For UI, dry is better

The University of Iowa recognizes National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week to raise awareness about high-risk alcohol consumption nationally and on campus.

By MARISSA PAYNE | marissa-payne@uiowa.edu

The Pentacrest will be adorned with 1,800 flags this week as a symbol of the number of U.S. college students who die every year due to alcohol poisoning or other alcohol-related incidents as part of National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week.

According to the University of Iowa's 2016-19 Alcohol Harm Reduction Plan, UI students "continue to drink more and experience more negative consequences than college students nationally."

A week like this is one way to help raise awareness about high-risk alcohol consumption at the UI, Trisha Welter said, the senior behavioral health consultant at UI Student Health and Wellness.

"It's a national week to bring awareness to alcohol issues on college campuses," she said. "We're not immune to alcohol issues."

High-risk drinking has decreased significantly since the UI implemented its first of three Alcohol Harm Re-

Phil Week reaches 'culture' goal

By NAOMI HOFFERBER | naomi-hofferber@uiowa.edu

While numbers are still being counted on how much money was raised during We Are Phil week, an estimated 500 University of Iowa employees donated, and more than 200 new payroll pledges have been enrolled this past week.

So far, more than $1.4 million has been donated by UI staff and faculty.

"We are so pleased with how University of Iowa faculty and staff have embraced the annual We Are Phil campaign over the past four years," Lynette Marshall, UI Foundation President and CEO said in an email to The Daily Iowan. "Not only are more people on campus giving back than ever before, but we are delighted that they are talking with each other about the difference that philanthropy makes at the university."

Last week was We Are Phil week, which consisted of over 40 events to encourage faculty and staff to give back to the UI, including lunches, musical performances, bag tournaments, and trivia events.

"We take the approach of we are really more about building a culture of awareness and philanthropy rather than focusing on a dollar amount or a participation rate," said Sara Ring, the associate director of development for the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences at the UI Foundation. "For us, yes, we look at what is going on during Phil's Week, but we also look at it throughout the year."

Ring said officials don't have the final numbers yet for what was raised or the level of overall participation, due to the plethora of events that took

Officials stress river safety

By WYLLIAM SMITH | wyllsmith@uiowa.edu

After recent incidents that occurred near the Iowa River, the Johnson County Sheriff's Office warns local residents about proper river safety.

"Only one confirmed drowning this year which was the UNI student, but we have been called out several times for 'a person in the water,'" said Sgt. Brad Fisher of the Johnson County Sheriff's Office. "Typically, there are two to three drownings in Johnson County each year."

Nathan Twedt, a University of Northern Iowa student, was found dead in the river on Sept. 10. After investigations, it was discovered that Twedt was intoxicated prior to his death, which was ruled an accidental drowning by the department.

Fisher said if people see someone fall in a river, they should not panic but instead quickly and intelligently react.

duction Plans in 2010, said Tanya Villhauer, the associate director for Student Wellness and Harm Reduction Initiatives.

In 2009, the pre-Harm Reduction Plan year, Villhauer said 70.3 percent of students reported engaging in high-risk drinking, while in 2016, 50.9 percent of students reported engaging in high-risk drinking.

The UI is notorious for consistently placing in the top five on The Princeton Review's annual party school rankings. Coming in at sixth place on the list this year, this is the first time the UI has not been in the top five since 2012.

"There's change happening, but we have a lot more work to do," she said.

One such effort the UI has undertaken is eliminating the perception that a majority of the students drink, Villhauer said. UI students feel that a high percentage of students drink on campus, she said, but in reality, that percentage is lower.

"We know that our students come here and they want to fit in," she said. "They want to feel like Iowa is the place for them, and if the perception is that everyone is drinking and they aren't, that they're not being a Hawkeye."

Part of this year's Alcohol Harm Reduction plan involves attracting and retaining more low-risk drinkers to campus, Villhauer said.

This effort, UI Student Government Vice President Lauren Freeman said, is key to combating the party-school culture.

"One thing we talk about a lot ... is somehow assuring students that there are students on campus that don't drink and creating a culture around the fact that it's OK to not drink," she said.

Freeman said one thing they're advocating for on a state level is a medical amnesty policy that would allow underage drinkers to call for medical help — either for themselves or another person — and not face criminal charges.

On a university level, Freeman said the UI has been implementing more recovery services for students recovering from substance abuse.

"We've been ... looking at ways in which we can join our efforts throughout the university and the hospital and the University Counseling Services so that we can support those students recovering," she said. Welter said handouts containing information about campus resources will be a new component to the UI's implementation of the week.

"We'll have students on the Pentacrest with handouts on where students can turn to for help if they want to talk with someone about their alcohol abuse," she said.

In light of the UI's efforts to decrease high-risk drinking on campus, Freeman said National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness week is a great way to recognize the university's progress on the issue.

"The week is an important culmination of efforts that occur on campus throughout the year to ensure that students are safe," she said. "[It's] celebrating those efforts and how far we've come with the new Alcohol Harm Reduction Plan."

"Reach out for them or throw a rope to get them, but don't put yourself into any danger," he said.

In Twedt's case, Fisher said, alcohol was a major contributing factor in his drowning. Associate Director of Education For Student Wellness and Harm Reduction Initiatives Tanya Villhauer said high risk drinking can be a threat to a person's safety.

"High-risk drinking, which is defined as having five or more drinks in a sitting within the last two weeks, is where bad things start to happen to our students," she said.

Villhauer said the Alcohol Harm Reduction committee has data on the "negative consequences" University of Iowa students face because they are participating in high risk drinking. At least 58 percent of UI students have had at least one of these experiences in the past year, she said.

"Experiencing blackouts, or forgetting where they were or what they were doing, regretting something they did, getting in trouble with the police, having unprotected sex, physically injuring themselves or others, etc.," Villhauer said were some of the "negative consequences."

Villhauer said while the number of alcohol-related incidents have gone down in recent years, the job is not yet done.

"The culture has made a positive shift, but we still have a lot of work to do," she said. "However, at least for now, we are headed in the right direction."

In another situation, the Sheriff's Office and Iowa City Fire and Rescue were called in the early morning on Oct. 3 about a man who was struggling in the Iowa River.

"The Sheriff's Office responds to a number of calls on the waterways of Johnson County each year," Fisher said.

When authorities arrived, it turned out that the man was just swimming in the river, said Fire Department Battalion Chief Brian Platz.

Fisher said that while it is legal to have boats or canoes in the river, it is illegal to swim in it. But in the case that a person does fall in, Fisher said they should try to stay afloat and call out for help.

"Coming from someone who can't swim, the thought that I could get drunk and fall in the river is terrifying," UI student Shelby Strube said.

place throughout separate colleges within the UI.

This year, the College of Dentistry's We Are Phil program highlighted a new Wellness Garden fund, which raised around $14,000, and the UI Libraries fund-raised for a new scholarship to support their student employees.

More notably, the UI College of Nursing had a 92 percent participation rate — the highest so far.

"The focus was on the participation level, not the dollar level of the gift," Liz Swanson, a leader for the College of Nursing with the UI Foundation, said. "Our executives said it was important to show support. I think they really took that to heart."

Swanson said they had tried to make Phil

Week fun, with different events planned throughout the week, and this year they tried a new approach, where they had team captains for Phil Week for each floor of the nursing building.

"I think people realize that there's an ongoing need for things that there's just not funding for," Ring said. "I think they feel that this is something that is important to them in their lives and their careers and they want to have some sort of meaningful impact. I think there is a variety of reasons why people do it, for every person they could come up with a different reason."

More than half of the payroll pledges made are on-going pledges, meaning they will carry on for a cause from one year to the next.

"It's a marathon and not a sprint — it's an ongoing thing. We're building from year to year," Ring said.

Police hunt for burglar Authorities are on the lookout for a burglar.

The Iowa City Area Crimestoppers are offering a $1,000 cash reward for information leading to the arrest of local burglar.

According to the Iowa City police, on Oct. 13 at approximately 10 p.m., police responded to a report of a burglary at a residence in the 700 block of East Fairchild Street. The resident said he saw someone inside his garage. Once discovered, the suspect assaulted the resident by striking him over the head with a hard object, then ran away.

The suspect was described as a man of average height and build, possibly wearing dark clothing and a red cap. In addition, the suspect possibly had white or cream-colored paint splattered on his clothing.

The investigation is ongoing, and anyone with information about the crime should contact Crimestoppers at 319-358-8477. People who give information will remain anonymous.

UI issues alert after reported assault

The University of Iowa police issued a crime alert on the evening of Oct. 15 regarding a report of sexual assault that occurred at approximately 2 a.m. that day.

According to the alert, the victim reported being approached outside an East Side residence hall by suspect who initiated a conversation with the victim. The victim was then taken to a nearby corner of the building, where the incident allegedly took place. The victim then yelled, and the suspect left

Serving the vets for a change in Kinnick tailgate

By ADDISON MARTIN
addison-martin@uiowa.edu

Veterans in Iowa City and surrounding areas were treated to an away-game tailgate in the Press Box and Presidential Suite of Kinnick Stadium for the Oct. 15 Purdue game.

The event was part of an outreach program put together by the Johnson County Veterans Affairs Office and Director Gary Boseneiler.

"I came up with the idea, I couldn't tell you how or why ... it was just a way for us to have a unique event for veterans who are unable to go into Kinnick Stadium," Boseneiler said. "It's just an outreach opportunity for veterans to connect to other veterans and family members as well as [veterans affairs] resources."

This is the third year of this event, and Boseneiler said it has been growing every year. The event is sponsored by several groups, including the Iowa State Building and Construction Trade Council and the Iowa Interstate Railroad, and is primarily funded by the Iowa Department of Veterans Affairs outreach funds.

Veterans and family members who want to attend don't even need to show a military identification; the event runs on the trust of those who are interested.

"I don't require RSVP or pre-registration or verification of ID," Boseneiler said. "I still trust the veterans and their family members."

In addition to support groups, family, and the veterans themselves, some prominent politicians were in attendance, including Rep. Dave Loebsack, D-Iowa. He noted his deep connection to the veterans, despite never having served, through his stepson and his stepson's wife, who are both in the Marines.

"I was on an Armed Services Committee for eight years, went to Iraq a number of times, Afghanistan even more — maybe four times to Iraq, seven to Afghanistan," he said. "It really made me appreciate our troops and the service that they provide for us ... and when they come back we just have to make sure we treat them with the dignity and the respect they deserve."

Those who attended the Oct. 15 event were treated with food, a comfortable place to watch the game, and the chance to learn about and take advantage of many organizations and groups that were there to assist veterans.

Veteran Rico Rawls and fiancée Katie Hood were just two of the attendees who have benefited from events such as this and have benefited from being in touch with Boseneiler at the Veterans Affairs Office.

"A lot of veterans have post-traumatic stress, and they don't want to be around big crowds but are comfortable around other soldiers, so this is very awesome to get out and see each other," Rawles said.

Hood said they even got their house with the help of the Military Warrior Support Fund, which they discovered through events similar to this one.

"Getting out seeing other veterans, seeing some of the things they offer in the community, and you make a lot of contacts with other veterans, and they tell you about other programs," Rawles said. "You make a lot of connections, and it's just a way to relax, for veterans to relax around people they're comfortable with."

Running for learning

By JACK BERNING
jack-berning@uiowa.edu

The annual Run for the Schools benefiting the Iowa City public schools and Regina Catholic School was held on Sunday, beginning at the Robert A. Lee Recreational Center.

Participants in the race were able to choose from either running a half mile, full mile, 5K/10K, or a half-marathon.

The race weaves through downtown Iowa City as well as the surrounding area. Length and difficulty varied based on which race participants ran in.

Community members both young and old were encouraged to run in the event, from kids in elementary school to senior citizens.

"I like to run the hills," said Charles Potter, a senior citizen visiting from Muscatine. "I haven't run in the race since 2000, because they didn't have a full marathon, but I'm too old to be running those, now. It's a nice little half-marathon."

While there were many visiting runners like Potter, there were also a great number of people taking place locally.

UI student Alex Luchowski, a runner in the 5K, said, "It's cool that the community is able to come together for the schools. College kids, families, and just avid runners are all out here. It's just great all around energy."

The purpose of the event is to raise money for the 26 public Iowa City Schools and the private Regina Catholic school. The fundraiser is one of the largest of the year, said Susan Brennan, the executive director of the Iowa City School District Foundation.

The money raised from the event is used to improve the physical-education and library programs, as well as more specialized programs, such as STEM and eighth-grade theater.

"This race is huge for us," Brennan said. "This event is worth so much to our schools. When you add up the thousands of dollars this event has raised for our schools over the years, it's tough put into words how much we are able to do with the money."

According to the Run for the Schools website, the race has raised $750,000 since it started, and has raised over $50,000 in each of the last six years. In 2015, the run raised a record $72,000, with a record $11,000 returned to 26 individual school buildings through participation awards.

"We feel so lucky to have such a great community and such a great event, benefiting our schools," Brennan said. "The money raised by these runs goes so far into improving or schools; we really are so thankful."

Running against the monolith

Kegan-Michael Key and Jordan Peele, in a skit, satirized the idea that “Black Republicans are not a monolith.” Christopher Peters, the Republican candidate in Iowa’s 2nd Congressional District, maintains a similar sentiment in saying “the Republican Party is not a monolith.” Aligned with libertarian ideology, Peters believes in the power of the free market, advocating liberty-focused, market-based solutions to America’s problems. Despite his libertarian-leaning views, Peters is running as a Republican against Iowa’s Rep. Dave Loebsack.

Although the Republican candidate noted his concern that the country’s attention is overly consumed by the presidential race, it is important to consider how independent candidates and voters alike can function in the partisan, two-party system. For Peters, focusing on a better future will effect change in the current system. He has in the past run as an independent, libertarian candidate, with limited electoral success. Peter’s decision to run as a Republican illustrates the pressure placed on candidates to bend toward a partisan standard in order to achieve political success.

Peters revealed an interesting dichotomy between what he describes as the difference between running for office and governing during an interview with Daily Iowan staff, which appears to transcend the traditional “partisan filter.” Because much emphasis is placed on a candidate’s political affiliation, it seems that bipartisanship and general virtues of character come as a mere afterthought. Peters said his “most important constitu-cy is his family,” and while this may or may not be proven true, it does speak to something that appears to be obscured under the lens of the partisan filter.

Voting reform would be necessary to escape the traditional two-party system, but that does not mean the merits of a multiparty system could not be applied to our current system. Coalitions and competition among candidates could prove to create a more effective and diverse governing body. These are aspects that already exist but remain hidden under the bold-type labels of political candidates, but once the partisan filter is removed from the eye, we would be able to see the complexity of our current political system.

It is not a matter of introducing features to our governing body but rather encouraging and improving the ones that are already present. Peters is by no means an outlier, because party lines have proven to be flexible and accommodative throughout history, with former presidential candidate Sen. Bernie Sanders as a notable recent example. It’s not an issue of how one decides to run but rather, how one wishes to govern, and this is not dictated by the party one claims to be. When one decides to enter a system composed of a spectrum of government representatives almost arbitrarily assigned a political party at times, it becomes all the more important for candidates to decide what they wish to achieve in semi-flawed system. For voters, it will become an issue of what they want to see in their elected officials, and to do so without considering political affiliation first.

Caricature that keeps on giving

By VIVIAN MEDITHI
vivian-medithi@uiowa.edu

It’s 6:14 a.m. on a Sunday; the birds are chirping, and Donald Trump is tweeting, “Watched ‘Saturday Night Live’ hit job on me. Time to retire the boring and unfunny show. Alec Baldwin portrayal stinks. Media rigging election.”

Trump cuts a figure that seems impossible not to lampoon. He seems committed to super-villainy so far right it seems ludicrous and not merely terrifying. A smarter man with the same politics would have been elected, but we got Trump instead.

Trump has been lambasted not only by “Saturday Night Live” but also by the current season of “South Park” and “The Simpsons.” Hillary Clinton was interviewed by Zach Galifianakis for his web series “Between Two Ferns,” a clear move to appeal to younger voters. And “Broad City” had an extended riff involving volunteering for the Clinton campaign, culminating in a surprisingly endearing cameo by the presidential candidate herself. In a polarizing election year, in which even the press has felt the impetus to take a side (almost entirely in support of Clinton), pop-culture endorsements have a proven effect. But while humor can galvanize people to action, satirizations of Trump only serve to normalize his rhetoric and play down his crimes.

On “Saturday Night Live” this past weekend, Alec Baldwin, playing Trump, said the women accusing him of sexual assault should “shut the hell up” and said Clinton committed crime “like a black.” Satire shouldn’t be comfortable, but for satire to be effective, it has to punch up, not down. Trump has shown time and again he thrives on attention, good or bad. Regurgitating his talking points on prime-time television gives him that attention.

Even mocking him helps make his points about a media vendetta against him, helping the Trump campaign and further polarizing his supporters.

Both of these things will inevitably happen in the course of not only comedy but journalism. To report on a man like Trump, even by simply parroting what he says and offering the barest of fact-checking, would be spun into Trump’s favor. And to be sure, simply hearing what Trump says won’t make one a Trump supporter; you have to agree with what he says.

In comedy, however, the cathartic release of laughter blurs the lines between reporting and endorsing. When liberal audiences laugh at “Trump” saying victims of sexual abuse should “shut the hell up” or at claims that black people are criminals, what does that say about them? By turning the most despicable aspects of Trump into caricatured jokes, we become inured to the terror of his policies. Up until his most recent scandal, audio recordings of Trump bragging about sexual assault, he had remained electable, if unlikeable, to many in the GOP. Indeed, nothing about Trump’s policies has drawn a fraction of the ire this recent scandal has. By refusing to rebuke Trump until now, the Republicans implicitly say his policies are fine by them. The only thing that will stop Trump’s politics from becoming our political reality is his own lack of electability, and that’s not laughable, it’s worrying.

No comedy show is going to stop making fun of Trump, just as no press outlet will stop reporting on him; he is the gift that keeps on giving, and having elbowed his way into the spotlight, he will get every second of his 15 minutes of fame. But we have a responsibility to be more critical of how we portray Trump, even now that his defeat seems all but ensured. Trump may not win the presidency, but he seems determined to tap into a vein of anger that runs deeply in America. He’ll use any tool available to him, from tweets to press to comedy; we would do well to disarm him.

GUEST OPINION

An attempt to raise U.S. politics

One of my goals when I decided to run for Congress this year was to elevate our political discourse. Throughout the campaign, I’ve rejected partisan talking points in favor of nuanced and realistic discussions about the issues that matter in Iowa’s 2nd District.

My campaign team and I have tried to avoid discussing the presidential election. Some Democrats have accused me of endorsing Donald Trump because I wouldn’t disavow him, while some Republicans accused me of disavowing Trump because I wouldn’t endorse him. As an independent-minded Republican in a Democrat-leaning district, I hoped to make the point that presidential politics shouldn’t dominate our political conversations to the extent that it has.

A large number of former and current Republican politicians have now repudiated Trump. All of them have far more political clout than I do, and to be honest, I don’t think people should care so much about what I think. But I cannot avoid the issue any longer.

Trump’s remarks about women that surpassed last week — along with his well-documented pattern of disparaging remarks about women, minorities, and other groups — demonstrate disturbing character deficiencies. My wife and I have three teenage sons, and if I ever learned that any of them grew up to be men who conduct themselves like Trump, I would be deeply disappointed. I must trust that Julie [Peters] and I have raised them better than that.

Trump’s behavior and temperament are only a part of the problem. He has repeatedly demonstrated a poor grasp of constitutionalism, civil rights, the rule of law, the role of diplomacy versus military interventionism, and even fundamental economics. I should have spoken out against him much earlier and regret that I failed to do so.

At the same time, I continue to believe that Hillary Clinton is a similarly flawed candidate. Like many Americans, I believe she is insincere, manipulative, and untrustworthy. Over her career, Clinton has consistently supported economic policies that favor the wealthy at the expense of ordinary Americans, and she’s been a proponent of every American military intervention in recent history. The company she keeps, by itself, should give us all great concern — she is closely tied to the monied interests that contributed to our financial crisis, as well as world leaders whose records on human rights are questionable at best.

Neither Trump nor Clinton have exhibited the character and judgment necessary to be president, and I cannot vote for either of them.

These are two of the most unpopular political figures of our time, but this isn’t just about them. Any system that would select these two candidates as the choices for president is deeply flawed and is in need of fundamental reform.

I have been warmly welcomed by most Iowa Republicans since I decided earlier this year to run for Congress on the GOP ticket, and I remain ready to work with them, both during this campaign and throughout my time in Congress. I grew up in a Republican household, I’ve supported many Republican candidates over my lifetime, and my staff is made up of young Republicans. But like most Americans and most Iowans, my views don’t fully align with either party’s platform.

I won’t begrudge or shame anyone for whom they chose to vote. But to those supporting a candidate they see as the “lesser of two evils,” I ask this: How many more elections will we have to vote this way? Does voting this way bring us closer to fixing our political system, or push us further away? And most importantly, what will you do in the next four years to help?

The presidential campaign has become a colossal distraction from the many other races happening around our state and the problems our nation must address. Regardless of who wins the presidential election, we will need strong and principled legislators to stand up to whatever nonsense might emanate from the White House in the next four years.

— Christopher Peters, GOP candidate for Iowa’s 2nd Congressional District seat.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Sanders supporter says, What’s the choice?

As a Bernie Sanders supporter, contributor, and voter, I realize that it is important to face some fundamental facts: Either Hillary Clinton or Donald Trump will be the next president, and, for Sanders supporters, the most productive way to achieve our goals is to vote and to vote for Clinton. It might be tempting to vote for someone other than these two candidates or to sit out the election. The trouble is that not voting for Clinton will make it virtually impossible to achieve the progressive goals we share, especially if the Republicans retain control of both houses of Congress.

Try to imagine the degree to which a Trump presidency would negate progress in the following areas: immigration reform and the humane treatment of immigrants; reduced economic inequality; respect for human and civil rights; better race relations; constitutional guarantees; religious tolerance and freedom; sentencing reforms; protecting the environment and addressing climate change; work-place safety and consumer protection; college tuition subsidies and student loan reforms; reproductive freedom for women; expanded access to health care; and campaign-finance reform. These are all positions that progressives support and anything other than a Clinton win will doom the chances for moving forward in these vital areas and not just for four years but, conceivably, for eight. And this is before we even consider the question of Supreme Court appointments.

The path forward should be clear. Who the better candidate is in this election is also clear.

Climate change front and center in festival

By CHARLES PECKMAN
charles-peckman@uiowa.edu

The University of Iowa Museum of Natural History was packed full with professors, students, and Iowa City residents on the afternoon of Oct. 15 for the Iowa Climate Festival.

Elizabeth Stone, an associate professor of analytical chemistry, said, "As the leaves on the trees change this fall, it is obvious to see that the season is changing." What is less apparent, she said, are the hidden changes the environment experiences.

Stone, who was instrumental in organizing the event, posed a question to the audience: "The last three decades have been the warmest in history. So where do we go from here?"

Professor Jerald Schnoor, who holds the Allen S. Henry Chair in Engineering, spoke about the Paris Climate Agreement — a December 2015 summit in which 195 countries met to create a plan to mitigate climate change.

"There was a sense of emergency about the meeting," he said. "We're the last generation with the capacity to help the environment."

Schnoor said he received one of the 3,000 media slots to the event, which gave him "backstage access" to meetings conducted by heads of state from around the world.

He said he spent many late nights with Marcelo Mena-Carrasco, a UI graduate and the head of the Chilean delegation for the Paris Agreement, where most of their conversations involved being "at the 11th hour" to address the problem of climate change.

To Schnoor, the agreement represents "the start of a new era in international environmental policy."

Schnoor said for the United States in particular, the agreement is incredibly positive. Countries create their own plans, and the terms of the agreement are ratified by the United Nations, as opposed to, in the U.S., the Senate, in which changes in policy can be occur free from governmental intervention.

The United States, along with other major countries, will give $100 billion a year by 2020 to help developing countries affected by climate change. Although affluent countries will contribute substantial funds, Schnoor said "rich and developing countries alike will have to make a plan and cut down their emissions."

In addition to Schnoor, Chris Anderson, an owner of SkyDoc LLC, noted the effect of the Paris Agreement on the reduction of climate change in Iowa.

Anderson started off by drawing a distinction about climate change he finds extraordinarily important.

"Climate change is an observation, not a belief," he said.

The first sign of climate change in the Midwest was increased rainfall in the area, he said. He plans on implementing projection models to show a range projection for environmental change in Iowa.

"What we want is to cut back our uncertainty by about 90 percent," he said.

Anderson said, for example, if Iowans want to put a limit to the number of floods they have, they first need to respond to the changes the Paris Agreement asks for.

"How we react next is totally by our beliefs," he said.

Although Anderson said climate change is an observation, if people believe they have the capacity to reverse the effects of global warming, anything can be accomplished.

He believes Iowans are culturally ready to reverse the effects of global warming and noted that younger generations will play a key role in this.

"Their involvement will definitely help lessen the rate of environmental change," he said.

Brenda Nations, the Iowa City sustainability coordinator, said that although the climate-change conversation can sometimes seem bleak, Iowa City in particular is ready to do something about environmental change.

"Cities have been a fortunate leader in the area of climate change," she said.

An audience member asks about a molecular formation during the Iowa Climate Festival at the Museum of Natural History on Oct. 15. There were hands-on experiments at the Climate Science Fair for members of the public to interact and learn with. (The Daily Iowan/Ting Xuan Tan)

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Put more effort into your work, and use your skills in diverse ways in order to make more money. Negotiating contracts and taking on new responsibilities are favored. Don't let anyone speak for you. Call on resources to get ahead.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stay calm, and make the most of your day. Business trips, learning, and taking the initiative to get things done will put you in a good position. A kind gesture will help you keep the peace with someone who is facing difficult choices.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Listen carefully, and question anything that doesn't seem accurate. Do your best to avoid involvement in situations that can tarnish your reputation. Use your diverse knowledge and experience to find a way to secure your position.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Trust in yourself and your judgment. The minute you let insecurity take over, problems will arise. Don't hesitate to take care of matters, or someone else may take over. Choose love and peace over conflicts and arguments.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Discuss the changes you want to make at home, work, or personally with anyone who will be affected by what you do. It's best to clear the air so you have nothing in your way. Strive to work toward a better future.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Express the way you feel to help you overcome any worrisome issues. Get involved in an activity that will improve your health and give you an outlet to lower your stress. Make mental and physical health your priority.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take a breather, and rethink your strategy. Changes may entice you, but they won't turn out the way you want. More research is needed if you want to ensure a positive outcome. Anger is best handled with diplomacy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stay on top of any partnership issues. If you neglect to take care of your responsibilities, you will have to make up for negligence later. Your imagination will lead to an interesting lifestyle change.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Screen your calls, and stick to the people and the projects that are easiest for you to deal with. A last-minute change will turn out to be to your benefit, so don't fret — just keep moving forward. Romance will boost your personal life.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't expect everyone to do things your way, and you won't be disappointed. You can offer advice, but you can't make decisions for other people. Do your own thing, and don't lose sleep over what happens.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep a clear head when dealing with family, friends, and your peers. Don't let your emotions cause you trouble. Take the time to think matters through, and you will come up with a workable solution that will make others take notice.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't let anyone take advantage of you. Take care of your responsibilities, and move on to the projects that will help you build a brighter future. Someone from your past will help you revive your dreams, hopes, and wishes.

Hawkeye women's golf regroups for N. Carolina

By JESS WESTENDORF
jessica-westendorf@uiowa.edu

The Iowa women's golf team will compete in the Greenville Regional Preview in North Carolina at Ironwood Golf Course today and Tuesday.

First and second rounds will be held today, with tee times starting at 8:30 a.m. The final round of the tournament will start at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday.

The Hawkeyes will be joined by 17 teams at the tournament, including East Carolina University, the host. This is the first time the Iowa women's golf team will participate in the Greenville Regional Preview.

The tournament will be played at The Ironwood Golf Course designed by golf professional and architect Lee Trevino. During Trevino's golf career he won 29 PGA events, including six majors.

The Ironwood Golf Course is a par 72 course, stretching 6,634 yards.

Freshman Sophie Liu will be in the No. 1 spot for Iowa, followed by junior Morgan Kukla in the No. 2 position. Junior Jessica Ip, senior Jessie Sindlinger, and sophomore Shawn Renegarbe will make up the rest of the Hawkeye lineup.

It has been a week and a half since the Hawkeyes competed in their last tournament, the Golfweek Conference Challenge. The team placed 14th overall in Vail, Colorado, ending with a final score of 915.

During the break between last tournament and this tournament, the Hawkeyes focused primarily on its short game and putting — they felt that was where they struggled the most in previous tournaments.

Short drills became the team's best friend Oct. 11 and 13, the team's main practice days. Head coach Megan Menzel set up small drills around the putting greens and turned the practices into team competitions.

"We have been doing a lot of short game and putting," said senior Jessie Sindlinger. "Last tournament, we felt like that is where we lost a lot of strokes, as well as easy up and downs."

The team wanted to focus on the little things going into the next tournament. The Hawkeyes used their long break to play at different golf courses, including the Cedar Rapids Country Club, as well as playing a few qualifying rounds.

"This last week and a half we have been focusing on the little things like making 3-footers, 4-footers, and 5-footers and easy up and downs to help get our confidence back up," Kukla said. "Personally, I am looking forward to getting back into the lineup for this tournament."

Overall, the Hawkeyes believe they had a productive break; they worked on getting together and having good team conversations focusing on what they wanted to work on before the Greenville Regional.

"I think we have a great energy right now," Menzel said. "I think we have put in a lot of hard work, and the team is hungry to get back out there and show that we are a better team than how we have been playing. We are excited to go out and try to get the win."

HOCKEY

capitalize. Freshman Katie Birch fired the slapshot and missed, but freshman roommate Sophie Sunderland was there to score on the rebound.

The Hawkeyes beat the No. 9 Wildcats, 2-1.

Iowa head coach Lisa Cellucci said she could not have been more pleased with her team's overall effort and sense of urgency toward the end.

"The team did a good job sticking to the game plan," said Cellucci in a release. "We made some huge defensive saves and executed on our penalty corners. I am very proud of the effort, intensity, and urgency that the team displayed today."

The team's momentum carried into Sunday, where the Hawkeyes traveled up to Ann Arbor to take on No. 12 Michigan. The Hawkeyes were the first to get on the board, thanks to redshirt senior Natalie Cafone and her impressive ability to get by defenders.

The game was statistically even between the Hawkeyes and Wolverines, forcing another overtime. If Iowa had enough left in the tank after a hard-fought win two days prior to secure the victory, they would have completed one of the best road trips in college hockey this season.

But Iowa's lack of depth and experience caught up, and the team was unable to capitalize and grab the victory in overtime. Cellucci said the loss was a gut-wrencher, but in the end she could not have been more pleased with her team's fight in the close contest.

"This was a heartbreaking loss," said Cellucci in a release. "We played a great game and unfortunately couldn't capitalize in overtime. I was very proud of the effort and intensity we played with."

The Hawkeyes are now 10-6 with a 2-4 Big Ten record. Iowa has played this year that it can compete with anyone in the country, but time and time again, its lack of depth has come back to hurt.

Iowa is still a dangerous team moving forward, but those close losses will need to start turning into narrow victories.

said. "That was a little better than it's been, and it means a lot of people were helping out."

As Ferentz said, running the ball had sometimes been difficult for Iowa this season. The team has been inconsistent moving the ball on the ground, a problem for a team that rushes about 1.5 times as much as it passes.

It was the team's best offensive performance of the year, as far as yards go, and while the Hawkeyes' opponent was a weak Purdue team, it's still impressive.

Iowa again came into the game with a shuffled offensive line — tackle Cole Croston missed the game, and Keegan Render got a start. The Hawkeyes didn't really miss a beat, and Beathard was kept upright for most of the day, only taking 2 sacks.

But with how effective the running game was against a porous Purdue defense, Iowa hardly had to pass the ball.

It was hard to put a finger on what exactly went right for the Iowa running backs when everything seemingly went so. If you ask them, however, they'll just tell you the offensive linemen are playing well.

"They're performing well, and they went out there and did what they do, what Iowa is known for," Wadley said. "Bully football. They went out there, and pushed a few jokers around, and lightened the load for me and LeShun."

Everyone seemed intent on passing the credit around; Sean Welsh gave it right back to Wadley and Daniels.

"They certainly do a good job of making us look like a half-decent line," Welsh said. "They really do. They do a great job. Hats off to them; they really had a great game today. I'm really looking forward to what they can do in the future."

It's helped that both backs have been able to stay healthy. Last season was a revolving door of backs, and Daniels especially struggled to stay healthy.

But so far, that hasn't been the case this season.

Things are looking up for Iowa right now and after a close win against Minnesota on Oct. 8, a big win like this was exactly the thing the Hawkeyes believed they needed. Iowa ran out to a 21-0 lead, and the game wasn't remotely close until Ferentz put in the second-stringers.

There seems to be a little more confidence in the team right now and while some questions on the defense still exist, Iowa is feeling pretty good.

Iowa quarterback C.J. Beathard runs for a touchdown during the first half of the Purdue/Iowa game at the Ross-Ade Stadium on Oct. 15. The Hawkeyes defeated the Boilermakers, 49-35. (The Daily Iowan/Jordan Gale)

"We came in here to get a win. We're 100 percent happy," Beathard said. "We needed to get a 'W,' and we came in here and did just that."

BRIEF

Harriers split for two races

Iowa's cross-country program split this past weekend, competing in two separate races — the Bradley Classic and the Pre-National meet.

On Oct. 14, the underclassmen competed in Peoria, Illinois, at the Bradley Classic. Combined, both the men and women's squads achieved 11 personal-best times.

The men (16th) were led by freshman Nathan Mylenek, who ran a career-best 25:09.3 in the 8,000 meters. Fellow first-year Hawkeyes Brandon Cooley (59th) and Luke Sampson (83rd) added to Iowa's top three places.

Freshmen Claire Dupuis (40th) and Julie Hollensbe (109th) and sophomore Ashley Espinosa (148th) rounded out the top three spots on the women's team, which placed 24th.

Overall, St. Louis (men) and Colorado (women) won the meet.

At the Pre-National meet in Terre Haute, Indiana, the men and women placed 35th and 38th, respectively.

Seniors Ben Anderson (25:19) and Tess Wilberding (21:46) led their respective units. Wilberding's time was her second-fastest of the season.

Anderson finished 104th, and Wilberding finished 135th.

Sophomore Lauren Opatrny ran a career best time, 21:52, in route to finishing 157th. Fellow sophomore Andrea Shine finished 167th, with her time of 21:56.3 was only seconds short of her season-best performance.

Oregon won the meet on the men's side, and Colorado claimed the women's title. Both teams were the only squads to finish with fewer than 100 points.

Next up for the Hawkeyes will be the Big Ten Championship on Oct. 30, in Minneapolis.

Soccer limps through Illinois match

By ANDREW DONLAN
andrew-donlan@uiowa.edu

The Iowa soccer team (7-10) lost in disappointing fashion to Illinois (6-10-1) on Sunday to ruin the final home game for the four seniors who were being honored on Senior Day.

Natalie Winters scored Iowa's lone goal in the 87th-minute, and the Hawkeyes fell, 2-1.

Iowa put forth an uninspired effort against a lowly Illinois team, which picked up just its sixth win of the season.

The Hawkeyes dropped to 1-8 in Big Ten play and are now tied for last place. Seniors Bri Toelle, Amanda Lulek, Tory Harman, and Natalie Krygier were recognized before the game.

"We had a great group of seniors in terms of their collective careers," said head coach Dave DiIanni after the game. "All four played different roles both on the field and off the field and in community service, and we are really proud to have had them as part of the Hawkeye program."

Illinois' goals came in the ninth and 84th minute from Kara Marbury and Taylore Peterson, respectively. The Illini also out-shot the Hawkeyes 11-8.

The showing from the Hawkeyes was in contrast to their passionate play on Oct. 13 in a heartbreaking loss to Northwestern (13-1-2). In both cases, the Hawkeyes seemed to be playing to their opponent's level of play, but unfortunately for Iowa, neither time led to a tally in the win column.

"Mentality-wise and physically, we were beaten before we even stepped out on the field," said coach Dave DiIanni. "I will give credit to our subs who came in and brought some energy to the back end of the first half and the beginning of the second half."

Winters, a freshman from Plymouth, Michigan, scored in the last few minutes of the game, assisted by Devin Burns. It was Winters' second goal of the season, and the only shot she attempted during the course of the game.

Iowa now has just two more tries to improve its conference record. The Hawkeyes take on Maryland and Nebraska in their final two matches of the season — both games will be on the road.

Nebraska is 10-5-2 and above .500 in conference, while Maryland is 3-13-1 and also just 1-8 in conference play. The final two games will take place on Friday in College Park, Maryland, and Oct. 26 in Lincoln, Nebraska.

The Hawkeyes have officially squandered any chances of going .500 on the season; they now sit at 7-10 with just two games left. They have only won two games on the road and have now lost four-straight overall.

Iowa is 1-10 in its last 11 games after starting the season 6-0.

Although the Hawkeyes have struggled mightily in the second half of the season, the effort is usually there. On Sunday, it wasn't.

"Unfortunately, as a team, we chose to be flat for the first time all year," DiIanni said.

BRIEF

Men's tennis has mixed results

The Iowa men's tennis team competed at the Crusader Indoor Invitational hosted by Valparaiso this past weekend, the last tournament before the ever-important Intercollegiate Tennis Association Regionals.

The tournament was also the first time senior Nils Hallestrand and sophomore Jonas Larsen were able to compete.

In his first match of the season,

Larsen picked up a victory in Flight A by beating Chicago State's Felix Savard in two sets (6-2, 6-3).

However, Larsen had to retire prior to finishing his second match, when Mason Dragos of Butler had a lead (6-2, 2-0).

Larsen also competed in doubles action with Hallestrand, where the duo captured a big win, beating Tyler Cannon and Grant Esposito from Olivet Nazarene (6-1).

his hot streak at Valparaiso by defeating Northwestern Ohio's Ronnie Myburgh (6-4, 6-1).

After previously being undefeated in singles matches at tournaments hosted by Valparaiso this season, Leto suffered a loss in the second round to Brandon Anaconda of Valparaiso (6-4, 6-1).

After Larsen was forced to stop early, only Hawkeyes Hallestrand and Leto competed on Day 2.

The two played in doubles action together for the first time this season but ended up being defeated by a duo from Butler as well as a team from Chicago State.

Leto also fell in his singles match to Kyle Dunn of Valparaiso by a score of (6-4, 6-1).

After a good start to the tournament that fell off a little bit on the second day, the Hawkeyes have another opportunity in one of the biggest tournaments of the fall season, the regionals in Stillwater, Oklahoma, this upcoming weekend.

How to get that rushing feeling

By JORDAN HANSEN | jordan-hansen@uiowa.edu

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Five hundred-twenty. That's how many yards the Iowa offense was able to put up against Purdue on Oct. 15 in its 49-35 win.

It was the most offense the Hawkeyes have accrued in a game since 2014 (587, Illinois) and was highlighted by 365 rushing yards.

Running back Akrum Wadley led the way with 14 carries for 170 yards, while LeShun Daniels Jr. added 24 carries for 156 yards. Wadley had a touchdown, and Daniels had a pair. Starting quarterback C.J. Beathard also scored on the ground and added another two through the air, ending the day with 140 passing yards on 17 attempts.

"Lot of good things we saw out there, and the biggest thing I would say, or touch base on, would be our rushing attack," Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz

Mixed results for Hawkeye volleyball

By JAMES KAY
james-kay-1@uiowa.edu

The Hawkeye volleyball team (15-5) had mixed results this past weekend; the team split its weekend matches against Maryland and Ohio State.

Iowa beat Maryland in straight sets on Oct. 14 before falling to No. 19 Ohio State the next night.

Iowa head coach Bond Shymansky was not pleased with his team's performance.

"We have to go back to the drawing board," Shymansky said in a release after the Ohio State loss. "It was a good weekend for us, in a way, to go 1-1 on a road trip in the Big Ten, but obviously, we have to execute a lot stronger and stay in the moment a little longer. We will head back to work to prepare for next weekend."

The weekend road trip wasn't a total loss, as the Hawkeyes were productive against a struggling Maryland team. Senior Jess Janota had a career-high 8 blocks to go along with 10 kills. Redshirt freshman Meghan Buzzerio had a team-high 12 kills, while seniors Ashley Mariani and Lauren Brobst each added on 9 kills. The Hawkeyes had an efficient match, hitting .313.

Maryland was less impressive, as it hit .181 collectively while collecting 19 attack errors as well. The Terrapins suffered their seventh-consecutive Big Ten loss and remain winless against their conference foes.

The Hawkeyes didn't have the same luck against Ohio State, falling to the Buckeyes in straight sets (25-15, 25-22, 25-9). This was their third loss against nationally ranked opponents, all of which are in the Big Ten.

Sophomore Reghan Coyle was the lone bright spot in what was an ugly loss for the Hawkeyes. Coyle tallied 9 kills on 14 chances while garnering 3 assists. This was the first time the Hawkeyes didn't have a single player register double-digits in kills. The team finished the match with its worst hitting percentage of the season (.103).

Ohio State shredded the Hawkeye defense, hitting .384 as a group. Senior Taylor Sandbothe led the team with 11 kills, while sophomore Audra Appoid added 11 kills.

The Hawkeyes must rebound quickly; they host No. 3 Minnesota on Oct. 21, and No. 1 Wisconsin on Oct. 22 at Carver-Hawkeye.

With a weekend slate like that, Iowa can't afford to dwell on a loss to Ohio State on the road. There's too much at stake for anything like that to happen with them.

Field hockey splits in tough weekend

Coming into the weekend, the Iowa field-hockey team had a perfect opportunity to put itself back in the hunt for the Big Ten crown.

With two tough road games against No. 9 Northwestern and No. 12 Michigan, the Hawkeyes were almost able to get back in the conversation but ultimately fell short.

On Oct. 14, the Hawkeyes traveled to Evanston for what turned out to be a barnburner of a game. Northwestern got on the board first, thanks to a goal from Elena Curley. Iowa had a tough time answering until freshman Katie Birch struck the net off a penalty corner that was assisted by junior Melissa Progar.

The game remained tied at the end of regulation forcing overtime, a situation the Hawkeyes have been familiar with this season. For the most part, the story this season has the Hawkeyes play teams tough, but then they run out of gas at the end and come up short.

This time, the narrative was different in Evanston — roughly two minutes into overtime, the Hawkeyes got a penalty corner and were able to
