The Iowa City City Council could soon settle a battle between property-owner rights and the preservation of historic buildings. The City Council on Tuesday scheduled a special meeting that will occur in the next week to decide the fate of three cottages on South Dubuque Street.

At the special meeting, the council will decide whether to hold a public hearing that would put a moratorium on demolition of the cottages.

The cottages currently house the Book Shop, 608 S. Dubuque St., Suzy's Antiques & Gifts, 610 S. Dubuque St., and Moy Yat Ving Tsun Kung Fu Academy, 614 S. Dubuque St.

Councilor Michelle Payne said holding the special meeting is the proper thing to do.

"It's the fair thing to do," she said. "To hear both sides."

Mayor Matt Hayek said the biggest reason to schedule the

Council backs TIF plan

The Iowa City City Council votes 7-0 to give public financing for a new development in Iowa City.

By NICK MOFFITT
nicholas-moffitt@uiowa.edu

A 96-unit development on Riverside Drive will now receive $1.8 million in tax increment financing after overwhelming vocal support and a 7-0 vote from the Iowa City City Council Tuesday.

The development will contain 12 units that will serve the workforce housing market and be managed by the Housing Fellowship.

The property is at 629 S. Riverside Drive, the old home of Hartwig Motors, and across from Linder Tire.

The $1.8 million TIF would be paid with a nine-year rebate.

Mayor Pro Tem Susan Mims said the high-quality project benefits Iowa City as a whole.

"This is a catalyst project for this part of town," she said. "When you drive in from Iowa City from the south, it is certainly not the most attractive entrance to this community."

Mims
mayor pro tem

The reason she said she would vote yes is to improve Iowa City's gateways.

Kevin Hanick, the developer for the project, said the area is an underutilized and underinvested area, and the TIF will help make this investment in the area happen and create a residential development primarily for non-undergraduate students.

"We can create environments that will encourage certain kinds of tenants, things like quiet hours," he said.

Hanick said the development has been a long time coming, with little development for that group of people.

"There have been no projects really targeted at that demographic," he said.

Oh, Christmas tree in Iowa future may be shaky

Future Christmas tree crops might be diminished because of poor weather in the past.

By BEN MARKS
Benjamin-marks@uiowa.edu

As they wrap up their post-Thanksgiving opening weekend, Christmas-tree farmers across eastern Iowa report healthy harvests.

But, farmers say, poor weather over the last few years may damage future tree crops.

"You may have the customers, but you don't have the product to sell them," said Sarah Handley, family member of Handley's Holiday Hillside, a tree farm near Solon. "There's no way to catch up; you can't plant twice as many trees because you've already lost a whole year of growing."

Because of floods and droughts over the past few years, come 2019, Christmas trees in Iowa might be in short supply.

"Seasonal weather patterns can be very tough on the seedlings when you first plant them," said Rick Dungey, the executive director of the National Christmas Tree Association. "But once seeds are in the field for a year or two years they're a little more stable."

According to data from the National Christmas Tree Association, real trees are consistently in much higher demand than artificial ones.

In 2013 alone, 33 million Christmas trees were sold compared with 14.7 million artificial trees.

The National Christmas Tree Association tracks annual Christmas tree sales across the nation.

- 33.02 million real Christmas trees were sold in 2013, compared with 14.7 million artificial trees
- In 2013, the amount Americans spent on real trees was $1.16 billion
- Despite the most popular retailer for Christmas trees being farms, only 14 percent of Christmas trees sold are "cut-your-own"

Heat bills skyrocket

By MITCH MCANDREW
mitch-mcandrew@uiowa.edu

In Iowa's frigid climate, turning up the heat can cost a small fortune, and Iowans' wallets are starting to feel the burn.

According to recent data, Iowans are struggling to pay their heating bills as winters grow colder, despite the apparent decrease in energy rates.

But while the issue has only recently started to gain attention, it is by no means new.

"Clearly, energy just isn't affordable for a significant number of folks out there," said Jerry McKim, the director of the Low Income Energy Assistance Program, a federally funded, state-operated program that assists families with energy costs.

At the beginning of the year, McKim calculated from the moratorium report that around 16,000 homes did not have heat when the winter cold set in this year.

This number is derived from those affected by the Moratorium Law, which prohibits the disconnection of energy between Nov. 1 and March 31 in low-income households that qualify for energy assistance.

In order to qualify for energy assistance, a household must verify its total income is equal to or less than 150 percent of the 2013 federal poverty guidelines, according to the assistance program's website.

Despite the magnitude of those statistics, McKim finds 16,000 a low-ball number.

"It doesn't include rate-regulated homes, which would no doubt boost the number even higher," McKim said.

While these numbers may seem alarming, Ruth Comer, a spokeswoman for MidAmerican Energy, contests they are not as quite bad as they seem.

"The number of disconnections are only slightly higher than they were in October a year ago," she said.

She also noted these figures do not account for reconnection.

MidAmerican disconnected 3,814 homes last year across Iowa, but 3,274 of these were reconnected.

"It's reasonable to conclude that many households that were disconnected could also be included in those that we reconnected a short time later," she said.

While there is no way to calculate this number explicitly, she said, many customers are only disconnected for a day or two.

Still, the number of Iowans with energy bills past due has not decreased from 2013, and the debt is piling up.

"Iowans with past-due bills are consistent from 2013 to 2014, and the amount owed is much larger than it was last year," Comer said.

A major contributing factor in this increase is the extremely harsh winter Iowa experienced in 2013-14.

"Last winter was the worst of the decade, so the high bills weren't surprising," said Dan Tormey, the manager of customer service for the Iowa Utilities Board.

The exceptional cold last winter spurred much higher energy consumption, which increased the amount of Iowans unable to afford heat.

For this reason, energy costs this coming winter are projected to be less, but McKim disagrees.

"[Last winter] gives the impression that everything will be much more rosy this winter, when it won't," McKim said.

McKim explained the projected costs are based on the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's weather reports, which predicted a warmer winter in 2014.

"I think that's suspect, because we just had one of the coldest Novembers on record," McKim said.

Fortunately, last year's extreme winter resulted in increased awareness of the issues of unaffordable heat.

"The issue received so much attention last year that the state opened up a docket to investigate," Tormey said.

Although this is certainly a step in the right direction, McKim said lots of work remains to be done.

"Things just aren't getting better quick enough," he said.

Woman charged with theft

Authorities have accused an Iowa City woman of stealing merchandise.

Sade Martin, 24, was charged Dec. 1 with second-degree theft.

According to online court documents, Martin was discovered by loss prevention at the store in which she worked.

Sade reportedly admitted to giving away free merchandise to people she knew.

She allegedly gave away shoes, clothing, food, and cleaning supplies by checking out the items to customers and then voiding those items so no one would have to pay.

She reportedly gave away approximately $1,500 worth of merchandise.

Second-degree theft is a Class-D felony.

City to buy light-duty buses

The Iowa City City Council voted 7-0 to approve the purchase of four light-duty buses for Iowa City Transportation Department for $372,900.

The buses will replace four buses that are currently in service.

The purchase is through a contract with the Iowa Department of Transportation.

Two buses received 80 percent grant funding, and the other two received 85 percent; the remainder of the funds will come from the bus-replacement reserve through the city's Transportation Department.

Council OKs Ralston Creek project

A new FEMA reimbursement and storm-water fund project will move forward after a 7-0 vote by the City Council.

The Ralston Creek Improvements Phase 1 will cost an estimated $180,225.

Council backs Hoover Highway rezoning

The Iowa City City Council voted 6-1, with Councilor Jim Throgmorton dissenting, on second consideration to rezone 4701 Herbert Hoover Highway.

The resolution would rezone 39.6 acres of property from interim development single-family residential to low-density single-family residential zone for 32.34 acres and low-density multi-family for 7.26 acres.

Throgmorton said during the meeting he voted no because the rezoning potentially would not help the Iowa City School District accomplish its diversity goals.

The ordinance comes after a 6-1 approval from the Planning and Zoning Commission at its Oct. 16 meeting. The commission did state that proper sewer and water service to the property as well as a pedestrian access route would need to be added.

Approval would allow development of single-family detached and attached dwellings as well as multi-family dwellings in the rezoned area.

Council backs riverfront rezoning

The Iowa City City Council voted 7-0 on second consideration of an ordinance that would rezone approximately half an acre of property from community commercial zone to Riverfront Crossings west riverfront zone at 708 South Riverside Drive.

The Planning and Zoning Commission recommended approval of the rezoning 7-0 at their Oct. 16 meeting conditionally regarding dedication of right-of-way along South Riverside Drive for pedestrian improvements.

Approval of the rezoning would put the site in compliance with the Riverfront Crossings Master Plan.

The council also voted 7-0 to approve the vacating old Benton Street right of way adjacent to 708 South Riverside Drive.

Approval will allow the property to redevelop in compliance with the Riverfront Crossings Master Plan.

Council eyes new consolidated plan

The City Council approved a new consolidated plan, also known as City Steps, for 2016-20, 6-1, with Councilor Michelle Payne dissenting.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development requires the city to adopt a new consolidated plan at least once every five years. Following a public meeting concerning the plan, council will consider approval.

According to the U.S. HUD, "the Consolidated Plan is designed to help states and local jurisdictions to assess their affordable housing and community development needs and market conditions and to make data-driven, place-based investment decisions."

Public comments collected during the comment period will be incorporated into the final document.

Council amends building code

Highlighting HIV/AIDS

By GRACE PATERAS
grace-pateras@uiowa.edu

Student organizations have come together for the third year in a row to expand on a national campaign by organizing week-long events to promote AIDS awareness.

The World Health Organization named Dec. 1 World AIDS Day. Since 1988, communities and individuals across the country have contributed to spreading awareness on HIV/AIDS.

IC Red Week was created with the intention of raising both student and community awareness.

University of Iowa students held events Monday for the cause, and they will continue awareness efforts throughout the week.

"Our aim is grass-roots advocacy," said Ashley Horne, a co-president of ONE executive board. "We start by working from an individual level with students and the community, and then our local government can see what we're passionate about and work from there."

ONE Campus is a nationwide organization with 130 colleges participating in World AIDS Day events. ONE organizers at Iowa took an extra step by creating the campaign with other student organizations such as Global Health Club, UI Students for Human Rights, and other local sponsors, the coordinators created events.

This year, activities throughout the week include fundraisers at local eateries, film screenings, a benefit dinner and silent auction, and a free testing event.

Organizers said the events have gained a wider reach each year.

"We have more involvement in attendance this year," Horne said. "There are more organizations involved in the planning. Each day there is more than one thing going on, like a fundraiser and event."

UI Students for Human Rights is among the groups that attended meetings to plan events throughout the week.

"We have directly helped with fundraising and the spoken-word event," said Carter Yerkes, the vice president of the UI Students for Human Rights organization. "We have also contributed volunteers to help staff the events, set up for the week, and spread awareness."

Yerkes said HIV/AIDS causes a social stigma in which people are afraid to address the disease, as well as treat those who are affected poorly.

In past years, Horne said, a lot of the money raised came from the silent auction.

"[Raising money] is just one component of the week," Horne said. "As we've learned, giving money to a cause isn't going to solve a problem. You have to understand why and get people to start talking about it."

This year, the Red Affair auction will be held on Thursday in the IMU.

Funds will be donated to Positive Iowans Taking Charge and Community HIV and Hepatitis Advocates of Iowa Network, two HIV/AIDS organizations.

Organizers hope to raise more than $1,000 at the event.

IC Red Week 2014 coordinator Mackenzie Leonard said this generation isn't used to talking about sexual health, which is why it is important for students to be educated.

Horne said she hopes awareness will carry on for the whole year.

"This week is not for the groups organizing it, it's for the whole campus to be aware and have a good time with it," she said. "Attend, go to a fundraiser, and expose yourself to what we're putting out there."

UI eyes more lecturers

By AARON WALKER
aaron-walker-1@uiowa.edu

The recent push for increased enrollment will likely cause some colleges at the University of Iowa to hire more lecturers as opposed to the tenure-track faculty they ultimately desire.

Lecturers are hired primarily to teach and often to perform specific professional laboratory instruction while tenure faculty research, teach, and participate in university programs.

UI President Sally Mason said at her last public media address in order to procure the university's desired permanent staff, many lecturers will be hired to "plug some holes along the way."

"Obviously, if we're depending on savings that will come a little further down the road or new tuition dollars that will come when the students come, we need to take some steps that will be a little quicker than necessarily going out and hiring all the tenure-track faculty that we're going to need to ultimately do this," she said.

Mason said she personally considered this a temporary fix for what needs to happen.

"What President Mason was referring to is the push for increased enrollments over the next couple of years and ... you don't know what areas you're going to need help in right now. We could be enrolling 400 or 500 more students in the fall," said Kevin Kregel, the UI associate provost for faculty. The colleges themselves, their deans or department heads, manage their own faculty pool and hire staff accordingly.

Specific colleges face growing and fading rates of enrollment and respond with the necessary action to maintain their desired level of education.

"Tenure-track faculty at any major doctoral research university in the country is really a critical component to the stability of the university," Kregel said. "The benefit of any major university like this, in terms of having tenure-track faculty, is that we have researchers who are cutting-edge researchers who can translate that into the classroom."

Many issues do arise, though, as universities hire additional short-term staff.

The UI's Faculty Senate commissioned a lecturers committee to address issues that hurt the lecturer community.

"The Faculty Senate appointed a lecturers committee three years ago to produce a final report this spring," said Alexandra Thomas, the president of the Faculty Senate.

She acknowledged that there are many difficulties facing lecturers and said the Senate wants to address them and come up with solutions for any and all issues.

These issues, at universities across the United States, can range from compensation and benefit issues to hours and institutional transparency.

Twelve years ago, University of Michigan lecturers organized and created a union, the Lecturers' Employee Organization, to acknowledge these troubles.

Group Vice President Kirsten Herold said that nationwide, around 70 percent of the student credit hours are taught by either adjuncts, lecturers, or graduate students.

"The lecturer system was not a defined system, which is why there are so many titles and working conditions," Herold said. "Some people think of lecturers as second-class citizens or the dirty little secrets of academia. We joke that we're professors when we're talking to parents but we're not when we're talking to employers."

Not rolling with role models

Joe Lane
joseph-lane@uiowa.edu

Tiger Woods, Ray Rice, Adrian Peterson, Michael Phelps, and Hope Solo. These are just a handful of the professional athletes who have allegedly done something ethically and/or legally wrong in the past several years. It's difficult; it seems, to go an entire season of any major sport without hearing of at least one high-caliber athlete losing her or his "role model" status. It doesn't have to be this way.

Of course, it doesn't have to be this way because athletes shouldn't be doing such terrible things. But more importantly, it doesn't have to be this way because we don't have to view athletes as role models off the field.

It's true that athletes often act as role models both on and off the field, because for every story of an athlete using an illicit drug or abusing a family member, there are two or three stories of another athlete visiting a sick child in the hospital or starting a foundation.

For me, however, an athlete's performance off the field isn't something with which I concern myself. Athletes aren't in our society to function as moral compasses. They are, however, ideal role models for improving our physical fitness and, honestly, that's about where we should draw the line. Because the truth remains, their professional athlete status by no means diminishes how terrible and inexcusable some individual's off field activity is.

Growing up, I watched Tiger Woods because he was unstoppable. This, however, all came crashing down when his philanthropic ways were exposed. I hated Tiger for what he did off the field, and since the scandal was exposed I have very little respect for him as an individual.

But the truth is, I still love watching Tiger, and to this day I still root for him.

When Tiger was exposed, the only thing that changed for me was how I view athletes. They were still role models, but for only one thing — their sport.

Today, when athletes' images are destroyed — take Peterson from my beloved Vikings, for example — I don't think twice about who they are as people. I'm disappointed and disgusted beyond belief by their actions (and I'll probably take his poster off my wall), but I know that it doesn't affect how I feel about the individual as an athlete because I don't pay attention to them because of their moral standards.

After all, some of the greatest athletes in history weren't great role models: Mike Tyson, Ty Cobb, and Oscar Pistorius, for example.

But I can't say this about all famous individuals.

When sexual-assault allegations arose recently against Bill Cosby, I lost respect for him as an individual and as an actor.

Cosby's most well-known role was that of the friendly and moral Dr. Huxtable on "The Cosby Show." Unlike the aforementioned athletes, Cosby's role in his career had him providing moral guidance and real-life advice to not only his fictitious family but to the viewers who tuned in every week, making the show one of the most popular of all time.

Whether or not it was right for him to become one, Cosby was viewed as role model by millions, including me.

I realize that I tread a thin line of which celebrities ought to be role models and which ought not, but I fear Cosby's off-field (so to speak) activities revoke his position as a role model in my life and have forever tarnished my views of the wise advice I gained from his career.

Accord needed in Washington

The relationship between President Obama and congressional Republicans has been tense following Obama's announcement of an emissions accord with China as well as a planned move on immigration policy through an executive order. Standing to gain majority in both the House of Representatives and the Senate, Republicans find themselves in a precarious position with the deadline for government shutdown on Dec. 11 looming over them. The GOP will soon have the opportunity to shift public perception of the party that was largely blamed for the government shutdown last year.

Congress is rapidly approaching a crossroads. A choice must be made between making a move to retaliate against Obama's use of executive action on immigration, which may result in a shutdown of the government, or delaying the confrontation with the president until the party is in a more advantageous position to achieve its goal. House Speaker John Boehner has worked to find an alternative to the imminent shutdown. His plan entails curtailing the amount of money that would be given to the Department of Homeland Security in the appropriations bill that must be passed to keep the government funded and functional. By separating the funding for Homeland Security from the funding for the rest of the federal government, Boehner would be able to withhold the resources necessary to implement Obama's executive action.

Even though some Republicans have voiced support for this action, there is still reluctance to abandon the threat of forcing a government shutdown. Boehner is aware that this is a time in which the heated emotions of his party must take a back seat to the well-being of the nation and that playing the game strategically increases the probability of both a win for Republican policy and public approval. If anything, both parties should have learned that the well-being of the country should not be used as leverage to forward or thwart a political agenda. Last year's federal government shutdown, which lasted from Oct. 1 through 16, resulted in the unpaid furlough of 800,000 government employees. Standard and Poor's rating agency estimated the shutdown cost the United States $24 billion in lost economic output.

The purpose of political parties is in part to ensure that all members of the population receive representation, but party polarization has caused our representatives to stray from this ideal. Instead, we find politicians care more about garnering approval from their party's extreme base or zealously pushing their own agendas as opposed to advocating for the benefit of their constituency and the nation as a whole.

Boehner is making a step in the right direction with his willingness to forgo the immediate satisfaction of countering Obama's actions, especially when such a response could carry the disastrous potential of a government shutdown. Total bipartisanship may not be possible in the immediate future, but an increased focus on running the country instead of merely scoring points against the opposing team will go a long way in bolstering the strength of the nation. Even if Congress is not in agreement with Obama's actions, what is best for the general population should transcend party lines and political ideology.

When is death the answer?

Marcus Brown
marcusbrown@gmail.com

Capital punishment is by far the most severe legal punishment that can be imposed on a person and one of the few justifiable instances in which a human life may be taken without repercussion. The implementation of the death penalty is decided by the state and varies among jurisdictions, but there are constants taken into account when determining the necessity of an execution. The use of the death penalty has seen somewhat of a decline in modern times. Traditionally, the execution of a guilty party was far more prevalent, a great deal less humane, and required fewer criteria for implementation. However, gone are the days in which people are burned at the stake or publicly beheaded. That is, in the United States anyway.

In the modern context, the use of the death penalty is reserved for only the most heinous of crimes perpetrated by those deemed no longer conducive to society at large. However, the use of capital punishment is beginning on an alarming trend that threatens to undermine decades of progress towards a more humane and just society.

Given the seriousness and permanence of a capital punishment, many aspects must come into play when determining if a death sentence is the most appropriate decision. Mental competency is a pivotal decision factor because it is difficult to ascertain the fairness of executing people unable to understand the implications of their actions.

Recently, the case of Scott Panetti of Texas has made headlines. Panetti "shot and killed his in-laws at their Texas Hill Country Home, showering his estranged wife and 3-year old daughter in blood," and his execution has been set for today. Panetti's mental competency has come into question with many questioning his sanity and, by extension, the validity of his execution. A Supreme Court ruling on Panetti's case made an additional requirement that Panetti must have a "rational understanding" of his punishment. The argument being made is not whether Panetti is guilty but rather what makes a person eligible for being legally executed by the state. As a society, we have a duty to protect those who cannot protect themselves, but where does the attitude stand on an issue such as this?

The use of death as punishment has been around for centuries, but as society evolves, so must the measure used to maintain the structure of said society. The methods used to execute criminals evolved from the crude, extreme to the more humane such as lethal injection. I believe by extension the grounds in which the state chooses to implement capital punishment must evolve as well. There will always be circumstance in which people prove themselves consciously unfit to maintain a place in larger society, but unless that can be proven beyond an irrefutable doubt, capital punishment is not the answer.

Online comment on 'Cervantes: Ferguson troubling revelations for race relations'

"I am not going to pretend to understand the trials and tribulations that black Americans may face in their lives." Of course you are. "Despite the decades of social reform, the injustice of discrimination is still etched into the minds of minorities in this nation" It's in their minds, right? In spite of all that reform, they've still got it in their minds. Because we all know black people are lying or delusional when they describe ongoing discrimination in America. When they talk about growing up feeling like there's a target on their back. You don't address the quality of the grand jury decision at all. You're just saying you agree with it because you believe black people are complaining about nothing. You just sound arrogant.

You do know when Stephen Colbert does the bit about "I don't see race," he's spoofing right-wing racists? I'd suggest you consider why that is and maybe read some more and talk to more people outside your circle before publishing stuff that, by all rights, you should be ashamed of when you grow up.

Re: the grand-jury decision

This note is in response to Christopher

Cervantes article about the grand-jury decision in Jefferson, Missouri.

Please remember that the job of the grand jury is only to decide if there is enough evidence to go to trial. It is NOT its job to determine guilt or innocence.

Littering is shameful

Littering is shameful. And illegal: Fines in Iowa run from $65 to $625, fines are highest within 100 feet of a body of water. Violators may also be required to perform litter cleanup and face imprisonment of up to 30 days. In Illinois, the fine for pitching a cigarette butt is $1,100 with fines for littering of up to $1,500.

Littering is rampant on our campus, despite garbage cans being nearby. It is disgusting and shameful to find numerous discarded plastic bottles, food containers, cigarette packs/butts, and beer or pop cans. Storms wash garbage down rivers to the ocean, collecting eventually along beautiful beaches and in the Gyres.

Several of us have taken to picking up garbage as we walk. Please join us in protecting our home planet: Limit waste production and use disposables, recycle when possible, and especially clean up litter when ever you get the chance. Speak up if you see littering and educate others on the harm it causes.

special meeting was the timing of the problem.

"I do not like the last-minute nature of this, the 11th-hour approach," he said. "But there is so much communication, and I fear the applicants and property owner's voice hasn't been heard throughout this, either."

According to a structural report in November from VJ Engineering, the buildings are not safe.

The city received a report on Tuesday before the meeting from a separate engineering firm, Morningside Engineering, that concluded "overall, the buildings are structurally sound."

John Yapp, the city director of transportation, said the second report doesn't change the fact that the city has asked the owner to abate the buildings, because officials want to take a conservative approach.

Yapp presented to the council during its work session the situation that has evolved from the original engineering report.

He said the owner of the building had been notified the structural issues must be either demolished or repaired.

Ted Pacha, the owner of the building, has since applied for a permit for the buildings to be demolished.

Demolition could be delayed by 60 days if a public hearing is set, which would be enough time for the city to decide whether the buildings are historic landmarks.

Late Tuesday afternoon, the city received a historic-landmark application for the property, which will now be looked at by the Historic Preservation Committee and the Planning and Zoning Commission before coming before the City Council.

In addition, the city will have to receive comment from the state.

The city received a large amount of email correspondence related to the demolition, which Hayek said was another reason for holding a special meeting, and he encouraged community members to hold their comments until that meeting.

Part of the correspondence was a Change.org petition that at the time of the council meeting Tuesday had 596 supporters to set a public hearing related to the historic preservation of 608, 610, and 614 S. Dubuque St.

Mayor Pro Tem Susan Mims compared the relatively quick nature of events in this case to an avalanche.

"[Citizens] don't necessarily take any interest or action to avoid having [demolition] happen as long as the current property owner doesn't upset them," she said. "Then you get a groundswell of people."

A demolition sign hangs on one of the South Dubuque cottages on Tuesday. Three 150-year-old cottages have received demolition notices from the city. (The Daily Iowan/John Theulen)

Part of the big appeal for the TIF to councilors was that the building will be a completely solar-powered building, Hanick said, and will potentially produce more than it uses.

"The solar panels are a huge step forward for a building in Iowa City," Councilor Terry Dickens said.

Davidson said the new taxes from the development would be very substantial, currently the empty car lot provides around $50,000 per year, and in the initial year the new development would provide almost $300,000 in property tax.

He said even during the TIF years, the taxing area will receive almost double the amount of taxes for the protected debt levy.

Once the TIF rebate is over, it is projected by the Iowa City economic development department that the property will bring $320,000 per year in new taxes.

"This is a site that has been a blighted property," Jeff Davidson, the city's economic-development administrator said, noting that investment in the area is needed.

He said officials have had substantial negotiations with the developer, which has improved the project to the amenity level it is at today.

Another reason he said the city would consider the TIF is the lack of private investment in the area, and with this project the city can truly invest in the area.

The total construction cost of the building will be $16.1 million.

Iowa City resident Jeff Biggers said he looks at the project as a down payment on Iowa City's climate future.

"This development to me is not only commendable, it is indispensable, and to think we will have a building operating with solar panels and mono recycling," he said.

gle's Trees near Cedar Falls, said his farm is still recovering from past floods as opposed to cold weather last winter.

"We experienced no winter damage here; most everything pulled out," he said. "We're more suffering from the floods of 2008, when we lost 3,000 to 5,000 trees."

This loss, Moulds said, was approximately 15 percent of his trees.

Christmas trees typically take at least seven years to reach maturation, so the newly planted trees Moulds lost in 2008 would have just been reaching harvestable size this year.

The losses led to a dip in his profits.

Other farmers also suffered tree loss because of the flooding, but most agreed it was the 2012 summer drought that really hurt them.

"December of 2012, we didn't even open," said Dwight Krueger, the owner of D&J Tree Farm near Nichols, Iowa. "We lost a lot, anywhere from small seedlings to 8-foot trees because our tree farm is on sandy soil, and we're unable to irrigate."

Krueger said he has sold trees since 1991 and that was the first year he never opened.

State Climatologist Harry Hillaker said 2012 was the worst year for tree growth.

"We had relatively dry weather but also excessive heat for much of that spring and summer," he said.

Carol Pierce, a co-owner of Honey Creek Timbers near Morning Sun, Iowa, said around three-fourths of seeds they planted died, and she and her husband discussed irrigation, something they'd never had to worry about before.

Farmers said, however, last winter things started to look up.

Krueger said the especially cold weather wasn't an issue for even their newly planted trees, and most made it through unscathed, in part because of the nice weather that followed.

"Last winter wasn't a problem at all," he said. "Last winter, it was cold, but we had lots of spring rain."

Pierce said she also credits a successful planting season to the weather.

"This year is a great year for us," she said. "We had a lot of rain, and we planted more than we usually do, and they're surviving."

MAKING A LIVING, WANTING CITIZENSHIP

The path to citizenship isn't so easy for immigrants who own a business in the United States, and President Obama's newly announced Immigration Accountability Executive Actions don't address these concerns.

By LAUREN COFFEY | lauren-n-coffey@uiowa.edu

Harold Van Beek and wife Astrid Van Beek have been in the United States for nine years, and they own a jewelry shop in eastern Iowa. Still, they have never felt a sense of permanency.

"We're a little different because we're self-employed, and there aren't a lot of visas available for that," said Harold Van Beek, the owner of Jewelry by Harold in North Liberty.

"The one we have currently requires us to reapply every two years and prove we run a good business — but that won't tell us what makes a good business."

The Van Beeks are in the subgroup of immigrants who are in the country legally but cannot gain citizenship easily. Their concerns of having to apply so often without clear guidelines about what makes a good business were not addressed by President Obama's recent executive order on immigration reform. While the president's action is admirable, the Van Beeks say it's not enough.

"It does bring attention to the system and shows a willingness to change things, so that's what's positive for us," Astrid Van Beek said. "But there does need to be more done."

The family, originally from the Netherlands, has relied on investor visas since moving to the United States in 2005. That visa acts the same as a residency permit — without it, the Van Beeks would not be able to stay in the country.

Discussions in Washington, D.C., don't usually mention employed immigrants such as the Van Beeks. These are the people who own successful businesses, which contribute to and even grow the economy, yet aren't receiving the reform they crave.

Obama announced a series of executive actions on Nov. 20 that have been in the works for roughly a year. Despite opposition from many conservatives, Obama decided to allow illegal immigrants temporary stays should they meet a slew of criteria. Included among them are illegal immigrants who have been in the country for 10 years.

Also included are new Border Patrol regulations as well as the deportation of immigrants who have committed felonies.

Talks about reform became a key point in the 2014 elections, and they are expected to continue into 2016. After legislation to grant amnesty to illegal immigrants failed to pass in the House, Obama took matters into his own hands, much to the dismay of conservatives.

Disagreement over immigration reform has grown the same way partisanship has.

"This discussion and reforms have happened since the 1980s," said Dan Fischener, a professor of political science at the University of Oregon. "What's so different now is the partisan divide is so much greater than it was in the past. On top of internal divisions, there's this huge polarization between Republicans and Democrats."

Public-opinion polls show that the same divide exists among most Americans. According to a

'[The executive action] does bring attention to the system and shows a willingness to change things, so that's what's positive for us. But there does need to be more done.'

— Astrid Van Beek, an immigrant from the Netherlands living in North Liberty

Quinnipiac poll conducted from Nov. 18-23, 48 percent of those polled support reform that creates a path to citizenship for illegal immigrants, down 9 percentage points from last year. The poll's margin of error was 2.5 percentage points.

That hesitancy for more than half the nation to support immigration reform may stem from a long-held belief that immigrants in some way contribute to a loss of jobs for U.S. citizens.

"Some people do believe the rhetoric that undocumented immigrants take jobs," said Stephen Legomsky, the former chief counsel of the Federal Immigration Agency. "But they help the economy. The number of jobs they take is not greater than the number of jobs they create."

According to a study conducted by the National Bureau of Economic Research in 2010, immigration has a positive effect on existing local employment and helping the overall economy.

However, across the nation, some politicians believe that allowing any sort of illegal immigration can cause a downward spiral for the economy as well as the country's overall well-being.

"The president just lost an election in no small measure because wages for working families are declining and unemployment is still too high in too many places," Rep. Tom Cotton, R-Ky., said in an interview with NBC News' "Meet the Press." "The first big action he took after the election was to make it easier for illegal immigrants to get jobs, not for working families to get jobs."

West Liberty City Councilor and School Board member Jose Zacarias believes himself to be a strong advocate for illegal immigrants; he said there is more can be done, but reform is a solid first step.

"They can buy houses, cars, and help the economy in the country," he said. "I think [the reform] is a wonderful thing, but I don't think any of it will come out of the GOP."

Zacarias and other supporters of immigrants and reform say the solution to the burgeoning crisis is simple: provide opportunities for equality. Being able to do that, however, could come down to the results of the next presidential election.

"From the perspective of the [illegal immigrant] community, we want long-term opportunities," Zacarias said. "I think it's going to be a crucial year in 2016 for Democrats to make that happen."

Portman: No presidential run

Ohio Sen. Rob Portman stumped for Sen. elect Joni Ernst this fall, but his short visit to Iowa didn't include surveying the state's first-in-the-nation presidential stumping ground because of presidential aspirations — at least that's what he said.

This week, Portman ruled out the possibility of a run for the Oval Office in 2016. He said in a statement he doesn't believe he "can run for president and be an effective senator at the same time."

Many thought Portman, 58, to be considering a campaign.

His more moderate stance on same-sex marriage has been criticized by other Republicans recently; Portman endorsed equal marriage rights after his son, who is gay, helped him gradually become more accepting.

The senator will run for a second term in the U.S. Senate.

With Portman out, a lengthy list of potential candidates remains.

Mowrer raises funds for sick son

It's after Election Day, but Jim Mowrer is still out raising money. This time, however, the cause is for something that hits a little closer to home.

Mowrer, who unsuccessfully ran against Rep. Steve King in Iowa's 4th District this year, is raising money for his 3-year-old son, Jack. He and wife Chelsey found out shortly before Thanksgiving that Jack had been diagnosed with a rare disease called ataxia telangiectasia, a neurodegenerative disease. Mowrer, a native of Boone, Iowa, campaigned as an Iraq War veteran and a Democrat in a very Republican district long-held by King.

Ernst resigns from Iowa Senate

U.S. Sen.-elect Joni Ernst submitted her resignation from her state Senate seat earlier this week.

Ernst won the U.S. Senate seat after a close race with U.S. Rep. Bruce Braley, D-Iowa.

A special election will be held on Dec. 30 for the now-open seat in Iowa's Senate District 12.

The district includes Fremont, Mills, Montgomery, Page, Ringgold, and Taylor Counties.

"United States Sen.-elect Joni Ernst has served her state and country as a soldier in the Iowa National Guard, local elected official, and as a state senator," Gov. Terry Branstad said in a statement. "Though I'm disappointed to lose Sen.-elect Ernst's leadership in the Iowa Legislature, I know she will be a strong voice of Iowa common sense in Washington, D.C."

PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii — Four of the remaining nine USS Arizona survivors of the Pearl Harbor attack are vowing this year's anniversary won't be their last reunion.

The men in their 90s gathered for a news conference Tuesday in a building overlooking the memorial that sits on top of the Arizona, a battleship that sank in the Dec. 7, 1941, attack. Even though it's the last official survivor gathering of the USS Arizona Reunion Association, the men said they still plan to get together, even if not in Hawaii.

"I don't think this is going to be our last. ... We've still got time to go," said Louis Conter, 93, of Grass Valley, California.

Grad students move against assault

By DANIEL VALENTIN
daniel-valentin@uiowa.edu

Because of the increased number of sexual assaults on campus, the University of Iowa Graduate and Professional Student Government has voted to create a Student Safety Chair to assist in creating campus-wide safety initiatives.

Group President Alyssa Billmeyer said the position would benefit undergraduate students affected by sexual assault by providing a place for them to come forward and receive help.

"It's very easy for graduate students to reach out to undergraduates," she said. "We are both in different stages in life, but not by much. It's easier for us to relate to them."

Billmeyer said the grad-student group will work with the It's On Us campaign, a nationwide movement that aims to keep people safe from sexual assault by raising awareness and providing coping resources for victims.

"This isn't just about having fewer sexual assaults on campus," she said. "It's also to make sure students are comfortable seeking help. No one should have to cope with this experience alone."

Grad-student government Vice President Jon Scholte said the effort would begin with targeting undergraduates and medical-research buildings to make sure students have the resources they need when dealing with sexual misconduct.

He also said the group will reach out to fraternities and sororities, as well as sports groups in a hope to spread awareness and teach students about dealing with sexual assaults.

"As more people come forward to speak about their experiences, more people can receive help," he said. "The goal is to make sure that students feel safe in their environment."

Kira Pasquesi, the vice head of the Student Advisory Committee for Sexual Misconduct, said the committee aims to provide input from students that will translate to policy review.

She also said students have spoken to the committee about what problems they have experienced on campus and what they think ought to be done based on what they know.

"The GPSG provides a wide array of graduate and professional students," she said. "The addition of the Student Safety Chair will be a great source for when they go back to the groups they represent."

Pasquesi said the It's On Us campaign involves shifting the culture to stop blaming the victims of sexual assault on what they should have done but rather believing the victims and providing support for them.

"These poor people choose friends, family members, and even professionals to help them get through this difficult experience," she said. "That initial moment where the victim sees support is the most crucial."

Pasquesi said the goal for this semester was to simply kick off the It's On Us campaign and making sure students have tangible ways of dealing with sexual assault.

"It was about crafting a message," she said. "Now, we just need to figure out how to get more people on board."

Faculty raise funding concerns

By RACHEL GREEN
rachel-green@uiowa.edu

University of Iowa faculty members expressed their concerns Tuesday to a top state official about their work being devalued, a loss of funds, and competition among Iowa's public universities.

Bruce Rastetter, the president of the state Board of Regents, was present at Tuesday's Faculty Senate meeting to address those concerns.

Performance-based funding is a method in which the state allocates money to the regent universities based on the performance of its students. Course completion, graduation rates, the number of degrees awarded, and the number of low-income and minority graduates are among the factors taken into consideration.

Rastetter, a UI alumnus, said he hopes this funding proposal will help the UI become a top-10 public university.

"The University of Iowa deserves the best and shouldn't settle for less," he said.

Kate Mulholland, the regents' president pro tem, echoed Rastetter's beliefs about the UI but said it has to come from efforts made on campus.

"You're the ones that are going to define what puts you in the top 10," she said. "You have the programs, you have the research, you have the faculty, and you have the students."

Many worries about performance-based funding were shared with Rastetter at the meeting.

"So much of what we hear about the funding model from faculty members is the worry that it will devalue their work," Faculty Senate President Alexandra Thomas said. "It's great to see the president of the Board of Regents supporting us and our work."

Faculty members also discussed concerns with a perceived sense of competition among Iowa's public universities in this funding model, although Rastetter said this should not become an issue.

"We have a responsibility as the Board of Regents to be fair to all the public universities in Iowa," he said. "I don't think it's a competition among the three but rather the three universities becoming better."

He said in order to make the performance-based funding work, the UI needs to work on recruiting not only in-state students but all potential students.

"As a public university, it is necessary that [the UI] is accessible to all Iowans," he said. "One of the things that is also clear to the board is that we want to encourage the university to recruit out-of-state students and students from around the world."

Rastetter noted that other states that use a performance-based funding in their public universities, citing them as potential examples for creating a successful funding model for Iowa.

The regents used Tennessee and its formula of calculating where money is allocated as the main example of the funding model because 100 percent of state funding is given based on institutional performances.

This is something Mulholland would like to see in the state.

"We mostly looked at all the different formulas and had speakers who conducted their own research about them," she said. "Because this was just a portion of the money the universities have for their operating budget, we wanted to reflect how the money from the Legislature will affect the universities."

Rastetter said discussions similar to the one held Tuesday reflect the relationship between the regents and the UI.

"The University of Iowa has a long and strong tradition of shared governance," he said. "And part of that shared governance is with the board."

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): Show everyone what you have to offer. Presenting your talents will attract new possibilities. Travel plans or long-distance communication will lead to a closer relationship with someone special. Think fast and act responsibly; you will get your way.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't get involved in joint money ventures. Do your best to stay on top of whatever job you've been given. Strive to stabilize your position. Stick to basics, and don't get sidetracked by someone who is indulgent.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Playful actions could lead to positive personal changes. You can make home improvements as long as you budget wisely and leave enough money for something that improves your love life. Added discipline will help you establish your goals.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep your wits about you when dealing with money matters. Fast-talking sales pitches can be mesmerizing and lead to an impulsive purchase you will regret. Problems with instructions and competitive peers can be expected. Proceed with caution.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make subtle personal changes, and you will win the support you need to press ahead with your goals. Love is highlighted, and playful interaction with someone special will bring you closer together. Beware of a false impression regarding someone's assets.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Get into the swing of things. Take part in community events, or delve into your family background and traditions. Someone you live with is likely to be unpredictable. Watch family spending carefully. Shop around, and you will find a bargain.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Participation and short trips will lead to satisfying personal changes. The ideas resulting from what you see and hear will not be immediately understood by everyone, but they can lead to new ideas and solutions. You can make a difference if you try.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Practice minimalism, and avoid feelings of regret. Venture down a path that offers something different from what you are accustomed to seeing, doing, and hearing. Let your intuition guide you. Stick close to the people who have always been there for you.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Using force should be ruled out. You will accomplish more if you are witty, playful, and willing to be a team player. Positive changes at home will result in praise as well as personal comfort. Love will blossom if you are attentive.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Make personal changes that will ensure comfort and affordability. A show of emotion is not necessarily a sign of weakness. Share your thoughts, and resolve issues that have been weighing you down mentally and physically.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Put more effort into how you earn a living. Don't shy away from raising your awareness of what's going on in your industry, community, or economy. Pick up skills that are compatible with the changing marketplace.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't make assumptions. Get the facts before you make a statement or a decision. Look for opportunities to address a concern you have as well as earn a little cash. Use your ingenuity, and be true to your beliefs.

Brothers, and of Gesell, Paige, and Woodbury for around three and a half seasons, said it was rarity if the Martin Brothers weren't one of the best teams at a given tournament while the trio was there.

"They may be the most-winningest team that we had," Huddleston said. "... It's not the norm for kids who are stars at their own high schools to come together and accomplish what those guys were able to accomplish over the years, because there is only one ball and there are a lot of talented players."

All three of the players still keep in touch, as do their families.

When news first broke that Iowa would play North Carolina, Gesell sent a text Paige's way asking if he had heard the news. It was a match-up they had talked about after committing to their respective schools but were never sure if it would happen.

That communication has continued in college. Paige told members of the North Carolina media he talked to Gesell and Woodbury three or four times this week. Nothing basketball-related.

"You're with each other in AAU more than you're with your families almost," Gesell said. "I basically spent every summer with him for about six years. Naturally, you grow a friendship there."

The three grew close enough that they would even travel to watch the others' high-school games when they got the chance. And last season, said. "We've known each other for quite some time."

Before committing, they talked extensively about playing together in college. Iowa recruited all three of them, and "I think he was starting to buy in," Iowa head coach Fran McCaffery said. "But at the same time, he had Carolina calling, and that was, I think in his mind, an opportunity he couldn't pass up at that time."

Neither Gesell nor Woodbury is worried about emotions boiling up when they play their former teammate. They both realize the threat of what Paige — a 2014 preseason All-American — can do on the floor outweighs any past ties the three have.

"I saw something special in him when I laced up for our first game together," Woodbury said.

"You could tell right away that he was going to be really good."

The number of past matchups in today's game is abnormal. During his days at Linn Mar high school, Paige played Jarrod Uthoff, Josh Oglesby, and Gesell on numerous occasions.

More often than not, Paige won, including the last time Gesell and Paige played each other.

In an 81-62 defeat, Paige's Linn Mar team defeated Gesell's South Sioux City (Nebraska), ending his high-school basketball career.

Wednesday's game will be the first matchup between the two since then.

"He got the better of me last time," Gesell said. "It'll be fun to get that matchup again."

quite cemented herself as a permanent starter.

"Whitney has an unbelievable ability of composure. Sometimes, freshmen can kind of lose it — lose their focus, their intensity — and she doesn't do it," Bluder said. "She keeps her composure all the time, and she's into every play, so I'm very impressed with that so far. I think Whitney is playing very well for us."

She noted, however: "Have we settled into a for sure starting lineup yet? I wouldn't say we're there. But [Jennings] has definitely shown she needs to be on the floor for us a lot."

Iowa looking for complete performance

The team, Bluder included, acknowledged coming into the season that rebounding and defense were areas for improvement, but were also quick to ensure they would win games with their offense by simply outscoring the other team.

And for the most part, it has worked; the team is scoring 85.4 points per game, outscoring opponents by an average of 19.3 points, and is 6-1 as a result. However, the loss to Arkansas shows that even one of the best offenses in the country can be defeated.

The Hawkeye offense shot 46.8 percent from the floor that night, 50 percent from beyond the arc. Very impressive numbers — and coaches could never realistically expect their teams to shoot over 50 percent from deep. So how, on a night that the offense statistically performed as well as Bluder would like, could Iowa possibly have fallen?

They were outrebounded 51-24, which includes a humiliating 19-4 disparity on offensive boards, got into foul trouble on defense, and put the Razorbacks at the free-throw line 33 times. So it's simple: Iowa lost because it still struggles to defend or rebound.

"When you don't have that rebounding in a game, it can be detrimental to a team," Disterhoft said. "Every day you have to come to practice ready to play hard, work hard, and get better at it. We've been working on it and it's something we're going to turn around."

had apparently succumbed to a self-inflicted gunshot wound.

While he did not have a lot of success on the mat — going just 16-15 in three years — he did compete in the 2013 Big Ten championships at heavyweight.

He left the team after the conclusion of the 2013-14 season and proceeded to walk on to the Buckeye football team, where he was listed as a defensive tackle.

"You don't give a tribute to someone until they're gone, and that's why we should honor our icons, maybe earlier," Brands said. "You don't wait until they pass; do it when they're alive so they know they're appreciated."

An answer at 149?

Brandon Sorensen

seems to be the guy right now at 149-pounds.

The redshirt freshman got the start over Brody Grothus and notched a 7-6 decision win over Iowa State's Gabe Moreno on Nov. 29.

"I didn't get the nod until Saturday, but it was always in my head that I was going to be the guy," Sorensen said. "Getting prepared just like I was going to go out there like I did."

Sorensen stands at 10-1 on the season. His win over Moreno boosted him to the No. 12 ranking at 149-pounds by Flowrestling.

His lone loss of the season is to Grothus, but Sorensen's first-place finish at the Joe Parisi Open on Nov. 22 apparently showed enough to give him the starting gig — for now.

"I have to create bigger margins. That last match [versus Moreno] wasn't a big enough one for me," Sorensen said. "I didn't like it, so I have to build on that and get better there."

A look toward the future

Over the last six meetings between Michigan State and Iowa, the Hawkeyes have dominated the Spartans to the tune of an average margin of 23.8 points per meet.

While those kinds of victories have become routine, the meet still holds plenty of importance for Iowa. It is the first Big Ten meet of the year, after all.

"It's the first Big Ten meet, and we have to get our Big Ten schedule rolling and on a roll and get that Big Ten dual title meet again this year," 125-pounder Thomas Gilman said. "I feel like it's not the most important thing on our mind, but it's still a trophy for the wall."

The Spartans only boast one ranked wrestler: freshman Javier Gasca at 133 pounds.

New wrestling rankings released

Flowrestling released its most-recent college-wrestling rankings on Tuesday, with only two real changes.

Brandon Sorensen has entered the rankings at No. 12 after getting into the starting lineup over Brody Grothus, who slipped out of the rankings.

Below are Iowa's ranked wrestlers, according to Flowrestling, with the previous week's ranking in parenthesis:

- 125 pounds — Thomas Gilman, 5 (5)
- 133 pounds — Cory Clark, 4 (4)
- 141 pounds — Josh Dziewa, 6 (6)
- 149 pounds — Brandon Sorensen, 12 (NR)
- 157 pounds — none
- 165 pounds — Nick Moore, 5 (5)

- 174 pounds — Mike Evans, 4 (4)
- 184 pounds — Sammy Brooks, 6 (6)
- 197 pounds — Nathan Burak, 6 (6)
- Heavyweight — Bobby Telford, 3 (3)

Telford once again remained the only Iowa wrestler in Flowrestling's Pound-for-Pound rankings, at No. 20.

Iowa's overall team ranking didn't move. The Hawkeyes are still ranked second behind Minnesota.

Iowa 149-pounder Brandon Sorensen wrestles Iowa State 149-pounder Gabe Moreno in Carver-Hawkeye on Nov. 29. Sorensen escaped with 0:41 left in the third period to beat Moreno, 7-6. The Hawkeyes defeated the Cyclones, 28-8. (The Daily Iowan/Margaret Kispert)

Michigan axes Brady Hoke

After a rocky season, Brady Hoke is no longer the head coach at Michigan.

By CODY GOODWIN
cody-goodwin@uiowa.edu

The state of the Michigan football program looked bright after Brady Hoke's first season as the head coach. He was hired as the school's 19th head coach on Jan. 11, 2011, and the Wolverines went 11-2, 6-2 in Big Ten the next season, ultimately beating Frank Beamer's Virginia Tech Hokies, 23-20, to win the 2012 All-state Sugar Bowl.

As each year passed, though, Hoke was never able to replicate that kind of success in a single season. In 2012, Michigan went 8-5 (6-2), then went 7-6 last year before going 5-7 in 2014, failing to reach bowl eligibility.

In response, interim Athletics Director Jim Hackett said Tuesday that Hoke will not return as Michigan's football coach next season.

"This was not an easy decision given the level of respect that I have for Brady," Hackett said in a release. "He has done a great job of molding these young men, making them accountable to their teammates, focusing them on success in the classroom and in the community."

"I wanted to make sure that Brady received adequate time to exhibit the results that would come from his effort, and I believe that Brady and our coaching staff had enough time to produce those results, and unfortunately they are not there. In the end, I feel that moving in a different direction is the right decision. I wish Brady and his family all the best in the future."

Michigan head coach Brady Hoke talks to the media during the Big Ten football media days in Chicago on July 28. Hoke has been fired after four years at Michigan. (Associated Press/Paul Beaty)

The announcement came just two days after Bo Pelini was fired after seven seasons as the head coach at Nebraska.

Hoke said he was fortunate to have had the opportunity to coach at Michigan and that he will leave Ann Arbor with fond memories.

"I will always support the university and this football program," Hoke said. "This is a special place and one that Laura, Kelly and I have enjoyed representing during our time in Ann Arbor. I want to thank all of the sons who played for our teams and appreciate the commitment that our coaches and support staff made to the program every day."

Conference awards announced

The Big Ten announced the five remaining post-season individual award winners on Tuesday.

Wisconsin running back Melvin Gordon was named the Graham-George Offensive Player of the Year. He is the fifth Badger running back to be named Big Ten Offensive Player of the Year, joining Montee Ball (2011), John Clay (2009), Heisman Trophy winner Ron Dayne (1999), and Brent Moss (1993).

Ohio State defensive end Joey Bosa and quarterback J.T. Barrett were awarded the Nagurski-Woodson Defensive Player and Thompson-Randle El Freshman of the Year, respectively.

Bosa is the ninth Buckeye to receive the conference's top defensive award and the second in the past three seasons (John Simon claimed the honor in 2012). Barrett is the eighth Buckeye to be named Freshman of the Year and the first since fellow signal caller Braxton Miller claimed the award in 2011.

Minnesota's Jerry Kill was named the Hayes-Schembechler Coach of the Year by his peers and Dave McClain Coach of the Year by the media. Kill guided Minnesota to back-to-back seasons of eight or more wins for the first time since 2002 and 2003.

Track aide back at home

After a few years away from Iowa, Jason Wakenight is back in Iowa City.

By COURTNEY BAUMANN
courtney-baumann@uiowa.edu

It is said that patience is a virtue, but Iowa director of track and field Joey Woody prefers those who are impatient.

Woody added two new — and young — coaches to his staff for the 2014-15 season, Andrew Dubs and Jason Wakenight.

"The great thing about the youthfulness of the coaching staff is that they're hungry. They're go-getters, they're really anxious to be successful now," Woody said. "Being impatient is going to keep you going, keep you motivated, keep you focused on working, working, working until we see that success start to happen."

For Wakenight, taking the position was a homecoming of sorts. The new recruiting coordinator was a three-year letter winner for the Hawkeyes from 2004-06. Twice he was an NCAA qualifier in the 1,600-meter relay, and he was named Iowa men's track and field student-athlete of the year his senior season.

Most recently, Wakenight has served as recruiting coordinator at Loyola. He will continue recruiting in a similar role in Iowa City.

"He's seen how to build a program, not only here at Iowa but also at Loyola for the past three years," Woody said. "They went from the bottom to the top of their conferences and really had a lot of individual success, even at the national level."

As a volunteer coach, Wakenight has seen the success the Iowa program is capable of — he helped the Hawkeyes to a Big Ten men's outdoor championship in 2011. Now as an assistant coach, he is anxious to continue to strive for more.

"The biggest thing I'm looking forward to is trying to take the success that we had in 2011 and try to replicate it," he said. "As exciting as it was to win a Big Ten title, I feel like there's something very unsavory about winning and then not being able to time after time prove that it wasn't a fluke and actually repeatedly be a force in the conference."

The new coach is hungry to bring success and winning attitudes to a growing Iowa track and field program. Wakenight said that comes developing a culture of fearlessness in the Iowa program.

He said the Hawkeyes have to focus on themselves and not be afraid to go toe-to-toe with some of the best schools in the conference.

Ethan Holmes, a first-team All-American who was on the 2011 championship team, said Iowa is the place for Wakenight.

"He is a Hawkeye through and through and he's back where he belongs," he said. The former Hawkeye sees Wakenight's return as an opportunity to create a winning program and get the Hawkeyes back to the top of the conference, as it was in 2011.

Mike Gesell, Adam Woodbury, and Marcus Paige were once teammates; today, they will face off as opponents.

By JACOB SHEYKO
jacob-sheyko@uiowa.edu

Mike Gesell compared it with a competition with a brother.

In most aspects of life, brothers are close. They get along, hang out, and talk about life with each other.

But once they lace the sneakers up and go head-to-head on the basketball court, they'll do anything to ensure that the other doesn't sniff victory.

That's the relationship that Gesell, Adam Woodbury, and North Carolina guard Marcus Paige have with each other. For five years, the three Midwest-natives played together on the AAU Martin Brothers team.

But today, when Iowa faces No. 12 North Carolina in the Big Ten/ACC challenge, they'll be opponents, trying to get the upper hand on each other as brothers often do.

"You love each other, but then once you get in that competition, you hate each other, and you're going to do anything you can to beat them," Gesell said. "And then after the game, you're going to be best friends again."

When Gesell, Paige, and Woodbury started playing together, the chemistry was immediate.

Hawkeyes still settling in

In a young season, the Iowa women's basketball team is still working out the kinks.

Iowa guard Whitney Jennings dribbles down the court in Carver-Hawkeye on Nov. 21. Iowa defeated Pepperdine, 97-68. (The Daily Iowan/Valerie Burke)

By KYLE MANN
kyle-mann@uiowa.edu

When the Iowa women's basketball team went to Las Vegas for the South Point Thanksgiving Shootout last week, its 1-1 performance offered an opportunity for a few observations about the Hawkeyes. Here's what we learned:

How does this team respond to a loss?

The Hawkeyes entered the week-end ranked No. 17 in the country with a record of 5-0, so their 77-67 loss to Arkansas was the first taste of defeat this 2014 squad has had to deal with.

The team had to not only overcome a frustrating loss, it had to do so on short notice with a game against Gonzaga the next night. As Bethany Doolittle said on Tuesday, Iowa did so admirably.

"That was definitely the low point of our season thus far," she said. "We bounced back pretty well against Gonzaga and got a good win under our belt, but we have a lot to learn from that game. So we're still working on a lot of stuff in practice."

Behind a Doolittle double-double and 19 points from freshman Whitney Jennings, Iowa downed the Zags, 79-67. The win was an encouraging response to the team's first misstep, and it also showcased a bit of the depth that could potentially make head coach Lisa Bluder's team so dangerous down the line.

Bluder works toward correct combination

Returning four starters, there was only one question mark regarding who would round out that starting five, but it's proving to be more challenging than expected. Bluder said to have it narrowed down to two or three players approaching the beginning of the season, but she has found it troublesome trying to decide whom to play.

Kali Peschel was the incumbent starter, and she has started in three of the seven games thus far. However, Bluder warned in the preseason that the über-talented Jennings was going to give her headaches trying to keep her off the floor and noted that is a good problem to have.

Jennings has started four games, and she is playing 29 minutes per game — more than Melissa Dixon, Ally Disterhoft, and Doolittle — trailing only Sam Logic. Much has been asked of the 5-5 guard, and Bluder said the freshman has performed with remarkable production and poise, but hasn't

Death rocks wrestlers

The death of former Ohio State wrestler and football player strikes a chord with Iowa's head wrestling coach.

By JORDAN HANSEN
jordan-hansen@uiowa.edu

When former Ohio State wrestler and football player Kosta Karageorge was found dead Sunday, the news spurred a strong reaction from the wrestling community. Karageorge had been with the Buckeye wrestling team for three years and had only decided to walk on to the football team this year.

He was also someone who head coach Tom Brands had known. "I recruited that kid, so I was in their home. Good family, and our thoughts and prayers are certainly with the family," Brands said. "It's hard hitting. It's sad."

Karageorge's body was found near his apartment in Columbus, where he
