Courthouse plan nears ballot

Johnson County officials are moving forward with plans to build a courthouse annex.

The supervisors have planned additions to the courthouse for several years. There are various safety concerns with the building, as well as a lack of space.

Before this proposal, the county had negotiated a referendum including courthouse and jail improvements.

“We’ve tried two times to combine those projects into one building that we called the justice center,” said Supervisor Rod Sullivan.

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors will vote next week to place the Johnson County Courthouse annex bond referendum on the ballot in November.

The Johnson County Courthouse is located in downtown Iowa City on E. Division St., and a panel of judges why they should select the Pentacrest for its location.

Flood recovery continued on several UI construction projects, but the colder-than-usual winter and archaeological discoveries in Huff Hall delayed the 13th floor.

Many graduating University of Iowa seniors will go from walking into debt to having their debt still rising.

The supervisors have begun work to persuade a large crowd at the Englert Theater on Thursday.

Ten business owners had eight minutes to persuade a large crowd at the Huff Hall.

The supervisors have planned additional courtrooms, one goal of the additional space is to reduce the number of backed-up cases.

Bowling almost done

Carlene Hardman, 20, Lake City, was charged with possession of drug paraphernalia.

A bill recently passed by the Iowa Legislature calls for clearer roads next year. The state is working to improve interstate traffic and driving conditions through a study.

The code would create a set of guidelines for the development of new buildings in the Des Moines Riverfront. Projects of the size and importance to the city should be reviewed and approved by the city council prior to construction.

Bozeman, S.D., will close sometime this year, according to the city council.

The ballot was a request for a clarification to improve and introduce traffic conditions through a study.

According to the report, the University of Kentucky has been labeled as "Hard Liquor" and No. 4 in the "Students Study the Least" lists. Big Ten commissioner Jim Delany has engaged in work to decrease the prevalence of binge drinking. Since 2009, the number of students engaging in high-risk drinking has dropped 17 percent, according to the National College Health Assessment survey. UI officials have maintained that there is no scientific or valid method behind the survey.

Sexual assault

During the 2013-2014 academic year, 367 sexual assaults on campus were reported. A three- month public hearing on the Safer campus initiative was held, followed by a six-point plan to combat this type of misconduct. The project has been approved after its most recent appeal being upheld. The state Board of Regents has approved funding for the university community following a reported assault has been changed, an advisory committee of students has been formed, and one student has been expelled for sexual misconduct.

The issue also took its place in the national spotlight. President Barack Obama released recommendations to colleges across the nation in April after forming a task force in January. The call for federal intervention followed numerous outrage in schools across the country, including UMass-Amherst and Vanderbilt University in Tennessee.

The Iowa City Gazette approved design parameters for the Gateway Project earlier this year. The design will raise a portion of Dubuque Street to the campus, creating an additional 1-foot and redesigning the Park Street Bridge to the height of a 200-year flood plus 1 foot, with a through-arch design. The project will cost more than $40 million, it aims to protect the city from flooding levels similar to 2008.

Coalition

In October 2011, a UI teaching assistant in the Mathematics Department accidentally sent inappropriate photos to roughly 100 students in her class instead of solutions to math problems. The TA was removed from teaching that class. The remains of the TA but performed non-teaching duties. Students turned to social media to share their findings, eventually being picked up by popular web sites such as Gawker.com and TotalFratMove.com.

21-Ordinance

Iowa City voters turned to the ballot box yet again in November 2013 to determine the fate of the contested 21-Ordinance. And yet again, it failed to pass. The ordinance would uphold the ordinance that prevents underage students from bringing beer into bars past 10 p.m., with 60 days of coming into enforcement. The 2010 ordinance has been voted on these times in six years, this was the second time the ordinance was upheld.

Tuition Freeze

The state Legislature approved funding allowing the state Board of Regents to freeze undergraduate resident tuition and fees for the 2014-2015 academic year. In total, the bill allocated $180 million for the three universities. The issue of the second-straight tuition freeze has been drawn for that group of students at the University of Iowa, the University of Northern Iowa, and Iowa State University. The freeze following a slight bump in the road after House Republicans and Senate Democrats disagreed on how much funding should be directed to the UI. House Republicans claim the UI had extra money in the bank, which contrasts how much LSU and the UNI have saved. But the bill managed to pass in the Senate on a 28-21 vote and in the House, 89-8.

Efficiency Study

The state Board of Regents hired the Deloitte consulting firm to review the spending of the regional universities in an efficiency study. Funds found from inefficiencies will be reinvested into the areas in which they were found. The study is the first of its kind since the 1980s and is projected to save the regents $2.5 million annually.
Common Core needs refining

You wouldn’t expect programs designed to prepare kids for the real world to be so common. But whether you have faith in the Iowa Board of Regents or the Common Core, national education standards have entered the U.S. education dialogue.

The latest fad comes over Iowa’s portion of the Common Core State Standards which are supposed to be a step in the right direction. The Iowa Board of Regents recently approved the standards and is pushing them forward for implementation.

Sure, I get that we may need to improve our educational system, but should it be this drastic? Should we throw out what we have and start again?

The Common Core State Standards are a set of standards that require all U.S. states to develop according to a federal blueprint. They are supposed to ensure that every student will have the same standards and curriculum, no matter where he or she lives.

This was a landmark week for killer robots across the country. Tuesday’s meeting at the United Nations in Geneva was the first time that governments officially gathered to discuss an increasingly realistic future in which nations use artificial intelligence for warfare and protective purposes.

What are “lethal autonomous robots” you ask?

Those types of robots would have the capability — in fact, be required — to use deadly reasoning to identify appropriate targets and use appropriate lethal force against those targets.

This was an issue of programming strike out of the hands of politicians and war strategists. This is a great example of why just because we can, doesn’t mean we should.

I think it’s vital that we be involved in the conversation. My opponents would rather plant houses on farmland in the North Corridor Development Area, those two priorities are currently possible

Finals at the UI

Scrap 7:30 a.m.

Complete their unread homework, for students who do not work, and allow the UI to talk about the issues that affect students and look good to prospective students.

Johnson County is one of the 15 schools in Iowa that continue to have the option of dropping classes later than 7:30 a.m. If you take an early class that day (say 6:30 a.m.), you get enough sleep to remain functionable for the remainder of the day like most of us, and you especially don’t sleep enough to remain sleep deprived. The Johnson County Board of Supervisors and the University of Iowa are making an effort to push back starting time to later than 7:30 a.m.

Now, if you need to get up at 6:30 a.m. because you have some class in the morning, don’t be mad, just assign the last exam to the last class on your schedule. Scheduling final exams first will let students know their exams, and therefore, improve grades. Giving exams in so many classes, grades depend largely on test scores, moving final back in the calendar will probably give you students’ GPA’s a real heart.

You would at least get some coffee before finals at the UI. If you resent one thing, just assign the last exam to the last class on your schedule, well, not just one thing about the last exam to the last class on your schedule.

Dental students aid children in northeast Iowa

In its second year, Project SEALED is seeing more students than ever in the schools it serves in Waukon and Postville.

Dental students aid children in northeast Iowa

Four times a year, students in the Allamakee School District can step out of their math and English classes and into a dentist’s chair.

A collaborative program allows third-year UI dental-school students the opportunity to provide discounted dental care to 110 to 140 students in the schools it serves in Waukon and Postville. A number that has increased from the initial visits.

Project SEALED — Service, Engagement and LifeCareer Education in Dentistry — is a partnership between the school systems in Waukon and Postville, Iowa, in Allamakee County and the U of I College of Dentistry.

Dan Caplan, a UI dentistry professor and the organizer of Project SEALED, takes third-year dental school students to the northeastern-most county of Iowa to provide oral screenings and clean the teeth of students whose families otherwise may not be able to afford dental care.

Project SEALED has provided dental care to students at the schools six times. Caplan estimated the dental students have provided care to 500 children this year alone.

The group saw from 70 to 80 students during both the first and second visits.

“There were not any services available because of a lack of dentists in the county,” said Allamakee School Superintendent Dave Herold.

He said many children in the district are eligible for Medicaid, but not many dentists in the county are Medicaid practitioners.

Regarding Medicaid coverage, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, 11 percent of Allamakee County residents are below the poverty line.

Herold said families whose children needed dental care would have to drive to Iowa City, Cedar Rapids, and sometimes Waterloo.

“If the students go up there, they aren’t here [at school],” Caplan said.

He noted that it provides valuable skills training for the dental students as the project coincides with students’ third year of dentistry school, when they have the pediatric operative rotation.

“Those are words to remember if you have symptoms of a heart attack or stroke,” Because Mercy Iowa City is Johnson County’s only accredited Chest Pain Center and is a certified Primary Stroke Center. Which means you’ll be diagnosed sooner and treated faster, at a time when every second counts.

When you are faced with a life-threatening emergency, call 911 and tell the paramedics, “Take me to Mercy.”

You can also receive a free guide to heart attacks and stroke by calling 1-800-949-MERC (6372).

home daycare for children with special needs. But a full-fledged daycare center is her goal in order to open this summer, and she will put the money towards classroom improvements.

Vanderseed said these types of services are not in Tipton, so the money from these fundraisers will have a dramatic effect on the community.

Other ideas included starting a brewery for a wedding chapel in Shelby, reclaiming a vacant building in Mount Pleasant for an automotive repair shop, and renovating an organic ice-cream shop in Independence to new markets across the state.

The three-day conference was started six years ago when a handful of organizations wondering where institutions could come together.

The University of Northern Iowa latched on to the idea, and it has hosted the event ever since. An official who helped put on the event said even though he has only been in the state for a short time, he has seen how the event helps form a community of people.

“The time is ripe to build a business in Iowa,” said UI economist, Dr. Ger Rey Feinberg, who emceed the Dream Big, Grow Here contest, said the focus is on getting entrepreneurs and professors to stay in Iowa to pursue their dreams.

Kingston said Iowa’s size allows for a community of business owners to be formed at events such as EntreFest, noting that in larger states, the focus is on reality on community development, but in Iowa, the focus is on bringing everyone together.

Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds, who attended EntreFest for a second year, said having such a large gathering of people similar to him made it easy to come back.

“Best networking party you could ever imagine,” he said. “Right next door is full of intense business makers, doers, and builders in Iowa.”

Reynolds said he sees a business ecosystem thrive as the state expands its outreach efforts to small businesses.

Josh Keukeran, who attended EntreFest for a second year, said having such a large gathering of people similar to him made it easy to come back.

“Best networking party you could ever imagine,” he said. “Right next door is full of intense business makers, doers, and build-

Keukeran, who founded Budget — a social-media marketing agency, 515 Court, said the company illustrates how business owners don’t need to leave the state to find success.

EntreFest posts a diversity of interesting, passionate, people that all have one thing in common, passion for growing in Iowa,” he said. “I think that a normalization that you can grow a company like this here.”

In 2013, Iowa was dead last in slugging percentage home runs, and total bases. Just one season later, the Hawkeyes are average in slugging (.336), second in home runs (13), and third in total bases. Just one season later in slugging percentage. Now Iowa has boosted its team's confidence in themselves out of jams, he says, and by letting them work things out on their own, he's put his team in a position to do more with less. "We just have the belief in us this year," ju-er Morris said. "We're not geting our butts kicked anymore, we can beat anybody, and we're not freaked out by any oppotion. That's a freakin' team there. We've got the confidence in the locker room, the confidence going out, and supporting us, and believed in us this year. We bought into that and we're off and running.
"The confidence is defineed," Morris said. "It's here. It started last year's finishes — until the 2014 relay team. Iowa has relied all season on its underclassmen, especially in the sprin-time, to be the backbone of the team. Hawks such as Marble excelled in the conference meet last year. "We just have the belief in us this year," ju-
