine, Wis., as well as on the Coralville Strip, is targeting an Aug. 15 opening date for its Old Capitol Town Center location.

Once open, it will operate under the name Sparti’s Express in hopes of drawing full attention to its Chicago-style hot dogs, Greek gyros, pitas, and sandwiches, downtown restaurant co-owner Keith Brophy said.

It will take over the former site of Sam’s Steamed Caboose Burger, which closed April 18. “Before we even opened in Coralville, we looked at Iowa City,” he said. “I’ve always liked the downtown area, and there’s so much foot traffic.”

Brophy said marketing the Coralville restaurant to the University of Iowa students has proved to be difficult, citing the lack of students with vehicles.

On any given month, Sparti’s sells more than 2,000 gyros sandwiches, with more than 15 tons of gyros meat sold in 2012, he said.

Looking to capture lunch crowds, it will open at 11 a.m. with a 3 a.m. closing on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday for late-night crowds.

Plans currently call for service to be limited to the mall’s interior until 10 p.m., when exterior window ordering will become available.

federal and state money, as well as local-option sales tax, general-obligation bonds, and other revenues. Although originally set for a fall 2014 construction date, work likely will begin in two construction periods of 2015 and 2016.

City planner Bob Mikko said no historic structures themselves would be directly affected by the altered street.

But given the scope and that the Dubuque Street has flooded significantly three times in the last 20 years, Melissa Clow, the Iowa City engineering special-projects administrator, said changes are inevitable.

"It's very hard to do some large roadway project without having some impact," she said. "And at this point, this is a very large project." According to recent traffic counts, Dubuque Street sees more than 25,500 cars each day between Interstate 80, downtown, and the University of Iowa campus.

And while public comment was denied during the meeting, opposition by several commission members ran rampant at times. Commission member Michaud the questioned the reconstruction of the roadway, notably a 15-foot retaining wall, when comprehensive Iowa River flood-impact studies for the UI campus and the Riverfront Crossings District have yet to be completed.

"I think the scale and scope of the construction process is somewhat underdescribed," she said. "It will be thousands of trips of dump trucks, and there aren't going to be any woods left."

Clow said because she remains unfamiliar with all of the projects that the UI is undertaking, and as plans are still tentative, she couldn't comment on the effect.

Throughout discussions, commission member David McMahon of the Long-fellow Historic District said individuals should have faith in the actions by the City Council, stressing the limited role of the commission.

Higher river levels than the 2008 flood were recorded in 1851, 1918, and 1988, Clow said.

While the Federal Highway Administration is the final decision maker on the project, it will take into consideration the commission's recommendation. Further discussion will now be directed to the City Council.

With the adjusted roadway, Clow said the safety of UI students will increase significantly, because they will have a 6- to 8-foot-wide sidewalk on the east side, including in front of Mayflower Residence Hall, and to several fraternity houses.

Discussions with Pi Kappa Alpha, Beta Theta Pi, and Phi Delta Theta fraternities began in March 2011, Clow said, noting that the respective property owners of the chapters have been understanding and approve the reconstruction.

But for Katie Cummins, who endured the 2008 flood as a Mayflower resident, contentions remain. While losing her bicycle in floodwater, she said more pressing issues are now tied with her parents, return to Iowa City after a 30-year absence and purchasing a home at 12 Bella Vista Place.

While she and mother Laurie Cummins agree that changes need to come to protect from future flooding, the question at what cost.

"It seems like a drop in the bucket," Katie Cummins said. "Once you cut down those trees, you'll just have a blanket of retaining walls."

Gonzalez said what he considers to be the greatest benefit of this program is the wealth of knowledge he intends to gain in a field he is passionate about.

"I have no doubt in my mind that this opportunity of learning in a prestigious university will have a tremendously positive impact in my career," he wrote in an email. "After having been in the department for one month and having realized the good relationship among the residents and the professors, I have to say that is even more reinforcing for me because I value a collegiate and non-oppressive learning environment."

Satheesh Elangovan, a UI assistant professor of periodontics, is one of Gonzalez's mentors for his research project, and he said he is excited about not only how the program will affect students but also the department.

"The dentists will get a firsthand experience in the field of periodontics," he wrote in an email. "In return, we get different perspectives from dentists trained in different parts of the world... and I think it will also increase the visibility of the program beyond U.S.A. So, it's a win-win situation."

Avila Ortiz said the program did not cost the department anything to develop. Each student pays $12,000 to participate in the program.

"We designed this program to only bring positive things to the university, including revenue and experiences," he said.

Professor Georgia Johnson, the head of the Periodontics Department, worked with Avila Ortiz in developing the program. She said she anticipates that the program will attract more students in the coming years but that she doesn't see the program growing beyond two students per academic session.

"I think two is probably a comfortable number for us in terms of being able

Man charged with domestic-abuse assault

A local man has been charged after allegedly hitting a woman in the back of the head.

Vernard Dillon, 51, 461 Highway 1W, was charged on Thursday with domestic-abuse assault.

According to a police complaint, Dillon reportedly hit the woman on the back of the head with a closed fist while she was throwing up in the sink. The woman said she and Dillon had been in an intimate relationship for the past three years.

This is Dillon's second domes-

Man faces third domestic-abuse charge

A local man has been charged after allegedly abusing a woman with whom he was in a relationship.

Terrian Wilborn, 37, was charged on Wednesday with domestic-abuse assault.

According to the police complaint, officers spoke with the woman while she was at Mercy Hospital, and she showed them bruises and marks from being hit and kicked, reportedly by Wilborn. She told the police Wilborn was outside the hospital.

He admitted he had been in an intimate relationship with the woman and was staying with her. He also said they had engaged in an argument earlier that day but denied hurting her.

This is Wilborn's third charge of domestic abuse, a Class-D felony.

Man charged with theft

A Mount Auburn, Iowa, man has been charged after allegedly stealing a motorcycle.

Kenneth Burnell, 34, was charged on July 15 with first-degree theft.

According to a police complaint, Burnell was with the owner on June 29 when he locked the motorcycle in a barn. Shortly after the fowner left the property, Burnell called a person and told him he was leaving via "vroom vroom."

The motorcycle was reportedly located on July 1 at Burnell's brother-in-law's house, who told police Burnell had brought it there and began to paint and disassemble it. The owner told police the motorcycle is worth approximately $30,000.

First-degree theft is a Class-C felony.

roughly 100 delegates to the convention plan to conduct some party business, but they will also attend workshops with such titles as “The Racial Equality Lens: An Anti-Oppression Training for White People” and “How to Put On an Event.”

Pending party business includes electing members of the steering committee and discussing the strategic plan.

Media coordinator Scott McLarty said the Greens chose Iowa City because the plan submitted by the Iowa Green Party was the most compelling.

“I think we’re also mindful of the fact that, in this general area, people tend to be kind of progressive ...” he said. “As we grow as a national party, we want to become more familiar with Iowa, and we want Iowa to become more familiar with us.”

Iowa Green Party Secretary Holly Hart said the Iowa party had submitted the only bid.

“They wanted to do it somewhere where there was local Green activity,” she said, noting that having the meeting in the city would inspire local Greens to run for office and incorporate more recruiting.

Thursday culminated in a panel discussion featuring, among others, Sen. Rob Hogg, D-Cedar Rapids, and Rep. Mary Mascher, D-Iowa City.

Hogg said he came to the Green Party event, which filled about a quarter of the seats in the Old Capitol Senate Chamber, because he was invited.

“I’m willing to talk to any audience any time about the defining historical issue of our time, which is climate change,” he said.

This year’s meeting in Iowa City cost the party around $10,000, McLarty said.

Today and Saturday will feature more workshops and events, most open to the public and most in the IMU.

Stein will speak at a fundraising lunch on Saturday at the Iowa City Public Library, 123 S. Linn St.

“We want to emerge as a strong party for the 21st century. We consider ourselves an imperative for the 21st century,” McLarty said, contending that the two dominant parties are “addicted” to corporate money. “We offer things that the Republicans and Democrats don’t.”

UI alumnus and Green Party staffer David Sacks said he supports the party because America needs politics based on good public policy instead of re-election.

“We’re about building a political party where the power isn’t derived from

23 years of progress

Kristen East
kristen-east@uiowa.edu

My brother can recite Robert De Niro's entire filmography by memory. More impressively, he recalls and reels off monologues from such movies as Raging Bull and Taxi Driver with ease. I believe he sometimes may act out the movies in his sleep. When I'm home, I can hear the faint sounds of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons and Frank Sinatra — classic soundtrack selections for any De Niro film — resonate through the drywall between our bedrooms, his baritone pipes following the melody not quite on key. Needless to say, he's a huge fan.

And it's not just De Niro. It's Joe Pesci and Chazz Palminteri. It's Goodfellas and Scarface. He loves movies; it's his livelihood. In some ways, it's an escape from reality.

Through repetition (meaning he's seen most movies more than 20 times each, at least), he's amassed quite a wealth of knowledge about these legendary actors and their films.

What doesn't render so well in his memory are the times tables or the spelling of common words. These are things that, for the average human being, come naturally; these are word and numbers and skill sets learned in elementary school, improved upon in middle school, and perfected in high school. For those with cognitive and intellectual disabilities, the narrative is a little different.

Learning the basics requires a little more time and attention, as well as a great deal of focus and commitment to absorbing the material at hand.

Where the times tables came naturally to me as a child, I often sat with my brother — three years my senior — working on the same problem sets. At a certain point, my studies surpassed his. I was learning trigonometry while he was working through long-division problems.

While I often helped him with his studies, Bobby has ended up teaching me a great deal more than I could have ever taught him.

He's taught me patience in its simplest form, to accept the things that I cannot change as he lives every day like any other human being in spite of his cognitive setbacks. But he doesn't believe that he's different. And he's not.

My brother turned 23 this year. The Americans with Disabilities Act also celebrates 23 years in 2013, with the anniversary of its signing falling on today's date.

The act "prohibits discrimination and ensures equal opportunity for persons with disabilities in employment, state and local government services, public accommodations, commercial facilities, and transportation."

For 23 years, the United States has made tremendous progress in providing more opportunities to those with any kind of intellectual or physical disability.

Because of the ADA, my brother has been able to maintain a steady job. At first, I didn't know how the other employees would accept him, or if he'd even be able to adjust to the atmosphere.

Now, more than two years later, he's got a few employee-of-the-month awards under his belt and makes more money than he even knows how to spend. I've seen him grow as a person, more social and organized in every way. He still loves his movies, but he spends more time hanging out with friends on the weekend than with the television set.

All of his co-workers embrace him not only as a valued member of the team but also as a friend.

And they all know what his favorite De Niro movie is.

Steve King the saboteur

"For everyone who's a valedictorian," Rep. Steve King, R-Iowa, said last week about the nation's undocumented high-school students in an interview with the conservative website Newsmax, "there's another 100 out there that weigh 130 pounds, and they've got calves the size of cantaloupes because they're hauling 75 pounds of marijuana across the desert."

This is King's latest attempt to derail an immigration bill in which he insinuates that an overwhelming proportion of America's undocumented youth are actually well-trained, well-toned drug mules. It's a stretch even for a congressman whose bread and butter is waxing xenophobic from the electoral comfort of northwest Iowa, 1,100 miles from the Mexican border.

The House Republicans are working on their answer to the Senate immigration bill that passed with bipartisan support last month. The Senate plan would create a path to citizenship for many of the nation's 11 million undocumented immigrants, which many conservatives have decried as undeserved amnesty.

King is an unabashed opponent of amnesty of any kind. He was speaking about legislation similar to the DREAM Act, which would grant legal status to undocumented immigrants who were brought to the United States as children, when he made his most recent blunder.

King's claim that some variation of the DREAM Act would effectively legalize drug smugglers is, of course, extremely offensive, but his comments also jeopardize the passage of crucial immigration legislation.

Immigration reform has so far been a divisive issue in the Republican Party. On one side are conservatives who oppose the legalization of any illegal immigrants; on the other are those who believe that immigration reform is necessary for both the country and the long-term viability of the GOP.

As it stands, the GOP is at a major disadvantage with Latino voters, a group that becomes more influential every year. According to a 2012 Pew Research Poll, 61 percent of registered Latino voters said the Democratic Party has more concern for Latinos. Only 10 percent said the Republicans have more concern.

Republican leaders want very badly to change that dynamic.

The problem is that, for now, without a concrete proposal on the table, the GOP's immigration position is all about words. As such, King's blustering is about much more than simply getting attention.

Every time King opens his mouth on the subject of immigration, he damages the credibility of the GOP as a willing party in the reform talks and as a party that cares about the well-being of immigrants of all nationalities. Maintaining that credibility is important if the Republicans hope to lure Latino voters with an immigration bill. If the Republicans lose that credibility, they also lose the incentive to pass immigration reform of any kind.

That's why House GOP leaders have vociferously denounced King's comments instead of simply brushing them aside as the ramblings of a serial blusterer.

On Thursday, Speaker of the House John Boehner rightly called King's quote "hateful" and "ignorant."

Ultimately, this situation is very simple. There's a big problem that needs to be solved and Steve King's cartoonish bigotry makes it more difficult. For this we have King to thank, yes, but it's also the 200,063 residents of Iowa's 4th District who voted again for King and his deranged worldview last November.

On the subway to Tuanjiehu

jordyn-reiland@uiowa.edu

BEIJING — I heard the familiar beeping sound and rushed on the train only to be shoved into the person in front of me. We were all sardines in a can on Line 10 of the Beijing Subway.

But that was nothing new.

For those who frequent the Cambus at the University of Iowa, think of the most squished you've felt and multiply that by five.

This time I was on my way to Sanlitun for dinner. I scanned the map one last time to reassure myself I was headed in the right direction. I wasn't interested in turning around to find another train during this mad rush.

From Huixinxijiankou — my entrance point to the subway and the closest stop to China Daily — to my final destination was only five stops. I stood sandwiched among the hot, sweaty passengers. The trains are equipped with air conditioning, but when everyone is packed together, it doesn't always circulate, leaving the stench of body odor in its place.

And before I could grab onto a handrail we were on to the next stop: Shaoyaoju.

Several passengers leapt onto the train and scurried to the back and left and right side. There were no empty seats when I stepped onto the train, and now there were even fewer places to stand. I looked around at the crowd trying to spot a "familiar" face. I took pride in seeing Westerners or anyone who remotely looked like I did. Once I spotted a gentleman in a Michigan State T-shirt, and I nearly hugged him.

Unfortunately, I didn't see any Big Ten comrades, but I did enjoy overhearing some gossip the two next to me were sharing with each other.

I thrived on the conversations I could understand. I of course had no idea who these people were, but I could understand them, and it was glorious.

Sanyuanqiao intrigued me, because it was the transfer stop for the Airport Express. I stood and peered over at the passengers carrying large suitcases and wondered where they might be headed.

Home perhaps? Another adventure?

I was less than two weeks away from going home myself, but I wouldn't be venturing on the Airport Express. While it was is much cheaper than a taxi, it wasn't considered very luggage friendly and there was no way I would be able to fit myself and two large suitcases with me into this crowd.

At Liangmaqiao, my stomach rumbled, but I continued to reassure myself I was getting closer to my strawberry and Nutella crepe.

I remained standing with little wiggle room, and I knew I was going to have to use some gentle force to make it out of this train. I looked over at the boy next to me who was reading a book in Chinese, and I read along with him. I didn't understand a single character, but it was fun to pretend, and I had a bit more time to kill.

Those who aren't engrossed in books or their tablets were glued to their cell phones, and this was something I was familiar with. The only difference was it wasn't Facebook or Twitter — both banned in China — rather Sina Weibo and other Chinese social-media outlets.

We pass the Agricultural Exhibition Center, one more stop.

The subway is very user friendly for native English speakers because it repeats the directions in both English and Chinese.

And I can't help but chuckle when the robotic female voice recites the stops because it never sounds like it's supposed to.

"The next stop is Tuanjiehu. Please get ready for your arrival."

I elbowed my way to the front door anxiously awaiting the impending sea of people waiting to board the train I was exiting. Each waiting station has a centerline where passengers exit and on either side an area to enter the train.

Most of the time the lines are blurred, and it's just a big mess. But I made it out of the train in one piece and scurried off to my dinner at Crepanini.

It was just another day in Beijing where I was one of 22 million.

tor Davis was put in as a first-year member of the staff.

In year two, he expects the communication between the staff and players to be significantly better.

"When Greg came in last year, he was new to everything and everybody," Ferentz said. "If you've ever been through that, that's an uncomfortable thing.

"It's not an easy process, and I think there's a much better comfort level with everybody involved. I think things will be a lot smoother."

Davis recently brought a familiar name back into the fold: Bobby Kennedy, who spent seven seasons as the wide receivers coach at Texas, will take on that same role under Davis for Iowa.

Ferentz believes that addition, plus some added "firepower," is likely to push the Iowa offense to another level this fall.

"Part of our problem last year is we didn't have a lot of firepower," Ferentz said. "You probably noticed that if you watched us. I think we had a pretty good quarterback, but there wasn't a lot of firepower. So I think we're a little further down the road that way."

Former Texas quarterbacks Vince Young and Colt McCoy both led their teams to national championship appearances during their second year in Greg Davis' system. While it's unlikely this year's Iowa squad can match that type of success, there's no question the familiarity Davis has built over the past season will help the progression of the Hawkeye offense moving forward.

"I don't think there's any question about it," Ferentz said. "But we still have some questions to answer to. And that's what seasons are all about and how good stories unfold, hopefully."

lected as the unanimous league MVP if it hadn't been for her Hawkeye teammate Logic.

While Dixon impressed observers with her scoring, Logic did so with her complete game. She threatened to put up triple-doubles every single week — and a few weeks, she did. She finished the season with about as impressive of a stat line as one can have, averaging 31.6 points, 9.5 assists, and 11.6 rebounds per game.

The play of these two, combined with Theairra Taylor, should put to rest any worries about replacing Jaime Printy this upcoming season.

Many of the fans came out to North Liberty to watch the two incoming freshmen, Disterhoft and Alexa Kastanek.

Both of them showcased abilities that might exceed the lofty expectations placed on them. Where most freshmen could easily take a back seat and let a more experienced player take control, Disterhoft and Kastanek played key roles for their team on both ends of the court.

"I think we have big things coming from both of our freshmen," Dixon said. "They both work really hard, and they've fit in really well so far."

Possibly the biggest concern for the Hawkeyes coming into the season is in the frontcourt. But during the summer players proved they could fill it, including one unexpected player.

Claire Till stands at just 6-foot, but throughout league play, she proved she could play in the paint. Till gained valuable minutes playing center for her team and showed that she can play a guard-forward hybrid, if need be.

Joining Till, Doolittle seems ready to fill the duty of a post presence for the Hawkeyes. On top of her size, Doolittle has a consistent jumper that should be able to stretch opposing defenses out.

Still, she seeks to add certain aspects of her game to hang with the other centers of the Big Ten.

"I can definitely improve my strength," she said.

"Kind of get that Big Ten strength and shape."

Doolittle narrowed what she wanted to improve to the specifics, but plenty of other Hawkeyes said they wanted to become more complete players in general.

"You can always improve on something," Disterhoft said. "You've never made it to the top. And I think that's a great thing about basketball is that there's always something you can improve on, and all of us are always looking to get better."

Cotton is the only other returning receiver with starting experience (one game), and he caught just 12 balls for 172 yards a year ago. Senior Don Shumpert and the sophomore duo of Tevaun Smith and Jacob Hillyer combined for three catches last season.

Add the inexperience at receiver to the inexperience (in terms of starting) that will start at quarterback, and it becomes more crucial that Fiedorowicz plays a bigger role in the Iowa offense. His 45 catches for 433 yards, with 1 touchdown, were third on the team behind Keenan Davis and Martin-Manley.

"We thought C.J. improved during the spring," Ferentz said. "It sure is nice to have a guy who's played a lot of football and who's made improvements with each year."

Appendicitis slows Morris, Lomax

Iowa linebacker James Morris was energetic and healthy-looking during his few days in Chicago for the Big Ten media days. Many wouldn't have guessed, just by his appearance, that a week earlier, he was the "sickest [he] had been in [his] life."

One appendectomy later, all is well.

Morris, along with sophomore cornerback Jordan Lomax, had his appendix removed on July 16. Lomax's was a bit earlier.

The initial news startled Morris a bit, but after the surgery, he immediately felt better. The Solon native expects to be fully recovered and ready for the season-opening game against Northern Illinois on Aug. 31.

"After the surgery, it was a piece of cake. I was sore, but I still felt better than I did before," Morris said. "I really didn't want it to be taken out. I was hoping it was just a bug. But it ended up being the appendix."

Ferentz said, "We went 14 years with four appendixes, and then we get two in two weeks. Neither had incisions, so that was a good thing. It's just kind of random."

'I just want to get the trophy'

The 2013 season also renews a rivalry for the Hawkeyes, as they'll get to play Wisconsin for the first time since the 2010-11 season. The Badgers won that game, 31-30, in Iowa City.

"I'm anxious to go and play them again," Iowa linebacker Christian Kirksey said. "Last time we played Wisconsin was my freshman year, and we lost."

The matchup, which is slated for Nov. 2 in Kinnick Stadium, is one for a trophy. The Heartland Trophy, to be exact.

Kirksey said he has never seen the Heartland Trophy before. He doesn't care about what it looks like, either. But he's anxious to find out.

"I've never really paid attention to how the trophy looks," he said and laughed. "I just want to run over and get the trophy so I can see what it looks like afterwards."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get your chores out of the way, and head out to socialize or take care of personal needs. Emotions will be difficult to deal with, so avoid a confrontation until you reassess how you feel and how you want to respond.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take part in community or family events. Pleasure trips or traveling to a destination that will inspire or motivate you to move forward with a lifestyle change should be planned. Romance is on the rise, and personal dreams can be fulfilled.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Look deeper into any situation that doesn't appear to be quite right. The information you are given may be embellished. Opportunities will surface through people you've worked with in the past, but do your due diligence before making a promise.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Participate in the action. Get involved in functions that introduce you to new business associates. Rely on your insight and ability to show sincerity and dedication to the talents you have to share. Love is on the rise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Not everyone will be up-front with you, making it difficult for you to make a good decision regarding legal, medical, or financial matters. Set your sights on the changes that you feel most comfortable making, not what's being forced on you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A new look at an old idea will spark renewed interest. Call in favors from reliable sources. Expanding your interests will also help you explore partnerships that can influence you personally or professionally. Love is highlighted.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Arguments will not bring you any closer to getting what you want. Step back, rethink the situation you face, and you'll find a way to use your experience and your skills to come up with a workable solution.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Put your plans into motion. Get together with someone who inspires you, or take a trip that heightens your enthusiasm. Keep the momentum going, and strive for success. Romance is on the rise, and special plans will enhance your love life.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Put your money in a safe place, or invest it in something that promises to bring you a high return. Making changes to your home or personal life may be enticing, but don't go over budget, or you will end up feeling stressed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Partnerships should be your focus. Whether you are dealing with a personal or professional relationship, take time to listen to what's being said. A simple request can make your life easier. Avoid impulsive reactions. Focus on simple pleasures.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Give it your all, no matter what you pursue. A passionate response will get you the most in return. Taking a look back at your past will help you avoid making a similar mistake now. Put your money and possessions in a safe place.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Put your creative imagination to work for you. Invest in your talent, skills, and innovative ideas. Love is on the rise, and planning a romantic evening will enhance your personal life. Socialize, and take care of your personal needs.

Tracksters make All-Academic team again

The U.S. Track & Field and Cross Country Coaches Association have named the Iowa women's track and field team an all-academic team for the ninth-straight season.

The Hawkeyes combined for a team grade-point average of 3.19 through the 2013 indoor and outdoor seasons.

A team must have a 3.00-cumulative GPA at the end of the NCAA championship season in order to qualify for this distinction. Iowa was one of 10 Big Ten schools to make the list, which comprises 187 Division I women's track and field teams.

The association also named six Hawkeye student-athletes to the Division I All-Academic Track & Field team. Mareike Schrulle, Jasmine Simpson, Annemie Smith, Kyle Reid, Keaton Rickles, and Ben Stancombe were among the more than 1,000 Division I student-athletes to earn the honor. The Big Ten has 146 academic honorees — more than any other conference.

Student-athletes must compile a cumulative GPA of 3.25 in order to qualify for the All-Academic Track & Field Team, in addition to meeting either of the following athletic standards: for the indoor season, the student-athlete must have finished the regular season ranked in the national top 96 in an individual event or ranked in the national top 48 (collective listing) in a relay event on the official NCAA POP list provided by TFRRS.org; for the outdoor season, a student-athlete must have participated in any round of the NCAA Division I meet.

BIG MEDIA DAYS

Hawks seek 'firepower'

Iowa football coach Kirk Ferentz answers questions from the media during the Big Ten media days in Chicago. The Hawkeyes will begin their season on Aug. 31 against Northern Illinois. (The Daily Iowan/Cody Goodwin)

The Iowa offense, now in its second year under Greg Davis, is ready to take a step forward in 2013.

By RYAN PROBASCO
ryan-probasco@uiowa.edu

CHICAGO — It's difficult to pinpoint just how long it takes the offensive players to master their coordinator's schemes and philosophy. In college football — where personnel turnover is continual — the challenge becomes even greater.

As the Hawkeyes enter year two of the Greg Davis era, they'll try to improve what was the 113th-ranked offense in terms of points-per-game.

Offensive lineman Brett Van Sloten adressed the expectations he has from the returning starters on offense, and he looks forward to erasing the memory of 2012.

"Year two, a lot more is expected of us, not that it wasn't in year one," he said. "But we're ready to get this thing turned around come Aug. 4."

"We're hungry. A 4-8 season last year was very disappointing, so we're looking to be more consistent on a daily basis."

Senior linebacker Christian Kirksey is familiar with his teammates on the other side of the ball. And he was quick to echo Van Sloten's assertion that they'll bounce back from a disappointing year.

"They're making strides," the native of St. Louis said. "I think our receivers are really going to be great this year. We have a great backfield with Damon Bullock and Mark Weisman. I see that our offense is going to take strides."

The coaching staff and players didn't offer many excuses for what went wrong with the Hawkeye offense in 2012. But head coach Kirk Ferentz did note the uncomfortable situation offensive coordina-

Bright future for hoops

The 2013 Game Time League showed glimpses of the future for the Iowa women's basketball team, and it looks bright.

The Game Time League concluded Wednesday night in North Liberty with Ally Disterhoft and Bethany Doolittle's team being crowned champions of the summer league.

The Hawkeye fans who attended were given a glimpse of what to expect for the upcoming Iowa women's basketball season. Among them were a few new faces and plenty of Hawkeyes that Black and Gold fans have grown to love.

Co-MVPs Melissa Dixon and Sam Logic shone brightly during the summer months. Dixon simply couldn't be stopped from scoring. Fans became accustomed to seeing last year's Big Ten Sixth Player of the Year sink 3s from all over the court.

But Dixon's summer coach, Randy Larson, noticed that her game has become more complete and not solely reliant on the long ball.

"She didn't have that drag step lay-up last year — at least, I didn't see it," said Larson. "She just wants to keep getting better. She's pretty special."

Dixon would have been se-

BIG NOTEBOOK

C.J. to be one of the keys

The Hawkeye football team's 2012 doldrums are a thing of the past as the 2013 squad is ready to win and get back to the postseason.

By CODY GOODWIN
cody-goodwin@uiowa.edu

CHICAGO — Plenty of questions hover over the Iowa offense for this upcoming 2013 season. The question everybody wants to know — that is, who will be the starting quarterback — still remains unanswered.

Rumors abound on that front, of course. But what is set in stone (barring any sort of injury or illness) is that C.J. Fiedorowicz will be there to catch the ball from whoever throws it to him.

The senior tight end will be a staple in the 2013 Iowa offense, said head coach Kirk Ferentz, primarily because of the experience he'll bring to the huddle.

"I think C.J. is a guy that, whoever plays is going to rely on," Ferentz said. "With our youth at receiver, our inexperience at receiver, it just makes more sense to integrate C.J."

Kevonte Martin-Manley returns to the Hawkeye offense as the most experienced receiver. He's recorded 82 catches in 25 career games — last year, Martin-Manley caught 52 passes for 571 yards and two scores.

Behind Martin-Manley, though, is a drop-off in experience at receiver. Jordan
