Hancher gets razed

More than five years after some of the University of Iowa campus was overcome by floodwaters, officials will begin the process of taking down old Hancher Auditorium today to make way for a new facility.

At 6 a.m. today, construction crews will begin pouring the project's single-largest concrete pour at 1,400 cubic yards. At 9 a.m., a wrecking ball will begin dismantling the original Hancher facility, according to a UI press release.

Officials will also participate in an emergency preparedness and safety drill after noon on Monday at the site of the crane being used for the new Hancher facility.

Much of Hancher was shut down by floodwaters that exceeded stage level in June 2008. The Hancher/Voxman/Clapp complex should be demolished by the end of the year, following several delays over the years. Officials began and completed the asbestos abatement of the old facility this summer.

Charles Swanson, the Hancher executive director, previously told The Daily Iowan that the new facility comes at the right time.

"It ended up being a real positive end," Swanson told the D/I in the summer. "The old building was very tired, had been great to close to 40 years in spite of the flood. There would've been a lot of other things that we would've had to do to bring the original building into the 21st century."

Hancher's replacement has a projected completion date of May 2016, with the old facility being demolished by January 2014.

When Candace Weibener first started as an orchestra teacher at Iowa City High, there wasn't even a room for the students to practice. Forty-two years later, not only is there an entire new arts wing built at the school, but an entire room has been named after her.

City High officials held a dedication ceremony on Sunday for the new performing arts wing that included the naming of the orchestra room in addition to student performances and official speeches.

Downtown rules draw concerns

The Iowa City community has many concerns about the Pedestrian Mall ordinance that will go into effect on Thursday.

By ABIGAIL MEIER
abigail-meier@uiowa.edu

Darcy Norem came to Iowa City in 2010 to look for work in construction but was unable to find a job. Without a job or source of income, Norem said, he was forced onto the streets and lost his leg due to frostbite in winter. He used the Pedestrian Mall as a safe place to gather with his friends, but now he faces new living restrictions.

"I have nothing, no home," Norem said. "When a person doesn't have a place to go, where else are we supposed to go?"

Following the recent passing of a new ordinance that will restrict certain behavior downtown, community members have expressed conflicting opinions about its approaching implementation.

On Sept. 17, the Iowa City City Council passed the ordinance on a 6-1 vote, with Jim Throgmorton having the dissenting vote.

The ordinance specifically prohibits the storage of personal property downtown, the use of public electrical outlets for personal property, soliciting at parking meters and Pedestrian Mall entrances, lying on planters, and lying on benches from 5 a.m. to 10 p.m. It will go into effect on Thursday.

Bruegger's sets reopening date

Despite several fits and starts, bagels are finally on their way back to downtown Iowa City.

Officials with the 715 S. Riverside Drive Bruegger's Bagels location said the downtown restaurant, rebuilt on the former Iowa Avenue location's land, are targeting an Oct. 11 opening.

The pending opening date follows a nearly two-year absence for the establishment, once housed in a historic two-story structure at 225 Iowa Ave.

On the morning of Sept. 24, 2011, a fire started at the downtown Bruegger's, before spreading to nearby buildings on Iowa Avenue and Linn Street; Taknam, Yacht Club, Studio 13, and AKAR suffered water and smoke damage.

The nearby historic Van Patten House, 9 S. Linn St., was demolished in January 2012.

Jeff Davidson, the director of the city's Planning & Community Development Department, said despite the loss of a historic, well-known property, a number of benefits are clear.

"Even though we hated to see it burn down, no one was hurt, and this fits in with building codes and has improved safety," he said.

While Davidson said its no secret downtown zoning would have allowed a much larger property, he said he is excited to see it rebuilt.

The it's also comes among several months of delays.

Officials first told the D/I the Bruegger's would reopen in early January 2013, but that was later pushed to a date sometime in July.

Davidson said back-and-forth negotiations with the company were a primary reason for the delays, adding that the Burlington, Vt.-based chain originally wanted to construct a one-story building.

City building codes, however, require that any new downtown projects stand at least two stories tall.

Today, nearly 30 years after the first Bruegger's opened, the company operates more than 300 Bruegger's bakeries in 26 states, the District of Columbia, and Canada.

Man charged with criminal mischief

A Cedar Falls man has been accused of damaging a person's bedroom.

Tanner Cooke, 22, was charged Sept. 8 with third-degree criminal mischief.

According to an Iowa City police complaint, Cooke stayed at the person's house for the weekend. The two went downtown and returned in the early morning hours of Sept. 8.

Cooke was sleeping in the person's bedroom, and the person was on the couch in the living room. Cooke proceeded to destroy numerous items in the bedroom.

Witnesses stated they heard loud noises and banging coming from the bedroom and saw Cooke in the bedroom after the damage had occurred.

He allegedly told witnesses he would pay for the damage, but he did not remember causing it.

The damage costs are approximately $864.

Third-degree criminal mischief is an aggravated misdemeanor.

Man charged with drug violations

An Iowa City man has been accused of selling cocaine to an undercover cop.

Juan Vazquez, 39, was charged Jan. 17 and Feb. 21 with controlled-substance violations and Sept. 19 with a tax-stamp violation.

According to Coralville police complaints, on Jan. 17 an undercover officer met with Vazquez and reportedly purchased one eight ball of cocaine for $200 of U.S. currency whose serial numbers had been recorded.

On Feb. 21, an undercover officer reportedly purchased one ounce of cocaine from Vazquez and paid him $1,100 in U.S. currency.

Most recently, on Sept. 19, members of the Drug Task Force conducted a search with a warrant of Vazquez's residence, where they allegedly found one ounce of cocaine. He had more than seven grams without the proper tax stamp, the complaint said.

Controlled-substance violation is a Class-C felony. Tax-stamp violation is a Class-D felony.

Iowa loses jobs in August

Iowa lost nearly 1,000 jobs last month, after a steady period of residents picking up work, Iowa Workforce Development reported Sept. 20.

The 900 jobs shed in August resulted in a slight bump up in the state's unemployment rate, to 4.9 percent.

The seasonally adjusted rate stood at 4.8 percent in July and 5.3 percent a year earlier, the Des Moines-based employment security agency said.

August marks only the second month this year that the state saw employment numbers fall; March had a decline of 4,700 jobs.

The cuts were widespread, with transportation and trade cutting 1,300 jobs, professional and business services, falling 1,200 positions, and the leisure and hospitality sector slicing 900 jobs.

Manufacturing, long considered as one of the stronger state job outlooks, declined by 500.

But not all sectors suffered, and the state has 19,800 more jobs last month than it did in August 2012.

Education and health services saw gains of 500 jobs, and construction grew by 200. The strongest sector, however, came in government, which grew by 3,700 jobs.

"Encouraged by the upward trend in total employment for the year, more Iowans are entering the labor force," Teresa Wahlert, the director of Iowa Workforce Development, said in the release. "Iowa's labor force reached its highest level for the year in August at 1,655,300."

The losses in transportation and trade were a result of a drop in retail trade, the state report said, ending a four-month job-growth pattern in that sector.

Construction — which saw the largest jobs benefit, was up 4,500 jobs this year, followed by manufacturing and professional and business services, which both saw 4,400 more jobs in the same time period.

Despite the loss, the state's unemployment rate in August, it still bucked a national trend.

The U.S. unemployment rate last month stood several percentage points higher. The decrease to 7.3 percent from 7.4 percent in July came because fewer people looked for work.

Man charged with interference causing injury

An Iowa City man has been accused of pushing an officer.

Christopher Halverson, 39, was charged Sept. 21 with interference with official acts causing bodily injury.

According to a University of Iowa police complaint, Halverson was denied entry into the press box at Kinnick Stadium twice.

Halverson and a guest became upset and threw their tickets on the ground. They began to leave, but officers asked them to come back.

When an officer approached him from the back, grabbing his arm, Halverson reportedly swung around to resist and pushed the officer into the brick column.

The officer suffered a scraped arm as a result.

Interference with official acts causing bodily injury is an aggravated misdemeanor.

Man charged with reckless use of explosive

A Coralville man has been accused of throwing firecrackers on the Pedestrian Mall.

Sami Amin, 18, was charged Sept. 21 with reckless use of fire/explosives.

According to an Iowa City police complaint, officers were dispatched after receiving reports of loud banging sounds.

After being detained, Amin reportedly admitted to throwing firecrackers in a crowd outside Marco's Grilled Cheese stand, located on the Ped Mall.

The fireworks allegedly hit a man on the side of the face. The man declined to press charges.

Witnesses identified Amin as the person lighting and setting off the fireworks in a crowd of people.

Because of the explosions, a witness had to take off his shoe to put out a small fire.

Amin also had filled water balloons in his backpack.

He reportedly told officials he did this because he thought it would be amusing. He did, however, admit to making poor decisions.

Women charged with theft

An Iowa City woman has been accused of stealing merchandise from Kohl's.

Myosha Johnson, 23, was charged Sept. 21 with third-degree theft.

According to a Coralville police complaint, Johnson concealed merchandise from Kohl's, 2795 Commerce Drive, valued at $504.

She allegedly then attempted to leave without payment.

Third-degree theft is an aggravated misdemeanor.

During her remarks at the ceremony, Wiebener said despite the lack of available facilities when she first started she did not let it stop her from producing a quality program.

"Our primary goal was to always provide the best possible music experience for the students," she said. "People used to tell us that if the results of the program weren't so fine, maybe we would have a better chance at getting new facilities."

Janet Smith, a former student of Wiebener and now a City High parent, emphasized that Wiebener had a tremendous influence on her life and said she influenced her decisions to become a teacher.

"Ms. Wiebener demands excellence and provides all the support a student needs to achieve it," she said. "She gets more out of kids than almost any teacher I've ever known."

Wiebener, now retired, said she was very surprised by the dedication and had no idea officials were having the discussion.

"It's a lovely gesture," she said. "I'm very, very touched, and really very honored that they would do this."

City High sophomore and orchestra student Maria McCoy said she believes Wiebener deserved the dedication.

"She just worked so hard, and she was here for so long," she said. "She helped so many kids find music."

After the ceremony, attendees toured the new arts wing. The project planning began in the fall of 2010, when City High Principal John Bacon began in that position.

Features of the new wing include brand-new band, choir, and vocal music rehearsal rooms, new practice rooms, and state-of-the-art sound systems. The old band room was also repurposed into three classrooms and a new computer lab.

Construction began in the fall of 2012 and lasted through the summer. The new wing officially opened on the first day of the 2013-14 academic year.

In total, the project ended up costing $6.2 million.

"It's been an incredible process," Bacon said. "We had really outgrown the previous facilities. We were in need of more space."

Jim Berry, the director of choral activities, came to City High this year after leaving Bettendorf High, which just recently updated its fine-arts facilities.

He said it has been interesting to go from a school where he was involved completely in the planning process, to a school where the project is already completed.

"You learn how to make it work," he said. "It doesn't matter where you go, nothing is going to be perfect, but this is pretty close."

Bacon said it has been rewarding to see students using and enjoying the new facilities.

"Kids in the performing arts devote so much and really give their heart and soul to their craft," he said. "To be able to have them have a beautiful facility to operate in is extremely satisfying."

PED MALL

"Ordinances like these will have a learning curve," said Iowa City police Officer David Schwindt. "My goal is to enforce and educate without pushing people out of the area."

Schwindt plans on working with people to make sure the public understands the new loitering policies before issuing citations. He plans to enforce the law by passing out informational fliers with a map of areas affected by the new law in the hopes it will reduce the number of violations.

"Voluntary compliance is always our goal," said Geoff Fruin, the assistant to the city manager. "It is our hope that we will not have to write any citations related to the new regulations."

Before a citation is issued, a oral warning is required by the ordinance. Fruin said he hopes this new ordinance will work in tandem with other ongoing efforts to make the downtown a more inviting and welcoming space for all people to enjoy.

Throgmorton said he anticipates problems will arise from this new ordinance.

"The ordinance is unlikely to improve the situation and might make it worse," he said. "It may even shift the problem somewhere else."

He said the only good thing about the new ordinance is that it turns the public's attention to the deeper issue of homelessness in the city.

"The best thing that came out of the debate is that we have an opportunity to create a better community wide response to the underlined problem," he said.

The Daily Iowan previously reported that City Councilor Connie Champion said she had concerns related to safe behavior in the downtown area.

"I'm not against homelessness, they don't frighten me, and I'm not against poverty, they don't frighten me, either," Champion said. "What frightens me is the behavior of some people."

Norem said the city should try to provide more for the homeless community in Iowa City instead of pushing them away. The Nevada, Iowa, native said he does not plan to seek out legal help, but if given the chance, he would be willing to sign a petition.

University of Iowa junior Nicholas Eastburn said he, too, hopes the city will address the larger issues.

"I think the city is finally realizing we have a homeless problem and that we need to do something about it," he said.

Saf Ibrik, the owner of Aspen Leaf, 125 S. Dubuque St., he said the city's decision will make the area a safer place to be.

"Whatever the city and the community tries to do to help the safety of everyone that walks through the area, we are all for it," Ibrik said.

Pedestrian Mall Ordinance

The Iowa City community has many concerns about the Pedestrian Mall ordinance that was passed Sept. 17 by the Iowa City City Council.

- Ordinance passed Sep. 17
- Ordinance passed in a 6-1 vote with Councilor Jim Throgmorton having the dissenting vote
- Ordinance goes into effect Thursday

Sources: Iowa City Police Officer David Schwindt

Schwindt said the goal of the ordinance is to not push anyone out of the area or discourage anyone from coming. He hopes to enforce the idea of creating an environment that is safe and everyone can enjoy.

"This is not the city's attack to homeless in downtown," Schwindt said. "There is nothing preventing the people from downtown from being there, and I want to make sure everyone feels welcome."

Darcy Normen asks for spare change from passersby on the Ped Mall on Sept. 21. A new city ordinance will ban many activities on the Ped Mall. (The Daily Iowan/Callie Mitchell)

Sacramental Poetics

At the advent of early secularism, the sacraments of the Church, as a form of signifying, broadened into the wider culture, rather than disappeared. Sacramental poetics describes languages that says more than is explicit, that points beyond itself, transcends itself. During the Reformation, intense debates about the meaning of the Eucharist became the occasion for the worldview we regard as "modern" to begin to be articulated, and this fledgling modernism swept into its purview a vast array of concerns and disciplines: theology, metaphysics, aesthetics, and politics were re-imagined. In short, the Eucharist was a lightning rod, a focus where tremendous energy gathered, or better, a lightning bolt—for it jolted sensibilities into a new world order. But the older sacramental concerns—with justice, love, the meaning of the material world and throughout all, with signifying—do not disappear. Ironically, Reformed poets focus intently on these aspects of the Eucharist.

Send daughters to college

Sri Ponnada
Sri-ponnada@uiowa.edu

Last week, I stumbled upon a very compelling article on a Catholic blog, “Fix the Family,” titled, “6 Reasons (+2) to Not Send Your Daughter to College.” After reading it and learning all the risks of college life, I couldn’t help but wonder: What the hell were my parents thinking when they let me come to the University of Iowa?

It’s not that author Raylan Alleman doesn’t believe in educating women, or that he wants to oppress women by taking opportunities away from them and trapping them in subservient roles — it’s just that college is a “near occasion of sin” for girls. Thank God for Alleman, who opened up my ignorant eyes enough to realize that college is, in fact, nothing more than the devil’s paradise.

I’m kidding, of course. Despite Alleman’s concerns, I’m not too concerned that while I’m in college I will:

1. “Attract the wrong types of men”

Yes, college is full of sleazy guys. But so is the rest of the world. In general, going to college will probably increase a woman’s chance of ending up with a man who is going somewhere in life because he is likely better educated than the average non-college guy. A successful, upstanding gentleman may also want a woman who is intelligent and won’t rely on him to buy her everything. Attaining higher education will ensure women of such intelligence and financial independence.

2. “Be in a near occasion of sin”

College may promote promiscuity, but it really isn’t the sexual utopia that people like Alleman imagine (or desperately want) it to be. According to a study published online last year by the Journal of Adolescent Health, romantic relationships are still the most common context for sexual behavior, at least for women in their first year of college.

Now, you may not agree with women having premarital sex under any circumstances, but if you think about it, college isn’t the only place people have sex. Nearly 50 percent of U.S. high-school students surveyed by CDC in 2011 said they had had sexual intercourse. Sex is everywhere. So, if you’re trying to hide your daughter from it, you may as well just keep her locked in a dark closet.

3. “Not learn to be a wife and mother”

This one may be true. I looked to see if UI offered “Sandwich-making 101,” but I couldn’t find anything.

No, college may not make you into June Cleaver, but it does prepare you for life’s roller-coaster ride. You’re exposed to new cultures and ideas, you learn to communicate with others, and you learn real skills that will get you a job and enable you to provide for your family (if you want to have one).

4. “Regret it”

College isn’t easy. There are times when I ask myself why I ever came here. I’ve had a lot of unpleasant experiences — from really bad grades to fake friends to scary nights and tons of other weird situations that I managed to land myself in. But in the end, I don’t regret any of it. I’m grateful for those experiences all because I know they made me the woman I am today.

At the end of the day, the claims that Alleman makes are so ridiculous that I shouldn’t even be upset about them. It’s just incredibly surprising to see that there are still people in this world who hold such absurd and archaic views.

Parents, if you can, send your daughter to college.

Poverty and race in Iowa

Racial inequality has plagued the United States since before it won independence from the British Empire in the late 18th century. To this day, although substantially less potent than it once was, the racial disparity is still with us.

Released last week, the American Community Survey’s 2012 results are startling, especially for African Americans and Native Americans. Nationally, both groups are nearly three times as likely as whites to live in poverty, while Latinos are about 2.3 times more likely to live in poverty than whites.

Looking at the degree of racial inequality in Iowa is like looking at the national levels on steroids for blacks and Native Americans.

In Iowa, blacks are about 3.5 times more likely, Native Americans are 4.2 times more likely, and Latinos are about 2.4 times more likely than whites to live in poverty.

Median incomes follow a similar trend between the United States and Iowa.

Nationally, whites tend to earn about 70 percent more than blacks, 60 percent more than Native Americans, but in Iowa, whites generally earn 90 percent more than blacks and 150 percent more than Native Americans. Both nationally and in Iowa, whites typically earn 40 percent more than Latinos.

Income inequality is one thing, but when poverty and income so strongly adhere to racial lines, something is wrong. This is a national problem, but the even greater level of inequality in Iowa highlights the need for action from state and local governments to help decrease the racial income gap.

Poverty tends to become concentrated, and because the correlation between race and income is so strong, city neighborhoods usually fill up with poor minorities while whites flee to the suburbs. Because school districts rely on property taxes for most of their revenue, concentrated poverty inevitably limits schools’ access to resources and puts more stress on students and their families. That hurts students’ abilities to perform well, making it harder to graduate from high school or go to college and eroding their potential income. This creates a feedback loop that continues to reinforce neighborhood poverty.

The crime, violence, and other stressors that often follow in the wake of high poverty concentrations further entrench poverty in neighborhoods both by creating fear and stigmatizing the area, scaring away wealthier residents. This creates a “poverty trap,” according to a study by Harvard Professor Rick J. Sampson. Naturally, these areas can be hard to escape and without government intervention, will probably persist, Sampson writes.

One popular solution is improving access to school choice and implementing charter schools. Poor minority students can then attend higher quality schools, often in the suburbs, or local schools can adopt unorthodox measures and see better outcomes, raising students’ income as adults. In reality, charter schools usually become more segregated than ordinary public schools, and empirical evidence strongly favors integrated schools, according to a report by the Economic Policy Institute.

The report explained that simply busing students around doesn’t usually work because higher performing schools in the suburbs refuse to participate or limit how many students they’ll accept. In order to successfully desegregate school districts, neighborhoods themselves must be desegregated. This for example could involve cheap public housing scattered throughout suburbia, making it easier for poor minorities to leave their old neighborhoods.

Regardless of the solution, governmental action is necessary to improve the livelihoods of millions who are at a huge disadvantage because of something as trivial as their skin color.

Re: Bus ad is racist

It is very disheartening to see racism displayed in our community. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, 92.8 percent of Iowans are white, whereas African Americans make up 3.2 percent of the population in Iowa. In Coralville, the statistics are 79.4 percent white and 7.9 percent African American. With that being said, consider the target audience of an ad/public service announcement that can be found in Coralville city buses.

The ad states, “When it comes to our safety, we can always use an extra pair of eyes. Look around. Be aware. If something does not look right, let us know.” The message in and of itself is fair and unbiased, until you look directly next to the message. There is a close-up picture of a male, African American youth or young adult with a cold, unhappy expression. Because of the zoom, expression of the male, and the background of the picture not removed to match the background of the ad, it could easily be assumed to be a mug shot.

It is said that a picture is worth a thousand words, and I feel like many, many words can be said about this picture. Considering that the majority of Iowans and Coralville citizens are white, is this picture conveying a person who is being “aware” for something that does not “look right,” or is this picture an indirect message of who to look out for in our city? When I look at this, I see Coralville telling the public that this picture is to aid in citizens identifying who “doesn’t look right” so that we can observe them and call the police. This is another prime example of racism, basically wanting citizens to watch out for African Americans for “our safety.”

Some might be apathetic about this ad, because they aren’t directly affected by such negativity and racism, especially if you are non-African American. But consider the ramifications. This ad is implicitly telling African Americans that we are watching you, because we think you are a threat to our safety. That can be really hurtful and damaging for someone who is African American, especially coming from the community where they live.

This ad should not be on a city bus. African Americans, along with all other minorities, are constantly striving to overcome everyday social injustices, and a government-sponsored ad has no place in public transportation or anywhere. This ad could easily have used any other picture, such as using a picture that includes more than one person, used a female instead of a male, or maybe used the same person who looked more like they were happy or just looking observant.

Please, just make this ad a conversation. Whether you agree or not, talk about it with your friends, neighbors, or whoever. Just talk about it. If you feel like I do, please make a stand. Call the Coralville Public Transportation. Write about it. Spread the word. Do something — that is how change happens.

The psychology of ‘Sesame St.’

Barrett Sonn
Barrett-sonn@uiowa.edu

The American children’s television series “Sesame Street” just opened its 44th season last week, and it has a new and improved version of the Cookie Monster. This season, instead of immediately eating cookies when he has a craving, he will instead fight his desires and use the power of self-restraint to control his addiction.

The goal, naturally, is to get kids to emulate Cookie Monster 2.0 and use self-restraint in their own lives. Self-restraint is supposedly beneficial, with supporting evidence (and the Cookie Monster’s newfound attitude) being attributed to Stanford University’s Marshmallow Test that took place almost 50 years ago.

In that study, kids were given two options: one marshmallow now or two marshmallows 15 minutes later. The ones who chose the latter showed more success later on in life, from better grades to healthier Body Mass Indexes.

The question Sesame Street is endeavoring to answer is clear: Can you teach children the concept of self-restraint? Personally, I’m skeptical. Have you ever seen a kid say, “You know what, I can wait for that cereal until the next time we come to the store?” I think not.

According to more modern research, you can’t teach restraint, at least not with cookies and marshmallows. A 2012 University of Rochester study re-examined the Stanford results, did its own studies, and revealed the Stanford tests may have been flawed. The Rochester tests showed that kids who chose to receive two marshmallows later probably weren’t displaying restraint but strategic reasoning, meaning they wait if they believe it’s the rational choice.

The Rochester kids

were divided into two test groups: the unreliable and the reliable. In the first of two tests, the children in the unreliable group were given crayons and were promised better crayons if they waited, but the promise was broken (and the promise was kept for the reliable). Then the marshmallows came out, and the Rochester researchers found that the children in the unreliable group tended to eat the one marshmallow while the ones in the reliable group tended to wait for two. The kids in the unreliable group saw the risk in waiting and adjusted accordingly.

The kids at Rochester — and likely the kids and Stanford, too — were thinking strategically in an attempt to maximize their marshmallow consumption. So maybe the capacity to think strategically, not restraint, is why the two-marshmallow kids from the Stanford test were more successful later on in life.

It can’t be an accident that corporate self-help gurus continually tout the benefits of strategic thinking, can it? Again, I think not.

This all means that “Sesame Street” and the Cookie Monster might teach the wrong lesson. Self-restraint is important, but if the goal of “Sesame Street” goal is to churn out a generation of super babies, it should forgo Cookie Monster’s lesson on restraint and introduce the Count to game theory.

Yes, “Sesame Street” might inadvertently be making a noob move here with the new Cookie Monster, but older individuals such as you and I can learn from its mistake and apply our newfound knowledge — that strategic thinkers outperform their non-strategic counterparts — to our advantage.

By improving our ability to game out scenarios and identify competitive advantages, we can maximize our returns in life and maybe our marshmallow intake, without having to give up our cookies.

General and unsolicited advice:

- If you're gonna cut holes in a painting to creepily or lustfully spy on your houseguests, always choose a portrait, never a landscape.
- "In individuals, insanity is rare; but in groups, parties, nations, and epochs, it is the rule." — My Teddy Bear
- When comparison shopping, always go to stores being picketed with signs ascribing "UNFAIR WAGES" or "WE NEED BETTER INSURANCE." That store is passing the savings on to YOU.
- Next time you're at IHOP or Perkin's or — god help you — Denny's and see any form of law-enforcement officer, feel free to say as loudly as possible that you can smell bacon. Because you can.
- Whenever somebody asks you an indignant question (for example, "Did you really eat that entire Stuffed Crust Pepperoni Lover's pizza by yourself in a single sitting, Andrew?"), you can usually eschew their ire with this simple reply: "Yes. AS THE PROPHECIES FORETOLD."
- One pump of hand sanitizer sanitizes hands. Two pumps of hand sanitizer sanitizes hands and the upper thighs of your jeans.
- Urban Outfitters is nothing more than a thrift store where all the clothes cost way too much. Just go to a thrift store, hippy. They're less likely to care about that can of PBR, anyway.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Think about what's going on in your personal life, and consider whether you are paying enough attention to what you value the most. Personal and professional partnerships are undergoing changes that must be handled carefully.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Trust your intuition. If something appears to be wrong with a relationship or group you are involved with, take care of the problem before it's too late. Speaking overtly will clear the air so you can make a decision to stay or to leave.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep a fresh attitude and an honest approach to whatever you do or say. Spectacular opportunities can develop if you network and interact with people who are traveling down a similar path as you. Communication will bring good fortune.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may have something good to offer, but trying to talk others into following suit will not be easy. Don't worry about what others do or say when what's important is how you turn what you are doing into a success.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make whatever changes or adjustments necessary to ensure that you can handle what needs to be done on your own. A relationship problem will limit your productivity. Take better care of your health and emotional well-being.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Plan a vacation or begin one. Moving about or embracing new information or possibilities will prove to be beneficial. A gentle nudge will get others to pitch in and help you finish whatever needs to be done. Love is in the stars.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A financial deal, settlement, or legal matter is apparent, but it will be important that you don't let it limit your freedom or stifle your connection to someone who has helped you in the past. A medical issue shouldn't be ignored.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Enjoy personal encounters that allow you to share your thoughts and make plans for the future. Use your imagination, and you will open up a host of new possibilities that can lead to a healthier and better lifestyle.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Visit someone who can offer you information that will help to guide you in a better direction. Take better care of your emotional and physical self. What you do to improve your image will turn out well.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You judge and initiate whatever it is you want to see happen. By taking control, you will prove that you have what it takes to get things done. An offer will put you at odds regarding what to do next. Don't act in haste.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stay focused on deals and money matters, along with settlements and legal issues, and you will come out on top. Don't let a personal emotional problem stand between you and success. Make choices that will improve your life.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Push a little harder, and you will open up doors that have been closed to you in the past. A deal will lead to prosperity, and good connections with people who have something to offer. Someone from your past can help you excel.

At the start of the second quarter, the Iowa defense held the Broncos to another three-and-out. Western Michigan punter J. Schroeder knocked his punt 43 yards, but Iowa wide receiver Kevonte Martin-Manley took it all the way to the house for 83 yards. Martin-Manley had one other punt return for a score in the game, that one for 63 yards. Martin-Manley is the only player in Iowa history with two punt returns for scores in the same game.

Iowa cornerback B.J. Lowery set an Iowa record of his own on Sept. 21, returning two interceptions for touchdowns, one for 35 yards, and the other for 13, to become the first Iowa player in history to do so in the same game.

Andrew Haldeman

Haldeman scored the lone points for his squad, a 23-yard field goal in the second quarter to cut Iowa's lead to 24-3.

THUMBS UP

Spreading the love. Iowa quarterbacks found eight different receivers during the contest, with no receiver getting more than two catches. Iowa passers are using all their weapons, making it a guessing game for opposing defenses as to where the ball is going.

THUMBS DOWN

Turnovers. Iowa's quarterbacks were able to protect the ball when it left their hands, but some of its running backs couldn't help but let go of the pig skin. True freshman LeShun Daniels Jr. and Jordan Canzeri each coughed the ball up once. Such turnovers will be more costly once Big Ten play starts next week.

LOOK AHEAD

Iowa will open its Big Ten season next weekend when it travels to Minneapolis to take on Minnesota in the latest installment of the battle for Floyd of Rosedale. Iowa currently holds the bronzed pig in its football facility, but the Gophers had its rights for the two seasons prior.

Soccer falls in first Big Ten match

In its first Big Ten test of the season, Iowa loses to Michigan, 2-1.

By JACOB SHEYKO
jacob-sheyko@uiowa.edu

The Iowa soccer team picked up its first loss of the season Sunday as No. 15 Michigan defeated the Hawkeyes, 2-1, in Iowa's first Big Ten match of the season.

The loss puts Iowa's record at 8-1 for the season, 0-1 in conference play.

"Overall, that's probably going to be a team over there that's going to win a lot of games in the Big Ten," head coach Ron Rainey said. "We have to let this hurt a little bit and then rededicate ourselves to getting a little bit better in both the attacking and defense."

The first score of the game came by the foot of Michigan's Nkem Ezurike in the 22nd minute. Wolverine goalkeeper Taylor Bucklin launched a free kick from Michigan's side of the field and eventually found Ezurike, who shot from just outside the box and finished in the right corner of the net.

Iowa responded at the 68:20 mark to tie the match at 1. Junior Cloe Lacasse created space down the right side of the field and dished the ball off to Ashley Catrell. Catrell sent the ball left to Bri Toelle, who shot the ball over the Wolverine goalkeeper into the top right corner of the net.

The goal was Toelle's second of the season and her first goal during Big Ten play for the Hawkeyes.

"Ultimately, it's a team effort, but we combined a few good passes and there was a good cross in," Toelle said. "I just happened to be in the right place at the right time and took a nice touch and finished it."

Responding quickly, the Wolverines scored a goal in the next minute at the 69:19 mark of the match to take the lead again at 2-1. Wolverine midfielder Kayla Mannino received a pass from Ezurike and shot over the head of Iowa goalkeeper Hannah Clark into the top right corner of the net.

The goal created a familiar feeling for the Hawkeyes, who in their recent match against Northern Iowa gave up a similar goal within a minute of scoring a goal of their own.

"We just have to regroup better and connect as an 11 and just say we're going to be better defensively," senior Caitlin Brown said. "That's not acceptable."

The match was the Hawkeyes' first conference test of the season and gave the players a taste of what to expect for the rest of season — in particular the physicality of the match.

"This is what most of the games will look like," Rainey said. "I would say that Michigan is not the most physical team in the league, but they played hard. Both teams played hard today."

Despite the losing effort, Iowa maintained control of most aspects of the game. One in particular was the Hawkeyes' stretch of outshooting their opponents — they outshot Michigan 12-7.

Although the Hawkeyes started the Big Ten season with a loss, members of the team were optimistic in that they remained competitive with the Wolverines.

"Hopefully, what this does is it shows that we can be really competitive with a ranked team in the country," Rainey said. "That's something we should be pretty excited about."

"We haven't had an abundance of big plays offensively or special teams-wise where we've reversed it and scored points, and that was great to see."

Lowery and Martin-Manley were both a part of the 2010 Hawkeye recruiting class. And usually in practice, they're competing against each other. For them to be making highlight-reel plays together, Lowery said, it gave the players a unique feeling on the sideline and in the locker room after the game.

"It was a special day for us, because usually we're going head to head," Lowery said. "We're always competing against each other. But today, with what we were able to do, it's a big step for us."

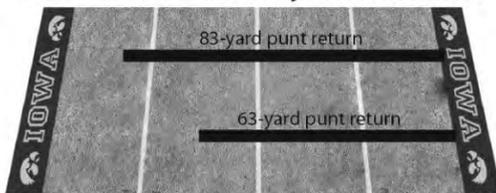

"All those guys, we came in together. So to see someone else make a play like that is pretty big for all of us. We're celebrating together."

Senior linebacker James Morris noticed the progress Lowery made in the off-season. His hard work and dedication, Morris said, makes Lowery's recent emergence as the playmaker of the Iowa defense unsurprising.

Lowery has 3 interceptions in the Hawkeyes' last two games. His two touchdown performance on Sept. 21 followed an Iowa State game in which the native of Cincinnati made the highlight play of the year by grabbing a leaping, one-handed interception in the fourth quarter.

"I was hoping that maybe I'd get one, too," Morris said about Lowery's interceptions. "But really I'm excited for BJ. He's a great guy and practices hard. He deserves all those things. It's not a coincidence, you see the plays he makes both last week and this week. He's really playing his best football right now."

Iowa will take a 3-1 record into Big Ten play, which is scheduled to begin this weekend. Minnesota is the first challenge in a daunting conference schedule for the Hawkeyes.

Of the eight scheduled conference games, six are against teams that are either ranked or received votes in the latest AP top 25.

The win over Western Michigan was a much needed boost for Iowa, players said, and it was also a sign of serious progress. They believe they'll need to continue that as the season goes on, though, if the team is to return to postseason play.

"For us it's going to be about how we improve as the year goes on," Morris said. "We need to improve on a week to week basis more than other teams. And if we do, that's really the only shot we have of going where we want to go."

COMMENTARY

Iowa State, Powell didn't catch anything.

It's easy to point to the transition when trying to find an explanation for why Powell hasn't been used more. He transferred from a community college in Utah to a Big Ten town. He had to learn a brand-new playbook. He had to adjust to a brand-new offense.

All signs point to Powell being ready to play more, though. Teammates and coaches constantly rave about his speed and playmaking ability during practices. On Sept. 21, when Rudock zipped his 29-yard touchdown pass to Powell, he was five yards clear of his defender. The dude is fast. Period.

Moreover, each time Powell catches the ball, it's usually on a deep play. He averages 44 yards a grab. His 54-yard catch from C.J. Beathard during garbage time on Sept. 21 was a career long for him — it was also Iowa's longest play from scrimmage this season.

This isn't out of the normal for him, either. Powell averaged 30 yards a reception last season at Snow Community College. A quick YouTube search of Powell's highlight tapes from back when he was at Snow shows he really does outrun everybody; that he doesn't drop anything; that even with his size, he's still tough as nails. He makes people miss. He makes plays.

He's the big-play guy that Iowa football coach Kirk Ferentz has been looking for. Now that he has him, it's time to use him. A lot.

When Powell was answering questions after the game Sept. 21, he said he was excited about finally finding the end zone, that he couldn't describe it in any other way other than saying that he was excited. He and his teammates all said Powell should be put to more use as Iowa transitions into Big Ten play.

As reporters continued to ask about his transition and practices and other things, I thought something different. I asked him what his favorite route was. When he catches the ball, what does he prefer to run?

"The fly route," he said, grinning wide.

You heard the man, Ferentz. Now let him run, and throw him the ball.

ball and wrestling coming up soon, the season can get a little hectic.

"We can all get a little more stressed, but it's realizing that the majority of people on campus get involved, and I'm really happy that I'm involved with Dance Team," Knott said.

After spending many hours as a group, the Iowa Spirit Squad has become more than just a team.

"A lot of times we live with each other, and when we are home, we talk about dance," Knott said. "It literally takes over everything."

The Iowa Cheer Squad spends at least two hours each day as a team and the one thing that they can count on is trust.

"There's a lot of trust between the guys and the girls," Iowa cheer team junior Hannah Solchenberger said. "They have to catch us, and we just basically have to trust that they will be there."

And with eight seniors on the cheer squad and four on the dance team, the effect that their time on the Spirit Squads at Iowa shows in the leadership.

"You meet the greatest people, you experience the college atmosphere in a totally different way that's unique and get involved not only in the athletics but also volunteering and getting to meet children at Dance Marathon," Iowa Cheer senior Kaitlyn Dornbier said. "It's a great way to see a whole new spectrum of the university."

One of Iowa's cheerleaders, senior Oz Agabese, said that the one thing he is going to miss most is interacting with the fans.

"I always go to the same corner for football, the same side of Carver for basketball and volleyball, and it's the same fans season after season," he said. "They're very loyal and not interacting with them for every Hawkeye event is what I'm going to miss the most."

Field hockey splits matches in Ohio

The No. 10 Iowa field-hockey squad (5-3) won a match and amatch over the weekend in Kent, Ohio.

On Sept. 21, the Hawkeyes fell to Drexel, 2-1. Iowa got its only goal from junior Dani Hemeon at the 56:05 mark. Hemeon received a feed in from senior Niki Schultheis and converted her third penalty corner of the season.

Sunday was a different story for the Hawkeyes — the team got off to a fast start, when Natalie Cafone scored the team's first goal 1:49 into the match.

"We definitely went on the attack today, which was nice," head coach Tracey Griesbaum said in a release.

The team blanked Kent State (4-4), 6-0. The shutout was redshirt senior Kelsey Boyce's third of the year. Cafone posted a hat trick and also assisted senior Kelsey Mitchell's first goal of the match. Mitchell scored twice, and senior Marike Stribos also posted a goal for the Hawkeyes.

The Iowa defense made plays and scored points on Sept. 21, keying the team's blowout 59-3 victory over Western Michigan.

Bronco quarterbacks were intercepted three times during the game, and two were returned for touchdowns by senior cornerback B.J. Lowery.

Lowery's plays accounted for two of the four Iowa non-offensive touchdowns. Kevonte Martin-Manley also added two scores on punt returns.

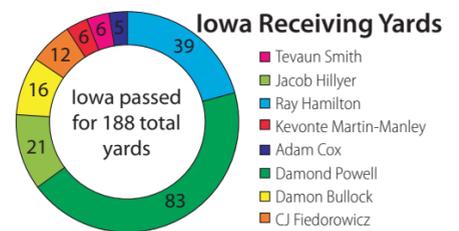

"To have four touchdowns, non-offensive touchdowns in a game, that's pretty hard to explain," head coach Kirk Ferentz said. "I hope we didn't use them all up. But it's good to see that, too.

Transfer shows off real some speed

We learned a lot about the Iowa football team this weekend — including that it needs to use its speedy receiver more often.

Diamond Powell was leaning back against a wall on the afternoon of Sept. 21, sporting a tie and collared shirt. He was surrounded by a dozen reporters who were peppering him with questions about his most recent addition to his career highlight reel.

Powell was smiling as he answered each question, and why not? He and his team had just obliterated Western Michigan, 59-3. He contributed with a 29-yard touchdown catch (his first as a Hawkeye) from Jake Rudock in the third quarter. He led all of Iowa's receivers with 83 yards through the air.

You wouldn't know it by watching this year's Iowa football team, but Powell is supposed to be the next big, bad Hawkeye receiver. He's been touted as a walking highlight reel. He stands at a mere 5-11, 180 pounds but causes gigantic complications for opposing defenses.

Only one problem with all of this hype: Iowa fans have barely seen any of it.

Powell first flashed his skill and speed at the annual Kids Day at Kinnick Stadium. Each of Iowa's three quarterbacks took turns tossing him the ball, allowing the junior-college transfer to work his magic and woo the crowd.

Powell spent that afternoon making nearly everybody miss. He took passes on crossing routes and shot straight through the Iowa secondary. He took a hand off on an end-around and nearly broke one player's ankles. Powell used juke moves that we only see in video games. I even thought to myself, How the heck did Iowa land this guy?

Since then, Powell has been virtually absent. He's hauled in just three catches to this point in the season, and two of them came on Sept. 21. Against both Missouri State and University of Iowa senior Lindsey Knott knows there will come a day when her and 19 of her best friends won't be together every day. These women make up the Iowa Dance Team.

"I've had a few moments this season where it hits me that there is going to be a time when I wake up, and I'm not going to be guaranteed that I get to see my 19 best friends," Iowa dance-team senior Knott said. "That's what I'm going to miss."

These 20 women spend every day with one another in practice, classes, performing at sporting events and sometimes even at home.

With football and volleyball in the heart of their seasons, and basket-
