GROUP BLASTS IMU PRAYER SPACES

A national organization advocating for the separation of church and state criticized the University of Iowa for providing prayer rooms to students, but that criticism is not gaining much traction in Iowa City.

By ANNA ONSTAD-HARGRAVE

A national group wants prayer spaces for Muslims removed from the University of Iowa, but that doesn't necessarily echo on campus. The Freedom From Religion Foundation, a national umbrella organization for those committed to the separation of church and state, challenged the UI to close down the two rooms in a March 25 letter on its website, which was later sent to UI President Bruce Harreld. The prayer spaces, one for men and the other for women, was opened in the IMU on Feb. 4. The organization also called for the removal of all Christian iconography and the Latin cross on the altar of Danforth Chapel, which has been at the UI for more than 60 years.

The letter cites violations to both the state and federal Constitutions, contending providing spaces for students to pray on campus is a form of religious entanglement and thus creates the potential for free-speech violations.

"There are ample tax-free lands surrounding almost every public university where ministries have set up shop using private funds," said Annie Laurie Gaylor, the Health without borders

Human rights, and by extension health care, should be given to everyone, contended a doctor who has done eight tours with Doctors Without Borders.

The lecture by John Lawrence, the vice president on the board of directors for Médecins Sans Frontières, enlightened the audience about the role of health care as a human right for all. The group, which originated in France, is known in English as Doctors Without Borders.

Throughout the lecture, Lawrence emphasized that the role of Doctors Without Borders is to help less fortunate people in marginalized communities who don't have access to the health care needed to maintain a healthy quality of life.

"Doctors Without Borders brings health care to people in precarious situations and works to help them gain control of their future," he said.

The organization was founded in 1971 after the Biafra crisis, which occurred during the Nigerian civil war during the late 1960s and early 1970s. The crisis left millions dead from starvation and various diseases.

During the crisis, the Red Cross provided aid to civilians and Doctors Without Borders took its inspiration

ETHICS & POLITICS CONGRESS

King unfazed by campaigns

By REBECCA MORIN
rebecca-morin@uiowa.edu

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Rep. Steve King, R-Iowa, doesn't see the 4th Congressional District seat as "his."

Instead, King said, the seat is that of the people.

The 66-year-old is up for re-election this year and has received a new Republican challenger after backlash for supporting Texas Sen. Ted Cruz for president, who was the winner of the Iowa caucuses. King serves as Cruz's national co-chairman.

"You're always only one mistake away from falling into that situation [of not being re-elected]," King told The Daily Iowan from his office in Rayburn House Office Building in Washington, D.C. "But on the other hand, I've been representing that district for some time; people know me."

King said he has been to all 382 towns in the 4th District and has his staff go to every town and meet with people as well.

"We touch the pulse of the district, and we build networks and relationships with the advocacy groups that are there," King said.

But King's involvement with presidential politics has spurred movement in his own party.

Sen. Rick Bertrand, R-Sioux City, is running against Cruz in the primary, which is on June 7.

Bertrand, 46, said he is a fresh face and has a reputation in Des Moines as someone who gets things done. He said he has been primed for the 4th District run since before the midterm elections, when King flirted with the idea of running for Sen.

Tom Harkin's seat. King did not end up running for Senate.

"It's just time for a new face. I've got a fresh vision," Bertrand said. "I think I'm going to give Iowans a choice, not between

Nitrate strategy working

By KATELYN WEISBROD
katelyn-weisbrod@uiowa.edu

Although record-high levels of nitrates in Iowa's rivers were found during this past year, researchers say the Iowa Nutrient Reduction Strategy is making progress, albeit slowly.

The strategy, implemented in 2013, is attempting to reduce nutrient runoff by 45 percent from several sources, including agriculture.

It's part of a larger initiative by the Environmental Protection Agency to reduce the amount of nitrogen and phosphorous draining into the Mississippi River and, ultimately, into the Gulf of Mexico. Iowa and the nine states bordering the Mississippi River are responsible for establishing their own strategies to meet this goal.

Several approaches and methods have been put in place around the state, but 2015 still showed some of the highest nitrate levels in history.

Keith Schilling, a research scientist in the University of Iowa IIHR-Hydroscience and Engineering department, said a conservative and a liberal ... but a choice of a fresh face."

One of Bertrand's main critiques of King, however, comes from the congressman's endorsement of Cruz, contending that it was a "direct finger to the eye" to Iowans.

King isn't running an Iowa agenda, Bertrand said, contending that by supporting Cruz, King hurts the ethanol industry.

Cruz said last fall he would like to remove the Renewable Fuel Standard, though he still supports ethanol and other biofuels. The Texas senator said ethanol and biofuels would continue to be necessary and would grow without the standard.

"He put his support behind somebody that is a Texan, an oil man, and has an anti-Iowa view," Bertrand said about King.

Bertrand said he has been meeting with Iowans across the district to raise his profile.

But some voters in the 4th District don't think they will get a new congressman this November.

Wendell Steven, the Kossuth County Republicans chairman, said King is one of the best representatives the district has had in a long time. Kossuth County is located in northwestern Iowa, near the Minnesota border in the 4th District.

Steven said Bertram sounds like a "good guy," after the state senator visited a Kossuth County Republican this past week, but does not compare with King.

"He doesn't say things black and white like Rep. King does," Steven said. "He doesn't come across as truthful as King does."

As for King's support for Cruz, Steven said the Texas senator won Iowa and doesn't think King's endorsement will "hurt him one bit."

"Unless Trump gets in, then a lot of people are going to hurt. Of course, they won't hurt as much if the communist gets in," Steven said, referring to both Democratic presidential frontrunner Hillary Clinton and Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders.

King is unfazed about whether he could lose his seat due to backing Cruz.

"If that's the price of endorsing, and supporting, and having a man like that win Iowa and a couple of other states, it's a pretty cheap price if we get the right president," he said. "That's what I think."

this record-breaking season is not a sign that the strategy has been unsuccessful: he attributed it to an unusually warm and wet year.

"There's still a lot of nitrogen in the soil that needs to be flushed out, so it takes years for change to come," Schilling said. "It takes time for water quality to change in the system, so for every one of these practices, there's a lag time associated with it."

IIHR research scientist Chris Jones said there are approximately 30 million acres of crops in Iowa, but there is less than $50 million available in state funding and farmer contributions that's been put into the project.

"From a monetary perspective, that gives us an idea of how large and difficult this problem will be to solve," he said.

Although there is no set timeframe yet on the strategy, Schilling said, he anticipates it will probably be at least 20 years before there are any significant improvements in nitrate levels. Despite these numbers, John Lawrence, an associate dean of the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Iowa State University, said the strategy has made progress on practices that will eventually have an effect.

Several strategies to reduce nutrient runoff were put in place this year across the state, he said.

"There are a number of practices that will ultimately lead to a reduction, but they can be overrun by weather," Lawrence said. "If we had a normal weather year, we would have had less nitrogen in the water than we did five years ago, before we put these practices in place."

Although these practices have been adopted widely around the state, it still is not nearly to the level that developers are hoping to reach, Jones said.

"In places where it has been implemented, there are localized positive effects, but the level of adoption we have isn't enough to make impacts on these big bodies of water like the Des Moines River, the Iowa River, and the Cedar River," he said.

co-president of the foundation. "There's no shortage of spaces for students to go to find religion and pray near campuses. It's the job of the religious sector to set aside prayer rooms, not the job of the university. It's an inappropriate use of public property because taxpayers pay for this."

However, prayer spaces on public university campuses are not uncommon. Other Big Ten schools confirmed they also have public prayer spaces available to students on campus, including University of Nebraska, Northwestern University, Michigan

State University, and Ohio State University.

The UI has not shown any sign that it will yield to the foundation's complaints.

Anne Bassett, the media-relations manager in the UI Office of Strategic Communication, said in a statement that it is the IMU's policy to provide space for registered student organizations, regardless of the mission of the organization, whether academic, political, or religious.

"The new temporary space for prayer and meditation in the Iowa Memorial Union was requested by students of the Muslim faith but is open to all students," she said.

Amanda Redlinger, the campus minister of the Campus Christian Fellowship, disputes the foundation's claim that the prayer rooms are unconstitutional.

She said the prayer spaces do not violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment because no one is being forced to use them. The First Amendment's establishment clause prohibits the government from making any law "respecting an establishment of religion."

"[The clause] is not saying that religion in general should be discouraged," she said. "Indeed, it was written to encourage all forms of religion and to ensure that the government does not enforce any one particular religion."

Ian Wold, the public-relations coordinator of Secular Students at Iowa, said his organization supports the UI prayer space.

"The prayer rooms are not Muslim-only," he wrote in an email. "They were made to fit the requirements of Muslim prayer, but anyone is welcome to peacefully use the space as they want or need. In fact, the rooms reflect this university's dedication to improving the quality of the lives of its students."

Wold called the foundation's statement "hasty" and "misinformed." Maisarah Mohd, a UI Muslim student, said that without the prayer room, Muslim students would be forced to pray at scattered places around campus, which could be uncomfortable for some people.

from the work of the Red Cross.

"The Red Cross is there, but it has to have neutrality and can't speak about injustices," he said "French physicians and journalists wanted to create something that embodied the principles of the Red Cross but allowed itself latitude to speak out and express vocal displeasure if it's necessary for the populations it's serving."

UI junior and pre-med student Alexis Wright said her goal is to join Doctors Without Borders sometime during her future career.

"I would love to travel to underprivileged countries to help," she said. "I'm a Spanish minor, so I would love to travel to Costa Rica because it would be nice to practice medicine and have those who I'm helping understand me."

Lawrence said the basic health care provided by Doctors Without Borders has become diminished around the world for many reasons.

"Health care as a basic human right has been diminished by self-interest, lack of adherence to international guidelines by military force, and a general fatigue by journalists and other news resources to acknowledge that these chronic crises exist," he said.

UI junior Casey Barb-

knecht said she plans on joining the Peace Corps after college and was excited to hear what the speaker had to say about his experience working with underprivileged communities.

"I plan on joining the Peace Corps, and [Doctors without Borders] is a similar experience to the Peace Corps, so I'm very interested to hear what he has to say working in underprivileged communities in global sense," she said.

GymHawks to host regional

By RICARDO ASCENCIO
ricardo-ascencio@uiowa.edu

The No. 19 Iowa women's gymnastics team will try to make some noise on Saturday, when the GymHawks will host a NCAA regional in Carver-Hawkeye.

Iowa City is one of the six regional locations, and the GymHawks are one of 36 teams nationally to qualify for competition.

Hawkeye head coach Larissa Libby loves seeing the success that her team keeps producing.

"It never gets old seeing your name come up in a bracket for the first round of the national tournament," she said. "The idea that we are entering the national tour-namment is just amazing in itself. To have the girls see their name in lights is a wonderful feeling."

While the GymHawks have just finished an intense regular season, they are ready for a much-needed boost of energy from the Hawkeye faithful.

"Right now, we are a little tired, but that's where the hosting edge comes in," Libby said. "It's our home, our arena, our fans. Our crowd is what gets us up and running again. The fans at Iowa are unbelievable."

The GymHawks will host No. 1 Oklahoma, No. 12 Nebraska, No. 13 Arkansas, No. 30 Kent State, and No. 35 Central Michigan, as well as individuals from Ball

State, Western Michigan, and Centenary in the regional. Despite the tough competition, the Hawks will continue to focus on their mission.

"We know who's coming here, but we never focus on the other teams," senior Alie Glover said. "We're very much a team that likes to stay in our own bubble and focus on us. We go out on the floor, focus on warmups, then we let warm-ups go and start over on every event that comes our way. That way it's easier to deal with mistakes that may happen, stay focused, and remain on the same page."

The Hawkeyes hope to improve from last year's NCAA regional competition, in which they tallied 194.475 to place fifth.

Five GymHawks placed in the top 15 for individual events. Mollie Drenth posted a score of 9.825 on bars for ninth. Angel Metcalf and Johanny Sotillo both posted 9.800 to tie for 12th.

Competition will start at 4 p.m.

Prior to the competition, the team will open up its new facility in the Field House. The open house will be open from 1-3 p.m.

Men's gymnastics team heads to tough Big Tens

By RICARDO ASCENCIO
ricardo-ascencio@uiowa.edu

As the postseason comes to a close, the Iowa men's gymnastics team will look to end things with a bang when they head to Columbus, Ohio, to face the conference's best gymnasts in the 2016 Big Ten Championships today and Saturday.

The competition will be stiff; the Big Ten is home to seven of the top-10 gymnastics programs in the NCAA: Ohio State (No. 3), Minnesota (No. 4), Illinois (No. 5), Nebraska (No. 7), Iowa (No. 8), Penn State (No. 9), and Michigan (No. 10).

While it may seem like a daunting task, the Hawkeyes have confidence that they will walk out of Columbus as the Big Ten champions.

"It was a successful regular season," Iowa head coach JD Reive said. "We still failed to accomplish the increasing consistency and scoring that we set out to do, but it doesn't change the fact that the team is as healthy mentally and physically as they have been heading into a postseason."

Not only will Reives' ability as a coach be put to the test but also his ability as a recruiter will be broadcast on center stage; his team of seniors was his first recruiting class since becoming the Iowa head coach.

"When I think of about the regular season, it's the seniors," Reive said. "The specialists all the way to the all-arounders have done so much to put us in the competitive position in ways we have been unable to do since I have been here."

The Hawkeyes senior leadership will need to make their presence felt in order to live up to their potential. They come into the Big Tens having only won two of their last five meets.

Iowa ended its season in Lincoln, Nebraska, losing to Minnesota, 433.850-432.450 but tying Nebraska. Despite the loss, there was plenty to be proud of. Iowa senior Matt Loochman claimed the meet's all-around title with a career high score of 87.700.

Iowa's late season skid has proven costly, as it dropped the Hawkeyes from near top-five contention in the NCAA.

While the Hawkeyes did not envision dropping in the rankings heading in to the postseason, they know it is not the end of the world. "We would have liked to end the season better," senior Del Vecchio Orozco said. "But right now, we are just focused on the [Big Ten Championships], and if we do [well], I know we will be ranked higher."

Consistency and comfort should not be an issue coming into the competition, because the Hawkeyes have traveled to Columbus, facing Ohio State in the Arnold Challenge.

"It's great that we can go there for Big Tens, understand the travel, and use that as training going into NCAAs," Reive said. "They are in great shape, and are able to go in, and do whatever they set out to do. To do that, they need to go in as a group and know they are putting out 30 routines and hit as many of them as humanly possible. We need to go in and be competitive."

If the Hawkeyes walk out of Columbus with the Big Ten victory, it will be the first conference championship in Reive's brief tenure and Iowa's first since 2003.

Settlements and lessons

Sydney Newton
sydney-newton@uiowa.edu

Disappointingly, seeing victims of police brutality is something our country is getting used to. There is hardly a day that goes by in which we do not see the repercussions of a death that was at the hands of the police. We see communities outraged followed by protests and then lawsuits and indictments. The lawsuits that follow are just another battle that the victims' families have to go through.

Just recently, the family of Zachary Hammond, the teen who was shot last year by a South Carolina cop, has settled a lawsuit for $2.15 million. If this seems like a large amount, Eric Garner's family agreed to a $5.9 million settlement.

According to data from the Wall Street Journal, the 10 cities with the largest police departments paid out $248.7 million last year in settlements and court judgments in police-misconduct cases, up 48 percent from $168.3 million in 2010.

In December 2015, relatives of the deceased Derrick Ambrose Jr. of Waterloo took the city to court and received a $2.5 million settlement with the city's insurance carrier. This shows that it's not only the big cities that end with large settlements.

There are potentially a lot of different reasons that the settlement amounts continue to rise. The protests and movements that happen because of these wrongful deaths and actions make the actions of the police much more visible.

Something that has changed this dynamic is video evidence. The videos of these incidents not only can make a huge difference in the verdict but also the efficiency of the case itself. When the public is able to see what actually happened, the injustice is shown in a better light.

The money for these settlements comes from taxpayers and the city's insurance funds. It is interesting to see the difference in the cases and how that affects the lawsuits and/or settlements. Our country's attitude toward the police is changing, and it's having a major effect on these civil suits.

According to the Baltimore Brew, the most expensive case was the city's payment of $6.4 million to the family of Freddie Gray in September 2015. This amount was more than all of the misconduct settlements the city had paid during the four years from 2011 and 2014. These cases that I've mentioned are all ones that have been consistently in the news.

And it's not only wrongful death cases that settle for millions. A few weeks ago, Honolulu city councilors agreed to pay $4.7 million to settle a lawsuit that says the Honolulu police engaged in racial and sexual discrimination in 2010.

An investigation done by the Chicago Tribune in January found that 124 of the city's police force of roughly 12,000 were identified in nearly one-third of the misconduct lawsuits settled since 2009, suggesting that officers who engaged in questionable behavior did it over and over. And the conduct of those 124 officers cost the city $34 million, the investigation found.

The call for justice is at an all-time high. But can you truly put a price tag on these lawsuits? What qualifies as too little money and what tops too much? I think it's less about the money. Instead, it teaches police officers and the cities that employ them a lesson learned the hard way.

Not enough spending on education

In the Iowa Legislature, a stalemate over education spending is finally over. Iowa senators and representatives on Wednesday approved a funding increase of $138 million for school districts in the 2016-17 academic year, a 2.25 percent rise in spending over 2015-16.

Iowa education groups were less than satisfied with the budget approval. Though technically an increase, costs typically rise 3 percent a year. The increase in spending, while necessary, will still force Iowa districts into difficult budgeting positions. The chronic underfunding of Iowa school districts has long-term effects that negatively affect the population of Iowa.

Pre-K to 12th grade schools are closing or consolidating across the state because of a lack of sufficient funding. The closure of a school affects the community in significant ways. For one, the area becomes less desirable for young couples moving into the area, slowing growth. It is often harder to get students to a school that is farther away, and busing costs increase. When schools close, educators, administrators, and janitorial workers lose their livelihoods, and the area loses a number of other related jobs.

The strict budget this year is especially unfortunate for pre-K programs. Pre-K programs demonstrate they help students adapt socially to the classroom and prepare them for elementary education. Perhaps even more importantly, pre-K programs give young or working parents the necessary hours to generate a livable income. Problems such as child hunger can be fought with increases in structured pre-K programs. Those in poverty experience the benefits most, but better funded early education is a service for all who use the public-education system.

The consolidation of schools often leads to less efficient schools. Larger class sizes increase the stress on teachers, and students have a harder time learning when there is a high student-to-teacher ratio. This is why education spending is so important; the continued financial support for education can keep Iowa ahead. If Iowa wants to be competitive in the global marketplace and an attractive option for new families, education has to be a priority in spending.

The state budget for fiscal 2017 is a tight one, but education is worth investing in. Expanding the number of schools increases the number of jobs for educated professionals and decreases student-to-teacher ratios. Expanding spending doesn't always lead to more efficient school districts or smarter students. The costs Iowa school districts face are often related to size. Many districts in Iowa are experiencing increases in population and require more space and faculty to facilitate the larger number of students.

The Daily Iowan Editorial Board is glad to see the end of another stalemate in the Legislature, but it isn't satisfied with the increase in spending toward pre-K-12 education, because costs rise by 3 percent annually. Beyond that, education is a source of jobs and opportunity. Educating today's youth is an investment in a better-educated workforce that is more likely to thrive.

Decorum, too much to ask for?

marcus-brown@uiowa.edu

From penis references to wife slander, the GOP presidential candidates in this upcoming election have single-handedly made a mockery of the race for the highest position in this country. However, that is not to say that the entire party is beyond redemption. I am not a supporter of the Republican Party. At the same time, I will give credit where credit is due, and Ohio Gov. John Kasich has recently demonstrated something the rest of the GOP presidentialists appear to be lacking and something that makes me doubt their viability as a potential president. What I am referring to is decorum.

On Sunday while speaking to Chuck Todd, the host of NBC's "Meet the Press," Kasich took a departure from the usual Islamophobic stance of his candidacy opposition. He insightfully remarked that we must have "intimate communication and coordination with our friends in the Muslim community" after speaking on the "knee-jerk" desire to discriminate against those in the Muslim community in the wake of the terrorist attacks that have plagued the globe.

Furthermore, Kasich has spoken out against attacks on candidates' family members following the wife-insulting debacle between fellow candidates Donald Trump and Sen. Ted Cruz. If anything, these moments of decency affirm the notion that while we may have differences in ideology, there should still be a baseline level of decorum maintained in the presidential race. Even if I despise your politics, I shouldn't feel the need to despise you as a human being as well.

Now, I am not naïve enough to believe that any two people can come to a full agreement on anything other than the color of the sky and maybe the existence of gravity.

Let's say that I, myself, do not believe that we landed on the Moon or that narwhals actually exist. I believe both to have been conjured up in a nondescript Hollywood studio for reasons I will probably never fully understand. If that were the case, you might ask yourself how someone who doesn't believe in the Moon landing and the entire existence of a relatively well-documented species of animal could be attending an institution of higher learning let alone be trusted to write for a widely circulated news publication.

These would be valid questions to raise and ones I feel are answered by that simple thing called decorum. Putting what some would believe to be nonsensical conspiracy theories aside, my beliefs may be flawed, but I have no problem interacting with a world of ordinary thinking individuals who would disagree with me on these issues. While I may be woefully lacking in common sense and rationality, I'd like to think I make up for it with a degree of decorum that still allows for me to operate as a functional member of society and a reasonably well-liked one at that.

In general, I do not go out of my way to defend my beliefs nor do I try to impose them on others. The respect I hold for my ideologies is equal to the respect I have for others' ideologies, even if they oppose my own.

It's possible to do this without compromising your beliefs. In fact, I consider this to be a foundation of decorum, and one necessary to exist in accordance with the larger world. The world is a beautiful tapestry of conflicting, interwoven ideologies and realities. However, the strand of said tapestry you represent never entitles you to be a pud.

This is especially true when one seeks to hold a position of power that represents so much more than your own individual beliefs. For this reason, I know I could never demand for a change in certain ideologies represented by the GOP candidates, but I don't think it would be asking for too much to see just a bit more decorum.

Present Cosby truthfully

Hannah Soyer
hannah-soyer@uiowa.edu

The Smithsonian National Museum of African American History and Culture has chosen to feature a handful of Bill Cosby's memorabilia from his childhood in an exhibition on entertainment. However, the allegations of sexual abuse against him have been completely left out. This has been a very controversial topic of debate, and in my opinion for good reason.

The museum is insisting that the exhibit is not an exhibit on Cosby but rather, an exhibit on theater, television, film, and entertainment and that there are only a few pieces that were donated by Cosby a while ago, before any accusations of sex abuse came out. Still, many people have protested the museum's decision to even include these in the exhibit.

I believe in the idea of "innocent until proven guilty" and that the allegations against a suspect are just allegations until it is decided otherwise by a court in order to protect the potentially innocent people who have been accused. However, including that Cosby has been accused of sexual assaults does not say that the museum believes he committed them, it means the officials are simply being accurate in their history.

Failing to include this huge part of Cosby's public life seems to suggest that they want to present an all-positive image of the artist, and in doing so, this demeans the importance of the allegations and also against allegations of abuse in general.

This also raises the question of whether artists of any kind should be still be considered talented when it turns out they're not a very great person. Obviously, talent is not automatically correlated with morality, and so even if people are terrible human beings, they could objectively be talented at what they do.

For example, Bob Dylan was widely known as not the friendliest person to work with, and yet his work in singing and songwriting paved the way for many musicians to come. Justin Bieber is, in some people's mind, a talented musician. I don't believe, however, that anyone would argue he's a good person, given his DUI arrest and rumored drug use. But still, Dylan and Bieber (I cringe even having their names in the same sentence), haven't done anything at the caliber of sexual abuse.

Maybe Cosby's career as a comedian and his talent in his field should not be overlooked. However, the allegations against him need to be discussed right alongside his work, especially if he is being featured in a museum.

TRACK

that is one of Iowa's main reasons for success.

"Sprinters expect to win, and that's what makes them sprinters," Iowa Director of Track and Field Joey Woody said. "They all have not overly excessive egos — they're all kidding each other and jiving each other in practice — but that's what makes our group so good."

The accolades don't just pour in locally, either.

Coaches such as Arkansas' Chris Bucknam, 2013 National Coach of the Year and 12-time SEC Coach of the Year, regard Iowa as a team to look out for in the near future.

It's still early in the season — Iowa just competed in its outdoor season-opener — but things are looking bright for the Hawkeyes.

Harrington and Saucer have been here before. The two have achieved a measure of success in the Big Ten, which put them on the national radar.

The duo are two of the top sprinters in the Big Ten, but they are not quite at the level for a top finish in the national championship. Yet.

Harrington dazzled observers in the intrasquad meet but his indoor season was cut short because of a suspension for violating team rules. But his senior outdoor season could be one to remember.

"[We can] be Big Ten champions as a team," he said. "I want to qualify for NCAAs in the 100, 200, and the 4x100, and I want to win Big Tens in the 4x100 and 100s," he said.

Junior Saucer also believes it could be a productive season for the Hawkeyes. Staying healthy is a priority for both athletes.

The injury bug has stung both sprinters during their careers, most recently with Saucer. A nagging hamstring injury slowed his development until the conference championships, in which he won the 60 meters.

"The focus is on stretching more after practice," said Saucer, noting that communicating with his coach about the state of his legs is critical.

While the other two come into the season with previous accolades, Tuufuli is an underrated freshman who aims to make a name for himself in the midst of some tough competition in the throwing department.

The 6-3 Las Vegas native only competed in a handful of meets this past indoor season. And yet, going up against some of the premier athletes in the nation, he didn't back down.

"It's motivating because I want to beat them, and that's all I think about," he said.

After elevating himself to the fifth-best freshman thrower in the nation, Tuufuli went on to toss 60-9.75 at the Big Ten indoor championships in the shot put. That mark added him to the all-time Hawkeyes list at sixth place.

"The Big Ten is the best throws conference in the country, and to be able to make the finals in any of the throwing events is impressive as a redshirt freshman, to get in there and mix it up," Woody said.

Unlike the underestimated Tuufuli, Saucer came into the 2015 outdoor conference championships leading his main event, the 100 meters. After failing to maintain the top spot, he learned not to get ahead of himself.

"I can't take anything for granted," he said. "I came in with the fastest 100. I felt like I got too caught up in that and didn't take it as seriously. I barely made it into the finals, and that kind of woke me up."

This season, he's taking things slower but still remains excited about the 100 — his favorite race.

Iowa sprinter James Harrington warms up during practice in the Recreation Building on Monday. Harrington is a 2014 Big Ten champion, a 2014 All-American, and a 2015 All-American all in the 400-meter relay. (The Daily Iowan/Margaret Kispert)

"I feel like that's my best race," he said. "I feel like it's the perfect length for my legs."

Saucer enters the outdoor season as the top sprinter in Woody's group. The coach says that while Saucer is the reigning Big Ten champion, the outdoor sprints are up for grabs.

Harrington stands as the main challenger. Despite his unorthodox running style, the senior's speed speaks for itself. The style is hard to describe. He's a tall guy who possesses a fluid running form.

"He's extremely elastic. He's one of those guys who doesn't look like he's running fast, but he is," Woody said. "When you look at the watch, sometimes it amazes you how fast he's running."

In Iowa's first outdoor meet of the season, March 18 and 19 at the Baldy Castillo Invitational, Harrington was a member of the 400-meter relay that climbed to seventh in Hawkeye history. Tuufuli competed in the shot put, throwing 56.17 feet and finished fifth. Saucer did not compete, but Woody believes once they insert him into the sprint-relay lineup, even better results will pour in.

The good news for the Hawks is that time is on their side. With plenty of meets scheduled before championship season commences, this trio commands the time and tools necessary to shine on the national stage.

BASEBALL

The Hawkeyes have played in cold weather this year, (the temperature was in the 40s during their Easter game against Maryland) but may have to deal with even colder temperatures in Minneapolis this weekend — the forecast calls for strong winds and temperatures in the high 30s.

"It's as much mental as anything," senior Nick Roscetti said. "You just have to layer up and make sure you have your hot hands with you and have your hands in your pocket so you can grip the ball."

As cold as the air may be, the series between the Gophers and Hawkeyes should have plenty of fire.

"What we've got is a couple teams that are pretty hot right now," Eldred said. "It's going to be a classic Big Ten weekend."

This column reflects the opinion of the author and not the DI Editorial Board, the Publisher, Student Publications Inc., or the University of Iowa.

Dear Readers,

This is my final Ledge. I am not quitting because I no longer think that I am funny nor because I have been asked to leave. Repeatedly. By my editors. Rather, I am relinquishing my post due to a medical condition that no longer allows me to sustain the level of wit, creativity, and attention to detail [cq] necessary for writing a daily comedy feature.

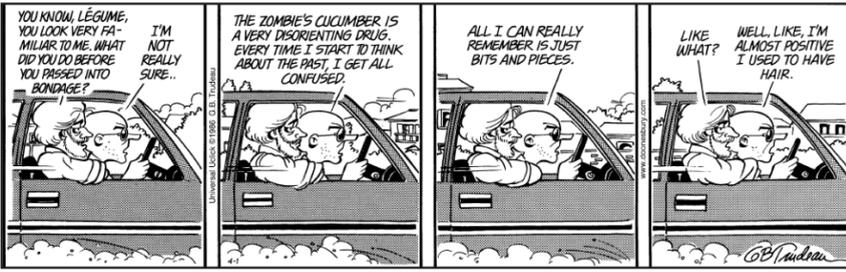

On Monday I was diagnosed with Adenomyotic Potassium-Related Idio-Lachrymal Fasciitis (Or "Old Libeler's Syndrome"), a degenerate disease. My doctor says that, while I am currently (relatively) healthy, I may die eventually, and I'm inclined to believe him. After all, he also gave me enough free condoms to completely fill a Ziploc bag. If you can't trust balding, middle-age man who gives you free things and wants you to have sex, then who can you trust?

Still, it pains me to leave you, my adoring public. My fans. The little people. Pleeb. Sure, I've received my fair share of hate mail, a few angry phone calls, and even the occasional dead cat tied to a cinder block thrown through my bedroom window, but my relationship with my parents goes beyond the scope of this letter, so I'll move on.

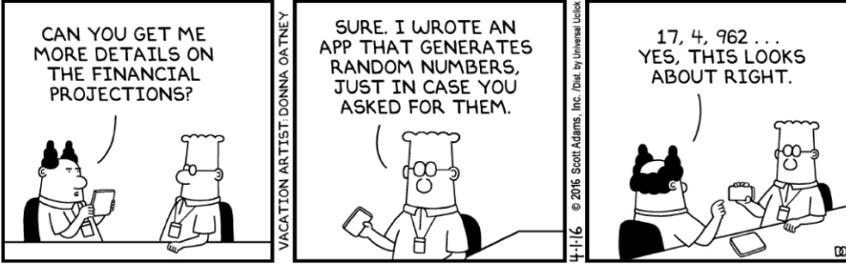

In closing, I want all of you to know how much I've enjoyed both writing this column and (hopefully) making you laugh — and if you never laughed, then eat a hefty bag of pee-pees, Poopy McPoopface.

Andrew R. Juhl reminds you what day it is.

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't fight the inevitable. Allow others to do as they please, and opt to take the same liberties yourself. Don't waste energy on trivial matters when there is so much you can accomplish if you focus on your goals.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Welcome a challenge as if it is a testament to your abilities. You'll shine brightly and impress everyone around you with your aptitude and finesse. What you offer will lead to an unexpected opportunity that allows you to use your skills.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Don't be gullible when it comes to helping others. You can only do so much before you end up being taken for granted. Draw the line, and don't let yourself be used. Enlightenment will come from self-awareness and personal change.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Listen to suggestions, but don't feel obligated to follow a path that doesn't suit you. Focus on improvements that will make you feel good about yourself and give you the confidence required to do as you please.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You'll be raring to go and eager to bring about change. Your quick wit and physical energy will come in handy when it comes to sizing up a situation and doing what needs to be done in order rise to the top.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Put your money into a safe investment or a reasonable home improvement, but don't lend, borrow, or jeopardize your financial security by taking risks. A steady gain should be your goal when it comes to health, wealth, and happiness.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Make plans to get away. A day trip or making special plans to go somewhere with someone you love will give you a chance to relax and gain peace of mind. A decision you make will alter your living situation.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Use your imagination, and you will come up with solutions that will help an organization or cause that concerns you. An opportunity to spend time with someone who brings out the best in you will lead to a romantic weekend.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You'll get blamed for something you didn't do if you hide evidence or aren't honest about something that has happened. Stick close to home, and put your time and effort into improving your relationships with the people who believe in you.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Expect to face a situation with a friend, relative, or neighbor. Don't jeopardize your reputation by agreeing to something you don't want to do. Focus on your own plans, and look for opportunities to maximize your chances of advancement.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lay your cards on the table, and discuss your moneymaking ideas with someone who can help you make your dreams come true. Listen attentively, and you will be made aware of any pitfalls that could deter you from reaching your goal.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look for alternative ways to expand your interests and drum up support. A learning curve is apparent and must be conquered before you will see any sort of returns for your effort. Romance will improve your personal life.

On the brink of greatness

By ADAM HENSLEY | adam-hensley@uiowa.edu

Just wait. They aren't there yet. But they will be. Three athletes on the Iowa men's track team will try to close the gap between being members of a good team and being members of an elite team. James Harrington, Vinnie Saucer Jr, and Reno Tuufuli each bring something unique to the Hawkeyes.

Out of the trio, the newest on the scene is Tuufuli. The redshirt freshman is a big guy leaving big impressions in arguably the best throwing conference in the country.

The other two, Harrington and Saucer, lead a blistering sprint squad

SEETRACK, 5

“They all have not overly excessive egos — they’re all kidding each other and jiving each other in practice — but that’s what makes our group so good.”

— Joey Woody, director of track and field

Hot baseball heads to cold country

Sitting at 2-1 in the Big Ten conference, Iowa looks to keep momentum going.

By BLAKE DOWSON | blake-dowson@uiowa.edu

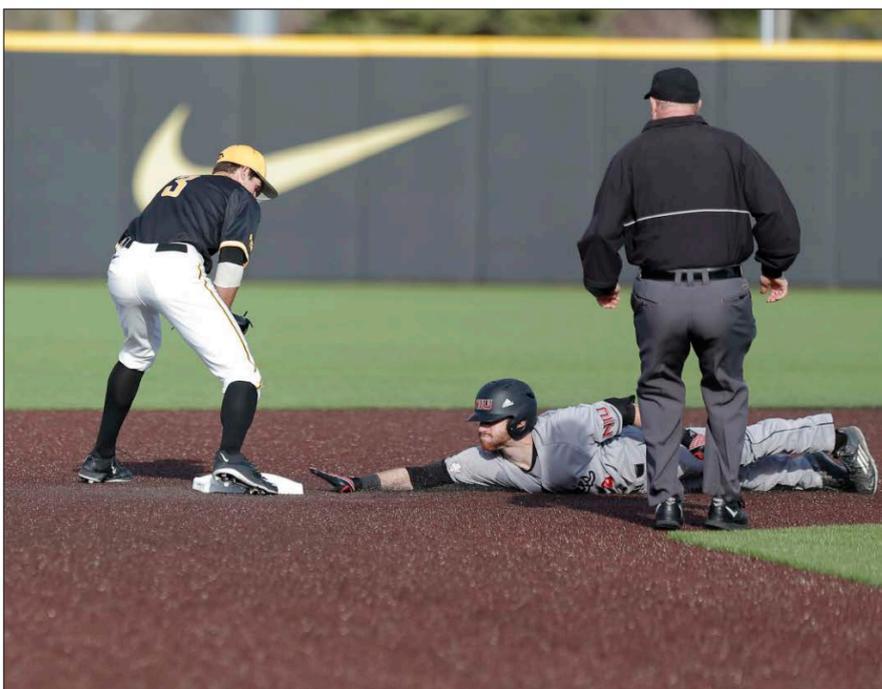

The baseball Hawkeyes (10-12, 2-1 Big Ten) will take their hot bats, and coats, to Minnesota today through April 3 to renew a rivalry with the Gophers (13-9, 0-0) that dates to 1892.

The Gophers are riding a three-game winning streak that includes two victories over Missouri State, which swept the Hawkeyes earlier this spring.

“I had a feeling they were going to have a really good year based on what I saw last year and what they had returning,” Iowa head coach Rick Heller said. “In a year where a large portion of the league turned over, the Gophers had a lot of good players coming back.”

The Gophers, who have seven players in their lineup hitting above .300, are led by a trio that ranks in the top eight in the Big Ten. Junior catcher Austin Athmann has clipped at a .412 average with 5 home runs, 19 RBIs, and 14 runs. Freshman shortstop Terrin Vavra has a .403 average with 14 RBIs, and junior outfielder Matt Fiedler is hitting .389 with 20 runs scored.

Sophomore C.J. Eldred will have the task of slowing down the Gopher bats this evening. “They’re a team that’s matured,” he said. “They were pretty young these last couple years. It sounds like they’re hitting the crap out of the ball. It’s going to be a good challenge for us.”

Northern Illinois outfielder Justin Fletcher reaches for the bag at Banks Field on Tuesday. The Hawkeyes bats came alive in their 12-3 victory over the Huskies. (The Daily Iowan/ Alex Kroeze)

The Hawkeyes are coming off a midweek game against Northern Illinois in which they exploded for 12 runs, including four hits that left the yard.

Freshman Robert Neustrom, one of four Hawkeyes to homer on Tuesday, was recently named Big Ten Freshman of the Week. The Sioux City native has worked his average up to .370 — tops on the team — and worked his way up the lineup.

Fellow freshman Zach

Daniels has also been productive for the Hawkeyes but in a not-so-obvious way.

Daniels is only batting .143, but he does a lot of things well, his head coach said.

“Zach Daniels has had about as much bad luck as a hitter could,” Heller said. “If you look at our statistics, we focus a lot on quality at-bats ... Daniels has the most quality at-bats on the team; he just doesn’t have a lot to show from it from an average standpoint.”

Fleming also leaves

By JORDAN HANSEN | jordan-hansen@uiowa.edu

Iowa freshman guard Andrew Fleming has been granted a release from his scholarship and will play elsewhere next season.

Fleming averaged 2 points and fewer than 1 rebound and 1 assist per game. However, he played in just 11 games this season and only saw more than 10 minutes in three of those contests.

“We appreciate the contributions that Andrew made to our team this past season,” head coach Fran McCaffery said in a release. “Andrew has a bright future, and we wish him all the best in his future endeavors. My staff and I will do whatever we can to help Andrew during this transition.”

Fleming is the second Iowa player to transfer in as many days; Brandon Hutton announced on Wednesday that he would attend a different school next year.

“Thank you Hawkeye Nation for welcoming me and everyone else who has supported me this year, but I believe God has an amazing plan for my life elsewhere that is bright,” Fleming said in a release.

Iowa now has two scholarship spots open for next season, which means the Hawkeyes could see a new face or two before the dust settles.

Fleming’s split from Iowa seems to be amicable.

“I want to thank the University of Iowa for an amazing freshman year full of experiences and relationships that will last a lifetime,” Fleming said in a release. “I would also like to thank Coach McCaffery, his staff, my teammates, and all the fans for all the love and support this season.”
