As Day 3 winds down, a Daily Iowan staffer learns about the different types of teams in RAGBRAI.

The pound of pancakes I had for breakfast lifted my spirits, and the refreshing cool, frothy glass of beer I enjoyed for lunch helped refresh me. But I think the main reason I kept pedaling was that local told me about a secret shortcut that saved 7 miles on my ride.

Talking to strangers has become easier for me. However, because I was desperate for something to talk about, I decided to hit the bottle and talk to some riders. So I talked to them. A lot of them. For 80 miles, I rode alongside riders and asked them what their RAGBRAI stories were. As you might imagine, they shared their stories, and I was highly impressed.

It was especially interesting to hear about the teams that each rider was a part of. They typically needed to be in a team. You need something. It's a joyous display of how fertile and productive gardening can be,” said Thrasos Carrey, the New Pioneer coop education and outreach coordinator.

The event is aimed for the public, and one focus will be educating people on barley and hops, he said. Beer staff from New Pioneer will also be there to explain the brewing process, such as malting barley.

Earth Sciences Garden began in 2009 with New Pioneer Food Co-op in conjunction with Harvest Farm & Preserve. The goal was to create a five-year educational program for adults and children on the different categories of food.

This year is focused on milk and cheese. Co-op members are allowed to secure a plot of land in the two-acre farm and cultivate various types of food, as long as they garden sustainably and within regulations established by the Iowa Water & Preserve.

The initiative was designed to show gardeners the wild-to-table process with food.

So they joined the Peace Corps and said they would like to do organizational development. A month before they left, they found out they would head to the Republic of Georgia.

After graduating from the University of Iowa and working in Iowa City for a while, Frederick and Cook wanted to explore the world and contribute what they had learned. So they joined the Peace Corps and said they would like to do organizational development. A month before they left, they found out they would head to the Republic of Georgia.

There have been 2,284 Iowans who have served in the Peace Corps, with 22 University of Iowa graduates currently serving in 28 countries.

I am on the Melon City Bike Club, a team mostly composed of riders from Mazarine. Most teams seem to be a stream of eccentricity or story that makes them special.

I spoke to the founder of team “No Name” for some time. He told me how that team had been found in 1977, before the Des Moines Register, which is in charge of RAGBRAI, required team names. Back then, team No Name was just team 55. However, when the Register began requiring team names, the team’s founder forgot to send in the documents. Thus, the Register dubbed the team “No Name.”

One team famous with almost everyone I spoke with was team Bad Boys, which was a team that bakes all of its dishes (tents, grills, etc.) on their bikes. An and by reading blogs from currently serving volunteers and talk to returned Peace Corps volunteers,” Mary Fuller, public affairs specialist for Peace Corps, wrote in an email. After returning to the United States in 2012, Fredericks and Cook decided that they would like to share the culture of hospitality that they had learned from the Georgians and opened a food cart in Portland, Oregon, called Kargi. Fredericks and Cook decided to open a food cart in Portland, Oregon, called Kargi. Fredericks and Cook decided to open a food cart in Portland, Oregon, called Kargi.

Their favorite Georgian dish depends on the location, but Cook really enjoys the Khinkali, a stuffed dumpling, because she finds it a good mixture of ingredients, and she likes its texture, its juiciness on the inside. As for Fredericks, he really likes the cheese bread, the Khachapuri, because it’s crunchy and “very gooey, cheesy, melty goodness.”

“For a lot of people, we’re the first time they’ve heard about Georgia, the first time they’ve tasted Georgian food, and so that’s something that is really important,” Cook said. “We feel very lucky that we are able to do that because it is such a special place to us.”

In Georgia, food is integral to the lifestyle—and for Fredericks and Cook, the flavors were amazing, but the tradition behind the food is what they really admired. While in Georgia, they were warmly welcomed by locals, an elaborate feast that goes on for hours. It can be for a special occasion or just a spur of the moment. “We hadn’t been in town very long, and we ran into some neighbors on the corner. And after we introduced ourselves, and they said, ‘Oh, come over, and sit down.’ And before long, there was a dozen people sitting around this table outside on the road for hours. Toasting, eating and having a good time, enjoying each other’s company and this sort of thing wasn’t just a freak occurrence.”

Fredericks and Cook, people from other countries who come to Iowa every year to do RAGBRAI, RAGBRAI gives riders the chance to meet interesting people at what on the surface seems like the uninteresting state of Iowa.

Why thank Jesus?

When former NBA All-Star Danny Granger recently retired from a brief stint in professional baseball, one of the things he did was thank Jesus for making his life into failure. He was a professional athlete and he had a place in the society, so he thanked Jesus for a lot of credit, maybe making his life into failure...

But it’s troubling when an athlete or a celebrity gives credit is given to God. It’s not even about the existence of a god higher being, much less the existence of a god higher being in the Christian, Jewish, or Muslim connotation. Airlines ban flights to Israel

Airline restrictions have been in effect for the past week in the wake of growing violence in Israel. The recent aerial conflict in Gaza, which has claimed the lives of several people, has led to a cancellation of flights to Tel Aviv from major airlines including British Airways, Air France, KLM and Delta. The restrictions are due to ongoing violence in Gaza, which has caused many people to leave their homes and seek shelter in Tel Aviv. The airlines have expressed concern for the safety of their passengers and crew members, and have decided to suspend flights until the situation improves. This has added to the already tense situation in the region, as businesses and individuals face challenges in navigating the current conflict. The situation is likely to continue for some time, as there is no immediate resolution to the conflict. The airlines will continue to monitor the situation and will make decisions accordingly.

Company eyes Iowa pipeline

A Texas energy conglomerate has eyed Iowa as a part of its plan to construct a 1,100-mile pipeline connecting North Dakota to Texas.

Officials from a Texas energy conglomerate have looked toward Iowa as a possible route for a pipeline that would stretch from North Dakota through Iowa and South Dakota before making its way to the southeast part of the state, according to the company. The company’s initial plan was for an oil pipeline, but it has now shifted its focus to a gas pipeline.

The pipeline, which would be constructed in the southern part of the state, is expected to be completed by 2016. The company estimates that the project will create 5,000 to 8,000 new jobs nationwide and will require the acquisition of more than 12,000 acres of land. The company has already begun negotiations with landowners, and the project is expected to move forward in the next several months.

The proposed route of the pipeline includes the counties of Adair, Butler, fountain, Green, Iowa, Lucas, Mahaska, Marion, Menard, Montgomery, Monroe, Newton, Pemiscott, Polk, Poweshiek, Ringgold, saline, Shelby, Tama, Van Buren, Warren, and Wapello. The company has stated that it will work closely with local officials to ensure that the project is completed in a safe and responsible manner.

The pipeline is expected to provide significant economic benefits to the state of Iowa, including increased tax revenue for the state and local governments and new job opportunities for residents. The pipeline is also expected to enhance the state’s energy infrastructure and provide a reliable source of energy for the state’s residents and industries.

Iowa was one of the first states to be targeted by the energy conglomerate. The company approached the state’s governor, Terry Branstad, and local officials in 2014, offering to create up to 12,000 new jobs and generate more than $1 billion in state and local revenue. The company has also stated that it will work with local communities to ensure that the project is completed in a safe and responsible manner.

The first round of the Prime Time League basketball playbook took place on July 17, and as the third through sixth seeds played their elimination games, the top two seeds enjoyed a low-key week. The teams wanted to play a casual game to give their legs some burn, but some teams had high expectations; now I'm taking care of my body and doing the right things. I'm still playing and doing the right things. I'm taking care of my family. My goal is to at each step be called upon to serve basketball. I proved I can contribute to Europe, so there's about 10 to 12 jobs right now. I'll go ahead and get over there, now overseas, so there's a lot of jobs so I'm expecting to Europe.

The Daily Iowan: You make a return to the Prime Time League last week, how’d that come about?

Melshan Basabe: That was my first game since the season, and I really just came to start getting into game shape and getting my legs under me.

DI: Playing with and against point guard Rio Grande, how do you look heading into next season?

Basabe: They’ve got a very talented and skilled team. I would say they definitely have a bright future. All of them are very solid players, I see how hard they work, as I would expect to see what I saw (July 17), which was productive play out of everyday.
