KING DAY PROMOTES SERVICE

Martin Luther King Jr. Day gave University of Iowa students the opportunity to come together to honor King and spread his message in their daily lives.

Most regard King as a courageous leader from the Civil Rights era. His methods of nonviolent protest and iconic speeches such as "I Have a Dream" still resonate with those fighting for equality today.

Nearly 50 years after his tragic death, people all across the nation and the world continue to honor his life, remember his dream, and work to bring forth change.

Faculty and students at the UI came together on Monday to do just that. The UI hosted a series of events not only in remembrance of King but also to spread messages about equality, service, and unity.

Kyah Bridges, the Herky C.A.R.E.S. Project executive officer for campus engagement, said she believes events encouraging students to take action honor King the most.

"Events such as [King] Day that provide students the opportunity to give back and serve the community really emphasize the service aspect in King's legacy," Bridges said. "By taking action, we are working toward a better future while be-

senior editor

During her senior year at Howard University, Jamilah Lemieux started the blog the Beautiful Struggler. The goal was not national attention, avid online followers, or a stuffed bank account.

She wanted to write. So she wrote. And kept writing. She covered race, gender, sexuality, relationships, and her life for over six years.

"It was doing work that I loved, doing work that was meaningful and work that could impact people," she said. "It's not so much that I thought I'd change the world by blogging."

It changed her life, though. Lemieux, now the senior editor of Ebony, is in Iowa City today as a guest speaker for Martin Luther King Jr. Celebration Week 2016. Her university-sponsored talk will take place in the IMU Main Lounge at 7:30 p.m. today.

Hoverboard overboard in UI dorms

One of the 2015's most popular holiday gifts is now banned from the University of Iowa residence halls.

The ban is in response to reports of hoverboard incidents around the country in which the self-balancing scooters have spontaneously caught fire. The cause of this spontaneous combustion is related to the devices' lithium-ion batteries, which are known to be highly susceptible to defects.

In response to these reports, the UI Housing & Dining staff chose to ban the devices from residence halls beginning in the spring semester.

"We have not had issues with hoverboards and fire; the policy is preventative," said Kate Fitzgerald, the UI direc-

Rubio fires up some

By BRENT GRIFFITHS

Florida Sen. Marco Rubio has long stressed his policies are more than just talking points. He has lived them.

"I didn't just read about it or respond to it in some magazine article," Rubio said of his experience with college loans and growing up "pay-check to paycheck."

In Coralville, Rubio found a receptive crowd for that argument, but one that was not quite ready to commit to caucusing for him on Feb. 1.

Just two weeks away from the state's first-in-the-nation caucuses, more than 350 people lined the walls of one of the Marriott's many conference rooms. Afterward, attendees said Rubio, a first-term U.S. senator, stands out of the crowd because of his speaking ability and life experience.

"He's younger, his parents were immigrants, and he can relate to people of my generation," said University of Iowa freshman Alaina Handrick, who is trying to choose between Rubio and Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul.

Many of those who said they might support Rubio listed Texas Sen. Ted Cruz, currently leading in statewide polls, as another member of their top two.

"Marco has more of an ability to work across the aisle without compromising on his beliefs," said Iowa City retiree Shirley Knapp.

Despite being the national Republican front-runner and leader in other early states, such as New Hampshire and South Carolina, Donald Trump was not on any of their minds. In fact, many attendees had harsh words for the former reality TV star and business mogul.

"Trump's rhetoric is just too brutal and divisive," said Dayna Miller, a clinical assistant professor of pediatrics at the UI Hospitals and Clinics.

"An automatic win," Handrick said if Trump becomes the nominee.

UI student killed in bus accident

Nicole Underwood, a University of Iowa senior majoring in social work, was killed in a bus crash in the Chicago area on Dec. 28. Underwood's death spurred the creation of a GoFundMe page, which described her as a straight-A student, dedicated to raising a $10,000 scholarship for a "hard-working student" in Human Services. According to the page, Underwood was traveling to Chicago from Des Moines when the bus lost control 15 minutes away from its destination. "Although Nicole may no longer be with us physically, we hope that she will still be able to help people the way she wanted with this scholarship," the page's creators wrote. UI Dean of Students Lyn Redington sent a mass email on Dec. 30 expressing the UI's condolences to Underwood's family, friends, and loved ones. Information was also given about counseling resources in the Iowa City area. At the time of publication, more than $6,000 had been given to the GoFundMe page.

Man faces drug charge

Iowa City police have accused an Iowa City man of possessing a large amount of marijuana. Sullivan Smith-Berry, 23, 2230 Hollywood Blvd., was charged Sunday with possession and intent to deliver marijuana, no more than 50 kilograms. At 5:45 p.m. on Jan. 17, officers executed a narcotics search at Smith-Berry's address. On his person, officers reportedly located approximately $150 and several wrapped bags of a green leafy substance that appeared to be marijuana. Under Miranda, Smith-Berry reportedly admitted the marijuana was for sale and that he had been selling marijuana for several weeks. During the search, officers also allegedly found small bags with a substance that appeared to be cocaine packaged for sale. There was also approximately $50 with the cocaine. Authorities said the product was field tested and tested positive for cocaine. Smith-Berry allegedly admitted the bag the cocaine was found was his and said the money was from drug sales. He also said the cocaine was his, but it was for personal use. Possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver is a Class-D felony.

Man faces domestic-assault charge

Authorities have accused an Iowa City man of domestic-abuse assault. Shawn Martin, 31, 812 Benton Drive No. 12, was charged with restricting air/blood flow to a person's throat. On Jan. 16 at 7:54, Martin arrived at his residence, where he lives with the woman. Martin allegedly shoved her into the kitchen and the woman, who has been in a relationship with Martin for five years, backed away into the bathroom. Martin reportedly took the woman to the floor and placed his hands around her throat, making it difficult for her to breathe. He left the scene before police arrived. The woman had red marks on her neck. Martin was convicted of domestic-abuse assault, impending airway, on Feb. 22, 2013, and domestic battery in Illinois on June 8, 2009. Domestic-abuse assault is a Class-D felony.

Area man charged with forgery

Coralville police have accused a man of committing forgery. Patrick Mulengwa, 31, 920 W. Cherry St. No. 6, was charged with forging checks to receive money. On Jan. 1, Mulengwa reportedly obtained a to-be-determined number of blank checks belonging to a person while in that person's home as a health-care provider. Mulengwa allegedly wrote at least four checks payable to himself, forging the person's signature, totaling $6,448.25. Mulengwa was confronted about the activity and reportedly made statements against self-interest while under Miranda. Forgery is a Class-D felony.

Man charged with third OWI

Authorities have accused an Iowa City man with OWI. Robert Burns, 34, Lone Tree, was charged with operating a truck under the influence, third offense. On Jan. 16, the reporting officer observed a Chevrolet truck with no license plates traveling east on Sandusky Drive. At a stop sign, the vehicle turned north onto Taylor Drive, where the vehicle was stopped to verify registration. Burns did not have a valid license, and he is barred from driving as a habitual offender from April 2, 2014, to March 31, 2017. The officer reported Burns having slurred speech, bloodshot, watery eyes, and an odor of ingested alcohol from inside the vehicle. Burns refused all tests. Burns refused a breath test at 11:46 p.m. Third-offense OWI is a Class-D felony.

DANCE MARATHON 22

Dance Marathon swirls into Coral Ridge

By BILL COONEY
william-cooney@uiowa.edu

One of the biggest philanthropic groups in Iowa City took over the Coral Ridge Mall on Sunday.

The University of Iowa Dance Marathon held its Winter Family Event in the mall, giving families involved with Dance Marathon a “free” day at the mall, said Morgan Kennedy, the Dance Marathon family relations director.

“We have usually one family event per month leading up to the Big Event,” Kennedy said. “This one is a new event; we’re partners with the Children’s Museum, so families can get free admission there.”

In addition to the Children’s Museum, families were able to get free food from several restaurants in the food court and see a movie at the movie theater. There were more than 300 family members and 150 Dance Marathon volunteers at the event, Kennedy said.

“It’s pretty much a free for all day at the mall for all the families involved with Dance Marathon,” she said.

One of those families were the Havemans. Michelle Haveman, whose daughter Moriah was diagnosed with leukemia in July 2014, said Dance Marathon had been there for her family since the very beginning.

“They’re amazing,” Haveman said. “They had volunteers right off the bat there, they’ve been a huge encouragement for her. It means so much to have people around she can interact with.”

The event was not just for those children diagnosed with diseases but for their entire families.

“We just stopped by because it was close to home,” Haveman said. “I think we’ll stay and check out some of the activities, though.”

She said events such as Sunday’s were great opportunities for Moriah to socialize.

“She’s such a people person; it’s awesome to have all these people around who are interested in her,” Haveman said.

UI Dance Marathon was founded in 1994 in conjunction with the Children’s Miracle Network, and it has raised more than $16.5 million for children. It has also contributed $5 million toward the construction of the new UI Children’s Hospital, according to the group’s website.

The group’s Big Event, the dance itself, will take place during 24 hours on Feb. 5 and 6. Last year, the event raised more than $2 million for pediatric patients at the UI. Moriah said she looked forward to one of the activities offered at the Children’s Museum in particular.

Simeon Smith and his family joke around in the IMU on Monday, Feb. 2, 2015. Simeon is celebrating five years of cancer free and is graduated at Dance Marathon 21. (The Daily Iowan/Margaret Kispert)

“Going to make a cape,” she said with a smile before rejoining her friends.

Branstad budget cuts regents’ request

By TOM ACKERMAN
thomas-ackerman@uiowa.edu

A recent request by the state Board of Regents for $20 million has been reduced to $8 million by Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad to share among the UI, Northern Iowa University, and Iowa State University in an especially slim fiscal year.

Rep. Curt Hanson, D-Fairfield, who sits on the education appropriations subcommittee, said he has voiced concern about the universities sharing such funds.

“I want to see universities funded at a level that will mean Iowa students get a quality education,” he said.

Hanson said such low funds could shortchange the universities’ ability to provide a quality education.

“A quality education for Iowa students is something Iowa has prided itself on in the past, but we’ve seen a lot of slippage in the past seven or eight years,” he said.

Branstad spokesman Ben Hammes said the regents aren’t alone in making do with less.

“The budget is very tight this year,” he said. “There were some influences that really affected the amount of revenue we took in this year.”

Hammes blamed the strict budget on the bird-robust as we expected,” he said.

Budget items such as education funding are flu outbreak, lower commodity prices, and an increased world economy.

“We still had some growth, but it’s not as based on estimated revenue for the state, which is analyzed quarterly. Last reported in October 2015, the Revenue Estimating Committee said that the state would have an increase in revenue — 3.4 percent — for 2016.

While seemingly a positive result, the reported revenue in December showed a drop to 3.3 percent, totaling a loss of $9 million for state programs. However, Hammes said negotiations on the Branstad’s proposed budget are expected “for many weeks and months to come.”

“We’re at the beginning of this legislative process,” he said. “Most everybody is getting the same or less because of the tight budget that we’re dealing with.”

Sen. Julian Garrett,

R-Indianola, who sits on the Appropriations Committee, said he worries the 2016 will, as recent years have, draw on the dwindling surplus money in the state, around $100 million.

“Every year, people come to us and tell us they just have to have more [money],” he said. “I know the regents are in that situation.”

Garrett said that as a result of prior financial commitments and a decrease in annual revenue, cuts have to be made.

“We have several increases that we don’t really have a choice on,” he said.

Dark matter & some hostages

Beau Elliot
beauelliott@gmail.com

So, welcome back; we missed you. No, really. It turns out we really needed another 20,000 pairs of feet to efficiently stamp Iowa City's unshoveled sidewalks into ice sheets.

Speaking of which, we're sorry about the temperatures that greeted you upon your return. We petitioned the Canadians to ease up on the whole weather thing, but our post card went unheeded.

Probably has something to do with dark matter. So much does, not that we really understand dark matter. Flint, Michigan, drinking water filled with lead? Dark matter. Ben Carson doesn't understand a whit about the Big Bang? Dark matter. Your iPad is in a funky-funk stage? Dark matter.

Or as Brown University physicist Richard Gaitskell says:

"You've probably got a hundred million dark-matter particles going through your hand every second."

Sounds a little creepy, I know. But at it least explains why you can hear political candidates, but you can't feel them.

That sounds a little creepy, too, but I meant "feel" in the non-creepy, metaphorical way.

Which is kind of the way Donald Trump feels about the Des Moines Register. Apparently.

"The only poll I'm not leading in is the stupid Des Moines Register," Trump said in mid-December. "It's a stupid newspaper that's going out of business."

Well, you have to admit, Trump is an utter expert on stupidity. He looks in the mirror so often.

This is the same Trumpster who earlier this month kicked out a Muslim woman from one of his rallies because, well, she was a Muslim, dressed like one, and had the temerity to attend one of his rallies.

Apparently, it's just not enough to ban Muslims from entering the country; they should be banned from public life until Trump can build enough camps to pen them in.

Pretty much, Trump is Col. Mustard in the library with the kettle-drum. And a bazooka.

Which is not to say that the rest of the Republican characters are not in the game of Clue. Or Clueless, depending on your point of view and what you had for breakfast.

Take Sen. Marco Rubio, for instance.

When asked on "Meet the Press" if he would exchange Iranian prisoners for American hostages in Iran, Rubio was emphatic:

"When I become president of the United States, our adversaries around the world will know that America is no longer under the command of someone weak like Barack Obama. And it will be like Ronald Reagan where as soon as he took office, the hostages were released from Iran."

Um, not exactly. Then-President Carter negotiated the release of the U.S. Embassy hostages, culminating in an agreement with Iran on his last full day in the West Wing, unfreezing Iranian assets in exchange for the hostages.

But Reagan got the hostages released is a favorite GOP fairy tale. Apparently, that crowd still believes in the tooth fairy.

Rubio should be especially careful when talking about "tough" Reagan not negotiating with Iran, because in the mid-80s, Reagan and his people famously (and secretly) negotiated with the Iranians, trading arms sales for American hostages, then sending the money to the Contras in Nicaragua, which the Reagan administration backed in that civil war. That latter was against U.S. law, by the way.

Speaking of tooth fairies. Not to mention dark matter.

'Shots fired' at Dem debate

On Sunday, South Carolina became the most recent battlefield along the lumbering campaign trails of the Democratic bid for presidency, pitting the three Democratic nomination hopefuls (former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, Sen. Bernie Sanders, and former Gov. Martin O'Malley) against each other amid the fluorescent red, white, and blue lights and banners of the Charleston location. Given that our beloved and crucially important Iowa caucuses are peeking around the corner, the candidates came to South Carolina prepared to rip each other's policy to shreds.

The debate brought the ever-controversial issue of gun control into focus, with Clinton ripping into Sanders' voting history on the issue, leaving him on the defensive.

Clinton set her sights on the Vermont senator and fired accusations of a much-too-relaxed gun policy, bringing to light on the debate floor of his cooperation with the NRA, helping pass a 2005 piece of legislation that granted gun manufacturers immunity from prosecution.

It is the same piece of legislation that Clinton cited the NRA as heralding as "the most important piece of gun-control legislation in the past 20 years."

Given the setting of the debate, the gun-control issue is weighted. Charleston was the unfortunate scene of the infamous church shooting allegedly perpetrated by Dylann Roof last year. It left nine people dead and provided arguably one of the most convincing recent cases for the need for stricter gun regulation in the United States.

Though, as Sanders stated in his retort to Clinton, he is indubitably the senator of a rural state with relaxed gun-control laws. At what point do congressional members voting histories reflect that of the constituents they are supposed to represent or their personal views, and how do these transfer to the Oval Office?

One could argue that a senator's adherence to the duty of a representative, voting in harmony with the ideals of Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

— FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U.S. CONSTITUTION

those they represent to be an ideological triumph, a picture of a well-oiled representative-democratic machine. But when this vote is juxtaposed with the plague that is gun violence in the United States, morality becomes questioned, and the reactionary abhorrence toward such voting history becomes legitimate.

That said, according to CNN, Sanders announced Jan. 16 his support of a proposed bill to amend the legislation that got his vote more than a decade ago. He reaffirmed his current standing on the issue, contending that small mom and pop shops should not be held liable for the actions of individuals who buy firearms from their businesses, a just provision.

Clinton stated in the debate, "Let's not forget what this is about; 90 people a day die from gun violence in our country. That's 33,000 people a year."

However, that number doesn't tell the whole story. The majority of those deaths are due to suicides using guns: 63 percent, according to the Centers for Disease Control & Prevention. It's not the first time Clinton has used this statistic without proper context, and leaving out this information glosses over the issue of mental health as it relates to gun violence and otherwise.

Later in the debate, responding to a question about health care, Sanders said mental-health care would be included in his plan for universal health care in America. While we don't have the space to discuss the merits of a universal health-care system here, it's good to see that the estimated 10 million Americans who experience serious mental illness (according to the National Alliance on Mental Illness) wouldn't be left behind under Sander's proposal.

The issue of gun control still divides the left and right, and meaningful change is unlikely in our intractable Congress. However, both sides seem to agree that the way our country approaches mental health is woefully inadequate. Hopefully, we can find some middle ground.

One nation, under litigation

Christopher Cervantes
cervantes@uiowa.edu

When I was a senior in high school, my advanced-placement government teacher, Roni Cline, assigned us a final project in which we had to redesign the American dollar bill. Of the minimal changes I made, one of the most prominent ones was removing "In God We Trust" and replacing it with a new slogan. I did it for a hypothetical situation, but I never once believed that it would become an actuality. Hind-sight is weird that way.

Last week, a group of atheists joined to file a federal lawsuit in order to drop "In God We Trust" from the U.S. currency. The legal action is backed by 41 plaintiffs and Sacramento attorney Michael Newdow, known for his failed attempt to remove "one nation under God" from the Pledge of Allegiance in 2004. The group of atheists argues that the phrase printed on currency imposes stress on atheists on a regular basis.

Normally, using religion as a basis to defend a piece of legislation warrants an automatic loss on the judicial battlefield. However, that is usually the case when arguments are more straightforward. The arguments presented in the lawsuit are, for a lack of the better word, interesting.

One plaintiff contended that "her beliefs require that she trust in her own abilities and a general responsibility to lead an ethical life. In handling the money, therefore, she is repeatedly unwillingly confronted with the words 'In G-d We Trust.' Thus, she is forced against her will to accept and redistribute to others a message that goes wholly against her beliefs. Yet it is neither realistic nor reasonable for her to abandon the nation's currency and use other forms of payment for all of her transactions."

"G-d" is used because the plaintiffs refuse to write the word "God."

Sorry, but it is difficult to take this claim seriously.

First of all, the phrase "In God We Trust" stems from a line found in "The Star-Spangled Banner," in which the fourth stanza reads, "And this be our motto: In God is our Trust." Given that the anthem was written during the War of 1812 and after the foundations were laid out for separation of church and state, it becomes apparent that the origin of the phrase is more out of patriotism than devotion to a theological power.

Furthermore, the interpretation of the motto can vary. Upon inspection of the physical text found on the dollar bill, it is apparent that the entirety of the saying is capitalized. Any English teacher will point out that this lacks specificity. Because of this, there is no set religion attached to the motto. In theory, the "GOD" mentioned could pertain to Allah, a Hindu god, an old pagan god, or even perhaps the spirit of American ideology in general.

Given how vague the reasons behind the lawsuit are, I do not think that there is any solid ground for the plaintiffs to stand on. If seeing a simple phrase (one that doesn't vindictively insult or harm) on a piece of green paper offends people, then perhaps they should find other payment options. I recommend checks. That way, they can write "in god we trust," and then cross it out. If it makes them feel better.

GUEST COLUMN

30 seconds of prevention

Last week, as I bike commuted to work, there was an incident during which I felt that my safety was disregarded. This is not an uncommon occurrence, however. In fact, in my experience it seems that even though I spend less time on my bike on the road in the winter, events that compromise my safety happen more frequently this time of year, when road conditions are the worst. It is this seasonal concern that motivated me to write this letter so that I could ask of my neighbors and local community, please take a second to consider the safety of a bicyclist if you happen to encounter any of us out on the road, especially in the winter months.

This morning's incident was notable for two reasons. First, it occurred at 10:15 a.m., when road traffic is much lower than my normal commute time.

Second, the vehicle that encroached upon my safety was a police SUV. Of course, this immediately encouraged me to report the license-plate number to the appropriate office along with my plea that the Police Department encourage its officers to "slow down" and give plenty of room for cyclists (just as we are required to do, by law, when approaching them or other emergency vehicles). I feel that police officers are held to a higher standard, thus it would be appropriate for me to report this incident that I typically would have ignored. But a direct report feels a little like a child tattling on another for a bump on the playground, and truly, it wouldn't achieve my goal, for my message is for the whole community.

What happened was that as I climbed a rather large hill, I was passed by the SUV from behind. Why I felt this was an unnecessarily dangerous pass is twofold: 1) The driver did not slow the vehicle, 2) The pass was made with at most 3 feet of space. Legally, the pass was perfectly legitimate. However, from my perspective, 3 feet of space on an icy and sandy road was not sufficient and moreover, much more space could have been given with a minimal disruption to the driver. What I mean is that the reason the driver didn't give me more space or reduce his speed was because of oncoming traffic. There were a couple of vehicles approaching from the opposite direction during his pass. What irritates me about this is that those vehicles had fully cleared me literally within five to 10 seconds. So had the driver simply slowed and waited for a more appropriate time to pass, he could have given me a full lane (or at least much more than 3 feet), and done so at a lower speed to boot.

So I ask you, my friends, my neighbors, my local community: Please consider the safety of a cyclist as you pass us this time of year and always. Road conditions are worse now, and while there are fewer of us out on the road, we are still there. It is appropriate to slow down and give us even more space than you think we may need, and we greatly appreciate it when you do. As you approach us on the road, think to yourself: Is now the optimal time for me to pass this cyclist? Can I momentarily reduce my speed? Can I give them more space if I wait for them to clear other vehicles or road obstructions?

I've found in most unsafe passing situations fewer than 30 seconds can make a world of difference in the safety of cyclists. So my final question to you, is my life worth 30 seconds of your time?

ing exposed to different experiences and perspectives.”

Herky C.A.R.E.S. member Rachel Schupick said she agrees that King’s legacy today is best represented through service.

“We should all stand together, no matter if you’re black or white,” she said. “Getting out, and taking action, and serving help different people build bridges to gain broader and better perspectives. King wanted to strengthen the bonds among all people, and what better way to do that than by lending a helping hand to one another?”

Tarun Kadaru, the Herky C.A.R.E.S. executive officer for social justice, said he believes even though society haven’t yet reached King’s vision, it is getting closer.

“There’s always work to be done to ensure every single person, especially here on campus, has a sense of belonging and feels welcome,” Kadaru said. “As we progress, more awareness should be raised about different identities, experiences and perspectives. Some issues today are beyond black and white, so it’s up to us to expand King’s message.”

The UI will continue to sponsor events in honor of King throughout the week to emphasize the importance of daily action.

Ben Ross, who participated in the King Day event in Currier, stressed the importance of remembering King’s ideals on a daily basis.

“Being able to participate in events on [King] Day is a great experience,” he said. “However, all the things I’ve learned and experienced shouldn’t stop after today. We should all try to work toward being better people to others every day.”

Opting against an open Q&A format, Rubio stuck largely to same stump speech he has used throughout the campaign. As a member of the Senate’s Intelligence and Foreign Relations Committees, Rubio said President Obama’s foreign policy and spending cuts have left American less safe.

“What has happened is that reductions in defense cuts leave us as vulnerable,” Rubio said, noting that some Republicans who pledged to cut all spending needlessly included the Pentagon.

According to Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, an international think tank, the United States spends more on defense in 2014 than at least China, Russia, Saudi Arabia, France, the United Kingdom, India, and Germany combined — some experts also include Japan.

Miles away from a nearby VA Hospital, Rubio harked back to issues in the system that delayed care for many veterans and led to Secretary Eric Shinseki’s resignation.

In Iowa, Republicans hammered Rep. Bruce Braley, who was running for the U.S. Senate, over missing Veterans Administration hearings.

Pledging to have a busy first day in the White House, Rubio promised to gut regulations and executive orders passed by the Obama administration — specifically pointing out the EPA and Common Core education standards.

Rubio said he would repeal the Affordable Care Act, as known as Obamacare.

According to Politico, Republicans in Congress have voted for such an action more than 50 times, including partial repeal measures, in the past five years.

Monday’s stop was the fourth stop on Rubio’s jaunt through the state, which also included Decorah, Waverly, Ottumwa, and Bettendorf. On Jan. 16, he visited Johnston, Council Bluffs, and Sioux Center

In some Iowa GOP circles, Rubio has earned the nickname “Mayor of Ankeny,” a Des Moines suburb, for his focus on the state capital and its suburbs — a knock at his perceived lack of attention to eastern Iowa and other parts of the state.

Polk County GOP head

Will Rogers, who was at Rubio’s event in Johnston over the weekend, said some Iowans are starting to gravitate toward Rubio. But he says the field is just too divided for someone such as the senator to emerge.

Plus Rogers said Rubio, like many candidates, is still in Trump’s shadow.

“There were 500 people at the Rubio event,” Rogers said. “But there will be 5,000 people at the next Donald Trump event.”

lack of journalistic experience didn’t hinder the persistent worker. She excelled in her positions by accepting what she did not know, learning quickly, and asking questions, she said.

She served as lead editor for several aspects of the website before becoming senior editor. On any given workday, she might decide what goes on the cover image, theme, headline designing an inside column, assigning stories, editing, or traveling.

“I really love the cover. It’s more important than people know, and there are formulae to it,” Lemieux said. “Things that you have to be mindful about saying or not saying. Every magazine relies on advertisers, and we have to be careful around that, but we want to be as radical and revolutionary as possible while still maintaining a certain standard of quality and able to have the magazine printed every month.”

When she’s not brainstorming another genius Ebony cover, the 31-year-old spends time browsing Twitter, bursting out thoughts that might have lived on the Beautiful Struggler. For her 73,000 followers, the self-proclaimed feminist may provide comic relief with her almost daily shutdown of social-media haters.

“Part of the reason I do it is because there are other people that are really hurt by trolls, really sensitive, and aren’t able to come up with clapbacks or a snappy response,” Lemieux said. “I want trolls to know that there’s somebody that they can’t break down.”

The line between addressing said trolls and keeping it professional, she said, is blurry.

“I represent a brand that is bigger than me, older than me, more important to our people than me and is held in a certain regard,” she said. “I’ve been accused of a number of violations of that by people who probably would not subscribe to support the magazine anyway.”

Yet no amount of negative backlash seems to slow Lemieux down. In the next five years, she hopes to have two published books under her belt. Fast forward 10 years, Lemieux said she wouldn’t mind being editor-in-chief.

Lemieux maintains that her life, while beyond ordinary to many, can be just that to her.

“When I’m off stage, off work, I think I live a life that is pretty on par with most women in their late-20s, early mid-30s,” she said. “I’m single. I am a parent of my beautiful, almost 3-year-old daughter. My boss and I are very close. There’s not a whole lot of down time, but I do have great friends and people who fill my spirit. I like to go to bars and drink. I like to go on dates. I like to shop. I’m very much a regular girl.”

tor of residence education, wrote in an email.

Housing & Dining sent an email to students in the residence halls before winter break, asking students to take their hoverboards home and not bring them to dorms if they received them as gifts.

“We felt, based on fire safety, that we should prohibit the use and storage of the hoverboards in the residence halls,” said Von Stange, the UI assistant vice president for Student Life. “We want to make sure students are protected.”

The punishment for having a hoverboard in the residence halls is similar to those doled out for possession of other prohibited items, such as toaster ovens and candles. The ban will be enforced through hall coordinators and resident assistants.

Several major airlines have banned hoverboards, and at least 20 colleges around the country have restricted their use, including some in the Big Ten.

The University of Northern Iowa has also banned hoverboards from its residence halls.

Nicholas Rafanello, a UNI assistant director of residence life, said officials banned the boards mostly for fire safety reasons but also because they present a general safety hazard.

The devices are relatively new, so there could be a solution to the fire hazard risk in the future.

“If the problematic hoverboards go away, and if we find there’s a record of fire safety, then we may revisit the ban in the future,” Stange said.

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make career decisions, and pick up the skills that will help you qualify for a new position. Good fortune awaits if you put in the effort. Don't be discouraged by someone who doesn't see things your way.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take the helm of any project you decide to embark upon. You will open up new possibilities through conversations with experts. Express your ideas, and interest will mount and advancement and recognition will follow.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You'll attract poor influences. Make up your own mind rather than giving in to peer pressure. A tendency to be indulgent will leave you in a precarious position. Listen to the voice of reason, not someone using emotional manipulation.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Put a little muscle behind an activity you participate in, and you will turn heads with your masterful way of presenting what you have to offer. A partnership looks promising, and talks will lead to a contract or commitment.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You'll excel when faced with something new and exciting. Romance is on the rise, and making personal changes will bring you plenty of positive attention. Don't let your popularity lead to conceit.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You will be in dire need of a change. Engage in something that will allow you to share your ideas with people who are uplifting and offer positive support. Don't give in to someone using emotional tactics to control your every move.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Focus inward, and do your best. Make the subtle physical changes that will boost your confidence. Refuse to let someone you live with push you around. Make a difference by setting new ground rules.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Gather enough information to bring about a change or book a long-overdue trip. Take a stance, and opt to put your energy into working on something that you really want to see happen. You can offer someone help, but don't go overboard.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't be too quick to start something new. More information will be necessary if you want to avoid a huge oversight, cost, or opposition. Put your time and effort into your home, family, and important relationships.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It's up to you to take action. Focus on your professional or financial goals, making sure that you are not being unrealistic. There will be a price to pay if you don't pay close attention to detail.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make home improvements, spend time with family and friends, and take better care of your health and well-being. Don't be fooled by a display of emotional tactics from someone who only wants your money and your sympathy.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): What you do to help a cause will also help you. Being involved in something that will bring about positive change will encourage you to make new contacts that will contribute to your life. Let go of the people who drag you down.

GymHawks fall short against Denver

The Pioneers outlasted the Hawkeyes in Carver-Hawkeye on Monday.

By MASON CLARKE
mason-clarke@uiowa.edu

After a successful road trip to Michigan State on Jan. 15, the Iowa women's gymnastics team took its home floor Monday afternoon in what turned out to be a tight loss to Denver. "I think, unfortunately, what I'm seeing is they're already ... looking forward in their head, trying to think, 'I've got to be ready for Saturday,'" Iowa head coach Larissa Libby said. "In doing that, we kind of passed up being ready for this one." The Pioneers defeated the GymHawks, 195.900-194.725. With such a tight point differential between the teams, there were a few missed opportunities that potentially could have put Iowa in position to win.

The most glaring of these was on the beam. Iowa lost to Denver 49.025 to 48.300, the largest defeat for Iowa in any event. This was due in large part to a fall by Iowa's fifth-scoring gymnast, who alone scored half a point worse than Denver's fifth gymnast. Iowa fell to Denver by narrow margins in both the vault (49.000 to 48.650) and the bars (48.950 to 48.800). In the final event, the Hawkeyes defeated the Pioneers in the floor competition by a narrow margin (48.975 to 48.925). The strong finish proved to be too little, too late for Iowa. Despite a tough night of competition and a grueling weekend, the Hawkeyes never lost their passion. After the defeat, different players were ringing the same attitude. They said that their team did great and that they loved performing in front of the home crowd in Carver-Hawkeye. "When you're up close and personal, man, it's amazing," assistant coach Caleb Phillips said. "I just get to dress sharp and cheer for our athletes." It may have also helped that Phillips understood how tough it was for the athletes to compete in two meets in three days. "For these guys, it's tough," Phillips said. "Our kids who do multiple events, it's a little bit more taxing for them ... we have all-arounders competing in four events, that's eight full routines in just a few days." The Hawkeyes came off of a victory against Michigan State, which they won, 194.900-192.575.

After traveling back home and competing again, Iowa's team score fell nearly two-tenths of a point, but the mistakes were fixable and can be attributed at least in part to a grueling schedule. The coaches said the Hawkeyes will try to stick more landings and execute the little things Saturday, when they face Ohio State in a home meet. Follow @makeclarson for Iowa women's gymnastics news, updates, and analysis.

Men's tennis starts with ranked win

The nationally ranked Hawkeyes picked up a season-opening win against Utah State.

By BLAKE DOWSON
blake-dowson@uiowa.edu

The Iowa men's tennis team (1-0) flexed its muscles on Monday, beating No. 70 Utah State handily, 7-0. The No. 71 Hawkeyes proved to be bad hosts, sweeping the Aggies in the first-ever meeting between the two schools. "This was our first match of the year, and we've only really had five days of practice with the guys since they got back," head coach Ross Wilson said. "So I knew the level we could play at, but I was very happy with how we came out. We had good starts, we controlled the matches and played very well." Iowa picked up the doubles point with wins coming from the duo of senior Dom Patrick and sophomore Josh Silverstein (6-4), along with juniors Nils Hallestrand and Robin Haden (6-3). Hallestrand continued his fine work in doubles, carrying over his success from the Big Ten Indoor Tournament, held in Iowa City in November 2015. The Hawkeyes took a stranglehold of the match during singles play, winning all but one set in the six matches. Haden, a transfer, and freshman Jonas Larsen both picked up their first regular-season wins for the Hawkeyes in singles. Haden won the first singles point for Iowa, and Larsen clinched the match. "I didn't expect [to clinch the win]," Larsen said. "I didn't start off with doubles today so that I could focus on singles. I think that helped, and I came out fired up from the first point. It was great to be out there for the first time and really feel the chemistry of the team." Silverstein won his match at No. 3 singles in straight sets. The sophomore, who played his way into the championship of two tournaments over break, looked poised to have a breakout season for the Hawkeyes. Sophomore Lefteris Theodorou picked up a convincing win at No. 2 singles. The Greek player wore down his freshman opponent from Utah State, waiting for him to make mistakes. "The guy I played was a freshman, so I knew I had more experience than him," Theodorou said. "That definitely played a role. He showed signs of wearing down mentally. He made a lot of errors, so I just had to stay ready and make a lot of balls. I just had to wait for him to make an error and then take my chances." In his first match playing at the No. 1 spot for the Hawkeyes, Patrick picked up a gritty three-set victory (3-6, 6-4, 6-2). Jaime Barajas, Patrick's opponent, is ranked No. 9 in the Mountain Region. The win against a ranked Utah State team is a big one for Iowa, which has hopes of making the NCAA Tournament. The Hawkeyes have set a goal of seven ranked wins and are now one closer with a lot of tennis left to play. A dominating opening win will do nothing but good for the Hawkeyes, who are still young after graduating only one starter from last season. "Obviously, you always want to win, and that gives you confidence, but I think [today] showed that this team's goals are pretty high this season," Wilson said. "Every guy in that locker room believes we can make the NCAA Tournament. Today was a match that had been circled on the calendar for a long time."

No break for swimmers

By BLAKE DOWSON
blake-dowson@uiowa.edu

Both the men's and women's swimming and diving teams were hard at work over break, taking a training trip to Sarasota, Florida, to prepare for the championship portion of the season. The trip, used each year to get away from the distractions of break, spanned from Jan. 3-10. "Getting down here clears out any other distractions," head coach Marc Long said in a release. "You can focus on training for performance, and it's a great environment. When you go to places like this, it's the culture. There is an aquatics atmosphere, so that helps in bringing them together." Most days during the trip were spent with a swim in the morning, followed by a weight session. On harder training days, the Hawkeye swimmers spent two hours in the pool in the morning, followed by an afternoon lift, with another two-hour session in the pool that night. The training trip is also an opportunity for both the men's and women's teams to grow closer as units. "It's something we look forward to during the first half of the season and is a good restarting point in the middle of the season," senior Charles Holliday said in a release. "We're getting in hard training and are training together. It's the best time of the year to come together and gear up for the rest of the season." Sitting at 1-2 in the Big Ten, the men want to propel themselves from their training trip into a successful championship season. With the Big Ten Championships only five weeks away, the bulk of their training is behind them. The men will travel to Northwestern on Saturday, followed by a trip to the Shamrock Invitational in South Bend, Indiana, on Jan. 29-30, before they host their home finale against Western Illinois, a tune-up before the Big Tens. The women's team started the new year with a bang, coming home from their training trip and earning up a conference win against Illinois on Jan. 16, 174.5-125.5. Junior Emma Sougstad showed she had not missed a beat over break, picking up two victories in the 50-meter freestyle and 200-meter breaststroke. Sougstad was also part of the winning 200-medley relay team. Sophomore Meghan Lavelle was also a two-time winner, placing first in the 100- and 200-meter backstroke. The Hawkeyes will travel to Northwestern this weekend to try to moving their conference record to 3-2.

Hawkeye tracksters soar to 13 wins in Iowa Dual

By CONNOR SINDBERG and ADAM HENSLEY
 connor-sindberg@uiowa.edu adam-hensley@uiowa.edu

On Jan. 15 and 16, the Iowa track teams snared 13 victories in the Iowa Dual in the Recreation Building against Western Illinois and Iowa Central.

No team points were totaled.

"We used this meet as a steppingstone for building toward the season," Iowa Director of Track and Field Joey Woody said in a release. "It's good to come out here and continue to build on last week."

athlete

Iowa's Aaron Mallett, a cornerstone, won the men's 60-meter hurdles with a time of 7.82., good enough for a facility record and tying him for fourth in the nation.

In the field events, Avery Meyers claimed first place in the shot put, tossing for 57-6.5. He also placed fifth in the discus.

Four Hawkeye freshmen turned heads in their second time competing for the Hawkeyes. Christian Brissett (first, 21.87) and DeJuan Frye (22.05) stole the show in the 200 meters, claiming the top two spots. Mar'yea Harris won the 400 meters (49.12), and Andy Jatis won the pole vault (15.04).

Senior Mitch Wolff took home the victory in the 600 meters. His time of 1:21.78 beat Hawkeyes Ryan Dorman (1:21.95) and Drake Gauthier (1:22.41).

The Hawkeye women also flashed excellent showings in nearly every event. Senior Lake Kwaza started the Iowa Dual winning the 60 meters (7.48). Freshman Briana Guillory followed that up by winning the 200 meters (24.44).

The Hawkeyes continued their success with freshman Alexis Gray finishing second in the 400 meters (1:00.61) and junior Elexis Guster taking the top spot in the 600 meters. Guster's time of 1:32.04 puts her eighth on Iowa's all-time list.

To close the running events, the squad of Guster, Guillory, junior Alexis Hernandez, and Kwaza dominated the 4x400-meter relay (3:45.85).

Iowa continued its winning ways with a season-best performance from Khanishah Williams in the high jump. The graduate student finished with a leap of 5-8.

"It feels great; it's a relief, actually," Williams said in a release. "When I opened the season, I only jumped 5-3, but I still had a lot of problems with foot placement and how I got over the bar. It's been overwhelming, because not only do I have to relearn another side, I have to do everything differently technically. It's been challenging, but I've been working through it. This week just opened my eyes to what I can do, and I'm excited."

In the field events, Amy Smith and Leah Colbert both joined Iowa history. Freshman Smith, the lone competitor in the pole vault, had a personal best 10-in the first half, and the Hawkeyes only led by 5 at the half.

The Hawkeyes' focus now turns to the next meet. Iowa will travel to Ames for the Big Four Duals on Saturday.

In the second half, however, the Hawkeyes shot 7-of-11 from 3, including a stretch of four-straight possessions.

Part of the better shooting can be attributed to having fewer players who can drive the paint, which McCaffery said pushes the balance to better shooters.

There was a distinct advantage in the number of loose balls the Hawkeyes recovered, and while they didn't win the rebounding battle, they brought down enough boards to secure the victory.

All three are big reasons the Hawkeyes are winning, and they have contributed to the Hawkeyes' confidence.

Iowa's confidence is growing, and as it grows, so, too, will that of the Hawkeye followers.

"It's going to be a good year for Hawkeye fans," Michigan head coach John Beilein said after the game.

Bluder believes her players are thinking too hard about turning the ball over.

"Right now, I feel like we're almost scared of turning the ball over and scared of making the pass," she said. "If you're scared of passing the ball, you're probably thinking you're going to turn the ball over, and that's what's going to happen."

Bluder also noted this is fixable, and it is something the team will continue to work on in practice.

The head coach said starting the second half sloppily causes much of the Hawks' leads to fade.

"It's kind of like we start off with bad karma and bad feelings in the second half," Bluder said. "You're going to have turnovers. But, if you have a turnover, you have to dig your heels in on defense, and I don't think we're doing that."

Davis shines

Freshman Tania Davis had quite the game in East Lansing when the team fell to Michigan State, 80-73.

Davis got the chance to return to her home state for the first time and scored a career high 16 points. She was 3-of-3 from the field (all 3s) at the half and led Iowa in assists with 2, finishing with 5 for the game.

"I just want to keep my mentality and stay aggressive offensively and defensively," Davis said. "I think that's where I have most of my success."

Sophomore Whitney Jennings said that she looks forward to seeing more of the spark the freshman has in the upcoming conference contests.

"We're really good at playing together," Jennings said. "She's a really good passer, and I just know I'm going to get shots when she's in the game."

came to ranked opponents.

Redshirt freshman Sam Stoll has recorded a 14-2 record so far, with losses to seniors Austin Marsden (No. 5) and Nick Gwiazdowski (No. 1).

"I'm feeling good; I've had some decent success in the first part of the year," Stoll said.

However, he knows there is a lot of season left ahead.

Even though the team only look forward, there is a lot of success this season that it can look back upon.

A highlight of Iowa's season so far came at Northwestern Jan. 10, when the team posted a record-breaking 54-0 win.

Five pins, a technical fall, and two forfeits — one medical — were recorded.

While the Hawkeyes do not see Northwestern as a huge obstacle, putting up that many bonus points proved, in their minds, that they do not overlook opponents.

"We're still getting ready, and we're still putting points on the board," junior Gilman said. "We're still wrestling hard, and intense, and fast every time we're out, whether it's Northwestern or one of the best teams in the country."

That was the second time Iowa traveled to Evanston, Illinois, this season, the first being for the Midlands Tournament on Dec. 29-30, 2015.

Iowa's schedule has worked out in its favor so far this year. The farthest the team has had to travel so far was to Champaign, Illinois, when the team ground out a 26-12 win.

The Hawkeyes will only have to get on a plane once, twice, should they make it to nationals in New York City.

"It's a close to home schedule," Brands said. "We'll take it ... But wherever we're going to compete, we have to compete."

Men's hoops riding high in streak

By IAN MURPHY | ian-murphy@uiowa.edu

After another dismantling of a state university basketball team from Michigan Sunday, the Iowa men's basketball team is 5-0 in the Big Ten and sits No. 9 in the AP poll — the highest Iowa has been ranked since 2001.

But to hear the players and the head coach tell it, they aren't surprised they've had this level of success.

"I didn't not see it coming," head coach Fran McCaffery said. "I thought we had a really good team. I felt like we had potential."

The potential McCaffery saw has certainly manifested itself on the court.

The Hawkeyes are on a seven-game winning streak following their second-half collapse against Iowa State on Dec. 10, 2015, including two wins over traditional conference power Michigan State and a road comeback over a ranked Purdue team.

"I think you can look at the Iowa State game in two ways," McCaffery said. "Playing the second-ranked team in the country on the road in a hostile environment, and we scored 82 and lost by 1. Or you can say, OK, we had a lead, and we couldn't get the ball in-bounds twice and we blew the game."

McCaffery credited the former as a major reason for the success and preached the positives of the game to his team.

The team has bought into the philosophy, as evidenced by its record and scores recently. The average margin of victory on the seven-game winning streak is almost 11 points.

"I've tried to continue to play my role on the team. I could obviously score more," said senior Adam Woodbury, whose breakaway dunk in the 82-71 victory over Michigan, sent the Carver-Hawkeye crowd into a frenzy against.

"I'm all about winning; I really want to win," he said. "The things we've been doing for the last couple weeks really show what our team can be."

Those things include winning on the boards, shooting lights-out from behind the arc, including a 10-of-22 effort from behind the arc on Sunday, and coming away with a majority of the loose balls.

Over the course of the streak, the Hawkeyes have done all of these and then some.

They were especially evident in the second half on Sunday.

Iowa's first-half 3-point shooting matched Sunday's weather: frigid. The Hawkeyes shot just 3-11 from behind the arc

Bluder looks forward

The Hawkeye women's basketball team relish that it'll return home for another conference matchup on Wednesday.

The Hawkeyes will host Penn State, (6-11, 1-5 Big Ten), but despite that record, Iowa head coach Lisa Bluder doesn't want her team to overlook the Lions.

"I told the team today don't be deceived by their record," Bluder said. "This is a team that is very good, and they're shooting the ball better than they did last year."

In addition to shooting, Penn State can be a very good rebounding team, and athletes such as Chase Coley and Megan Gustafson will be key in crashing the boards. Penn State averages 37.9 rebounds per game.

In its most recent contests, Iowa has had issues keeping leads. The Hawkeyes opened up a 13-point lead at halftime over Michigan State on Jan. 16 but eventually lost by 7.

On Jan. 17, Penn State put up 39 points in the fourth quarter against Michigan, and while the Nittany Lions did not win, Iowa must be prepared to fight off a late run.

Turnovers and leads

The Hawkeyes sit at 3-3 in the Big Ten, the three losses due to excessive turnovers, especially late in games.

Iowa averages 16.5 turnovers per game — second-to-last in the Big Ten — and has the worst turnover margin in the conference.

Wrestlers prepare to grind it out

Iowa wrestling is in the thick of the season.

By COURTNEY BAUMANN

Iowa wrestlers will be busy over the next couple of weeks, with the spring semester starting and their season heading into full swing.

The No. 2 Hawkeyes have four dual meets scheduled over a span of 14 days — three at home against Purdue, Minnesota, and Indiana and one at Nebraska.

Including the three previous dual wins against Illinois, Northwestern, and Wisconsin, the Hawkeyes will rack up six duals during the month of January.

They said they are not worrying about what is to come; they are taking it one meet at a time.

"Big Ten duals are important for seedings. We emphasize that, and our guys know that they have post-season ramifications," head coach Tom Brands said. "But it's the next event on the calendar, and we get ready to go."

Iowa has yet to lose this season. The team has posted an 11-0 overall record, 5-0 in the Big Ten.

Seven Iowa wrestlers — Thomas Gilman, Cory Clark, Brandon Sorensen, Alex Meyer, Sammy Brooks, Nathan Burak, and Sam Stoll — are ranked in the top 10 of their weight classes.

That could have something to do with their have combined for a 99-6 record this season. All six losses
