Unidentified body found in Iowa City

Missing ISU student Tong Shao's boyfriend, a person of interest in her disappearance, is believed to have fled to China.

By NICHOLAS MOFFITT

Police say a person of interest in the case of a missing Iowa State University student may be in China, potentially complicating the investigation.

Tong Shao, an ISU from the coastal city of Dalian, China, was last seen Sept. 6 in Ames. Her friends received a text message from her stating she was in Iowa City on Sept. 8, according to an Ames police news release.

The Iowa City police now would like to speak with her boyfriend, who has not been identified by name.

But Iowa City police Lt. Mike Brotherton said the police may run into trouble contacting him because they believe he has gone to China.

The United States does not have an extradition treaty with China.

The break in the case came Sept. 26, when police located an unidentified body in a vehicle linked to Shao. Earlier that day, the Ames police released a statement that it was looking for a 1997 Toyota Camry, which they knew Shao had access to and believed to be in Iowa City.

On Sept. 26, an Iowa City police officer patrolling the area around the Dolphin Point Enclave apartment complex discovered the car around 6 p.m., and a warrant was obtained to search the car.

Following the search, a body was discovered in the trunk, Brotherton said.

The body has not been identified, according to the police, and an autopsy was done on Sept. 27, but results have not yet been released. The police said the full results would take a few days to be processed.

Iowa City police could not be reached for further comment, but Brotherton said on Sept. 26 that more

Minimum wage highlights debate

INDIANOLA, Iowa — In between the firing of a handful of political prods, the leading candidates seeking Iowa's soon-to-be-open Senate seat found one point of agreement: A minimum-wage standard should stay.

However, on Sunday in their first public crossfire before the November election, Democratic Rep. Bruce Braley and Republican Joni Ernst were at odds on what level of government should set the standard.

Citing the state's relatively low cost of living in comparison with other states, Ernst side-stepped a direct question asked on Twitter about what the federal minimum wage should stand at.

"I believe that we need a minimum wage. I support that," she told the packed auditorium in Simpson College's Kent Campus Center shortly before 6 p.m., before declaring that the contentious issue that often spawns national discussions should be set at the state level. "What is good for Iowa isn't necessarily right for California or New York."

A minimum-wage standard is crucial to growing the state and national economy, Ernst said, noting that Iowa needs to first make sure that good-paying jobs are present.

Braley takes the same view as Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, in that the state and federal minimum wage should be at least $10.10.

"By simply increasing the minimum wage to $10.10 an hour [in oth-

For the Kids has its day in IC

The first ever For the Kids Day brought together hundreds of students and community members to raise funds for Dance Marathon.

By GRACE PATERAS
grace-pateras@uiowa.edu

Around 400 students, community members, and families of affected children participated in the first ever For the Kids Day on Sunday.

Dance Marathon hosted a 5K marathon, followed by a picnic, in City Park.

"[The day's purpose is] to give Dance Marathon dancers and the community members more opportunities to get involved and spend time with kids and families," said Erin Larsen, the executive director of Dance Marathon. "It's a bit of a fundraiser as well."

In previous years, Dance Marathon hosted a 5K and picnic on separate occasions. This was the first year the two were combined.

Registration fees and shirt sales will go towards Dance Marathon. Drake Wilbur, the public-relations and marketing director of the organization, said he estimates the organization will raise approximately $10,000 at this event alone.

At the event, stations of snacks, face painting, cookie decorations, among others, were set up for families and runners.

"It's both a fundraiser for our families, and it gives them a chance to meet people," Wilbur said. "It also is one of the more fun events we throw for the families."

Cedar Rapids resident Jenny Olson has attended the picnic event with her family every year

'We've met a lot of families and made a lot of friends. It's a big family reunion seeing everyone celebrating another year of health and remission.'

— Jenny Olson, Cedar Rapids resident since her 6-year-old son was diagnosed with cancer in August 2010.

"It's great they combined it because there aren't not two separate days to get people together," she said.

Her family attends other events Dance Marathon hosts throughout the year. Olson said they attain huge benefits from the events, especially directly after treatment.

"We've met a lot of families and made a lot of friends," she said. "It's a big family reunion seeing everyone celebrating another year of health and remission."

Next year, the family plans on being involved in the run as well.

Executive members on Dance Marathon hoped to have more participants at the events this year. Of the 400 people registered for the event, 120 of them were family members attending the picnic.

Junior Tess Noeller, who ran the 5K for the first time this year, said she also plans on participating in the Big Event, a 24-hour dance party hosted by Dance Marathon in February.

"This is a really good organization," she said. "[I'm willing to do] anything that helps the kids."

The next event Dance Marathon is hosting is a community day in downtown Iowa City on Oct. 4.

"It's about fostering those relationships with the downtown community," Wilbur said.

er states and not in Iowa), that tells me a lot of Iowans are missing out on this booming economy," he said. "My promise is to go to Washington and raise the minimum wage."

Additionally, raising the minimum wage is one of four points in Braley's plan to strengthen Social Security.

This year, lawmakers and politicians have made minimum wage one of the most-talked about issues.

To date, Hawaii, California, Maryland, and Connecticut have elevated their state wage standards to $10.10 per hour. Officials in Washington, D.C., and Seattle have also pushed an increase into law.

Over the past decades, the federal minimum wage has risen; in 1978, the minimum wage stood at $2.65. However, that is worth $9.67 in 2013 dollars, according to the Congressional Research Service.

According to a June report published by the National Conference of State Legislatures, 38 states considered minimum-wage bills during the 2014 session.

The national minimum wage has increased 11 times since 1978.

Kedron Bardwell, the head of the Political Science Department at Simpson College, said both Braley and Ernst are correct to a certain degree in their respective minimum-wage stances.

Braley, he said, is correct with the notion that even in Iowa, the state minimum wage of $7.25 makes it difficult for a family of four to survive.

Having differing hourly wages between state borders — a notion that Ernst supports — is also feasible, Bardwell said.

One co-champion of the Fair Minimum Wage Act of 2013 that would have pushed the federal standard to $10.10 an hour said that goal is still necessary to move the nation forward and to maintain a robust middle class.

Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, maintained that the United States should implement the $10.10 per hour figure.

"It is my belief that no one in America who works full-time, ought to live in poverty," he told The Daily Iowan. "That's why we have a federal minimum wage that covers the entire country. There ought to be a United States floor for $10.10 an hour. That gets you just about the poverty line."

information would be released when the autopsy was complete.

One resident of the Dolphin Point Enclave apartments said he was shocked at the news.

"I've never seen anything like it before," Trystian Escher, who lives in an apartment near where the car was found.

Escher said he saw someone move the car that day around 7:15 a.m. but didn't know much more about the person who moved it because he said it didn't seem suspicious at the time.

Escher spent the evening of Sept. 26 watching the investigation outside his residence, and he said the smell when they opened the trunk was like nothing he had smelled before.

Prior to the Sept. 26 events, University of Iowa students had used WeChat to spread the news and discuss the situation in hopes of helping the case. The app is popular among Chinese students and according to the Tencent website, the company that distributes the app, more than 600 million people use it worldwide.

UI freshman Le Xue said the incident has sparked a large social-media conversation.

"We all talk about the news when we can and share stories," she said.

Shao was studying chemical engineering in her junior year at ISU before her disappearance.

One of Shao's classmates from high school, Ruizhi Deng, said Shao was a very outgoing and smart girl.

"Her grades were excellent, and she even participated in the Olympic biology competition and won the second prize," Deng wrote in an email.

She said Shao attended one of the best high schools in Liaoning province that only the top students are able to get into.

Religion/state = oil/water

Jacob Prall
jacob-prall@uiowa.edu

A poll published by the Pew Research Center last week shows an increasingly large minority in the United States supports the mix of religion and state. Specifically, that church leaders should come out in support of one candidate over another (32 percent) and that churches play a role in politics (49 percent).

That latter percentage is up from 40 percent in 2012. And it's no wonder: 72 percent thought that religion is "losing influence" in American life, the highest level in Pew's polling on the topic over the past decade.

The United States was the first modern democracy that cultivated the idea that church should be separate from state. At the time, the Roman Catholic Church had incredible political power over mainland European countries such as Spain and France. Meanwhile, the British Isles were ruled by a similar state-and-church-head combo through the Anglican Church.

War, inquisitions, and systematic repression were rampant, much more significantly than today, because the excuses to persecute one sect over another were woven into the fabric of the government.

Catholics, Jews, Protestants, Muslims — they all suffered somewhere under some regime at the hand of a state governed by religious politics. This is where men such as John Locke and Adam Smith found themselves in the 17th and 18th centuries, and this is when they, along with their contemporaries, developed and expanded upon the idea of the social contract, toleration, and a separation of church and state.

One only has to look into the past to foresee the future. There is a reason the church and state are separated in this country, and in many around the world. Religion can be a very positive thing. It is also inherently biased, often regressive for technological advancement, prone to manipulation and easily turned to be against others instead of for those who wish to enrich themselves.

These pitfalls of religion can all be found in any political system, but a government is made more susceptible to these risks when the two are intertwined. A democracy runs most effectively for the people when they are allowed individual freedoms, no infringement upon one's freedoms of speech, press, or religion, and are encouraged to keep an open mind and stay active in the political process.

Those key ingredients are a crucial difference between secular and religious institutions. Religion is a place where people follow, in one way or another. Democracy is where people must lead, must stand up and actively work to change, or keep the same, the way their society functions.

This isn't about party lines or political ideology. This is about a Constitution that guarantees us all a government with no religious preference or interference.

The Supreme Court has ruled that corporations are people and that money equals speech. It is a muddy, gray system that needs refinement and adjustment, as anything that wishes to stand the test of time must do.

Religion is too sacred to play in this murky political landscape, and politics is too crucial to our liberty to be put in possible peril by the marriage of church and state.

POINT/COUNTERPOINT

Saluting respect or saluting disrespect?

Last week, President Obama took a surprising amount of criticism for a simple action: saluting a pair of Marines with a Starbucks cup in his hand. Is this a flippant and disrespectful move, or is it being blown out of proportion?

Daily Iowan staff members disagree.

Salute shows disrespectful attitude

Yes, he may have one of the most difficult jobs in the world and yes; he may be a bit preoccupied trying to control ISIS. But the fact remains, President Obama's job, first and foremost, is as commander-in-chief and, as such, respect for those in the military should always be on his mind.

Last week's "Latte Salute," however, showed to the American public (and to the world) that Obama's respect for those in the armed forces may be dwindling as his tenure forges on.

Generally speaking, I find myself on the "Democrat" side of most political debates, and, as such, I was a pretty big supporter of Obama in the early years. In fact, as Obama continues to take more and more criticism as his presidency progresses, I tend to lean toward cutting him a little slack.

But there has to be a line drawn somewhere. While it may seem relatively innocent at first glance, the Latte Salute is at best disrespectful and at worst, insulting.

Certain tasks can easily become second nature if they are repeated enough; this much is understandable. But as my Dad used to say, "practice doesn't make perfect, perfect practice makes perfect." If you're thinking about what it is you're doing as you do it rather than mindlessly going through the motions, you're more likely to have a greater appreciation for that act.

Enter the "Latte Salute."

Had Obama spent the past six years of his presidency truly appreciating those in the military and, furthermore, understanding the significance of the salute, he may not have been inclined to lackadaisically salute those Marines.

So perhaps this one incident of laziness and disrespect, itself, does not mean a whole lot. But the implications of this salute mean so much more. Obama is under a microscope every day, and it is the expectation of the American public that he will represent himself and our country to the best of his ability (something that the president should be well aware of). Taking time to execute a proper salute in order to show respect to the men and women who serve this country is the absolute least he can do.

— Joe Lane

It's not a big deal

There are lots of events competing for the world's attention recently. ISIS has dominated international news, and several local tragedies have caught the attention of news outlets. However, there is one incident that has dominated every major political news network in the nation, something that has overshadowed other breaking news pieces. The controversy: President Obama saluted two Marines with a Starbucks Chai Tea in his hand.

Many people are aghast at this. Their outrage over such blatant disrespect for American troops has sparked a frenzy of backlash toward the president and the administration. Twitter is abuzz with scathing criticisms, and the networks have had a field day with the latest apparent political blunder. It is the duty for the president, as commander-in-chief, to salute military personal in a respectful manner that shows his support for all for the work they are doing. Right?

Actually, that is debatable. The common standard of a presidential salute was not made an expectant gesture until Ronald Reagan took office.

In actuality, some of our most celebrated presidents refused to salute armed servicemen. Take, for example, President Dwight D. Eisenhower, former five-star general in the U.S. Army in World War II. Despite being a decorated veteran, he was known for rarely saluting. He was the president, yes, but he was quick to identify himself as a civilian.

Despite all of these facts, Obama is seen as a pretentious president with little to no respect for his troops.

This doesn't really bother me. Obama has been a political punching bag, just as every president has been before him. What does bother me is the fact that people care so much about this and to the extent they focus on it.

We are living in a world in which ISIS is a serious threat to the "peaceful" relations in the Middle East. A woman was beheaded in Oklahoma, and climate change is threatening the globe. This is all news, and they are issues that should be dealt with and properly explained by the media to the general public.

And what are we focusing on? Obama and Chai Tea.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

STEM worker shortage stems from ignorance

The idea that we need to allow in more workers with science, technology, engineering, and math ("STEM") background is an article of lies among American business and the political elite.

But is there a STEM worker shortage? The Center for Immigration Studies analyzed the latest government data and found what other researchers have found: This country has well more than twice as many workers with STEM degrees as there are STEM jobs. Also consistent with other research, we find only modest levels of wage growth for such workers for more than a decade. Both employment and wage data indicate that such workers are not in short supply.

Reports by the Economic Policy Institute, the RAND Corp., the Urban Institute, and the National Research Council have all found no evidence that STEM workers are in short supply. After looking at evidence from the Economic Policy Institute study, PBS titled its story on the report "The Bogus High-Tech Worker Shortage: How Guest Workers Lower U.S. Wages." This is PBS, mind you, which is as likely to report skeptically on immigration as it is to report skeptically on taxpayer subsidies for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

RAND's analysis looked backward in time and found "Despite recurring concerns about potential shortages of STEM personnel ... we did not find evidence that such shortages have existed at least since 1990, [24 years] nor that they are on the horizon."

In an article titled "The Science and Engineering Shortage Is a Myth" for the March issue of The Atlantic, demographer Michael Teitelbaum of the Harvard Law School summarizes the literature on STEM. "No one has been able to find any evidence indicating current widespread labor market shortages or hiring difficulties in science and engineering occupations that require bachelor's degrees or higher," he points out. Teitelbaum is one of the nation's leading experts on STEM employment, former vice president of the Sloan Foundation (a philanthropic institution essentially devoted to STEM education), and author of Falling Behind? Boom, Bust, and the Global Race for Scientific Talent, just published by Princeton University Press.

In 2012, there were more than twice as many people with STEM degrees (immigrants and native-born) as there were STEM jobs — 5.3 million STEM jobs vs. 12.1 million people with STEM degrees. Only one-third of natives who have STEM degrees and have a job work in STEM occupations. There are 1.5 million native-born Americans with engineering degrees not working as engineers, as well as half a million with technology degrees, 400,000 with math degrees, and 2.6 million with science degrees working outside their field. In addition, there are 1.2 million natives with STEM degrees who are not working. Meanwhile, fewer than half of immigrants with STEM degrees work in STEM jobs. In particular, just 23 percent of all immigrants with engineering degrees work as engineers. Of the 700,000 immigrant STEM workers allowed into the country between 2007 and 2012, only one-third got STEM jobs, approximately one-third got non-STEM jobs, and around one-third are not working.

Wage trends are one of the best measures of labor demand. If STEM workers were in short supply, wages would increase rapidly. But wage data from numerous sources show little growth over the last 12 years. We found that real hourly wages (adjusted for inflation) grew on average just 0.7 percent a year from 2000 to 2012 for STEM workers, and annual wages grew even less — 0.4 percent a year. Wage growth is very modest for almost every category of STEM worker as well.

So if there is a superabundance of native and immigrant STEM workers, little wage growth, and STEM immigration exceeds the absorption capacity of the STEM labor market, why are there calls to allow in even more? The answer, put simply, is greed and politics.

These businesses that want more immigration would get more workers to choose from, holding wages in check (low) and increasing their bargaining power over their employees. The Republicans and Democrats listen to their corporate donors in the business world and respond by promising to increase STEM immigration even further.

Feel cheated? Maybe if the students and colleges would protest to Congress, something would get corrected.

Beathard's third pass of the game was thrown behind tight end Ray Hamilton. Purdue safety Frankie Williams intercepted the ball and took it 39 yards to the house. It was Williams' second interception of the season, and the only time during the game that any Boilermaker found the end zone.

Iowa field hockey blows away Missouri State

By RYAN RODRIGUEZ
ryan-rodriguez@uiowa.edu

After a dominant win over Indiana on Sept. 26, any feelings of a possible trap game for the Iowa field-hockey team disappeared in the first 10 minutes of the first period Sunday against Missouri State.

A pair of goals from sophomore Steph Norlander just eight minutes into the contest chummed the waters for the Black and Gold, who continued to feed on the Bears until the final whistle ended the 7-0 blowout.

Norlander finished with a hat trick, the first of the sophomore's career.

"We treat every game the same, no matter who the opponent is," she said. "We prepare every week to come out hard and dominate on the field."

Dominated is a bit of an understatement.

The Hawks dominated time of possession and peppered Missouri State goalkeeper Megan Drew with 18 shots, including 11 on goal, all while giving up just 4 on their own net.

"I think it definitely helps getting the first goal in a game, and early on," Norlander said. "It gets ahead, and it gets you ready to go to get more, but I think I'm always hungry in front of the net no matter what the situation is."

And while Missouri State is a bit of a step down from the Hawks' usual level of competition, they came out hungry nonetheless.

Just about every single goal was a highlight-reel play, including a mid-air baseball swing from Norlander and a pair of two-on-ones from Natalie Cafone and freshman Mallory Lefkowitz.

The pretty displays of passing were the latest reminder to the 384 fans in attendance at Grant Field of just how much skill exists in the Iowa central attack.

"It was exciting to see all the fans come out in support," Norlander said. "The more people that come out, the better."

And while Iowa's stars certainly stood out on the field, the Black and Gold got some enormous contributions from some lesser-known names, including freshman goaltender Katie Jones, who earned her first win and shutout in her first start of the season.

"The win is nice, but as a whole team effort, they stepped up and played so well, so I have to give a lot of the credit to them," she said.

And while Jones wasn't tested often, she came up big when it mattered, including a frantic diving stop 20 feet from the goal in the first period.

"I didn't even really think about it," Jones said. "I just kind of ran out from the net and took her out because I didn't want her to get the shot off. Luckily it was something [interim head coach Lisa Cellucci] and I work on a lot in practice."

All in all, 20 of Iowa's 21 players saw action in the victory, with regular starting goalkeeper Alex Pecora the lone Hawkeyes who remained inactive.

"I think it was a great opportunity today for some of those girls," Cellucci said. "We've been wanting to get them some experience this season, and this was the game we finally got to do it.

Iowa forward Steph Norlander passes the ball against Missouri State at Grant Field on Sunday. The Hawkeyes defeated the Bears, 7-0. (The Daily Iowan/Joshua Housing)

"They went in and performed very well in a lot of different roles, so we were very pleased to see that."

Martin-Manley needs just 26 more catches to pass Derrell Johnson-Koulianos as the program's all-time leader.

Martin-Manly noted that the accolades are nice, but he's more focused on making sure the team gets victories.

Weisman gained 76 rushing yards on 24 carries and scored 2 touchdowns against the Boilermakers, bringing his career totals to 2,050 rushing yards and 22 rushing touchdowns. He's just the seventh player in school history to surpass 2,000 rushing yards and 20 rushing touchdowns in his career.

His 22 career rushing touchdowns also rank eighth in school history, and are tied for second in the Ferentz Era, behind only Albert Young (23). (Shonn Greene also had 22 rushing touchdowns.)

Weisman's 2 touchdowns against Purdue was also his sixth career game with 2 or more touchdowns.

"The offensive line executed great," Weisman said. "They were opening up some big running lanes for me, Jordan, LeShun, and JP out there."

Parker shows up against Purdue

Jonathan Parker fumbled twice in Iowa's win over Ball State on Sept. 6. Both fumbles led to 10 of the Cardinal's 13 points. After the second fumble, early in the third quarter, Parker didn't see the field again.

Over the next two games, Parker only saw action on kickoff returns. Not once did he touch the ball while Iowa was on offense. Many assumed he was in head coach Kirk Ferentz's proverbial doghouse.

But against Purdue, Parker returned with gusto. The redshirt freshman running back led all Iowa players with 94 all-purpose yards. He caught two passes for 43 yards — including one that was tipped at the line of scrimmage that Parker hauled in and ran for 34 yards — returned one kickoff 47 yards and ran the ball once for 4 yards.

"I'm just seeing the defense and figuring out what I want to do, where I want to go," Parker said. "It's really not even thinking. I would call it a reaction."

In the season-opener against Northern Iowa, Parker burst onto the stage when he took a handoff on a jet sweep and rushed for 21 yards. His speed is viewed as an asset by the team's coaches. Iowa's running backs have been a big part of the passing game so far this season, mostly because of the number of check-downs. Parker said he would like to see the field more but noted that he'll be ready whenever the coaches call his number.

"I really hope my role grows more," he said. "Any way the coaches can get me out on the field so I can succeed and showcase my talent, that's what it is. I love it."

Other notes

• Iowa's win over Purdue on Sept. 27 was Ferentz's 112th victory as head coach. That ranks 10th among coaches in Big Ten history. The victory also gives Ferentz 65 conference wins, which ties him with Barry Alvarez for 10th all-time.

• Iowa's win over Purdue was the third time this season that the Hawkeyes trailed by 10 points in a game and ended up winning (others: Ball State and Pittsburgh). Iowa also trailed Northern Iowa by 3 points in the second quarter and won 31-23.

• Since 2009, the Hawkeyes are 7-1 when their quarterback throws a pick-6 (starting quarterback C.J. Beathard threw one in the first quarter against Purdue). Every other team in the Football Bowl Subdivision is a combined 176-525 (stat from Matt Benson).

fighters, just as they were a year ago, are largely the reason the Hawkeyes have been successful through the season's first five games.

Just don't expect them to make that statement.

"The thing is, we never want to think that we've got our footing, because that's when we get complacent, and that's when we stop improving," Trinca-Pasat said. "We just have to look at our mistakes and improve on those.

"If we do that, we'll keep getting better."

SOCCER

larly damning statistic, it still is a fairly decent way to show how much they possess the ball on the opponent's side of the field.

If the Hawkeyes want to have any chance in its upcoming three-game road trip, they have to be able to figure out a way to get the ball in the net.

"It's really disappointing, we didn't get any points and that's especially true since we were at home," senior Emily Scott said. "We need to turn it around — we played good soccer, but we need to turn that into wins on the road against Michigan and Michigan State."

However, not everything is gloom and doom for the Hawkeyes. Despite giving up 21 shots Sunday, the defense has still been solid.

"We had good moments for a couple of people, and that's kind of how the story line has been so far this season," senior Melanie Pickert said. "We've had injuries, so people are getting chances off the bench, but everyone needs to take a look in the mirror and dig deep."

"We need to not just talk about playing for each other but making sprints and getting into tackles — we thrive on energy."

The injuries that Pickert noted are part of the scoring issues on the team. Nine players were unavailable because of injuries, which led to eight players playing more than 80 minutes.

For an Iowa team that has thrived on substitutions all year, the hit to the depth has been cruel.

"We have to get healthy; it's becoming laughable to be honest with you ... we simply have to get healthy," DiIanni said. "We need those players who we are calling on to step in to continue to fill that role, and we just need to put together 90 minutes of soccer."

Packers trample Bears behind Rodgers

CHICAGO — Aaron Rodgers urged Packers fans to relax. Maybe they will after this one — the 700th regular-season victory in team history.

Rodgers threw for 302 yards and four touchdowns, and Green Bay shook off one of its worst offensive performances in years with a 38-17 victory over the Chicago Bears on Sunday afternoon.

The Packers (2-2) scored on their first six possessions to build a 38-17 lead. They racked up 358 yards after being held to 223, their lowest total since 2008, a week earlier in a 19-7 loss at Detroit.

They intercepted Jay Cutler twice in the third quarter to pull away from the Bears (2-2). That gave Green Bay five-straight wins at Soldier Field, including the NFC title game four years ago and a playoffs-or-bust finale for both teams last season.

Rodgers called on Packer fans to take a deep breath during the week, and he gave them reason to exhale with this performance.

"I just wanted to remind everybody that it's a long season, and at some point, we're going to get this thing figured out," Rodgers said.

He had all the answers in this one, which allowed Green Bay to join the Bears (732) as the only teams with at least 700 regular-season wins.

Rodgers posted a 151.2 rating for the game, completing 22-of-28 passes, and he had all the time he needed with five-time Pro Bowl defensive end Jared Allen sitting out because of an illness.

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — They call themselves the firefighters. Iowa defensive coordinator Phil Parker and his defense earned that nickname last year, when the unit was largely the reason the Hawkeyes finished 8-4 and earned a trip to the Outback Bowl.

Through five games this season, Iowa's defense has been a crucial reason that the team is 4-1 (1-0 Big Ten). While the offense has struggled to establish an identity, the defense has been stout and consistent.

"We love playing defense," defensive tackle Carl Davis said following Iowa's 24-10 victory over Purdue on Sept. 27. "That's what we came here to do. We go out and play to the best of our ability, and we try to have fun out there. If you have fun out there, you make plays."

On Sept. 27, it was just another day at the office for Iowa's defense. The unit allowed 156 total yards — 65 in the first quarter. Purdue moved the chains just nine times all game.

After a nine-play drive that led to a field goal in the second quarter, Purdue's next 10 drives ended with either a punt or interception — and that's excluding a one-play drive to end the half.

The only time the Boilermakers found the end zone was when safety Frankie Williams intercepted a C.J. Beathard pass and returned it for a touchdown. The lone time Purdue scored on Iowa's defense was that second-quarter field goal.

There were also things the defense did that won't show up on the stat sheet, such as when the Hawks sacked Purdue quarterback Danny Etling on back-to-back plays to push the Boilermakers 18 yards back and out of field-goal range in the first quarter.

"The one constant was our defense played, I thought, pretty well start to finish,"

— Louis Trinca Pasat, defensive lineman head coach Kirk Ferentz said. "They really did a good job."

Recently, the number of players seeing action on the defensive side of the ball has been growing; against Purdue, 21 different defensive players participated for Iow-wa. The players noted a difference in energy because of the rotation.

Since allowing 17 second-half points to Iowa State on Sept. 13, the Iowa defense allowed just 3 combined points in the second halves against Pittsburgh and Purdue. This was around the time the decision to rotate more occurred.

"They're hard-nosed players," Louis Trinca-Pasat said about the rotation players. "They know what they're doing. Coach [Reese] Morgan has everyone focused, they know they're going to get some reps in there. It helps us stay fresh. They're doing a good job; they're going to keep getting better."

So far this season, Iowa has allowed just 17.2 points and 310.4 yards per game. Those rank 21st and 19th in the nation, respectively. The fire-

Seniors shine for Hawks

Seniors Mark Weisman and Kevonte Martin-Manley added to their legacies in Iowa's 24-10 win over Purdue.

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — One is a wide receiver who is slowly climbing toward a goal he set four years ago. The other is a fullback-turned-workhorse who was the beneficiary of a depleted backfield.

Both, however, are leaving some big, big shoes to fill for those who follow them.

Iowa seniors Kevonte Martin-Manley and Mark Weisman added to their Hawkeye legacies in the team's 24-10 victory over Purdue on Sept. 27. Martin-Manley climbed closer to becoming the program's all-time leader in receptions, and Weisman reached a rushing plateau reserved for some of the best running backs Iowa has ever produced.

Martin-Manley caught 5 passes for 74 yards and his first touchdown of the season against the Boilermakers. In doing so, he raised his career reception total to 148, good for fifth all-time at Iowa.

"That's big," Martin-Manley said. "I'm trying not to focus on it too much. But it's a great honor. It's great to be in that chase right now. I'm pumped about it."

No-offense soccer falls

Scoreless at halftime, No. 25 Rutgers outplayed Iowa in the second half to win 1-0.

By JORDAN HANSEN

After a first half that saw Iowa play some very solid soccer, Rutgers came out strong in the second half and ended any chance the Hawkeyes had of pulling off a minor upset, winning 1-0.

The Scarlet Knights created quite a few scoring opportunities for themselves in the second half and managed to sneak a goal past junior Hannah Clark late in the 49th minute of play.

"We are slow coming out of the second half, and today, it cost us the game, and that starts with me adjusting something at halftime," head coach Dave Dilanni said. "I don't know what it is, but we'll have to change something up."

What that is that needs to change is surely a topic of a lot of discussion, but the Hawkeyes have another problem that branches off from slow second-half starts.

That issue is creating offensive opportunities for themselves, and it showed its ugly face again in Sunday's loss. It was certainly better than the game against Maryland on Sept. 25, but the offense has still shown signs of struggle.

The Hawkeyes were outshot 21-12 in the game, 11-5 in the second half alone. While shots are not a particu-
