Thump, thump, thump. The beat of a mellifluous melody dances its way around the Old Capitol area. The smell of freshly cooked food of several varieties sifts through the air, drawing in wanderers from around downtown. The ambiance throughout is sweet and smooth, invoking an infectious feeling of soulful bliss to all in attendance.

This was the scene around the Pentacrest on Sept. 19 and 20 during the second Iowa Soul Festival.

A celebration of African and African-American music, dance, art, and food, the festival was a collaboration between Iowa City's Summer of the Arts and Cedar Rapid's Diversity Focus.

Summer of the Arts Executive Director Lisa Barnes said the sophomore festival topped its first incarnation.

"We were very happy with the attendance," she said. "Based on last year versus this year, this year was definitely higher ... Everything was so much fun."

More than 125 climate-change activists marched on the streets of Iowa City Sunday, demanding that local leaders take action to fight the perceived effects of climate change.

The march was in support of the much larger People's Climate March in New York City, which also took place on Sunday and had tens of thousands of people in attendance, according to the Associated Press.

The People's Climate March happened a few days before the U.N. Climate Summit, which will be held on Tuesday.

In Iowa City, various activist groups, including the Iowa City Climate Advocates, 100 Grannies, and the Iowa chapter of Physicians for

5K race aids kid's hospital

By AARON WALKER

The first-ever race to finish on Kinnick Field took place this past weekend.

Kickoff 2 Kinnick 5K had 2,127 participants signed up for the event to help raise money for the University of Iowa Children's Hospital and the Tim Dwight Foundation.

However, only 1,897 people officially finished the race with an average time of 35:24.

Runners began at the intersection of Hawkins and Elliott Drives at 9 a.m. Sept. 20. Soon after, they became the first local runners to finish a race on the field at Kinnick Stadium.

Mitch Beckert, a UI second-year medical student and former undergraduate tennis player, organized the race.

The board of directors for the event also consisted of UI medical students.

"[We are] hoping and expecting to have raised over $60,000 in our first year," Beckert said. "We're pretty excited about it."

The organizers also hosted a tailgate in Kinnick's parking lot with live music, free food, and vendor tents. The racers, their families, and friends congregated in the parking lot to eat and watch the Iowa/Pitt football game.

"We had a free post-race tailgate [of] hot dogs and bananas," Beckert said.

A number of other companies sponsored the event, such as the Bread Garden, Java House,

2 women face controlled-substance charges

Authorities have accused two women with possessing synthetic marijuana. Shanice Burks, 21, and Olivia Forrest, 31, were charged July 17 with controlled-substance violation.

According to online court documents, Burks and Forrest were approached while inside an illegally parked vehicle.

Officers noticed a wooden box typically used to carry marijuana in the passenger's seat in plain sight.

Authorities searched the box and allegedly found 12 small, individually sealed plastic bags filled with synthetic cannabinoids, as well as two large bags containing synthetic cannabinoids.

Burks and Forrest reportedly admitted to purchasing the larger bags and selling them for a profit of about $50 a day to individuals in Iowa City.

Controlled-substance violation is a Class-D felony.

Man charged with domestic-abuse assault

Authorities have accused an Iowa City man of assaulting his partner. Lorenzo Jones, 29, was charged Sept. 18 with domestic-abuse assault.

According to online court documents, Jones choked the woman until she lost consciousness by constricting the nose or mouth and causing bodily injury.

Jones and the woman have been in an intimate relationship for three years and have a 3-year-old son.

The woman is pregnant with their second child.

Domestic-abuse assault is a Class-D felony.

CR man charged with forgery

Authorities have accused a Cedar Rapids man of cashing a forged check for more than $2,000.

Norvell Currie, 47, was charged Aug. 22 with forgery.

According to online documents, Currie cashed a check that he knew was forged.

The check amounted to $2,886.66. He then split the money with several unknown people.

Forgery is a Class-D felony.

Man charged with 3rd OWI

Authorities have accused an Iowa man of driving while under the influence.

Robert Thompson, 53, was charged Sept. 19 with third-offense OWI.

According to online documents, Thompson was driving a red 1991 Chevrolet Lumina with Iowa license plates when he was stopped for traffic violations.

Thompson's eyes were red and watery and he smelled of alcohol. He reportedly admitted to authorities to drinking.

He had a blood-alcohol concentration of .162. His first OWI was in 2003, and the second one was in 2009.

Third-offense OWI is a class-D felony.

Woman, man charged with forgery

Authorities have accused a North Liberty woman and a local man of stealing a credit card.

Rayanda Bell, 29, and Arthur Spearman, 19, were charged Sept. 18 with forgery. Bell was also charged with possession of marijuana.

According to online court documents, Bell and Spearman obtained the credit card of the victim while the victim provided them a ride to Walmart in Coralville.

Bell and the Spearman reportedly admitted under Miranda to using the victim's Discover card to obtain merchandise and hotel room without the victim's permission.

The two allegedly charged $458.22 to the card.

In a separate court document, Bell was also charged for possession of marijuana.

While in the Super 8 Motel, Bell and Spearman were in a room that smelled strongly of marijuana.

According to online court documents, when asked if there was still marijuana in the room, Spearman said yes.

The marijuana was found in the safe.

Three grams, which Bell identified as marijuana, were found.

Man faces eluding charge

Authorities have accused a Cedar Rapids man of not pulling over during a traffic stop. Trevor Mills, 30, was charged Sept. 19 with eluding.

According to online court documents, Mills was driving a red 2002 Ford Windstar van on a public roadway with no headlights.

After being pursued by an officer with emergency lights and sirens activated, Mills failed to pull over.

As a result, Mills' license is suspended. Eluding is a Class-D felony.

Woman charged with criminal conduct, theft

Authorities have accused a North Liberty woman of spending more than $30,000 of someone else's money at casinos.

Nancy Salisbury, 66, was charged Feb. 11 with ongoing criminal conduct and first-degree theft.

According to online documents, Salisbury repeatedly withdrew and spent money from the victim's account for her personal use at local casinos.

The victim did give Salisbury consent to oversee the victim's day-to-day finances, but Salisbury spent the victim's money in a way that was inconsistent with the established trust, according to the documents.

Salisbury reportedly spent more than $30,000 at the casinos.

Ongoing criminal conduct is a Class-B felony; first-degree theft is a Class-C felony.

Man charged with burglary, theft

Authorities have accused a local man of stealing a laptop.

Abdiqani Haji Mohamud, 32, was charged Sept. 20 with second-degree burglary and second-degree theft.

According to online court documents, Haji Mohamud went into 505 E. Burlington St. and entered apartment 15C.

A resident was awakened by a noise.

When he left his room, he noticed that his laptop was missing and saw Haji Mohamud re-enter his house.

The resident told Haji Mohamud that he needed to leave, and Haji Mohamud left the building before officers arrived.

He was later found in a parking lot, and the resident positively identified him as the person who was in his apartment. He was not in possession of the missing laptop, which had a $2,000 value.

Second-degree burglary is a Class-C felony. Second-degree theft is a Class-D felony.

Man charged with domestic abuse

Authorities have accused a man of choking and striking a woman.

Robert Dartz, 47, was charged Sept. 12 with domestic abuse.

According to online documents, Dartz admitted to authorities that he abused the victim while she was sleeping in the Super 7 motel.

Officers were called to the Super 7 motel by a front-desk staff member concerned that domestic assault was taking place in one of the guest rooms.

Authorities met with the woman who had obvious injuries to her face. According to online court documents, the woman reported that Dartz struck her multiple times in the face, choked her, kicked her in the ribs, and pulled her hair.

Domestic abuse is a Class-D felony.

Man charged with burglary

Authorities have accused a Cedar Rapids man of stealing a laptop from a dorm room.

Mark Spicer, 19, was charged Sept. 16 with second-degree burglary.

According to online documents, Spicer arrived at the dorm of a woman. Once the woman answered the door, Spicer allegedly grabbed her and assaulted her in the hallway by striking her in the face.

Spicer entered her room without permission and assaulted her again by spitting in her face. He stole her laptop and refused to return her phone.

The woman's roommate was sleeping in the room when the burglary occurred.

Second-degree burglary is a Class-C felony.

'New' wastewater treatment plant opens

By MICHAEL KADRIE
michael-kadrie@uiowa.edu

Iowa City celebrated the completion of upgrades to a wastewater treatment plant, whose long journey to completion endured droughts and floods.

The revamped South facility, 4366 Napoleon St. S.E., is now the only wastewater-treatment facility for the city.

Wastewater Superintendent Dave Elias said conceptual work for the facility began in 1975, and Iowa City Mayor Matt Hayek said it was the culmination of seven major projects.

Costing $50.1 million, it is the largest public-works project Iowa City has ever undertaken.

Funding originated at the federal, state, and local levels.

The U.S. Department of Commerce Economic Development Authority provided $22 million to the construction of the new plant. Two state sources, I-JOBS and a grant from the Iowa Economic Development Authority, gave $19.3 million. A local-option sales tax, voted in by the city, and city wastewater revenues are responsible for the remaining $8.8 million.

The nearly total destruction of the former North wastewater-treatment plant, 1000 S. Clinton St., in the 2008 flood increased the urgency of the project.

Hayek said the new facility can process up to 24 million gallons of water a day, or up to 43 million during adverse conditions. These increased capabilities are especially important for Iowa City as it continues to grow.

"This new facility, for the first time in decades, allows us the possibility of significant population expansion," Hayek said.

The new Iowa City water-treatment facility celebrated its grand opening on Sept. 19th, 2014. The new facility is located on Napoleon St SE, Iowa City. (The Daily Iowan/Anna Kilzer)

However, Hayek said there is still more work to do on some of the smaller aspects of the system as some sewer lines date back to the 19th century.

Environmental and financial sustainability is another cornerstone of the new facility's mission.

The plant will recycle water and use it for, among other things, the watering of the nearby community soccer field. It also produces enough fertilizer to cover more than 800 acres of land, and reclamation of methane from wastewater may save the city $50,000 annually, Hayek said.

The evolution of the technology used to treat the water is part of the plants environmentally conscious model.

Ultra-violet rays, like those from the sun, have replaced chlorine gas and sulfur-dioxide as the filtering media, Elias said.

Elias said the most important part of abandoning chlorine and sulfur-dioxide was the increased safety of both the community and wastewater workers. The chemicals, he said, if accidentally mishandled, could have forced an evacuation of the five miles surrounding the plant and an unknown degree of environmental damage.

"It's a more efficient facility than we had before, and I'm glad it's up and running," Iowa City City Councilor Kingsley Botchway II said.

Hayek said in place of the old North facility, the city is planning to design a city park, which will be one of the "bookends" for the Riverfront Crossing District.

The park will help expand the flood capacity of the area. Additionally, according to the proposal of the project, removal of the plant ensures there is no risk of commercial and residential exposure to untreated effluent in that area during future floods.

"We're not having a ribbon cutting; we're opening the floodgates," Elias said.

University conference hails start-ups

A University of Iowa conference discussed fostering entrepreneurship and innovation in college towns.

By BEN MARKS
Benjamin-marks@uiowa.edu

Universities and communities throughout the Midwest are working toward harnessing the energy and creativity in university towns, and a conference hosted by the University of Iowa discussed methods to do so.

The UI invited community and business leaders from Iowa City as well as East Lansing, Michigan, and Lincoln, Nebraska — two other Midwest college towns — to attend the Midwest Creative College Town Conference on Sept. 20.

The conference was hosted by the UI School of Urban and Regional Planning to commemorate its 50th anniversary.

"We wanted to do something to celebrate our anniversary that just wasn't about bringing alumni back and talking about the good old days," said Charles Connerly, the director of the school and organizer of the event. "We wanted to do something that told the public the importance of planning, the importance of place making."

Connerly said with university and community support, the initial steps of planning the conference were easy, but the biggest hurdle was cold-calling people from all over the Midwest and persuading them to take time out of their 40-hour-plus workweek to attend.

The conference was held as a series of panel discussions with leaders and entrepreneurs from the three Midwest college towns discussing how organizations in their communities were helping to harness the spirit and energy of their communities, foster entrepreneurship and innovation, as well as boost economic growth.

"A lot of job and business growth comes from the entrepreneurial community, and it's really important to be able to support that for wealth [and] job creation," said Christina Bartels, director of innovation and entrepreneurship for the Lincoln Partnership for Economic Development in Nebraska.

Bartels said she works to connect start-ups and existing businesses in the form of meet-ups, conferences, business accelerators or co-working spaces so they can create new products and partnerships.

However, she said, she sees her role as more of a supporter and not a leader.

"It's difficult for the government, the city, or the chamber to lead these efforts, because the entrepreneurs themselves are the ones that need to be on the forefront to make it happen for reasons of trust, or because they're the ones out there building and doing," she said.

Eric Hanson, communications director of the Iowa City Area Development Group, said he believes one of the issues halting entrepreneurial development in communities is the unknown element that comes along with something new.

"I think one of the roadblocks is that there's not a model for it," he said. "So companies or organizations like a state and community could just be afraid of the 'Well, if we do this untested, we don't know the risk and reward' versus 'We've done this pattern many times, and we at least know it works.'"

Andy Stoll, co-founder of Seed Here Studio, an Iowa City company dedicated to cultivating a community in which start-ups can thrive, said cities and governments are not the only ones to have difficulty with entrepreneurship.

"The best help for an entrepreneur is another entrepreneur," he said. "They often think they have to go into their basement and plug away, when what they actually need to do is connect with other entrepreneurs and the other resources in their community."

Ho-hum in London

Matthew Byrd

matthew-e-byrd@uiowa.edu

Byrd is studying abroad at the University of Westminster in London.

For the capital of a political entity on the verge of potential amputation, London was quite calm on the evening of Sept. 18.

Not calm in the way Iowa City is at around 3 in the morning as Sunday turns to Monday, when the last buses from Chicago and Omaha roll in, unleashing bleary-eyed student travelers returning to their dorms through dead streets. But more akin to Iowa City on a Saturday night, with all the debauchery, packed-like-sardines Cambuses, excessive cologne and perfume, and vomit that entails.

Yet, naively in hindsight, I was expecting something a bit less than “calm,” considering that on this night the people of Scotland, which occupies a third of the island of Great Britain and is one of the four countries that make up the United Kingdom (along with England, Wales, and Northern Ireland) would vote, in record turnout, on a referendum deciding whether they should remain in union with their three neighbors or break away and become the world’s 197th sovereign state.

Needless to say, the possibility of a 306-year-old marriage being annulled overnight seemed like something that would shake up any place involved, especially London, the demographic and cultural heart of the UK. So, I was planning on visiting Rob Roy, a pub that Yelp had informed me was a go-to spot for Scottish soccer matches, where I assumed some London Scots would assemble to watch the election results trickle in. Thought I’d probe some of them about their feelings towards the possibility of having to enter a second country the next time they stepped foot in their hometown, perhaps even enjoy a McEwan or two. Afterwards, I planned on heading to Trafalgar Square, the main public square in Central London that had played host to an anti-independence rally a few days before, see if I could catch any action, perhaps an unplanned gathering related to the referendum in some way, shape, or form. What I was expecting, I’m still not really sure.

When I got there, the supposed front door of the Rob Roy had been boarded up with a flat piece of wood that, considering the age of the wood, seemed to have been placed there since before there was even a United Kingdom to break up. The windows were similarly blocked and the sign above the door seemed to have suffered more neglect than most of us would wish on our worst enemies. So I decided to just head to Trafalgar Square.

The first thing that hit me, and I suspect hits most newcomers, when I exited the tube was the sheer size of Nelson’s Column, the 169-foot pillar that stands at the forefront of the Square, at the top of which rests a heroic-looking statue of Admiral Horatio Nelson, the British admiral who died beating back Napoleon’s fleet at Cape Trafalgar, Spain. My eyes came down from the triumphant sandstone Nelson to the rest of the square, which was filled with: nothing. A couple of college students sitting at the base of the column, smoking e-cigs, some tourists taking pictures near the square’s fountains, and a whole lot of pigeons looking for scraps left by London’s litter-happy population. Looking at the square, you couldn’t have deciphered whether it was the night the union Nelson had died for was at stake or whether it was just some Thursday in god-knows-what year because who-the-hell cares.

Disappointed I flipped some of my (now useless) American dimes in the fountain for good luck on future endeavors, went home, cooked some popcorn, and went to bed. In the morning, I awoke to the news that Scotland, 55 percent to 44 percent with an 84 percent turnout, voted to remain in the United Kingdom. I went back down to Trafalgar Square, passing newsstands with headlines that couldn’t get enough of referendum analysis, and found the same sight as I had the night before except with fewer e-cig smoking peers and more pigeons.

Maybe things’ll be more exciting when Northern Ireland inevitably gets to decide its future in the UK. It certainly couldn’t be any more boring than Scotland’s turn.

POINT/COUNTERPOINT

Who won gubernatorial debate?

The candidates for governor of Iowa faced off on Sept. 20 in Burlington, and the tone of the debate quickly turned confrontational. Who made their case better?

Branstad held his ground

“You stop lying about me, and I’ll stop telling the truth about you,” said Sen. Jack Hatch, D-Des Moines, as he quoted former President Ronald Reagan in the gubernatorial debate against incumbent Gov. Terry Branstad. Through claps and cheers, Hatch no doubt felt satisfied as he used the line he seemed to have waiting in his back pocket, along with other one-liners, since long before the debate began.

Hatch, however, spent a large portion of the night attacking Branstad on his actions as governor and less time arguing in favor of his own policies.

While Branstad did his fair share of finger-pointing, it seemed that with the distinction of “Iowa’s longest serving governor” on his résumé, Branstad was free to all but dismiss Hatch’s accusations and point to the success he has had as governor thus far and to programs he plans to implement and continue in the future.

Hatch made sure to use buzzwords and phrases such as “an explosion of economic opportunity” and “[building] the economy from the community up, not the top down” in an apparent attempt to get Iowa citizens, as opposed to corporations, excited about his campaign. The only thing missing from some of Hatch’s statements, it seemed, was a Twitter hashtag. But outside of pointing to Branstad’s shortcomings and making these blanket statements, Hatch did little to express what he specifically planned to do as governor.

Branstad, on the other hand, pointed to his goals of increasing not just jobs in Iowa but “good jobs,” with a focus on improving both economic stability and workforce development. Moreover, he maintained his focus on improving education and keeping the cost of in-state tuition low.

When Hatch challenged Branstad, saying that many of the jobs created by the Iowa Fertilization Plant went to out-of-town workers, he reinforced Branstad’s position. This challenge set the governor up brilliantly to explain that the reason some of the jobs did not belong to Iowans was because there was a lack of a skilled workforce, which Branstad tied to his desire to increase workforce development and improve education. Furthermore, Branstad pointed to the economic development that the jobs provided for Iowa regardless of to whom they went.

Although Hatch made some good points throughout the debate, many revolved around the alleged missteps of the Branstad administration and did not point to solutions. While Branstad focused on the future and improving the programs he had already created, Hatch primarily focused on Branstad’s past.

— Joe Lane

Branstad took a beating

The second governor’s debate had the Republican incumbent Terry Branstad squaring off with the Democratic challenger, Sen. Jack Hatch. The topics of this debate were the economy, jobs, and infrastructure, with both candidates reinforcing the priorities of their plan.

As indicated by recent Quinnipiac University polls, Branstad has a solid lead in the race, making Hatch’s primary goal to shift public opinion on the current governor. From the very beginning of the debate the tone quickly shifted to a pugilistic, “he said, she said” banter between the two, with Hatch very clearly out for blood. Branstad did his best to counter the onslaught of accusations and criticisms from Hatch but ultimately could do little more than hide behind his reputation and shaky statistics.

Given that he was a bit of an underdog going into this debate, it was clear that Hatch needed to make voters distrustful of Branstad as a person and a politician. Throughout the debate, Hatch focused on painting the incumbent governor as a morally questionable politician who cared more about corporations than he did people. Hatch’s offensive was relentless and ranged from listing the various lawsuits being brought up against Branstad to dismembering any and all statistics or figures used by the governor to describe his progress. Branstad made an effort to rely on his policies and plans alone, but playing solely defense may have harmed his credibility overall. Branstad rarely offered any impressive rebuttals and instead used any opportunity he could to remind people he was in fact born and raised in Iowa or that he was not nearly as bad as the governors of Illinois.

At one point when discussing the veracity of claims made in his campaign ads Hatch told Branstad to “stop lying about me, and I’ll stop telling the truth about you” quoting former President Reagan. The use of this quote sums up Hatch’s strategy in the debate, which consisted more of branding Branstad’s supposed dishonesty into the minds of the voters instead of relying solely on the strength of his own platform. While it did come off as overbearing at times, Hatch did a great job of positioning himself as a man of the people, and it is hard to blame him for playing to win when the odds are against him. Branstad may be able to stand on the strength of his past merits in this election, but pound for pound, he certainly took a beating from Hatch in this debate.

GUEST COLUMN

EPB situation harms learning

I am writing in response to the recent article published in The Daily Iowan about the mold in the English-Philosophy Building. As one of the evicted persons, I have some clarifying points I would like to very respectfully express to the university at large — especially to those in charge of Facilities Management and to those in positions of administrative power. The EPB situation has resulted in the displacement of university-employed graduate students, compromised learning for both graduate students and undergraduate students, and continues to pose health concerns to all who pass through the EPB.

Approximately 55 graduate students, all of whom are instructors and employees of the university, have been displaced. Many graduate instructors were given fewer than 48 hours to evacuate their offices, which housed confidential student records, learning resources, computers, and printers. Our department heads, administrative staff, and professors have been tremendously helpful and supportive. They have offered to share offices with us and have even helped us move. Despite the support we have received, the move has been very difficult. The move has also occurred very close to the English Department’s Qualification Exam, which graduate students have been preparing for. The move, in itself, has compromised the health and learning environment of graduate students.

Graduate instructors have been granted a space in Seashore Hall. Seashore is not a safe building, either. As cited in a Sept. 10 article in the Press-Citizen, “Rod Lehnertz, UI director of planning and construction, said many of the original spaces are now vacant and unusable for various reasons including safety regulations.” In addition to safety concerns, the move to Seashore Hall has compromised undergraduate student learning. Our undergraduate students, who have classes in EPB, are now reluctant to attend office hours because of the distance. Seashore is more than a half a mile from the EPB. In order to allow for more accessibility to office hours, many graduate instructors are holding office hours in more convenient locations for their student—such as the Library Commons. However, spaces such as these can be noisy and prohibit instructors from speaking privately with students about learning concerns. Graduate instructors are invested in their pedagogy and perform their job duties with integrity. This move has prohibited graduate instructors from doing their jobs in ways that best facilitate positive student outcomes. This has been troubling, as student outcomes are a main priority.

Finally, there are questions about the safety of the EPB for university employees and students who remain there. It appears that the right to a safe environment that facilitates a positive learning experience is not included in the university’s Bill of Student Rights. It seems that a positive and healthy student learning environment should be a key priority for the university. The university should also take measures to ensure that employee workplaces are safe, healthy, and conducive to scholarship.

Local courthouse-annex plans take shape

By RACHEL GREEN
rachel-green@uiowa.edu

With the final courthouse annex designs configured, the Johnson County Board of Supervisors held public forums to discuss the changes from the original plan.

During their third meeting, which was held in Iowa City on Sept. 20, the members discussed the new plan to build the annex underground.

The original Johnson County Courthouse was built in 1901, and Supervisor Janelle Rettig said it was time for a change with the building.

"Our courthouse was built for a different time," she said.

As the population of the county grows, more court cases occur, and space is needed for more attorneys to work. Additional space is also needed for meeting rooms, jury deliberation rooms, and interview rooms.

"We currently have two attorneys in a small closet," County Attorney Janet Lyness said. "We tried to hire another attorney but had no space for him. We tried to put him into another closet, but that was maintenances-only closet."

The original solution was for a courthouse annex to be built along Harrison Street, disconnected from the original courthouse. The two buildings would have been connected by a walkway.

Now, a proposal to add a 69,167-square-foot annex to the current courthouse will appear on the Johnson County ballot on Nov. 14.

It will focus instead on a partially underground addition, located immediately west of the courthouse, with an entrance on the south side of the original building.

According to the bond referendum, the cost of the annex will be $33.4 million or less. For the proposal to go through and move on from the conceptual stage, a supermajority vote of at least 60 percent is needed on Nov. 4.

The underground annex will contain three floors.

The bottom floor, not accessible to the public, would be used to bring inmates in for their hearings through two ports in the side of the building.

While there are temporary inmate holding areas on each floor, there is no official jail located on the premises.

There will also be storage and mechanical areas on the bottom floor.

The second and third floors would contain courtrooms, offices, jury deliberation rooms, conference rooms, a law library, media rooms, restrooms, and mechanical areas.

An atrium would be included in the proposed annex and would incorporate a view of the old courthouse through a glass portion of the roof. The roof would also provide natural light.

Lyness said because the courthouse kept most of its original architecture, putting in newer security technology is almost impossible to install.

Security measures that will be added include separate hallways for moving inmates, metal detection equipment at the entrance, and a fire-suppression system.

Rettig said that if necessary in the future, there is the option to build onto the annex on the county-owned corner of Capitol and Harrison streets.

Supervisor John Ether-

edge said many residents of the county support the proposal but still have some concerns.

"People in this area are conscientious of their taxes," he said. "They agree that we need it, but wonder why it has to cost $33.4 million."

Lyness said she has heard complaints that those who work in the courthouse should try other solutions before adding on to the building.

"A misconception is that we should just have evening and night hours, but the county does not have jurisdiction over that," she said. "Even if we could, a huge part of the judicial budget is staff, and night hours would increase that price."

SOUL FEST

such as the FunkDaddies, Sierra Leone's Refugee All Stars, and Lalah Hathaway. Grammy-Award-winning performer and University of Iowa alumnus Al Jarreau headlined the night of Sept. 20.

Jarreau, 74, has been performing jazz, pop, soul, and funk music since the 1960s, and his Soul Fest performance proved the Wisconsin-born musician doesn't plan to slow down soon.

"In a world where having a career and a life in this industry depends so much on being under 25 and cute and getting the girl to be successful, it means a lot," Jarreau said about being invited to perform at Soul Fest. "I'm not retired, and I'm not gonna retire."

Jarreau and his band banged out tune after tune, including old favorites such as "Boogie Down" and "My Old Friend," a song off his new album and a tribute to his late friend George Duke. A vocal solo by Jarreau's bassist Mark Simmons generated some of the loudest applause of the festival.

UI freshman Abigail Morrow said Jarreau's performance was her favorite part of the event.

"I really did enjoy the Soul Festival," she said. "The music was fantastic, with everyone really getting into it and even dancing in the street. The food smelled good, and it seemed like most of Iowa City turned out for my first concert on the Pentacrest."

Barnes gave a similar review of the headlining show.

"I thoroughly enjoyed Al Jarreau," she said. "It was an amazing opportunity to have Hancher bring him back to Iowa City."

The patrons lining up for food on Clinton Street, shopping at the African Marketplace, and listening to music on the Pentacrest Main Stage were diverse, representing a range of ages and ethnic backgrounds. The Gospel Brunch events at the Sheraton Iowa City Hotel Sunday attracted yet more crowds and added another musical genre to an already eclectic festival repertoire.

"I talked to a number of people who came in for the festival and the Gospel Brunch who had a wonderful time," Barnes said. "I already have people asking about next year and what the plans are."

Hy-Vee, and Yotopia.

The Tim Dwight Foundation has raised more than $150,000 to benefit the Children's Hospital. It also provides scholarships and hosts a summer football camp for Iowa youths.

"Health goes across a lot of different spectrums," said Dwight, a former Hawkeye and NFL football player from Iowa City. "Not just trying to fix some kid that's sick."

With 75 percent of the money from his foundation going to research, the remaining 25 percent goes to benefit patients' experiences.

"We're trying to bring value to the kids who are in the hospital for weeks, days, or months," Dwight said.

Dwight said the proceeds from his foundation also go toward studies related to brain-stem cancer.

Dwight ran alongside people of all ages, including former Hawkeye Nick Holmes.

Holmes, an employee at Running Wild, one of the event's sponsors, won the race in a time of 15:01.

Holmes ran track and cross-country for the university from 2008 to 2012.

"This is a spectacular event," he said. "[It has] a lot of people [and is] a good cause. It's definitely a thing you have to do. Plus you get the chance to finish on Kinnick."

As the race concluded, the field was energized by all of the runners.

"It's a great opportunity for fundraising," race announcer Mike Pettis said. "They're two great organizations that do a lot of great work here in the Iowa City area."

CLIMATE

Social Responsibility, organized and participated in the local event.

Maureen McCue, a coordinator from Physicians for Social Responsibility in Iowa City, said the protesters marching in New York were doing so to tell "world leaders it's time to step and take real action."

"And what we know [is] that while it's important that world leaders create the environment and the policies that will help to halt climate change, it can be done also at very local levels," she said. "Cities can do things, universities can do things, counties can do things, states can do things, we can all do things at all levels."

On Tuesday, the U.N. Climate Summit will be held at the U.N. headquarters, with Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon hosting.

"... We're taking action, and we expect them to as well," said Whit Jones, campaign director for the Energy and Action Coalition, a non profit group composed of more than 30 youth-oriented environmental groups across the nation.

The organizers of the People's Climate March wanted the event to catch the attention of the world leaders attending the Climate Summit.

Jones said the main march in New York City was a collaboration of more than 1,500 endorsing organizations, from environmental groups to labor unions.

"The People's Climate March is going to demonstrate that hundreds of thousands of people care about this issue of climate change and that we're not waiting to take action,"

Jones said.

In Iowa City, marchers met on the Pedestrian Mall, in front of the office of Rep. Dave Loebsack, D-Iowa.

Some people marching were carrying signs with phrases on them that read, "There is no planet B" or "Fund solutions, not pollution." Another person was handing out slips of paper with lyrics written on them.

When the lyrics were all passed out, a guitar player led the marchers in song, singing of how "we need to build a better future, and we need to start right now."

Afterwards, one of the organizers stood on a bench on the Ped Mall with a megaphone, to call on Loebsack, D-Iowa, to continue his commitment to the climate and the environment.

A marcher then hammered a sign into the ground in front of Loebsack's office, with a list of demands for him.

"This is not something that he can put down at the bottom of his list, but has to be way at the top of his list and at the top of everybody's list right now," said Barbara Schlachter, a member of the leadership team of the Iowa City Climate Advocates.

The group marched to the Johnson County Administration Offices and Jessup Hall, where University of Iowa President Sally Mason's office is located. They continued to City Hall, then headed back to the Pedestrian Mall.

As they crossed from street to street, people held up signs in front of the cars at the stoplights that read "This corporate capitalism is killing our planet," while others held up flags with a picture of the planet Earth on it.

"We may not be in New York, but we're going to count," Schlachter said.

PITTING THE PANTHERS

‘It wasn’t me. It was the linemen. The receivers had a great game. The defense really stepped it up in the second half. They played great the second half.’

— C.J. Beathard, quarterback

1. Iowa running back Mark Weisman reacts after Iowa's 24-20 victory over Pitt at Heinz Field in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania on Saturday, Sept. 20, 2014. Weisman scored 2 touchdowns and rushed for 88 yards. 2. Iowa defensive back John Lowdermilk tackles Pitt running back James Conner at Heinz Field in Pittsburgh on Sept. 20. Conner had 29-carries for 155 yards, but Iowa defeated Pitt, 24-20. 3. Iowa defensive back Anthony Gair celebrates with his teammates after his interception at the end of the fourth quarter sealing the 24-20 Iowa victory over Pitt at Heinz Field in Pittsburgh on Sept. 20. 4. Iowa quarterback Jake Rudock leaves the field with his teammates after their 24-20 victory over Pitt at Heinz Field in Pittsburgh on Sept. 20. Rudock threw for 80 yards. yards on 29 carries and of 21, 22, 11, and 24 yards, and ng 5.3.

THUMBS UP

Kicking Game: Marshall Koehn drilled a 52-yard field goal in the third quarter that looked as though it might've been good from 60. Koehn also recorded a touchback on each of his five kickoffs against Pittsburgh, bringing his season total to 16.

THUMBS DOWN

Big Play Offense: Iowa's defense gave up 10 plays that spanned 15 yards or longer — or “explosive plays.” In addition to Conner's three huge runs, the Hawkeyes also surrendered passes of 18, 24, 23, 39, 22, 16, and 15 yards.

LOOK AHEAD

Iowa opens its Big Ten schedule next week. The team will travel to West Lafayette and play Purdue at Ross-Ade Stadium. The Boilermakers are 2-2 on the season, 2-1 at home. The Hawkeyes beat Purdue last season, and they have won two of the last three over the Boilermakers.

horoscopes

Monday, September 22, 2014 by Eugenia Last

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your ability to embrace change and turn whatever is going on to your advantage will lead to a new beginning. Offers made may cause uncertainty at first, but once you weigh the pros and cons, you will know exactly how to react.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't count on others to do things for you. Let your past performance speak for you. Make changes based on experience, fair play, and an opportunity to move in a direction that promises prosperity and satisfaction.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stand tall, and refuse to let what others say or do bother you. Anger never solves anything, but working toward your goals does. Prepare to make the changes that will make you feel more at ease personally and professionally.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make positive changes to your environment and do what you can to cut your overhead. Not everyone will like or approve of the changes you implement, but you have to do whatever works for you and eases your stress.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Jumping from one thing to another will make those around you nervous. The ease at which you carry out your plans will help you gain respect. Be wary of someone who might be secretly trying to take advantage of your stamina.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You will face opposition and are best to deal with it in a positive, patient and practical manner. Getting angry will not solve anything and will probably lead to lies, deception, and disillusionment. Work on self-improvement, not trying to change others.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Legal, financial, or medical matters should be dealt with personally. Do not let anyone handle matters that can have an effect on your future. Do what you can to protect your home and your family's interests. Get your facts straight.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take a position, follow through with your belief, and you will achieve great satisfaction from lending a helping hand. Keep a close watch on authoritative institutions, agencies, or people to ensure you aren't being cheated or manipulated.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Follow through with your plans, but don't feel the need to take on someone else's chores or demands. Emotional blackmail is apparent and must be kept in perspective to avoid being taken for granted. Use your head and do what's best for you.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Avoid being impulsive when engaging in chatter with friends, relatives, or peers. You are best to focus on personal and financial self-improvements that will lead to a better lifestyle or environment. Protect your assets, possessions, and your reputation.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A financial change is heading your way. You can make career moves that will improve your status quo and lead to greater opportunities down the road. Open up to business or personal partners and you will get the go-ahead.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep life simple, and avoid engaging in disagreements or risky emotional, physical, or financial situations. Listen carefully to what others say and offer. There will be underlying motives that you are best to address before you make a decision.

The only reason for time is so that everything doesn't happen at once.

Lewis leads harriers

Kevin Lewis was the Iowa men's cross-country team's top finisher at the Big Ten Preview.

By MARIO WILLIAMS
mario-williams@uiowa.edu

The Iowa's men's cross-country squad had yet another strong showing at the Big Ten Preview with four runners finishing in the top 15. As a team, the Hawkeyes finished second, led by Kevin Lewis. This is the second time the senior has led his team to a strong finish. Lewis finished with a time of 24:44 to earn third place.

The senior believes he ran well but wanted his outcome to be better.

"I felt pretty good until 1,000 meters to go, but then I fizzled out a little bit," Lewis said in a release. "My goal was to win, which didn't happen. Hopefully, I can get them next time."

Sophomores Ben Anderson, Anthony Gregorio, and senior Ben Witt earned places in the top 15. Anderson finished in eighth place with a time of 25:17.52, Gregorio finished in 12th place at 25:21, and Witt finished in 11th place at 25:17.81.

Iowa head coach Layne Anderson thought his runners performed well and was pleased with their efforts. However, he found the Ashton Cross-Country Course to be a bit challenging, citing the early start time and high humidity level.

"We did a good job of packing up," Anderson said. "The course and weather today was a little bit more challenging than last week."

Anderson also believes the Big Ten Preview prepped his team well for the Big Ten championship in November, which will also be held in Iowa City.

"Now that we've raced on the course, we have a little bit more familiarity with it," Anderson said.

Sophomore Ben Anderson thought the Big Ten Preview was enjoyable, along with being in the top 15. Although he said it was a tough week of practice, he believed he ran better than he expected at 8,000 meters.

"Being top 15 is cool," he said. "I guess summer work just keeps showing itself, and hopefully, the workouts we've been doing keep progressing."

"I enjoyed the race, and it's always fun to get out there. It's a tough week, and I ran a lot better than I thought I would at a higher mileage."

The sophomore believes the preview has prepared him for the Big Ten championships as well.

"It got me used to the course and to set a time standard to run better at the Big Ten championships," he said. "I want to improve from what I did today to the Big Ten championships not only in time but where I'm at in the race."

Outside of the top 15, sophomore Taylor Soltys finished in 25:54, earning 20th place. Although the sophomore felt a bit disappointed with his personal effort, he thought overall his teammates ran well together.

"Yesterday was personally disappointing," he said. "I was much farther back from our main pack than I should have been, though as a whole, our team performed very well."

The Naperville, Illinois, native also believed the preview was a good prep for the Big Ten championships.

"The meet was a good sense of the course and how it will run come November," he said.

Hawkeye harriers vow to bounce back

Iowa's women's cross-country team didn't capitalize on pack running at the Big Ten Preview.

By SHELBY STITES
shelby-stites@uiowa.edu

The Big Ten Preview brought top competitors to Iowa City this past weekend for women's cross-country, and that showed in the results.

The Hawkeyes' top finisher was junior Jocelyn Todd, who finished 27th in the 6,000-meter race with a time of 22:21.

"This is my last year. I just want to make every race my best, and at one point I just felt good," Todd said in a release. "This course and this team means a lot to me. I told myself, 'You know what, if my team feels good they'll go with me, if not, I have to do this for me.'"

Iowa was capitalizing on its biggest strength at the beginning of the race, running in a pack. But as the time went on, Hawkeye runners found themselves staggered in the back, and the race was on for second place.

Michigan sophomore Erin Finn had control of the lead the whole race, finishing at 20:36. The runner closest to Finn was junior teammate Shannon Osika, who finished 40 seconds later.

Finn was three seconds away from beating the course record set by Michigan State's Danelle Doetzel in 2004 with a time of 20:33.

While other Big Ten teams got a feel of the course for the upcoming Big Ten championships set to run at Ashton Cross-Country Course, the Hawkeyes will focus on moving forward.

"I thought we were capable of a better effort," head coach Layne Anderson said in a release. "We could have been a little big further up in the pack and a little more competitive with Northwestern and Wisconsin."

Wisconsin and Northwestern finished second and third as a team, while Michigan dominated the in the overall standings of the meet, but I truly believe our best races are yet to come and will use that hope of improvement for motivation in the weeks ahead," Adams said.

Other Hawkeye finishers include sophomore Samantha Zishka (31st/22:31), sophomore Tess Wilberding (36th/22:42), and junior Courtney Martin (40th/23:08).

Furthermore, the young Hawkeye team stayed strong through race despite separating from the pack.

This race showed the Hawkeyes what it will take to compete at not only a Big Ten level but a national level. They will use this race to prove that they are better than what they showed on Sept. 20 and to prove that the Hawkeyes are not the same team come Nov. 2 when they have the chance to compete on their home course at the Big Tens.

"We will have to race better than we did today," Anderson said in a release. "It's time to get back to work."

course and the score, finishing first.

Kansas State finished fourth, and the Hawkeyes ended up in last place.

Weather affected the difficult course with rain entering halfway through the race. This caused the ground to become wet and slippery making Ashton a tough course to run.

Despite the rain, sophomore Katie Adams finished behind Todd after leading the team to a second-place finish at Illinois State on Sept. 12. Adams crossed the finish line at 22:27, placing 29th. Adams started off strong at the beginning of the race running close to the top-10 pack.

Field hockey tops Rutgers

The Iowa field-hockey team opened its Big Ten slate with a win Sunday, topping conference newcomer Rutgers, 3-0, in Piscataway, New Jersey.

The win moves the Black and Gold to 5-2 on the season, as well as 1-0 in the Big Ten.

Junior Natalie Cafone continued scoring at will, adding 2 more tallies to bring to her season total to 11.

The Hawkeyes got up on the Scarlet Knights early, with Cafone giving the Hawks a 1-0 advantage just three and a half minutes into the game.

Rutgers fought back, however, playing the Black and Gold tight throughout the final 30 minutes of the first period. The Hawks went into halftime up 1-0.

Cafone extended the Hawks' lead to 2 goals midway through the second period after credit for the goal was changed from Jessy Silfer to her. Senior Sara Watro added the final nail in the coffin for Rutgers, icing the game with 13 minutes left.

The goal was Watro's second of the season.

The game was also Iowa goaltender Alex Pecora's first shutout of the season as well as her fifth win.

The Black and Gold will return to action this weekend when they host Indiana and Missouri State at Grant Field.

Hawkeyes finish first competition

The Iowa men's tennis team completed play at the Purdue Fall Invitational and Princeton Farnsworth Invitational Sunday.

At Purdue, sophomore Nils Hallestrand and freshman Jake Jacoby took home the doubles flight A consolation final after the Wisconsin-Green Bay team withdrew from the final match.

Junior Dominic Patrick and freshman Josh Silverstein played into the semifinal of the main draw in the black bracket of doubles competition on Sunday at Princeton. The two were ousted by a Harvard duo, 8-4.

"It was a good weekend of competition for our players; we played a lot of matches, and our freshmen found out how tough college tennis really is," head coach Ross Wilson said in a release.

The Hawkeyes will travel to Tulsa, Oklahoma, Saturday through Sept. 29 for the Intercollegiate Tennis Association All-American Tournament.

Defense saves soccer

In yet another low-scoring affair, Iowa beat Minnesota.

By JORDAN HANSEN
 jordan-hansen@uiowa.edu

For only the fourth time in school history, the women's soccer team downed Minnesota on Sept. 20, 1-0.

Nine games into the season, it's obvious that Iowa is not a team to be trifled with. The win over the Gophers moved Iowa to an 8-1 overall record and its 3-0 start in conference play is best in school history.

"We're excited to be 3-0 in the Big Ten, but we know that there is still an awful lot of soccer to be played and a lot of adversity awaiting us in the next couple weeks," head coach Dave DiIanni said. "As of right now, I will say that I am happy with how our kids came out yesterday.

"I liked our mental strength and how we were able to battle in the face of some adversity."

Iowa's single strike in the game came in the 32nd minute, when sophomore Amanda Lulek headed in a goal off an assist from sophomore Bri Toelle after a scramble in the box.

The offensive attack should improve with an increased dose of Lulek, who started every game for Iowa last year.

Injured earlier in the year, she is beginning to get back in the swing of things, just in time for two huge games this weekend.

"For her to get the winner against Minnesota — that was really exciting for the whole team," DiIanni said. "I hope it gives her confidence moving into a very important weekend with Maryland and Rutgers, and I'm just really excited for her."

Minnesota, despite having a 22-9 advantage in allow a Big Ten goal — the only team in the conference with that distinction.

"We have been able to score first in a lot of games; from a confidence standpoint this has been huge for us," assistant coach Julie Hanley said. "Our defenders and goalkeepers have done great, but we know we need to do a better job of continuing to keep possession and attack when we have the lead."

As the cliché goes, defense wins championships, but the lack of offensive production is a little worrisome. Iowa has only scored 4 goals in its last three games, and star forward Cloe Lacasse did not score against Minnesota and has not in either of the other two Big Ten games.

It certainly is something that is worth comment, though the specific way the team has been playing may in fact be part of the larger puzzle that is the Iowa offensive attack.

"We defended way too much — it was something we talked about at halftime and we need to continue to work on," DiIanni said. "We played not to lose the game versus playing to win the game, and when you do that, you get caught on your heels a little too much."

shots, did not score — a feat due in part to an incredible performance by junior keeper Hannah Clark.

The native of Fort Collins, Colorado, made five saves and increased her number of shutouts this season to 4. The win brought Clark's career shutout count to 15, a feat that has her tied for most in school history with former Hawkeye Emily Moran.

In what's become a theme of the season, Iowa scored early, then weathered a steady stream of opponent's shots. In fact, the Hawkeyes have yet to score against Minnesota

20-yard line three times before recess.

Iowa, after forcing just one punt in the first half, forced Pittsburgh into two punts, one interception, and a turnover on downs in the second half. The Hawkeyes also allowed just nine first downs in the second frame after yielding 15 in the first.

Perhaps the most telling stat was Pittsburgh's second-half rushing total: just 53 yards, after 132 in the first half. The Panthers' 185 rushing yards is their lowest output of the season; they had averaged 344 rushing yards per game ahead of their game with Iowa.

"They got off some blocks. We've got to look at the film and learn from it, and everyone has to own their part of it," Pittsburgh head coach Paul Chryst said. "They have a heck of a defense. I have a ton of respect for Coach Ferentz and what they do."

'The team came together today. It is just a big win for the team, and we definitely improved a lot today.'

- Mark Weisman, running back

Iowa's offense played its part, too, scoring 17 points in its first three possessions of the second half. The Hawkeyes jumped ahead, 24-20, with 6:56 left to play in regulation. Pittsburgh ran just 16 plays the rest of the game.

With 25 seconds left, the Panthers ran their final three: quarterback Chad Voytik completed two-straight passes to Tyler Boyd for 16 and 15 yards. Then, free safety Anthony Gair intercepted Voytik's 30th pass of the game, sealing Iowa's third victory of the year.

"The team came together today," said running back Mark Weisman, who scored both of Iowa's second-half touchdowns. "It is just a big win for the team, and we definitely improved a lot today."

COMMENTARY

What you and I saw from Beathard against the Panthers was both refreshing and, to a degree, surprising. On his first pass, a third-and-3 from Iowa's 13-yard line, Beathard stood in the pocket amid pressure and delivered a great pass to Kevonte Martin-Manley for a first down — and took a pretty good hit afterwards, too.

And then there was the 62-yard bomb to Diamond Powell, the one that made the top 10 on "SportsCenter" and caused Twitter to explode. Powell cracked the highlights with his one-handed catch, but Beathard put the pass right on the money.

Look, starting quarterback Jake Rudock hasn't done anything to lose his job. He won eight games last year and was largely the reason Iowa won its first two games this season.

But after seeing Rudock play 16 and ½ games in an Iowa uniform, it's hard to say he offers a skill set that's better than Beathard's.

Beathard's talents have always been entering and mysterious. His ceiling remains unknown, which is perhaps why the fans clamor for him. His arm strength and quick release are skills you can't teach, which meant it was a matter of learning to control them. He said after the game he's been working on better decision making rather than just "chucking it in the air and seeing what will happen."

That maturity manifested on the field against Pittsburgh. The only glaring setback came when Beathard used two time-outs in a little over 30 seconds in the fourth quarter because he appeared confused either about the play or because of what the defense was showing.

But learning to adjust at the line of scrimmage comes with experience. Beathard got his first real taste of live action this past weekend and proved he might have a bigger upside than previously thought.

The only way Ferentz will truly know what he has in Beathard is if he plays him more, and a good place to begin is in West Lafayette on Saturday, where Beathard should be Iowa's starting quarterback.

Beathard doesn't walk on water

Iowa quarterback C.J. Beathard passes in Heinz Field in Pittsburgh on Sept. 20. Beathard completed 7-8 for 98 yards, and Iowa defeated Pitt, 24-20. (The Daily Iowan/Tessa Hursh)

FEATURE

The Hawkeye defense overcame an atrocious first half and performed extremely well in the second half in a 24-20 win over Pittsburgh.

By CODY GOODWIN
cody-goodwin@uiowa.edu

PITTSBURGH — Greg Mabin called his mother to help calm his nerves ahead of his first career start at Iowa. Arlette Mabin told her son that getting the start against Northern Iowa was a dream come true, of sorts. He flourished the next day and sealed the win with a fourth-quarter interception.

On Sept. 20, when Iowa came back to beat Pittsburgh, 24-20, Mabin again remembered what his parents previously told him. This time, though, it was his father's words that came to mind. "He always told me, 'Big-time players make big plays in big situations,'" Mabin said. "And I was fortunate enough to make that play."

Mabin said "play" as though it were just one. The sophomore cornerback actually broke up two crucial passes — on back-to-back plays — in the fourth quarter to help secure an Iowa victory at Heinz Field.

Those pass breakups were the exclamation points on a second half that saw Iowa's defense stymie Pittsburgh's offense.

It appeared as though Pitt would trample Iowa early in the game. The Panthers' offense racked up 262 yards in the first half against the Hawkeyes and did so with a balanced attack: 132 rushing yards and another 130 passing. Pittsburgh led 17-7 at halftime.

The Panther's star running back, James Conner, did most of his damage in the first half. He rushed for 100 yards on just 17 carries. His lone score punctuated an 18-play, 75-yard march that chewed up 9 minutes and 42 seconds of game time.

Then, as if it flipped a switch, Iowa's defense stepped up in the second half.

"We were getting worked that first half, and our staff had to make adjustments," Hawkeye head coach Kirk Ferentz said. "Our players were a lot more aggressive in the second half and were just playing better football."

The Panthers managed just 173 yards and a field goal in the game's final 30 minutes. Conner rushed for only 55 more yards in the second half. Pittsburgh only reached the red zone once more after getting inside Iowa's Backup quarterback C.J. Beathard played really well against Pittsburgh — and he should start Iowa's next game against Purdue.

PITTSBURGH — Let's hold off on the coronation for a moment. Let's take a step back, take a deep breath, and figure out what we're really dealing with here. Brash decisions aren't always smart in college football, so let's talk this one out.

Backup quarterback C.J. Beathard played the entire second half of Iowa's 24-20 victory over Pittsburgh in Heinz Field on Sept. 20. He played well, completing 7-of-8 passes for 98 yards. He engineered three-consecutive scoring drives, and provided a spark to an otherwise stale Hawkeye offense.

"C.J. came out and played an unbelievable game," running back Mark Weisman said. "He made some huge plays for us."

Beathard was not the sole reason Iowa came back to beat Pittsburgh, of course. The Hawkeyes stepped up defensively and contained James Conner, the Panther's lethal running back, in the second half. Weisman ran hard and likely established himself as Iowa's featured back for the rest of the season.

But Beathard, just a sophomore, played a huge role in the victory. He was poised. He made good, smart passes, delivering the ball with a certain zip at times. He commanded the huddle as if he'd been calling the shots all season.

And for his performance, he should be named Iowa's starter for Saturday's game against Purdue.

"I have no idea," he said when asked if he should start. "You'll have to ask Coach about that."

This is not to say Beathard is the new hero of the Black and Gold kingdom. Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz shouldn't just hand him the keys to the offense after one solid half of football.

Instead, Ferentz should let Beathard test drive it. Let him take it for a spin. A solid half of football is nice, but most of us — coaches included, I'm sure — are really interested in seeing what Beathard can do as the guy for a full game.
