UI DRINKING DROPS

The number of alcohol-related arrests has dropped drastically in Iowa City.

By ANNA ONSTAD-HARGRAVE | anna-onstad-hargrave@uiowa.edu

Despite being the No. 2 party school in the United States, alcohol arrests at the University of Iowa have decreased by 43 percent, and officials are attributing the decrease to a change in patrolling efforts.

The UI police reported the drop in reports from a state Board of Regents meeting last week.

"The drop in arrests is due to new policies around Kinnick Stadium on game days and the fact that we're no longer patrolling inside bars," said UI police Capt. Ian Scott.

The Daily Iowan previously reported that in 2014, the UI police department decided to return to its "original focus," by patrolling areas with high traffic, such as the Main Library, IMU, UIHC, and residence hall routes as opposed to the downtown area.

The American College of Health Association's National College Health Assessment reported a similar decrease. According to the 2015 report, high-risk

Grassley meets Garland

By REBECCA MORIN
rebecca-morin@uiowa.edu

In a one hour and 10 minute breakfast meeting, Iowa's senior senator was the next person to meet with Supreme Court nominee Merrick Garland Tuesday morning.

Grassley senator

Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, sat down with Garland to discuss why Grassley will not hold hearings for the Supreme Court — naming the "hyper-partisan election year" as the reason.

The meeting began at 7:45 a.m. and lasted until 8:55 a.m., according to Grassley's office. The breakfast was held in the Senate Dining Room and was "cordial and pleasant."

Grassley announced last week he intended to meet with Garland after speaking with him on the phone.

On Tuesday, Grassley, the chairman of the Senate Judiciary committee, also gave a prepared statement on the Senate floor pertaining to the Supreme Court hearings and comment's President Obama made

Hancher, Joffrey create new work

By JUSTUS FLAIR
justus-flair@uiowa.edu

The year's first event on Hancher Auditorium's new stage lacked showy lights, glitzy costumes, and staggering production value, but it made up for that in significance.

The Joffrey Ballet will debut a new production of The Nutcracker in December, choreographed by Tony Award-winner Christopher Wheeldon.

Hancher will serve as a producing sponsor and host five preview productions of the ballet Dec. 1-4 before its world premiere in Chicago on Dec. 10, Hancher Executive Director Chuck Swanson announced during a press conference in Hancher on April 12.

Ashley Wheeler, artistic director of The Joffrey Ballet, and April Daly, leading artist of The Joffrey Ballet, joined Swanson on stage.

Wheeldon's production will replace Robert Joffrey's The Nutcracker, which the company has been performing since 1987, when Hancher commissioned it.

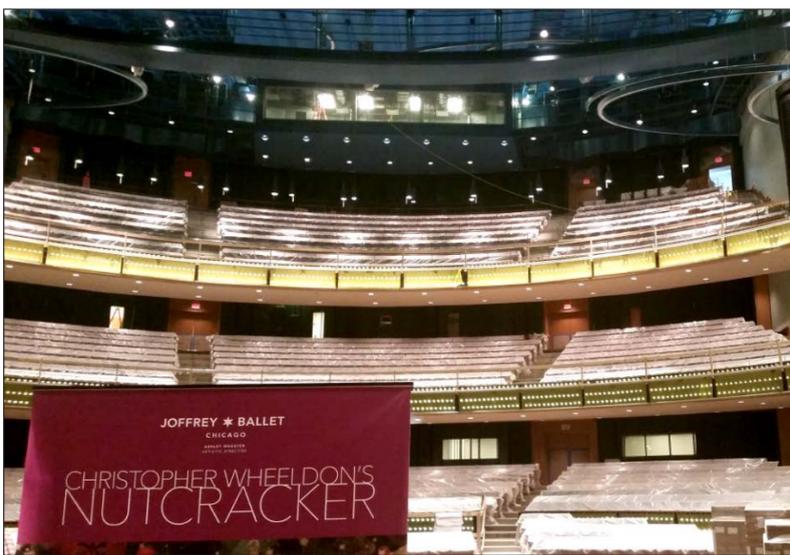

"A production that has given us so much for so many years, the reality was that it was completely falling apart," Wheeler said.

Wheeler, who danced in the original 1987 production on the old Hancher stage, has seen costumes become worn down, more patches added each year.

That is the main reason this $4 million production budget includes a maintenance cost. Hancher will provide a commission gift of $500,000. As of the conference, $3 million has been raised, Wheeler said.

The costumes will not be the only thing changed in the show. Though Peter Tchaikovsky's iconic soundtrack will remain — performed by the Chicago Philharmonic and the Iowa Orchestra for the run of the show in each location — the setting and story will be altered.

"The setting is in Chicago during the construction of the famed Columbian Exhibition, a World's Fair that had the eyes of the world," Wheeler read from Wheeldon's description.

"Perhaps even more significantly, the ballet's central protagonist, the child Marie, who is to be the wildly imaginative daughter of a worker at the fair," he said. "No longer set in a home of a privileged Victorian family, but in a simple worker's hut, nestled among the vast construction of the fairground. This is to be the story of an immigrant worker's child, a dreamer who has very little but, through the epic magical journey of Christmas, gains a great deal."

This is the latest chapter in a rich story of partnership between Hancher and the Joffrey, Swanson said.

"You have a world class theater and I think that you have always had world class art," Wheeler said.

The Nutcracker's artistic team will gather in Iowa City for weeks before opening night. The team includes puppeteer and MacArthur Genius Basil Twist, five-time Tony-winning lighting designer Natasha Katz, Tony-winning projection designer Ben Percy; Tony-nominated costume and set designer Julian Crouch, and Caldecott Medal-winning author and illustrator Brian Selznick.

Though it won't host the official premiere, Hancher looks forward to its role in the production, Swanson said.

"I look at this as being a laboratory," he said, "really a place where this is going to be born."

Moving against therapy

By KAYLYN KLUCK

LGBT conversion therapy practices are about to go under the scrutiny of the Iowa Board of Medicine.

A petition that was brought forward by the State of Iowa Youth Advisory Council to ban the practice of conversion therapy on minors by state physicians was denied by the board for the time being.

Bowden executive director

However, the board declared that a subcommittee would be formed to determine whether it should rule to prohibit physicians from practicing conversion therapy on minors.

Members of the council appeared before the Board on April 8 to call for the ban of conversion therapy, which is known as "Sexual Orientation Change Efforts" in the council's petition.

According to the petition, "Sexual Orientation Change Efforts" includes any practice by a licensed physician that seeks to change an individual's sexual orientation, which may include changing behaviors, identity, and feelings.

A brand-new agreement between the University of Iowa and the Iowa Department of Natural Resources, designed to limit air-pollutant emissions, has put the university's 2020 sustainability goals within reach. The agreement consists of a 10-year Plant-wide Applicability Limit permit that restricts the amount of pollutants the UI can emit on a campus-wide scale rather than setting strict limits on each of the 437 emission sources located across campus. On Tuesday, the UI Office of Sustainability hosted a ceremony to celebrate the permit. "This allows us to do things in a streamlined fashion with respect to our permitting," said Senior Vice President for Finance and Operations Rod Lehnertz. "This is not only increased efficiency and cost savings, but gives the university flexibility to both test and execute biofuel production and use." The permit will be in effect for the next 10 years, and the UI can choose to renew it or convert back to adherence to limit emissions at each emission source. The UI has set sustainability goals to be accomplished by 2020. One of these goals includes consuming 40 percent renewable energy, mostly through locally sourced biofuels like oat hulls, wood chips, and miscanthus grass. Lehnertz said that in 2015, the UI consumed an average of 14.4 percent renewable energy per day, and new flexibility from the permit will allow the UI to expand its production of energy from biomass to reach this goal. The UI will have to track its emissions campus-wide every month and report every year to ensure it keeps emissions under the cap level. "Flexibility also means responsibility," Iowa Natural Resources Director Chuck Gipp said. "These are complex and comprehensive permits. Instead of having each source of emissions being regulated and permitted, you take all the emissions points around campus and have an upper limit across campus." UI President Bruce Harreld said he was committed to sustainability. "We're going to meet our 2020 goals, we're going to exceed them, but I think we can do a better job," Harreld said. "As I look at the world that a lot of our students are walking into, the issue of sustainability is going to be one of the most important issues our students are going to have to deal with." Another one of the goals for 2020 is to expand UI research in sustainability-related areas, which Harreld said is one of the goals that could use more work. "I'm encouraging faculty to introduce the notions of sustainability in our coursework, perhaps create new certificate programs, maybe even a degree in this area, but most importantly, to push the envelope in research," Harreld said. "You know you're on a good thing in academic environments when the students are pulling you ahead, and that's where we are to a large extent on this campus."

New school on IC horizon

By MADLINE MURPHY SMITH
madeline-m-smith@uiowa.edu

Iowa City will see a new elementary school within the next few years. The construction of Hoover Elementary will be completed by July 2017 and will be located near the intersection of American Legion and Barrington Roads. The project for the new school began on March 29. When the doors open in the fall of 2019, more than 500 students will be able to call the new $14 million elementary school home. The new elementary is a part of the school district's 10-year facilities plan approved in 2013 to "drive better education outcomes," said Iowa City School Board President Chris Lynch. "Hoover is a great example of everything we're trying to do with the 10-year plan because it allows us to build new buildings and renovate current facilities," he said. "Many students on the East Side of Iowa City are being bused to school, so we're trying to put the school where the kids are at and facilitate building communities around our schools." Lynch said once Hoover is completed, Longfellow, Lincoln, and Mann will use the building as a temporary home for their students while their respected buildings are being renovated through the district's 10-year facilities plan. "Through the 10-year plan every classroom in the district will be transformed during that period," he said. Duane Van Hemert,

Lynch president

the School District physical-plant director, said the driving force behind the new elementary was the steady increase of enrollment in Iowa City schools across the district. "Iowa City schools have been growing 300 to 400 students per year, and a new facility like Hoover will help this enrollment growth," he said. Van Hemert said Hoover is going to be "very attractive" from the outside and will have state of the art classrooms and a first-of-its kind storm shelter, which will attract parents and students alike to the new building. While the 10-year plan will see new schools come to the Iowa City community, the old elementary, Hoover Elementary, 2200 E. Court St., will be closed in the fall of 2019. The closure of the original Hoover has several Iowa City community members "disappointed" with the School Board's decision, which led to the creation of the "Save Hoover" committee. Erin Kaufman, the Save Hoover chairwoman, said the organization's committee is heavily involved in school board elections. She said the group is working to make sure the community is aware of what is happening, and trying to get School Board officials to reconsider its decision. "There are capacity needs in the district," she said. "Closing an elementary school when we need elementaries does not make a lot of sense. There has never been a completely compelling reason to close Hoover." Kaufman said Hoover serves a lot of families and the school has a "strong and cohesive sense of community" within the elementary. Both Lynch and Van Hemert said plans to close the original Hoover are still in action for the fall of 2019.

drinking had dropped from 70.3 percent in 2009 to 54.2 percent in 2015.

“Football-related alcohol charges and arrests have historically made up a significant portion of [UI police] arrests,” said Lucy Wiederholt, the interim director of UI Public Safety, in a statement. “Those arrests continue to be down this year. Part of the decrease is because people are learning the rules and have been more cooperative, and another part of that decrease is the lasting impact of the 21-ordinance.”

The number of students who had used alcohol 10 or more days in the past 30 days dropped from 36.4 percent in 2009 to 26.1 percent in 2015, and the average number of drinks consumed in one sitting dropped from 7.4 in 2009 to 5.8 in 2015, ac-ording to data 2015 from national assessment.

Rebecca Don, a behavioral health consultant at Student Health & Wellness, said the decline in alcohol use coincided with the implementation of the Alcohol Harm Reduction Plan, which was created by the Vice President of Student Life in 2009.

The UI Alcohol Harm Reduction Plan focuses on reducing high-risk drinking on college campuses. The plan includes the creation of the Alcohol Harm Reduction Advisory Committee. The panel is a multidisciplinary group of faculty, staff, and students that advises Vice President for Student Life Tom Rocklin on forming a plan to decrease high-risk drinking and related harmful consequences.

A campus-community partnership was also created from the plan. The partnership is between the UI campus and the city and is called the Partnership for Alcohol Safety.

However, the UI still has work to do. According to the national-assessment report, despite the decrease, UI students are still more likely to use alcohol, engage in high-risk drinking, and experience negative consequences from use than the national average.

“While we’re pleased to see these rates go down, it’s still a large issue that has a huge impact on the experience and success of students,” said Don. “It affects the entire culture of the university. Even students who choose not to drink at all also feel some impacts of the alcohol culture on campus.”

Don said the issue is not unique to the UI.

“It’s an issue colleges across the country are working on as well,” she said. “If there was an easy fix, someone would have fixed it. The reality is that it requires a multifaceted approach. It also takes time.”

while at the University of Chicago.

“Politics in judicial rulings means that something other than law forms the basis of those decisions. It means the judge is reading his or her own views into the Constitution,” Grassley said. “Unlike the president, I believe the biggest threat to public confidence in the court is the justices’ willingness to permit their own personal politics to influence their decisions.”

Following the death of Justice Antonin Scalia in February, Senate Republicans, led by Senate Majority Leader Mitch Mc-

Connell, said they would not hold hearing to fill the seat until after the 2016 presidential election. A nominee had yet to be named at that time.

Garland was nominated by Obama on March 16, despite Senate Republican’s decisions to not move forward with hearings. Garland began meeting with senators, both Republican and Democrats, later that same month.

The 63-year-old met with Illinois Sen. Mark Kirk, who is up for re-election this year in his state. Kirk is one of two Republican Senators who is in favor of holding hearings, along with Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, according to the Washington Post.

Garland served 19 years in the D.C. circuit. He has received support from both Republicans and Democrats in the past, though Grassley did not support him in the past.

Grassley said Tuesday that judges have a role ensuring the government is by the people and that they fulfill the role by trying to understand what a law meant “when the people’s representatives enacted it.”

“If the justices decided cases that way, there would be a lot less politics in legal rulings,” Grassley said. “Unlike the president, I think that would be healthy for our democracy. But more important, it was the understanding of those who wrote and adopted our Constitution.”

Social and religious leaders, therapy survivors, and health-care professionals joined members of the Council in presenting the petition to the Board. The council will present a similar petition to the Board of Psychology in May.

Mark Bowden, the executive director of the Iowa Board of Medicine, said the subcommittee would look at national standards and investigate medical practices associated with conversion therapy over the course of six months to a year before reporting back to the full board.

“I think you can presume that the board will do its diligence in looking at the information that’s there before they determine whether or not it’s appropriate for this board to get involved in such a rule,” he said.

Keenan Crow, the deputy director for LGBT organization Iowa One, said there is no scientific basis for conversion therapy.

“It’s a dangerous, discredited practice aimed at changing the sexual orientation or gender identity of someone,” Crow said. “It’s based on a false belief that being LGBT is a mental illness which needs to be cured.”

Bowden said the topic of conversion therapy is a sensitive one, but it will be a good discussion.

“There was some concern expressed about the prohibition, because there may be children who want the therapy, and if it was prohibited then what would happen?” he said.

Bowden said the Board of Medicine is not currently aware of any physicians who are practicing conversion therapy in Iowa, but they are still willing to look into a ban.

“As the petitioners acknowledged in the meeting on Friday, they weren’t reacting to issues that were happening in Iowa,” he said. “They were talking about some issues in other states and they saw this as a potentially preemptive thing that Iowa could do.”

Crow said there are no medical centers openly advertising conversion therapy, so it is difficult to find out where it’s happening in the state.

“We hear from survivors on occasion who have gone through this, so it does seem to still be occurring,” Crow said. “But it is hard to track down in this particular state. A lot of kids will get sent out of state or they will go through underground networks by word-of-mouth.”

However, a ban from the Board of Medicine would only apply to physicians, leaving many nurse practitioners, health counselors, social workers, and psychologists unregulated.

“There are many, many other health-care providers in Iowa who might provide the same services,”

Bowden said. “So even if our Board of Medicine adopted a rule that somehow reflected the objectives of the group, that certainly wouldn’t encompass every health-care provider who provides it.”

Alex Bare, a voting member of the Youth Advisory Council and a University of Iowa freshman, said the council tried to have similar law pass by the Legislature last year, but it could not make it past the House of Representatives. Upon learning that conversion therapy could be banned through the state medicine boards, the organization decided to petition.

“We see this as a steppingstone, as a way to an outright ban that we hope will pass through the Legislature once the House becomes a little less hostile to social issues,” Bare said. “If this is able to go through the Board of Medicine and achieve the support of our state’s own doctors and psychiatrists, there’s really no way a Legislature is going to be able to say no to such a law.”

Bare said that by standing up against conversion therapy, the council hopes to raise awareness of the tactics that have been used against young LGBT individuals and create a safer environment if they aren’t sure whether to come out or not.

“So really, it’s not just about banning the practice, it’s also leading to public awareness and support,” he said.

Moving forward on criminal justice

Samuel Studer
samuel-studer@uiowa.edu

Former President Bill Clinton was recently confronted about his 1994 crime bill by protesters at a campaign rally for his wife, Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton. Though he said he “liked protesters,” Bill Clinton was not afraid to express his opinion on how he felt the bill changed America.

“Because of the bill, we had a 25-year low in crime, a 33-year low in the murder rate, and because of that and the background-check law, we had a 46-year low in deaths of people involving hand gun violence,” he said to the protesters.

It is important to understand these thoughts. When this bill was created, millions lived in fear. Crime was a hot topic in the country. President Clinton worked on trying to get to the root of the problem. On a more modern note, he is not only defending his policy but those put forward by his wife’s campaign.

Yet, is his stance in the bill correct? It is hard to ignore the fact that decades of incarceration have done damage. The major benefit of the bill was to put more cops on the streets. At the time that this bill was passed, there were a large number of violent crimes. Putting more officers in communities would help police departments respond to the large volume of calls they were receiving.

Departments were also told to create their own approach to changing the community. President Clinton talked about how this would help in poor urban areas and restore faith that the government could positively change these areas.

These supposed benefits have come with some significant downfalls. Many African Americans, particularly in cities like New York, have been stopped for no legal reason. It is not acceptable for people to be subject to unconstitutional or inappropriate stops.

The Black Lives Matter movement has tried to rally for change, and this hit close to home in Iowa. According to the Human Rights Watch, “In Minnesota and Iowa, blacks constitute a share of the prison population that is 12 times greater than their share of the state population.” Other estimates, like from the Sentencing Project, put the number of blacks sent to prison at 13 times the white population, compared to their overall population. These statistics show that changes need to be made in our criminal justice system.

Police should be better monitored so that issues like this do not arise. Nobody should have to worry about corrupt police officers. The second issue is the number of people who are incarcerated. Prisoners cost the United States millions of dollars each year. We should train police officers to help get people off the street and reduce crime rather than simply making arrests. There should be a bigger focus on trying to help people and making sure that they get the help they need. If we can give offenders a helping hand, we will run in to far fewer problems. The drug offenders who are taking up space in our jail wouldn’t pose a major threat if they had the tools to be successful.

We need to find a new solution to crime rather than dwell over this bill. Former President Clinton might be trying to defend his wife’s policies, but it is time for change. Understanding how this bill failed will help to lead to the future of crime policies.

Restore felons’ voting rights

The Iowa Supreme Court is deliberating on a case that holds the voting fate for more than 20,000 Iowans. Griffin v. Branstad challenges Executive Order 70, issued by Gov. Terry Branstad in 2011, which overturned former Gov. Tom Vilsack’s 2005 executive order that automatically reinstated voting rights to 115,000 ex-felons. “Civil death,” or the stripping away of rights from a felon, is an old tradition. Most aspects of civil death have been abolished for decades if not centuries, but one portion still remains prevalent in some parts of the modern United States: felon disenfranchisement.

Felon-disenfranchisement laws vary drastically among states. In Maine and Vermont, felons never lose the right to vote. In 38 states and the District of Columbia, most ex-felons are granted the right to vote after completing their sentences. The three harshest states on felon disenfranchisement are Florida, Kentucky, and Iowa.

When Vilsack issued his executive order in 2005, the move was both lauded and despised. Democrat lawmakers saw it as a long overdue update of the Iowa law that denied felons the right to vote permanently. The denial of voting rights is disruptive to the rehabilitation process and makes it clear that the Iowa justice system isn’t interested in rehabilitation but perpetual punishment. The barring of ex-felons to vote also disproportionately affects minority Iowans, because black Iowans are sent to prison at a rate 13 times higher than their white neighbors, according to a 2007 analysis by the Washington-based the Sentencing Project.

Iowa’s Republican lawmakers saw the move as Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

— FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U.S. CONSTITUTION

marring Iowa’s “tough-against-crime” image and a cheap political ploy to increase the numbers of Democrat voters. Of course, the disenfranchisement of ex-felons, should it help Democrats, would inherently hurt Republicans in Iowa’s voting cycles. Further, a “tough-against-crime” rhetoric doesn’t extend to voting rights. Taking away the right to vote is not an efficient deterrent against crime, in the same way that the death penalty has little to no effect on crime rates. The primary purpose of penalties is to deter crime from happening. Inefficient penalties are therefore not useful to the state and should be removed.

Re-entering society after living in the prison system is a difficult transition, made more difficult by the label of felon, which removes many opportunities in housing and in the workforce. The right to vote is an essential part of the American democratic system and a fundamental right; denying it to ex-felons, people who have been deemed safe enough to return to civilian life, is an outdated and alienating practice. Through his executive order, Branstad has added another hurdle in the process of reintegration for ex-felons in the state of Iowa.

The Daily Iowan Editorial Board believes the right to vote should be automatically extended to people who have paid their debt to society and are looking to re-enter their communities successfully. As an integral part of being an American, denying the right to vote to ex-felons is an alienating practice. It might help Republicans in Iowa politically, but it hurts the process of rehabilitation for ex-felons and is an archaic practice that should be ended.

Dissociation, daydreaming, and doing so in school

Keith Reed
keith-reed@uiowa.edu

Many of us have sat through numerous lectures, conversations, and readings in which afterwards we retained nothing. This has happened to me countless times. Dissociation is the word that best describes this. It means the lack of connection to one’s thoughts, memories, and sense of identity. The severity of dissociation is seen as a spectrum from daydreaming to forgetting what you have read in a book or the walk home from class. More severe cases are classified as Dissociative Identity Disorder.

Dissociation disorders are more common than you might think; 7 percent of the population may have had one at one time or another, according to Mental Health America. Dissociative disorders, like many other mental disorders, are difficult to spot in patients and many go undiagnosed for years.

Mental Health America states that almost one-third of people say they occasionally feel they are watching themselves in a movie. Four percent of the people in the above demographic say that they feel that way one-third of the time. These incidents occur generally in our juvenile years and decline after our 20s. As a child of the digital age, this could be owing to the fact that our young brains have become accustomed to transient faint facts in such a fickle time in our lives.

Daydreaming can sometimes become conflated with dissociation. Psychology today conducted a survey that indicated that about 96 percent of adults engage in daydreaming on a daily basis. I can see where the two can become easily confused for each other.

Daydreams are fantasies that do not necessarily reflect your everyday life. They can be controlled but they take the effort to maintain. Even though daydreams may seem insignificant, they can shape our interactions and cause happiness among other things. Dissociating can happen when completing tedious tasks, or walking or driving home. They are usually brought on by triggers, which can vary from person to person. The obvious benefits of daydreaming outshine those of dissociating. It can feel as though the body is merely a vessel and a detached feeling.

While wandering the deep recesses of my brain through daydreaming, I have found comfort and solace. In class, I have found something different, a detachment from the entire class. This could be attributed to the lack of sleep or the general pre-occupancy that I have with the past weekend. Owning up to this is the needed push I need to increase the already lacking attention I pay in lecture and life. There is a stark contrast between dissociation and daydreaming, and there has to be an acknowledgement of the two. There needs to be an open conversation about mental health regarding those who engage in actions that are maladjusted to daily function.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Uber has been welcome in Iowa City for more than a year

In February 2015, the Iowa City City Council passed an ordinance that identified Transportation Network Companies, such as Uber, and allowed them to enter the local market. Uber chose at that time to not operate here because its officials considered our safety regulations as “arcane and cumbersome.” In the meantime, the city has drafted a new ordinance that would enable Uber to steal from local businesses while operating by a different set of rules. Consequently, Uber presented Iowa City with an ultimatum: Approve this ordinance or Uber will leave.

Uber has seized on the public demand and the myopic public-relations campaign put forth by their supporters. What would it say about the integrity of our city councilors, who worked so hard to develop safety standards that the local transportation companies have willingly adopted, if they would now choose to throw those regulations aside because of an ultimatum from Uber?

Anyone who dares question this new ordinance is labeled “anti-competition” or “anti-innovation.” To the Chamber of Commerce and the Visitors and Convention Bureaus: ask the Marriott, the hotelVetro, and the Sheraton what they do when guests ask about Uber. They professionally and unapologetically order their guests a safe, reliable, and local cab. They don’t run around saying the sky is falling because we don’t have Uber.

I suggest we show our leadership with an innovative and untraditional solution to this worldwide problem rather than giving in to an ultimatum. This is the only way to ensure a level playing field and to avoid an equal protection lawsuit. Let us adopt a separate, less cumbersome ordinance that simply recognizes and allows transportation companies to operate and manage their apps in Iowa City while also recognizing that those who may choose to drive for companies have to comply with all existing ride-for-hire regulations.

We have this opportunity to avoid repeating the problems other cities around the world have experienced. We can avoid further legal costs and learn from their mistakes, which have resulted in diminished safety standards, discrimination and price-gouging lawsuits, and accidents resulting in death, just to name a few. We, the people of Iowa City, can give UBER an ultimatum: Play by our rules. We’ve gotten along just fine without you.

We are a progressive city of innovation and creativity. We’ve arrived here through hard work and thoughtful regulation. Not by allowing a monopolizing, labor standards wrecking, discriminating, privacy invader write our local laws. Show some backbone. Don’t apologize. And don’t be fooled.

Francis disappoints, backs discrimination

On April 8, the Vatican released the apostolic exhortation “The Joy of Love.” As a lifelong Catholic and a gay man, the proclamation is deeply troubling, because it dodges any discussion of gay marriage based in evidence.

When Pope Francis writes that “there are absolutely no grounds for considering homosexual unions to be in any way similar remotely analogous to God’s plan for marriage and family,” it reflects a fundamental misunderstanding of what constitutes a marriage and/or family.

The church claims that “every child deserves a father and a mother.” There is no evidence that kids with straight parents have better outcomes than those with gay parents. You don’t get to make a claim that has no evidence to support it— that’s what we call a lie. It will not stand.

Francis and the Catholic Church are wrong on this one. Nobody gets to hide behind the idea of “God’s plan for marriage and family” as an excuse for hurtful rhetoric and discrimination; it’s dishonest. This kind of teaching discredits the moral authority of the church and anyone (clergy or layperson) that stands in line with it.

Unless it comes around, the church (and its people) will continue to be an agent in the discrimination it claims to prevent.

Historic house finds a new IC home

By BILL COONEY
william-cooney@uiowa.edu

Usually, the removal of a historically significant house would be cause for controversy.

This is not the case with the Houser-Metzger house, which is being relocated next month from 422 Iowa Ave. to 623 E. College St. by the Iowa City Friends of Historic Preservation in order to save it from demolition.

The property at 410 and 422 Iowa Ave. was bought about a year ago by Wisconsin-based developers J. Michael Real Estate, who donated the Houser-Metzger house to the Friends of Historic Preservation at no cost, said Alicia Trimble, the executive director of the group.

"When we first found out the houses were coming down, we didn't think there was much we could do," Trimble said. "Then we were approached by a member with the idea to move the house to 623 College St."

That location, in the College Green Historic District and only about two blocks away from the houses' current spot, became available because the house previously there was struck by lightning last year, said Jessica Bristow, the development director with Friends of Historic Preservation.

"In order to take down a house in a historic district, the owner has to prove the house is irreparable," Bristow said. "The Friends took on the project, worked with the owner of the property, and submitted an application to the Historic Preservation Commission to tear down that house and move the Houser-Metzger house there."

The entire project is expected to cost the Friends of Historic Preservation more than $200,000, Trimble said. The money will come from a loan taken out and money saved up by the group, as well as donations from the community.

That the house was built in 1898 will not make it harder to move, said Rick Goodwin, the owner of Goodwin House Moving. Goodwin's family has been moving houses in Iowa City for more than 85 years.

"It's challenging anytime you move something this big, but it's what we do," Goodwin said.

United Action for Youth, the previous occupants of the buildings, will move its operations into a new space in Eastdale Plaza, but will stay at their location at 355 Iowa Ave. in order to keep a presence near downtown, said Genevieve Anglin, the organization's business director.

United Action for Youth was given a one-year lease on the houses after selling them to allow the nonprofit time to find a new place to operate, Anglin said.

The other house, at 410 Iowa Ave., will not be spared from the wrecking ball, because of additions made to the building, the cost of moving a house, and lack of a place to put it.

A five-story apartment building to house students will be built on the property where the houses stood, said Jim Corcoran, a real-estate agent with J. Michael Realty.

The building will have 100 one- to three-bedroom apartments, Corcoran said.

As for the Houser-Metzger house, Friends of Historic Preservation will renovate it

The Houser-Metzger house is shown on Iowa Avenue on Monday. The house will be moved to College Street for historical preservation; the previous residence was struck by lightning and demolished. (The Daily Iowan/Tawny Schmit) after its relocation, then sell it. Any proceeds will be saved for future preservation projects.

"We'll do some maintenance, there will be a new foundation poured, and we'll remodel the bathrooms and kitchen, basically get it set up as a single-family home," she said. "This really worked out well; all the pieces came together at the right time, and I hope this sets a sort of precedent for how to save historically significant structures in the future."

ARTS & CULTURE

Going all exHotic in eastern Iowa

By CLAIRE DIETZ
claire-dietz@uiowa.edu

Posters for sexual-assault-survivor support often depict white, college women. But what about women who aren't white?

Tiffany Flowers sees the hyper-sexualization of African-American women as a cultural problem that prevents many women from coming forward about their experiences with sexual violence and assault.

Flowers, an assistant director of Amani Community Services, will give a lecture at 5 p.m. Thursday in 256 IMU. The lecture will discuss the stories she has heard at her job, an organization in Cedar Rapids that assists African-American survivors of domestic abuse and sexual assault.

"It is a growing issue and consistent issue as far as the silence of African American women, women that come forward and talk about their experiences with sexual assault," Flowers said. Rebecca Howard, a Just Living Student Ambassador had never realized "sexual assault has been completely whitewashed."

"We subscribe to the narrative that puts a white, college woman on the cover as sexual assault survivors, but there are entire demographics we are not talking about," Howard said. "I thought it would be important, especially on a college campus, to hold an event where someone who has dedicated her whole life to assisting survivors in the African-American community, to educate others on the specific plights regarding objectification, sexualization, and, ultimately, sexual violence many African-American women face."

Many overlook the correlation between hyper-sexualization and sexual violence, particularly regarding women of color, she said.

Erika Christiansen, the director of programming & events in the Office of Outreach & Engagement, said she hopes the lecture will contribute to an essential discussion.

"The topic of social justice is relevant to each person; it connects us with others," Christiansen said. "Injustice affects all of us. Learning the implications these acts hold over a community will be beneficial to anyone in attendance, Flowers said.

"Whether or not it's their personal story, it is an issue that is affecting our coworkers, their children," Flowers said. "Their children are interacting with other children, who may be victims of sexual assault, so this is something that is impacting them whether or not they might be aware of it. This lecture is to show some of the implications of the victim, and the perpetrator as well, and the ripple effect they have on their community."

Flowers biggest recommendation to begin addressing this problem is to speak up.

"One of the biggest things is coming forward and breaking the silence," she said. "I am a big believer that silence is the most oppressive force in sexual assault and sexual violence and the biggest contributor to a culture of sexual violence."

- ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look before you leap. Don't infringe on others' rights in order to get what you want. Find a way to do your own thing without ruffling feathers, and you'll avoid an emotional situation. Understanding and patience will be required.
- TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Focus on your personal and domestic goals. Include those you love in your plans. Love and compassion will be reciprocated and result in priceless rewards. Opportunities will develop as a result of hard work and flawless presentation.
- GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be outgoing, but don't offer to do something you don't have time for or will tire of quickly. Your desire for change and diversity will be met with opposition if balance and compromise aren't applied.
- CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep your plans simple, and be moderate in your expenditures. Emotions will flare if you let someone's unpredictability get to you. Make learning, exploring, and trying new things your focus instead of worrying about what others do or say.
- LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Jump into action, and show everyone what you are capable of accomplishing. Be prepared to deal with an unexpected expense. Take a short trip if it will help you discover information about something that interests you personally.
- VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Plan to have fun, and you will brighten someone's day. Do things that bring you closer to someone you love or that put you more in tune with someone you work with. That will bring stellar results and lead to new beginnings.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Share your feelings, have no regrets. As long as you feel good about who you are and what you have done, nothing else matters. Be true to yourself, and keep moving, even if recent results have not been encouraging.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lay out your plans, and what you have to offer. Don't play down your talent. Toot your own horn, and let everyone know what you are capable of. Opportunity is in reach if you are willing to step into the spotlight.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Honesty will be a deciding factor when dealing with friends, your lover, and those in a position of authority. Concentrate on having fun and spending time with the people you love. Be yourself, and stop trying to outdo others.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Proceed with caution. Keep anyone who can't make up her or his mind at arm's length. If you are going to achieve your objective, you will need solid answers from people who know what they want. Don't let your emotions take over.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid trouble, and if someone is argumentative, back away. Look for ways to improve your appearance and your talents. Take on a physical challenge, or put your energy into pleasing someone you feel passionately about.
- PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take advantage of an emotional situation to bring you closer to someone who inspires you to be yourself. Expand your interests. Encouragement is a two-way street, so reward those who share things with you.

DEMOCRATS GET TESTY IN FIRST DISTRICT

By MITCH MCANDREW | MMCANDREW@UIOWA.EDU

Democrats Monica Vernon and Pat Murphy may have some explaining to do tonight. The two candidates, who will face off in the June 7 primary in hopes of retaking Iowa's 1st Congressional District from first-term Rep. Rod Blum, R-Iowa, have been working to account for parts of their past that seem at odds with their party. The two will participate in a debate at 7 p.m. at Loras College.

Pat Murphy's anti-abortion position

Murphy, a former Iowa Speaker of the House who represented Dubuque in the Iowa House for 12 terms, received a 100 percent rating from the Iowa Right to Life Committee in 2001 and again in 2004. Later that same year, he joined Iowa's chapter of Democrats for Life of America, which listed him as an "All-Star Pro-Life Democrat."

But as an Iowa legislator, Murphy supported several measures to increase women's rights.

He cosponsored an Equal Rights Amendment Bill in the 1995 that ensured "equality of rights under the law." In 1998, he voted to prohibit insurance companies from denying coverage of FDA-approved contraceptive drugs and devices in a bill that became law two years later.

Murphy said this record proves he has worked hard to protect women's rights.

"I have done more to protect women's rights than Monica has," he said. "She has no record of doing it at all."

Murphy also maintains he has been pro-choice since 2003, "when Monica Vernon was still Republican and supporting pro-life candidates."

Bret Nilles, the chairman of the Linn County Democratic Central Committee, attributes Murphy's past pro-life position to his constituency.

"That was based on him representing a portion of Dubuque," he said. "I think after a while, that maybe wasn't where he stood personally anymore."

Monica Vernon and the 'R'

On the other hand, Vernon, the Cedar Rapids city councilor and mayor pro tem who ran for lieutenant governor in Jack Hatch's unsuccessful 2014 gubernatorial bid, was registered as a Republican until she switched parties in 2009.

The switch came at a time when Vernon was considering a bid to be mayor of Cedar Rapids, even though Cedar Rapids council races are nonpartisan. And although Vernon never ran for mayor, she remained a Democrat.

Michelle Gajewski, Vernon's campaign manager, said the switch was not politically motivated but an effort to align with the party that more accurately represented her personal values.

"There just came a point for her where she didn't want to have an 'R' next to her name because it really wasn't who she was," she said.

Gajewski said Vernon was a registered Republican until 2009 only because she didn't participate in partisan politics, which included city council races.

"Over time, she didn't pay attention to it because she just wanted to do good work," she said. "Then when she became more involved in partisan politics, she registered as a Democrat."

Trading blows

The two camps have scuffled over their Democratic records, beginning not long after Murphy announced his campaign last summer. Emily's List, a national organization focused on electing pro-choice Democrats, called Murphy bad for women's access to health care. Murphy disputed this claim, saying it centered on his record from more than a decade ago.

Emily's List also released what it called a clarified version of Murphy's record, which was initially emailed to supporters by Murphy's campaign. The organization said its version of Murphy's record more accurately conveyed his stance on women's rights issues.

"Voters deserve to know Pat Murphy's real record when it comes to women and families, not the revisionist history he conveniently chooses to highlight," Rachel Thomas, the press secretary for Emily's List, wrote in an email.

Murphy has responded by criticizing Vernon's Republican past and working to cast himself as a true progressive. His campaign has released records that emphasize his credibility as a Democrat, including his original 1977 voter-registration form, clearly checked "Democrat."

Both campaigns, however, deny accusations of mudslinging.

"Everyone has to run the best campaign for themselves, for what they want to be talking about," Gajewski said. "We spend time talking about Monica and why she's running for Congress."

Despite several attacks on Vernon, Murphy also said he was focused on the issues and not on tearing down his rival.

"I don't care what any one group says," Murphy said, referring to Emily's List. "I'm focused on the voters in the 1st District."

Will voters care?

While any history the candidates have with the Republican Party could be disappointing to 1st District Democrats, the candidates and Democratic Party leaders that The Daily Iowan interviewed say there are more important things at stake in this election.

Murphy named Social Security's lack of increase in 2015 as an important issue for Iowans, and he criticized Blum for voting for a budget that would privatize Medicare.

Gajewski said Vernon spends much of her time building coalitions with labor unions and Democrats across the state and establishing herself as the candidate who can defeat Blum.

Nilles said the more important contrast between the two is not their record from a decade ago but their experience.

"I think it's a difference between someone who has been in the Iowa Legislature for a long time versus someone who has been an entrepreneur and work with city government," he said.

He said voters should also compare the candidates' evolution since the 2014 election, in which Murphy beat several Democrats (including Vernon) for the nomination but lost the seat to Blum.

"Monica has learned from her experience being on a statewide campaign," he said. "But what's different from when Pat lost two years ago and now? What's changed?"

Peters to hold fundraiser

Chris Peters, who is running as a Republican in the 2nd Congressional District, will hold a fundraiser later this month with one of Iowa's representatives.

The event, slated for April 23 in Davenport, will feature Rep. Rod Blum, R-Iowa. Blum represents the 1st District.

Peters, a Coralville surgeon and owner of Corridor Surgery and Vein Center, is running to be the GOP candidate to go up against incumbent Rep. Dave Loebsack. Peters kicked off his campaign on the first weekend of April. He was approved by Republican Paul Pate, the Iowa secretary of State, in March as a candidate after the campaign submitted a candidate affidavit by mail that had gathered 2,200 signatures.

Peters is a former Libertarian Party National Committee member and was previously an independent before becoming a registered Republican.

Here are the event details:

Chris Peters Fundraising Event

Where: Scott County GOP Office, 2322 E. Kimberly Road Suite 235, Davenport.

When: April 23 at 7 p.m.

Costs: Host Committee (two tickets) are $250 and guests (1 ticket) is $25.

Ritter struck out the next three Falcons and pitched two more innings without allowing another run.

At the plate, the Hawkeyes shone all through the lineup. Senior centerfielder Joel Booker led the comeback, going 1-for-3 at the plate with 2-RBI single to extend the team's lead to 9-6.

Booker said he got help from coaches and even a teammate during his game-changing at-bat.

"You just go to your scouting report and listen to your coaches," Booker said. "Luckily, [Daniel Aaron] Moriel was on second base. He kind of tipped the pitch to me and told me a slider was coming."

Booker also said the Hawks never lost sight of a victory, even trailing 6-0 in the sixth.

"You've just got to stay positive," Booker said. "In the sixth inning, there's still a lot of baseball left."

Larrison finished right behind, coming in second at the Click Shootout and also ranking 11th in team history, 19th in the country.

After running a personal-best time in the 400-hurdles at the Florida Relays earlier, he followed up with a better time, 51.22 seconds.

"He's just working hard," Iowa Director of Track and Field Joey Woody said. "He's put a lot of work in. He's got a good mindset, trying to get better every week. His race rhythm is really good."

Larrison said his next goal is to accomplish what Wolff did at the Click, breaking 51 seconds.

"Afterwards, I just look at my time and place and figure out what adjustments and things I need to fix for next time," Larrison said.

While Wolff and Larrison made headlines by snagging top-two finishes, Douglas ran a career best in that race as well, crossing the finish line in 52.82 seconds.

He finished fifth in the race.

"We haven't had the depth in the 400-hurdles for a couple of years," Woody said. "We have two, three good guys in there, competing, trying to make the finals."

Wolff echoed his coach's comments.

"Compared to years past, we have more hurdlers in general," he said.

Frye's specialty is in the 400, but his coach switched things up by inserting him into a shorter race.

"We knew he had it in him; it was just a matter of time before he broke out," Woody said. "I think running on the 4x1 just opened him up even more and put him at a whole new level."

National rankings

As of the latest NCAA track and field rankings, the Hawkeyes are slotted at No. 33.

The team moved up two spots following the Click Shootout.

According to these rankings, Iowa stands as the fifth-best team in the Big Ten, which has three teams in the top 25.

In the Midwest region, however, Iowa comes in at second.

ton, busted out for arguably his best meet in a Hawkeye uniform.

Frye won the 400 meters, clocking in the best time of his career and the seventh best time in Iowa history (46.58 seconds).

"Winning felt good," he said. "It really helps my confidence that I know I can run with faster people."

His time ranks fourth in the Big Ten.

Frye was also a member of the first-place 400-meter relay. Along with Christian Brissett, Aaron Mallett, and James Harrington, the squad finished in 39.53 seconds, fourth fastest in program history.

Yoways started the top of the seventh inning after Iowa failed to get any insurance runs.

After allowing a single and a walk, Yoways was pulled for sophomore Erin Riding, who didn't allow a hit or a runner to score.

their experience from last season to come out with a better outcome.

"We have made it two out of the three years as a team, which I did not think would happen in my whole life, so it is exciting coming back and being able to show everyone what we are capable of,"

Loochan said.

The experience that the seniors gained last year is the experience that the current juniors are looking to gain.

"I haven't told the younger guys anything yet, but when the time comes, I will set them up with everything they need to know," Boyle said.

Iowa juniors Andrew Botto, Caleb Fischle-Faulk, Cory Paterson, David Spanier, and Mark

Springett will look to absorb as much information as possible as they look forward to next season, when they will be the new leaders of the Iowa gymnastics program.

For now, the seniors still have work to do as they head to for the NCAA Championships.

While the grand stage may be too big for some, the Iowa seniors' four years of work and preparation will finally culminate.

drown out the sound system. The University of Iowa seeks to address those issues in a major way, and it will look for an approval next week for a $3.5 million to $5.5 million renovation.

A massive video board will be installed over center court, with four separate screens facing each sideline and baseline.

The board will be provided by Daktronics Inc. and is estimated to cost $2.8 million. However, the approval at this point is not particularly detailed and is "subject to completion of satisfactory negotiations with the firm." Therefore, the cost for the purchase and installation of the board has a cap at $3.5 million.

In addition to the video board, there will be a revamping of the sound system as well as additional screens around the arena and near the tunnel. Including a new control room, the video board, and sound system, the project as a whole may reach, but not exceed, $5.5 million.

The Athletics Department earnings and gifts will pay for the renovations in no more than five years, and the arena is scheduled to be completely functional by August.

After the UI made all sorts of noise across its sports programs in 2015-16, Carver-Hawkeye will surely follow suit next year.

Carver-Hawkeye is already one of the most iconic buildings in Iowa City, and now it's scheduled to get quite a boost in the coming year.

Carver-Hawkeye, which hosts events for the men's and women's basketball teams, volleyball, wrestling, and gymnastics, despite a passionate fan base inside, can occasionally be said to encourage a less-than-perfect game-day atmosphere.

Sometimes things get too quiet, and the fans have trouble getting engaged. Other times, when they do get loud, they can

COMEBACK SPURS HAWKS' WIN

The Iowa baseball scored nine runs in the sixth and seventh inning to assure their victory.

By JAKE MOSBACH | jacob-mosbach@uiowa.edu

The Hawkeye baseball team entered the bottom of the sixth inning of Tuesday night's midweek contest against the Air Force Academy trailing 6-0. Things were going the Falcons' way in every aspect of the game.

But in the bottom of the sixth, a spark was lit, and the comeback was on.

The Hawks used a 5-run sixth and a 4-run seventh to beat Air Force, 9-7, and improve to 15-15 on the year, the first time the team has hit the .500 mark.

"It was one of those games where I felt like, other than maybe one or two at-bats, we were hitting the ball hard," Iowa head coach Rick Heller said after the game. "I just kept telling the guys to keep swinging the bats."

Iowa's starter on the mound, senior right-hander Calvin Mathews, managed four innings of work before being relieved by freshman Shane Ritter. Mathews gave up 2 earned runs on three hits, striking out four. Josh Martsching earned his second save of the season.

Ritter earned the win (1-0), also going four innings. After Air Force hitters jumped on him early in the fifth and sixth innings, the youngster from Plainfield, Illinois, settled down.

Ritter said pitching coach Scott Brickman showed him some tough love after the game.

"[Brickman] goes after the game, 'You grew up today; in that first inning, you had no command.' But after that I kind of settled in," Ritter said. "As a pitcher, you've just got to go out whenever you get the call."

After allowing 4 earned runs in his first two innings of work, Ritter knew something had to change, specifically after a Tyler Zabojnik solo home run to make it 6-0.

"He creamed that ball," Ritter said. "As soon as I got that ball

Softball holds on to nail UNI

By MARIO WILLIAMS

It was a quiet first few innings of softball between Iowa and Northern Iowa.

Eventually, however, the bats started clicking, and things got interesting. In the end, the Hawkeyes were able to capture a 6-3 win.

"We just finally made the adjustments we needed to," Iowa head coach Marla Looper said after the game. "We needed to put the ball in play, because you never know what's going to happen."

Junior Claire Fritsch was the first batter for the Hawks in the first inning and got things going with a single. Junior Sammi Gyerman followed with another to the right side of the field.

Those were Iowa's only hits until an explosive fourth inning that began with Northern Iowa pitcher Bailey Lange hitting two batters.

Things went downhill quickly for the Panthers after that, because Lange was clearly rattled. She was pulled for Chelsea Ross after a Sarah Kurtz RBI single gave the Hawkeyes the lead of the game.

"We would've like scoring right away, but I think we transitioned and attacked," junior Kaitlyn Mullarkey said. "Our dugout got pumped up when a lot of our hitters got hit. We just took that to the plate and scored a bunch of runs."

The pitching change didn't do much for the Panthers, at least in the fourth. Ross was eventually able to get out of the inning but not before an wild pitch, an error, a Mullarkey double, and a single from Sammi Gyerman gave Iowa a 6-0 lead.

base. It's something they have struggled with this season, and if this is a sign of things to come, it's very good for Iowa.

"The winner of a game usually makes the first adjustment," Looper said. "I'd like to have gotten the other ones in earlier. We got more chances, and we just have to capitalize on them all the time."

Junior Shayla Starckenburg's performance in the circle, throwing five scoreless innings, kept the Panthers in check. The Panthers finally got after her in the sixth inning, stealing home and scoring 2 runs.

Sophomore Kennedy Bailey was the star of the inning, popping a single into center field to plate 2 runs.

After Bailey's hit, Starckenburg was pulled in favor of Ashley Yoways, who used a strikeout and pop fly to get out of the inning.

"Shayla had a really good game once she kind of settled in," Looper said. "She got out of a couple of jams, which was good to see. She buckled down, and she took care of business."

Gymnasts set for final rodeo

By RICARDO ASCENCIO
ricardo-ascencio@uiowa.edu

Goodbyes can be a terrible pill to swallow, and no one knows that better than the seniors who lead the men's gymnastics team.

This weekend's NCAA Championships will not only close the season for the men's gymnastics squad but also the careers of Iowa seniors Matt Loochtan, Jack Boyle, Doug Sullivan, Del Vecchio Orozco, Cyrus Dobre-Mofid, and Emmanuel Monroy.

The past four years have flown by for the six gymnasts, and while it is sad to know their careers will soon come to an end, they are excited about this weekend; they will look to finally finish what they started.

"This is the culmination of their entire lives," head coach JD Reive said, "They are excited to go in, and they have had some great leadership here that make up a big group of guys that have come up with the program that are embracing their next stage in life but also this feeling of 'holy cow, the light at the end of the tunnel is here.'"

Reive has plenty to be proud of, as the leadership of his seniors have placed the Hawkeyes as the seventh-best team in the NCAA and have qualified the team for the 2016 NCAA Championships in Columbus, Ohio.

While every senior has done his part to help Iowa advance in the postseason, there is no doubt whether the Hawkeyes live and die by their two-standout seniors, Boyle and Loochtan.

They have time and time again brought a ferocious one-two punch for the Hawkeyes, consistently placing in the top five in every regular season match they have competed in.

While Reive and the rest of the team love seeing the competition between the seniors, Loochtan doesn't view it that way.

"Whether me or [Jack] ends up coming out on top doesn't matter to me, as long as we do our jobs and get the victory; that's all that matters," Loochtan said.

This weekend's championship will be the last time the Iowa seniors will step in the gym, and they hope to use

Hurdlers lead the Hawkeyes

Iowa's sprint group was solid over the weekend, helping the Hawkeyes to a win out west.

By ADAM HENSLEY
adam-hensley@uiowa.edu

While Iowa's sprint group headlines its success on the track, the 400-meter hurdlers are making sure they do not go under the radar.

The trio of Mitch Wolff, Noah Larrison, and Chris Douglas shone at the Jim Click Invitational this past weekend.

Wolff, a senior, took home a victory in the 400-meter hurdles. He finished in under 51 seconds, 50.96 seconds to be exact, for the first time in his career.

"It was a blur," Wolff said. "Everything happened so fast; I was not paying attention to time. It felt good, but I'm still hungry."

While shaving time down under 51 seconds remains a major achievement, Wolff wants more.

"Fifty-one seconds was just the first hurdle," he said. "I want to get down to 50, 49 seconds."

Wolff currently sits at ninth all-time at Iowa in the event.
