UI community reacts to display on Pentacrest

On Dec. 6, in the wake of a controversial art display on the Pentacrest, students and community members asked, “Where is Sally Mason?”

A day later, she responded.

In a statement issued Sunday, University of Iowa President Sally Mason said she will create an advisory committee to help with cultural competency. In addition, she will undergo a one-on-one meeting with students Wednesday to gather feedback.

“The effects of the display were felt throughout the Iowa City community,” Mason said in a statement. “That disturbed me greatly, and then for that statue to be there. I didn’t know what was going on,” Dawson said. “I was impressed with the university’s initiative to state all of the details, that it didn’t try to sugarcoat anything.”

“It’s reverted,” Dawson said.

It will be the third-ever meeting between the two teams: Iowa and Tennessee. In 1992 and 2002, the Volunteers owned the Hawkeyes, winning 22-9 and 21-14, respectively. In 2014, however, the TaxSlayer Bowl will be the third meeting ever, with the Hawkeyes leading the series 2-0. They met for the first time ever in January bowl games.

While Carton probably will be given the night

The Iowa women's basketball team found a way to win against Colorado, 78-63 on Sunday.

By RYAN RODRIGUEZ ryan-rodriguez@uiowa.edu

In October, during Big Ten media day in Chicago, Lisa Bluder talked about how her team was probably never going to win any tight defensive battles.

At the time, it didn't seem like an unreasonable thing to say. After all, the Hawkeyes play a fast-paced, up-tempo style of offense that, by its very nature, leads to high-scoring games by both teams. In a 78-63 win over Colorado on Sunday, there was little doubt about Iowa's ability to take over games.

"We really got it handed to us [Dec. 4] against Louisville, so I was glad to see us come out and bounce back the way we did," Bluder said. "I thought we were in control for most of the game."

The contest was as physical a game as the Black and Gold have played in so far this season. Out-muscled and out-worked down low, the Hawkeyes had no answer for Colorado's post dominance.

Colorado finished with a plus-17 rebound margin — and 11 of 27 offensive rebounds — to put the Hawkeyes in a hole even before tipoff. The Buffaloes controlled majority of the rebounds, 17-7, in the first half.

"Cooper lets a guy in with an easy tech fall. He's a bit of a finesse wrestler," head coach Tom Brands said. "He had to work to get that fall; I mean the guy was real loosey-goosy, flexible, and he had to really catch him to put the tech fall on the score." Brands, however, is probably providing competition with senior Brody Grothus as he dismantled Michigan State's Kaelen Richards in a 16-1 technical-fall victory at 149 pounds.

When the dust settled in a 37-0 Iowa win, Brands was happy to hand Grothus the nod over sophomore Edwin Cooper.

"I felt like I adjusted well, and I was well prepared for tonight's match — I felt pretty good out there," Cooper said. "Coach made the call and told me to go in and wrestle, and I had to put some points up and do what I could do to get the W."

"I just need to work on moving and keeping attacking and scoring points, and I'll be good," Cooper noted, if it sounds there's a lot of work for him to do on as he makes the move to a new weight.

The move was a bit timid at times and he allowed a takedown about halfway through the second period and generally looked like how an observer would expect a talented junior-college transfer in his first major match in Carver-Hawkeye to look.

"Cooper lets a guy in with an easy tech fall — those are things that happen," Brands said. "That's a sign that maybe we've a little tougher than year ago or two years ago, but we can still improve and play more like we want to play more because I wanted to work on putting my own pace out there and being more comfortable."

"I told Coach that I need to play more because I wanted to work on putting my own pace out there and being more comfortable," Jok said.

McCaffery honored his request, and although Iowa was against astronomical-inferior Maryland-Baltimore County, Jok tied his career-high in minutes.
