Peeling paint and outdated cupboards in crowded labs along with cramped space in study and training rooms cause constant tricky navigation. Ben Gillig, the president of the University of Iowa Executive Council of Graduate and Professional students said pharmacy students have to play a daily game of "human Jenga."

College of Pharmacy students and staff led Gov. Terry Branstad and Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds on a tour of their building, pointing out items they believe to be not up to par.

Seven students with big ideas beamed at Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad Thursday as they displayed their reasons for believing business students should have no fear of building their businesses in Iowa.

The governor and Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds stopped at a series of buildings on the UI campus. When the duo came to the Bedell Entrepreneurial Learning Laboratory — a place on campus dedicated to assisting students pursuing businesses in college — they were reassured by UI Students' plans on keeping their start-ups in the Hawkeye state.

"I think this entrepreneurial program is one of the best I've seen," Branstad told The Daily Iowan. "There

Forum highlights hopefuls

Iowa City Chamber of Commerce hosts a forum for City Council candidates to discuss positions.

By JULIA DAVIS
julia-davis@uiowa.edu

With the Iowa City municipal elections less than two weeks away, the city hosted a public forum on Thursday night in which candidates discussed their various platforms and answered questions.

Hosted by the Iowa City Area Chamber of Commerce, the forum served as an avenue for citizens and the candidates to outline their concerns on a number of issues.

"Education is part of our mission, so to educate our members and the voters on the council is critically important to the economic development of our community," said Chamber of Commerce Vice President of public policy Rebecca Neades.

All candidates in the running for City Council participated in the forum: Kingsley Botchway II, Rockne Cole, Catherine Champion, Susan Mims, Terry Dickens, and Royceann Porter.

UI reacts to TA photos

By BRENT GRIFFITHS AND LAUREN COFFEY
daily-iowan@uiowa.edu

On the heels of a University of Iowa teaching assistant emailing inappropriate photos to roughly 80 students, some people with ties to the UI are sounding off about the incident and the larger issue of "sexting."

"A lot of people don't realize technology is a two-edged sword," said Lyombe Eko, a UI associate professor of journalism. "It can do good, but it can also do bad. Technology is neutral, and the law treats it as neutral ... the law cannot protect us from ourselves."

Eko taught his Media Law class the ethics of spreading inappropriate photos, which, he said, he "moved up slightly" to correspond with the TA incident.

Under Iowa law, spreading of inappropriate, or lewd, photos is illegal if one of the involved parties is a minor.

Mims seeks to extend her service

By MEGAN SANCHEZ
megan-sanchez@uiowa.edu

Susan Mims is ready for round two as a city councilor, hoping to serve Iowa City for another four years.

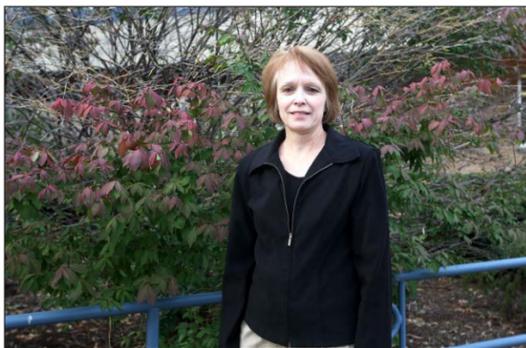

The 56-year-old is running for re-election to the Iowa City City Council as an at-large seat against three other candidates.

Mims said she wants to use her experience and knowledge of city logistics to encourage growth in fiscal responsibility. She said the city faces a possible yearly $5 million reduction in revenue because of changes made by the state Legislature.

"The changes that the state Legislature has made in property-tax reform could potentially have a negative impact," she said. "Being very judicious and efficient with our resources is going to be critically important."

Regents mull law-school tuition

megan-deppe@uiowa.edu

While an official decision has not yet been made, the discussion over next year's potential undergraduate tuition freeze and a proposed tuition cut in the College of Law went more in depth at the state Board of Regents meeting on Thursday.

The regents viewed presentations from the University of Iowa Student Government President Katherine Valde, as well as a statement from law Dean Gail Agrawal and Governor Terry Branstad.

The law school's proposal would involve a tuition cut for nonresident students of nearly $8,000 — tuition would drop from its current level of $47,252 to $39,500.

This discussion follows a proposal from the regents to continue the undergraduate tuition freeze, which started in this academic year. The tuition freeze currently sets in-state base tuition at $6,678, with mandatory fees pushing the price to $8,061.

Valde expressed the UISG's support for the tuition freeze. She said the UISG had visited several state legislators over the summer and that the legislators had heard from parents and students about how glad they about freezing tuition.

"I believe that freezing tuition not only has a tangible benefit for students in terms of the bottom line, but symbolically, it sends an important message that our state values higher education," Valde said.

Branstad agreed that a possible continuation of tuition freeze would be a positive thing.

"It would certainly be something we'd love to be able to do, because I understand the last time we had two years in a row without a tuition increase for undergrad residents was 1975, and that was a long time ago."

Both the decision to extend the undergraduate tuition freeze and tuition cuts to the UI College of Law will be made at the next regents' meeting, Dec. 4.

Both decisions will affect the undergraduate class and law-school class of 2014-2015.

Discussion regarding the reduction of law tuition came in part because of the high tuition cost in comparison with other peer schools.

The law school's nonresident tuition numbers nearly the third highest in its peer group of 11 schools, while its resident tuition is eighth of 11.

The tuition cut is being requested in an attempt to attract more nonresident students.

"We think a lower nonresident tuition would send a clear signal in the marketplace that we are responding to national concern expressed about the high cost of legal education," Agrawal said.

There has also been more than a 38 percent national decline in law-school enrollment since 2010. The UI school has seen a 24 percent decrease in the same period of time.

"The challenge that we face, of course, is that we need to take fiscally responsible action in bad times, without causing repairable, long-term harm to the institution," Agrawal said.

She also stated that some law schools were lowering their credentials to maintain their class size. The UI, however, is creating more programs for law students instead.

"A number of schools, like Iowa, have chosen to hold firm to their quality criteria," said Associate Dean Todd Pettys. "This year's incoming class is just as qualified as the prior years, just smaller."

As well as beginning to attract new students, the UI law school is considering the possibility of a shrinking faculty.

"We're not, I think it's fair to say, a young faculty," Agrawal said. "In the next year or so, we expect at least eight retirements."

Agrawal noted that several vacancies in the faculty have been left unfilled, which has decreased the staff size.

The real decline in applicants to the law school came last year with a 50 percent decline in nonresident applications. There was also a decline in the number of Iowa applicants.

"The reduction in applications for enrollment is a market signal that out-of-state tuition is too high," Pettys said.

However, the UI law school is above the national average in placing students in full-time jobs. Agrawal said 36 percent of last year's first class took their first jobs in Iowa.

"These are very challenging times for the College of Law," Agrawal said. "We appreciate the support we get from the central university, we appreciate all you do for our university."

Emergency steam-line repairs approved

At a meeting on Thursday, the state Board of Regents approved the repairs to a steam line.

The line runs between the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics and the Medical Research Facility.

A project committee stated the repairs are mostly done with the exception of some landscaping that needs to be finished. The estimated cost was $350,000.

The line supplies steam to the UIHC kitchens and is not meant to be down for long periods of time.

The regents' office was informed on Sept. 26 that the steam line was causing humidity problems in the basement of the Medical Research Facility.

In order to avoid potential losses, regents' Executive Director Robert Donley approved the project description and budget on Sept. 30.

The project was funded by the utilities enterprise renewal and improvement funds.

UI Pediatrics Department to get name change

The state Board of Regents approved changing the name of the Pediatrics Department in the Carver College of Medicine to the Stead Family Department of Pediatrics.

The proposal is made in recognition of the cumulative $20 million gift of Jerre and Mary Joy Stead to advance children's medicine.

The gift from the Steads supports faculty, staff, and researchers who are building an increasing awareness of pediatric diseases.

Jerre and Mary Joy Stead are co-heads of the UI Health Care's current $500 million campaign called Iowa First: Our Campaign for Breaththrough Medicine.

The UI proposed the name change because of the Steads' donation and commitment to advancing health care and research at the Children's Hospital and Pediatrics Department.

Clinics will relocate

The state Board of Regents approved the proposed relocation of the University of Iowa Chronic Pain Clinic and Breast Imaging Center on Thursday.

Both clinics would be relocated to the fourth floor of the UIHC Pomerantz Family Pavilion.

The Chronic Pain Clinic is located on level five of the Pappajohn Pavilion, and the Breast Imaging Center is located on level three of the Pappajohn Pavilion.

The Chronic Pain Clinic will be relocated to acquire more space for inpatient operating rooms. The new operating rooms would be constructed adjacent to the Main Operation Room Suite currently in the Coloton Pavilion.

The Breast Imaging Center will be relocated to make space for new technologies and more workspace. It will also be closer to the Women's Health Center.

The relocation of the Breast Imaging Center clears space for a connecting walkway to the new Children's Hospital.

The two centers will operate separately, though they will share several support staff areas.

The estimated cost of the project is $4.3 million; it will be funded by the University Hospitals Building Use Funds.

pharmacy students, and staff accompanied the governor and lieutenant governor on what was one of many stops during their visit to the UI. The UI officials were hoping to persuade the state leaders to advocate for funding for a new UI pharmacy building.

"We're really hoping the governor will see the inadequacy of our building and hopefully lend financial support toward us getting a new building," said third-year pharmacy student Bri-anne Bakken.

Over the summer, Branstad denied funding for planning for a new building, saying the money would be better spent on the building itself.

"There's always going to be demands for additional facilities but we have got to make sure that we're prioritizing with the limited resources that we have," Branstad said in an interview with The Daily Iowan.

The tour consisted of a visit to the current study spaces, a lecture hall, research labs, training rooms and UI Pharmaceuticals.

Bakken said the pharmacy school is in desperate need of new facilities, citing lack of study and team space as well as insufficient lecture halls. She noted these issues could cause bigger problems within the program.

"We're seeing decreased numbers of applications to the program here because the facility just doesn't meet the needs," she said.

Among the issues adressed on the tour were lack of space, outdated facilities, inability to address safety issues, and absence of adequate amenities.

Peter Matthes, the UI strategic communications director, said the governor was instrumental in helping to create the current building and said this meeting would hopefully encourage his continued support.

"This will hopefully continue discussions ... that this is an important partnership between the University of Iowa and the state," Matthes said.

Gillig, who attended the tour, said he thinks it is also important states leaders see the building.

"[It] showcases the limitations due to the capacity of the facilities," Gillig said. "It gives Gov. Branstad and Lt. Gov. Reynolds a chance to see all the college does."

Gillig said this is especially important because the college plays an "integral" role in health care in Iowa.

This is something Matthes highlighted as an important factor, saying he sees the College of Pharmacy working to develop a pipeline of pharmacists across the state.

This continued rate of UI graduates joining the Iowa workforce is something Bakken said is concerning given current conditions.

"It is important for us to keep producing quality health care professionals in Iowa, increasing the number of students that come here and make sure we can compare to other [pharmacy schools] and won't lose faculty and staff ... because of the facilities," Bakken said.

Branstad said he was happy with the quality of the work happening in the college and said it has potential for economic development in the future. However, he said, he is still unsure of where funding should be allocated.

"I don't think we need to spend a lot of money on architects; I think we can look at doing a design build," he said. "I don't like the idea of making that commitment in terms of planning as opposed to the project."

Sen. Joe Bolcom, D-Iowa City, said he was glad the governor took the time to visit a building "in dire need of replacement," but thinks it should be a top priority.

"I don't understand the governor's position to change what the Board of Regents has been doing in terms of how they go through the process of designing and constructing facilities," he said.

Although Branstad said he thought the college made a strong case for change, he still has to evaluate the situation before dedicating the funds.

"We have to measure [the call for funding in the College of Pharmacy] against the other demands we have in terms of budget requests," he said.

For Donald Letendre, dean of the pharmacy school, a new facility is essential for any future success.

"We're in a precarious spot, trying to sustain a quality program in an environment that is not conducive to quality," he said. "No question, we have a top 10 program in the United States, but we have a bottom-10 facility."

BEDELL

is a lot more interest in young people in starting their own businesses. It's what [John Pappajohn Entrepreneurial Center] has done that makes it more possible and affordable for students when they graduate to stay and start a business here."

From farm-operating manuals to the first wireless Internet company in Iowa City, the students spoke on a wide range of businesses they have created and are currently running.

One first-year M.B.A. student launched Higher Learning Technologies after he was baffled by the cost of pre-made note cards for studying for his entrance exams for dental school. He and his cofounder created a series of apps that allow students to view these study tools in a 21st-century way.

Alec Whitters, a cofounder of Higher Learning Technologies, said he was proud to be able to share his success with Branstad and Reynolds.

"It's a huge honor to be able to talk with the people who are making decisions and to be able to get recognition and appreciation for the things we've done in business," he said. "It's really affecting the bigger picture."

The first-term lieutenant governor acknowledged despite the students' willingness to remain in Iowa, the Midwest is not always highly recognized in the business market.

"The East and West Coasts are looking [for business students], and we know there are opportunities to leave [Iowa]," she said. "We will continue to drive [ideas] to support [the students] to stay here."

Although some students choose to head out to the coasts after college, Whitters has no doubts about staying in Iowa.

"Iowa is a place that has so many natural resources in terms of the people and the mentors," he said. "In our business, we're in education. Iowa is one of the top states for education, so it is perfect place for us to be, and it's a perfect place for us to stay."

Reynolds emphasized the types of stories the students shared need to be known all over Iowa to encourage others in business endeavors.

"Young people need to see [the students' successes]," she said. "They need to see that somebody from [Iowa] identified a problem, solved it, and look where they are today."

The five-term governor noted that it was impressive to hear these stories and see how far the entrepreneurial programs have come.

"For me, having been with John Pappajohn when we announced these programs, and to see now what has transpired is so different," he said. "There are a lot more young people willing to take the risk and go out and start a business."

Branstad said he is confident Iowa is moving in the right direction, and with all of the progress being made, he said he has faith the state is on the rise for business.

"It takes a whole ecosystem for this to really work, and we are finally reaching the point now where we really have a lot of the resources," he said. "Hearing these entrepreneurs that have had one successful venture and are now starting another one, to me, that's really exciting."

Joining the mob

Jon Overton
Jon-overton@uiowa.edu

It's not every day that one person's small slip-up grabs national, even international headlines.

Enter the extremely unfortunate case of a University of Iowa teaching assistant who meant to email classwork to her students but accidentally attached highly embarrassing photos involving herself and a man (I'll let you put two and two together). UI officials looked into the matter to determine the appropriate action and asked students to delete the messages they received.

Big surprise — her students chattered away about it on social media, joking and spilling quite a few details. Gossip sites picked up the story, and from there it went to the traditional media, both local and national.

I could rant about how these students are terrible people, but they aren't. Social media, comment sections, and the rest of the Internet let people say whatever they want without any regard for the consequences. People see others doing it, see they are rewarded for it, imitate it, and often are rewarded themselves. Students were congratulating each other on Twitter for being cited in the media on this very subject.

There is a barbaric mob mentality when it comes to discourse on the Internet, but that's just the nature of the beast.

I could also blame the gossip sites, but it's obvious that they're parasites, so that would be a moot point. No, the real disappointment was in how parts of the "professional" media handled this whole situation.

The mainstream media are established institutions that supposedly follow a general code of ethics. And while they didn't reveal anything new, the media unnecessarily added fuel to the fire.

Let's think. Who does this story affect? A handful of students, a TA, and a few university faculty members. The incident was obviously a mistake. So what justifiable reason is there to pick apart the details of this event and tell everyone about it? How does this serve the public good? It doesn't. It is selfish. It is exploitative. It is profiting from the humiliation and pain of another human being. This obsession with attracting as many eyeballs as possible and getting all the juicy details effectively turned esteemed media outlets into vultures.

Although the TA's name was never used, tweets and gossip sites were recklessly cited in some local and national media, providing plenty of information that when put together could easily compromise the TA's identity. Granted, people could find the tweets and gossip without help from the traditional media, but these institutions naively gathered much of the available information, cited their sources as they would with any other story, and expected no one to look for further details. Refusing to use the TA's name doesn't absolve the media of their guilt in spreading this non-story.

Had the established media used their better judgment and simply ignored this story because of its low impact (or at least been as sparse on the specific details as possible) and its high risk of leading news consumers to the TA's identity, it would have saved one unlucky person so much unnecessary embarrassment. Hundreds, probably thousands, of people would never have heard about what happened (this story even showed up in a British tabloid).

So now someone has made an embarrassing mistake, anyone with a computer can easily find out about it, and the professional media joined the gossip fest. Remember this the next time these same media outlets claim to be serious professionals who are vital components to a functioning democracy.

UI academics underpaid

The 40-hour workweek seems to have gone out the window for the state's regent-school faculties.

The state Board of Regents released a report this week that shows that University of Iowa faculty members work an average of 57.57 hours per week. This survey examined the amount of time faculty members spend doing research, teaching, assisting students outside of the classroom, etc., at Iowa's regent schools.

The regents require the universities to survey their faculty every two years. According to the survey report, the data are designed to track faculty job performance against agreed-upon standards. The data are also used to provide constructive feedback and support to the few faculty members who fall short in one or more areas of their work.

While these numbers may be pleasing and reflect well upon the university, some members in the UI community are wondering if the numbers are sustainable.

How practical is it for UI faculty to continue working themselves at this rate? And, more importantly, are UI faculty members receiving the amount of recognition they deserve and being sufficiently compensated for the work that they do?

According to the Chronicle of Higher Education, full professors at the UI made an average of $130,000 in 2012, ranking in the 66th percentile of the 1,251 doctoral institutions in the survey. Associate professors were paid an average of $86,400 and assistant professors made an average of $74,100 — both ranking just above the median at the 52nd and 53rd percentiles, respectively. Instructors at the UI seem to have it the worst. In 2012, they made an average of $40,300, ranking far below the median, in the 8th percentile.

When you calculate the number of hours full professors at the UI work per year and divide their average salary by this number, it comes out to be about $45 an hour. Compared with minimum wage, which is $7.25 an hour, what a professor makes may seem like a lot of money. However, in comparison with the average income of persons of other professions that require the same amount of education, such as doctors or dentists, what professors are making is relatively low.

The most recent data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics show that the average wage of physicians and surgeons in the United States is around $166,400 per year. That comes out to about $80 an hour, according to bureau's statistics — roughly twice the amount that full professors make on average at the UI.

Dentists earn an average wage of $146,920, or $70 an hour. Keep in mind that all three of these professions require doctoral or professional degrees.

Yet, there is a clear divide in the wages of professors and other professionals with equivalent levels of education and training. Why? Doctors may treat illnesses and save lives, but professors are dedicating their lives to train the doctors, dentists, and lawyers of the future.

Faculty members are equally as involved with the students as they are with their work in research. The survey indicated that UI faculty members spend an average of 21.80 hours in student instruction — only around an hour less on average than they spend on scholarship.

It is time that we reconsider the level of importance placed on and the respect that we have for this particular profession.

The memory of slavery

Ashley Lee
Ashley-lee-1@uiowa.edu

The independent film 12 Years A Slave, the story of a free black man who was kidnapped and sold into slavery in 1841, premiered in select cities Oct. 18.

While I appreciate a movie that genuinely tackles the difficult issue of slavery, not everyone feels the same way. Some people view slavery strictly as a thing of the past — something that has and must remain buried beneath years of social progress.

Americans have no problem remembering the lives lost at the hands of another country. We also have no problem honoring the Founding Fathers, who rebelled against the British government and declared their independence.

But if someone wishes to go against the grain and point out the hypocrisy of our nation's history and Founding Fathers when it comes to race relations, they will more than likely be considered unpatriotic and incapable of appreciating how far we've come.

A person may draw attention to the terrorism, genocide, and slavery instituted by the American government, and the response more often than not is "get over it."

It's a shame some of us choose to remember 9/11 and the Holocaust, yet gloss over, dismiss, or trivialize American slavery and the genocide of Native Americans. These events have nothing to do with us in 2013, so why should we worry about it?

Although we may not have been alive, we inherit the consequences of previous generations. I didn't ask to be a descendant of slaves, my ancestry lost in economic transactions. My white peers didn't ask to be white, nor did they ask for their privilege.

Regardless, we are who we are. We carry the realities, privileges, and stigmas associated with our race and it is up to us to do what we can with what we were given.

We can start by familiarizing ourselves with the details of slavery and genocide while understanding their importance in U.S. history. This is why movies such as 12 Years a Slave are so important. We need to recognize that the institution of slavery and its economic benefits helped America become one of the leading world superpowers.

American slavery and genocide are also critical to understanding why both African and Native Americans in particular experience very different realities than their counterparts. From voting disenfranchisement and extreme poverty to racial profiling and the lack of representation in public spheres, these two groups have been purposefully held back since this country's inception to advance a racist agenda.

The last major Civil Rights Act was in 1968. This means it took from the end of the Civil War until the late 1960s for minority groups to legally gain rights whites already had. But laws are not always enforced. Racist attitudes and discriminatory behaviors by those in power are still intact. Institutional racism established over 300 years cannot be fully erased in 45, especially when it has taken on new forms.

People say racism's not that bad anymore, or even worse, that we are post-racial. I pity them because of their ignorance. They either choose to be blind or truly do not see the racial hierarchy that persists. Why is it so hard for privileged groups: whites, males, heterosexuals, and Christians, to admit they are treated better than minority groups at large?

People can talk all they want about the importance of individual responsibility and refusing to let race dictate success. Unless they see the way in which the ideology of white supremacy and racism looms even in the most basic structures of American society, people will continue to see slavery and genocide as a thing of the past.

Vote for Lundell

John Lundell's dedication to public service, graduate training in urban and regional planning, professional background, and Coralville service qualify him as the best candidate for Coralville's mayor.

John is the deputy director of the UI's Prevention Research Center and received the David J. Skorton award for Staff Excellence in Service, the highest award for a UI staff member. John has also served as director of transportation planning for the Johnson County Council of Governments and director of the Iowa City Transit system.

John's energy and community spirit are evident in his volunteer work, including the Coralville Library Board, Coralville Volunteer Fire Department, and on the boards of the Iowa Firefighters Memorial Park and Crisis Center. John is the treasurer of the Iowa Public Health Association, head of the American Public Health Association Injury Control and Emergency Health Services Section, and vice head of the Johnson County Metropolitan Planning Organization.

During his 10 years on the Coralville City Council, John has supported projects including: flood mitigation, public safety services, expanded biking/walking trails, the new youth sports park, community gardens, the Coralville Center for Performing Arts, conversion of a brownfield area to the Iowa River Landing District, and partnership with UI in the new UIHC clinic at Iowa River Landing.

We moved our residence and law office to the Iowa River Landing in 2010 because we believe in and share the vision of a vibrant Coralville community demonstrated by John Lundell, Kelly Hayworth, Jim Faucett, and the Coralville City Council. Please vote for John Lundell on Nov. 5.

Who's nude?

Regarding the UI TA who accidentally sent a file attachment of her nude photos instead of the solutions to math problems to her students: Her mistake was attaching the wrong file to an email. I bet a fairly sizable percentage of the people who are having a big laugh at her expense have been sexual beings at some point in their lives, and that's the big scandal — it's akin to accidentally leaving the door open and somebody's parents walk in, different in degree, sure, but not in kind. I hope she doesn't quit, keeps going, does some great math, writes a book about it, walks around campus with her head held high, smiles big at every leerer, pushes back at every doubter, has a long, full good life.

County officials: Jail Alternatives pays off

Nearly $2 million have potentially been saved for Johnson County by the Jail Alternatives Program.

By DANIEL SEIDL
daniel-seidl@uiowa.edu

The Jail Alternatives Program of Johnson County has potentially saved the county nearly $2 million in the last year, according to a report from the program.

One goal of the program is to identify individuals with mental-health problems in the Johnson County criminal-justice system and try to keep them out of jail.

According to the program's report from fiscal 2013, which was presented at a Thursday meeting of the Johnson County Board of Supervisors, the program served 240 individuals in fiscal 2013, up from 220 in fiscal 2012.

Jail Alternatives coordinator Jessica Peckover — who presented the report — said the process can help these individuals be integrated back into society.

"The hope is that they become stabilized in the community," she said. "[We want to help them become] safe and productive community members."

Based on data, inmates in contact with the program served 48,096 days in jail in the year before they entered the program — in the year after they were assisted, they served only 20,970 days.

This reduction of more than 27,000 days in jail adds up to more than $1,925,000 in savings, based on the average daily cost of housing an inmate.

Supervisor Chairwoman Janelle Rettig said that the projected savings from the program may be overestimated, because other factors within the county may have lowered these numbers.

However, the program has also saved the county money in other ways. According to the report, the program has prevented law violations, prevented lawsuits, and maintained or increased employment.

Supervisor Rod Sullivan said that if more people knew about the program, they would probably support it.

"There are so many people that have no idea what [the program is] doing," he said. "If more people knew about [the program], I am firmly convinced ... they would be on board."

Another aspect of the program is to connect individuals in the jail with community organizations that can provide them with help. Peckover said cooperating with these organizations is key to the success of the program.

"We are able to facilitate communication," Peckover said. "Jail alternatives can't happen if we aren't cooperating."

Some organizations that are cooperating with the program include Johnson County Mental Health and Disability Services and MECCA. These organizations provide health care, counseling, treatment, and other necessary resources.

Rettig agrees with Sullivan, noting that if taxpayers knew their money was being put to good use, they would be more willing to help the program grow.

"We have to sit up here and tax people to do jail alternatives," Rettig said. "I think people have to recognize that our investments in Jail Alternatives ... are paying off."

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): Simplicity, moderation, and not letting situations upset you will help you get past any adversity you face. Focus on your needs. Do something that will make you happy and build your confidence. Love is in the stars.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Travel, reunite with friends whom you don't get to see that often, or catch up on the latest news in your community. Make a move or positive change to your living arrangements or residence. Discuss plans with someone special.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Pick up knowledge, skills, and information that can contribute to your work or help raise your income. Keep an open mind when dealing with family matters. Ask questions if the instructions you are given sound vague. Romance is highlighted.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Follow your intuition and creative dreams. Gather information that will make it easier for you to move in a positive direction. Changes to your living arrangements should encourage you to excel and reach your goals. Socializing will lead to a novel opportunity.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have to make things happen. Waiting around for someone else to make a move will take forever. Problems with family or concerns regarding your assets and liabilities will weigh on your mind. Plan a romantic evening, and ease your stress.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Network, participate, and introduce yourself to new people. Your openness and sincerity will put others at ease and lead to an interesting collaboration. Partnerships will develop. A domestic problem must be taken care of without hesitation.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Don't waste your time trying to change what others think or do. Follow your heart, and you will meet people who share your interests. Engage in creative hobbies, and plan to socialize. Love, romance, and good times should be your goal.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Put love, romance, and interesting outings at the top of your to-do list. Don't make changes based on an emotional incident. Think matters through, and you'll find a reasonable solution. A trip to a unique destination will change your attitude.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't be fooled by someone trying to talk you into a joint financial venture. Lock up your money so that temptation is futile. If you really want to invest, consider upgrades to your home or your skills. Build assets, not liabilities.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look into alternative ways of earning a living, and you will find a means to an end. Money matters should not be left to someone else. Expand your knowledge and your relationships with others.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take the initiative to change your game plan or develop a skill or service that improves your chance to succeed. Don't let anyone slow you down. Listen, but don't give in to demands or bullying. Make a choice and follow through.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Whatever you decide to do, follow through with confidence. You can set yourself apart from anyone trying to outdo or compete with you. An unexpected and unusual financial or emotional gain is heading in your direction. Stand tall, and prepare to celebrate.

"I love it. That's how I've always played," Logic said. "I have always played in small lineups, just get up and go. I think we're really focusing on that and it's going to be a lot of fun."

Another player who feels this offense plays to their strengths is junior guard Melissa Dixon. Dixon's long-range shooting should be more dangerous than ever when combined with the Hawkeyes tempo.

"It's been a lot of fun this year," Dixon said. "We've been working a lot in practices with all five of us running because we all get up and down the court really fast."

Another perceived strength of this Iowa squad is its athleticism. What the Hawkeyes have lost in size they plan to make up for in pace. They hope that in situations in which they are playing with a four-guard lineup, opposing teams will have a hard time keeping pace with them and have to adjust.

'I have always played in small lineups, just get up and go. I think we're really focusing on that and it's going to be a lot of fun.'

—Sam Logic, guard

One of these athletes returning to top form is Taylor — the lone senior who is now two seasons removed from her last ACL injury.

"It's been fun in practice watching her. I think she's one of Sam's favorite targets in the fast break," Bluder said. "I expect her to elevate her production this year."

The small nature of this team doesn't mean that the frontcourt is nonexistent. Instead, Iowa returns one of its top players from last season's squad in Doolittle.

Last season, Doolittle was asked to step away from her natural position of center to play power forward. Returning to the center position, she believes there is a lot to gain from last season's

"Being a 4, you have more range, and you're more comfortable farther from the basket," Doolittle said. "[The time at power forward] really helped me become more comfortable out there."

The Hawkeyes may lack size, but they certainly won't lack excitement. This year's team fully expects to live up to the standard that has been set by countless Hawkeye teams before them.

"Now it's really up to me and my staff," Bluder said. "And the women wearing those Hawkeye jerseys to make sure that we're back there again on March 23 playing in Carver Hawkeye Arena for our seventh-straight NCAA Tournament appearance."

the same things they've been doing all season."

The injury report isn't causing the Hawkeyes to approach the Wildcats any differently. If anything, they're preparing more because of the uncertainty regarding Colter.

"They're still a good team," defensive lineman Carl Davis said. "They have a good quarterback — he can throw the deep ball, he can make good plays, also. This is a team we have to play tough still. Everybody's looking for a win in the Big Ten right now."

Ferentz said Tuesday that his defense needs to bounce back after the Oct. 19 loss to Ohio State, where numerous big plays turned into

'... it can't be a once-in-a-while thing if you're in conference play, you have to be that way every week.'

— Kirk Ferentz, head football coach scoring drives for the Buckeyes on their way to a 34-24 victory.

"You have to, because we have five tough games in front of us," Ferentz said about improving the defense. "So you have to. You've got to get ready for the next challenge. They will. We've got quality guys."

Despite the two-game skid, and despite giving up big plays on defense and costly fourth-quarter turnovers, linebacker James Morris believes in the Iowa football team, saying there are still things the team will accomplish on the field before the end of the season.

"We're 4-3; we're not setting the world on fire," Morris said. "At the same time, everybody on this team believes that if we continue to improve, continue to get better, and continue to play hard and come closer together as a team, we believe there's a lot left out there for us to achieve."

best fits the current roster.

Logic and Doolittle are both used to the starting lineup — there's no problem there. Doolittle will just slide a few feet over and play under the basket at center full time. She spent last season beside Johnson as a power forward.

Now, Melissa Dixon, reigning Big Ten Sixth Player of the Year, will need to provide an instant spark when she takes over Printy's spot as the starting shooting guard after only starting three games last season.

The team has definitely taken a hit as far as height goes, so small ball will reign supreme for the 2013-14 team. Experience will occupy four of the five spots, with Logic at the point, Theairra Taylor and Dixon as shooting guards, and Doolittle at center.

The real question comes at power forward. Bluder wouldn't announce who would get the start for the exhibition game on Nov. 3, but she did give a list of options. Forwards Claire Till and Kali Peschel could see time, or freshmen Ally Disterhoft and Alexa Kastanek.

The reality is that all four should see time before the starting lineup is cemented once Big Ten play begins.

But those options can only go so far. The team only has 11 women on its roster. The women won't have the advantages that the men have, who can make lineup upon lethal lineup. Bluder also hinted at playing even smaller by putting four guards on the floor and moving Till to center.

It would be risky, especially against such teams as Nebraska and Penn State, but it might just be crazy enough to work against teams who also don't have enough height. Dixon and Taylor are well-established shooters from beyond the arc. Throw in a consistent long-range threat from Logic — who can always pass the ball away when a defender starts to close in — and defenses might as well line up under the basket for the potential rebound.

Replacing Printy and Johnson isn't easy — and the team isn't denying the challenges. But asking the younger players to step up immediately isn't a new story line. Remember that Logic, Taylor, Doolittle, and Dixon have all made contributions since they were freshmen. Playing small ball and emphasizing 3-pointers isn't new, either. It's just never been this crucial.

But if any team, any program, can pull it off to qualify for its seventh-straight NCAA Tournament, it's the Hawkeyes.

Field hockey preps for tough Nittany Lions

Iowa field hockey faces Big Ten leader Penn State today, California-Davis Oct. 27.

By DANNY PAYNE
daniel-payne-1@uiowa.edu

The 19th-ranked Iowa field-hockey team is set for a huge matchup with No. 6 Penn State today and for a date with California-Davis on Oct. 27. Both games are scheduled to take place at Grant Field.

Iowa (10-5, 2-2 Big Ten) returns to Grant riding a five-game winning streak during which it has scored 25 goals — 15 from Natalie Cafone and Dani Hemeon.

“From playing together now for two years, I know where she will be on the field,” Hemeon said about Cafone. “She knows where I am, we just know each other’s skill sets really well, so we’re really able to work together and combine up the field.”

Last season, the Hawkeyes lost both of their games to the Nittany Lions. On Oct. 14, 2012, Iowa fell in University Park, Pa., 5-1 — the Hawkeyes were outshot 25-8. On Nov. 2, 2012 Iowa fell 3-2 in the semifinals of the Big Ten Tournament.

This time around, head coach Tracey Griesbaum is confident in her team and knows the Hawks need to play their own game to hand Penn State its first Big Ten loss of the season.

“I’m not thinking about last year; I’m just trying to build on what we’ve been doing this year,” the 14-year coach said. “I think it’s pretty simple; I think we have to make sure we contain them enough that the stats don’t get out of whack. We need to keep the game even in every category.”

Statistically, Iowa and Penn State are relatively evenly matched in points — the combination of goals and assists — with Iowa taking the advantage in that category at 8.27 per game to Penn State’s 8.14.

The Hawkeyes are outscoring the Nittany Lions by slightly over a half-a-goal per game — 3.53 to 3 — and Penn State has allowed fewer goals per game than Iowa, although by a very slim margin — 1.43 to Iowa’s 1.47.

“We’re going to be more prepared,” said Cafone, the Big Ten’s leading scorer. “We know their skill sets, we know that we can match up against them this year, and we’re really looking forward to it.”

Penn State (11-3, 4-0) carries a 10-game winning streak into the matchup; its last loss came against then-No. 4 Connecticut in overtime on Sept. 8 at University Park.

“I think Penn State is coming here, they’re not thinking that, ‘Oh, we have 10 wins under our belt.’ They’re thinking, ‘We just have to beat Iowa,’” Griesbaum said. “In this moment right now, we’re not thinking of our entire season, we’re just thinking what do we do to prepare to beat Penn State.”

Looking ahead to Iowa’s Oct. 27 against Cal-Davis, which has a 4-10 mark overall and a 2-3 conference record, the Hawkeyes will have to contain the Aggies’ two leading-scorers, Jamie Garcia and Cloey LemMon. Both women have 13 points on the year under interim head coach Austin Pile.

The last time the two teams met, Sept. 10, 2012, Iowa beat the Aggies 3-0, with two of those goals coming from Hemeon.

Iowa will face its toughest test of the season when conference foe Penn State comes to town.

By JACOB SHEYKO
jacob-sheyko@uiowa.edu

The Iowa soccer team heads into its three final games of the regular season with a record of 11-4-1 overall and a Big Ten record of 3-4-1.

Kicking off Iowa’s home stand is a matchup with No. 4 Penn State — one that could prove to be the Hawkeyes’ toughest game of the season.

The matchup with Penn State

Penn State enters the matchup against Iowa with a 12-3-1 overall record, 6-2 in conference play. While there’s an argument that Iowa has played a team with the caliber of Penn State in No. 7 Michigan, it’s hard to deny that Penn State will be, by far, the best offensive team Iowa has faced all season.

“Everybody is excited about the opportunity and the challenge,” Iowa head coach Ron Rainey said. “We know that this weekend we have to play our best soccer of the year. Penn State has so many ways it can attack you.”

Penn State enters this match averaging 3 goals per game — best among Big Ten teams. This is the exact opposite style of play of the Hawkeyes, who average 1.62 goals per game.

Leading this charge for Penn State is senior Maya Hayes, who, in 16 games, has scored 16 goals. She is second in the Big Ten.

“Maya is really good,” Rainey said. “We just have to make sure where all their players are at all times and be ready to play really good one-on-one defense against them.”

To put more perspective on Hayes dominance, consider her efficiency: She has shot 56 times on the season. As mentioned earlier, Hayes has converted 16 of those attempts into scores, which means she’s scoring 1 goal on just about every four shots she takes — 28.6 percent, to be exact.

Iowa’s defense

The good news for Iowa is its defense this season has been extremely

‘We know that this weekend we have to play our best soccer of the year. Penn State has so many ways it can attack you.’ —Ron Rainey, head coach effective in keeping opponents’ shot totals at a minimum. Iowa’s opponents currently are shooting at a rate of 10.3 times per game.

“I think we need to play our best soccer [of the season],” midfielder Alex Melin said. “I think we can come out on top.”

This aspect of Iowa’s game will certainly be tested — Penn State shoots 18.6 times per match this season.

Coming home More good news for the Hawkeyes is that Iowa will finally play on its own field. When Iowa takes the field against Penn State, it will have been 19 days since the last home game — Iowa defeated Michigan State on Oct. 6.

The Hawkeyes’ previous home game was Sept. 22, and they have played six of their last seven games on the road, where they went 3-3-1.

“It nice to have our last three games at home,” senior Ashley Catrell said. “We don’t have to worry about traveling, about what the time bus leaves. Just being on our home field will hopefully bring us some wins this weekend.”

Coming home might help the Hawkeyes not just in terms of familiarity but also statistically. Iowa has posted a road record of 4-3-1 while sporting a 6-1-0 mark in Iowa City.

HOOPS TO PUSH THE PACE

FEATURE

This year's Hawkeye squad will introduce a new style of play.

By JACOB SHEYKO
jacob-sheyko@uiowa.edu

The Iowa women's basketball team is missing one ingredient — size.

Gone are the days of the Hawkeyes with two post players. Instead, this season's Hawkeye squad will usher in a new era of Iowa basketball that could best be described as run-and-gun.

"I think a lot of the girls on the team want to run," Theairra Taylor said. "Coach Bluder wants us to go; she's encouraging us to go. That's the style of ball I like to play."

With the graduation of Morgan Johnson, the size of the Hawkeyes is limited. The only players taller than 6-2 are sophomore Nicole Smith and junior Bethany Doolittle.

So to compensate for their lack of size, the Hawkeyes will rely on a myriad of players to fill in at power-forward. Two early candidates are sophomores Claire Till and Kali Peschel, who usually play guard.

Till and Peschel each saw limited time as freshmen last season. But according to Iowa head coach Lisa Bluder, they have taken huge strides in their games.

"I think Kali and Claire both have grown their games," Bluder said. "I think they're more confident, as you should be as a sophomore."

The final option is Ally Disterhoft. During the course of the season, Disterhoft might play anywhere from shooting guard to power forward.

For many teams, Iowa's lack-of-size would be cause for panic. But many players believe that the up-pace, small-ball style of play adopted by this team best exploits the team's strengths.

Sam Logic is especially excited about this style of play. The pass-first point guard, who set a school record last year for assists in a season, believes that the offense plays into her distributive qualities.

COMMENTARY

The Iowa women's basketball team now faces the difficult task of playing without Jaime Printy and Morgan Johnson.

MATT CABEL

Lisa Bluder, Sam Logic, and Bethany Doolittle sat in the depths of Carver-Hawkeye Arena on a pedestal.

The Hawkeyes had just finished their last game of the season, a March 26 loss to Notre Dame in the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

It was strange: Seniors Jaime Printy and Morgan Johnson were nowhere in sight — only the game's top two performers in the stat box interviewed. It was a preview of sorts, in its own way.

This is the future, the sight proclaimed.

"Two starters, with names such as Morgan Johnson and Jaime Printy — that's not going to be an easy role to fill," then-sophomore guard Sam Logic told members of the media when prompted about a future without the seniors, two of the faces of Iowa women's basketball.

Back then, it was a thought for another day. Now, it's reality.

Printy and Johnson won't be in the locker room anymore, waiting for interviews. They're not on the practice courts with Bluder, Logic, and Doolittle. They won't take the court in Carver when it comes time for games.

It's a new year: new schedule, new faces, and new challenges. The biggest challenge, of course, is filling the void left by Printy and Johnson and adapting to the style of play that

Football hopes to rebound against 'Cats

After losing two-straight games, the Hawkeyes seek to bounce back against a struggling Northwestern squad.

By MATT CABEL

Iowa and Northwestern both enter Saturday's matchup in Kinnick Stadium with 4-3 records, but how each team reached that mark are different stories.

Iowa started the season with a last-second loss before it won four in a row — including a road win at Minnesota to open its Big Ten season. The team followed that game with back-to-back losses to Michigan State and Ohio State.

The Wildcats, on the other hand, opened with a 4-0 nonconference showing before opening the Big Ten season with three-straight losses. The Wildcats lost to Minnesota last weekend — the only Big Ten opponent the Hawkeyes have beaten this season in conference play.

"I thought our effort was good; I thought our preparation was good last week," Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz said. "The point there is we have to carry that forward — it can't be a once-in-a-while thing if you're in conference play, you have to be that way every week. It's a different challenge this weekend, but an equally big challenge for us."

The Wildcats have been hampered with injuries early in the season. Star running back Venric Mark has been listed as out with an ankle injury suffered against Wisconsin on Oct. 12. Quarterback Kain Colter has also been hampered with an ankle injury, but he is listed as day-to-day. He plans on playing against Iowa, even if he's not 100 percent.

"Colter is a very elusive quar-
