(The Daily Iowan/James Year)

By ELIANNA NOVITCH | elianne-novitch@uiowa.edu

Dance Marathon 23 wrapped up its record breaking event by raising a grand total of $2,572,130.23. The total fell just shy of the University of Iowa group's goal of $2,758,511.23. "Dance Marathon has never been, and will never be about, what that number says but instead what that number means and what that number does," Dance Marathon Executive Director Morgan Kennedy said.

Throughout the 24 hours, a variety of moments and events had a big effect on all of those who participated, whether they were a dancer or family member in the Dance Marathon organization.

Some of the events that will be remembered when people recall Dance Marathon 23 include a bone-marrow-donor drive, the "short hair, don't care" event, and the Dance

1,000s rally against Trump's ban

A crowd rallied against Trump's Muslim ban on the Ped Mall Sunday afternoon.

By MARISSA PAYNE | marissa-payne@uiowa.edu

Although a federal judge temporarily blocked President Donald Trump's executive order calling for "extreme vetting" of immigrants entering the United States from certain countries on Feb. 3, the Iowa City community remains outspoken against the ban.

Locals flooded the Pedestrian Mall on Sunday for the Solidarity Against the Ban Rally. More than 1,000 people attended the rally, with one organizer estimating upwards of 2,500 people standing on the mall.

Iowa City West High sophomore Esraa Mohamed, one of the event organizers, said she came together with other local groups to organize one large rally instead of numerous smaller ones.

"We decided to do this because of the Muslim ban, and not just the Muslim ban, but the wall, and discrimination, that has been placed on Trump's ban, Mohamed and one of her fellow rally organizers, West High

The new University of Iowa Stead Family Children's Hospital will be equipped with many advanced technologies, including the first SOMATOM Drive computerized tomography (CT) system.

The new equipment is a highly advanced scanner that administers a lower dose of radiation than most common CT scanners.

According to a study reported in Time, around 4,870 types of cancers could be caused by the 4 million CT rally has lost significance, noting the federal judge's block was only temporary. "I feel like diversity made America what it is today, so I feel like excluding that part is rude and harsh," Mohamed said. "Especially stating the fact that Trump's wife is actually an immigrant, it's kind of hypocritical." In a crowd that mostly opposed the ban, there were still a couple Trump supporters who showed up to the rally to demonstrate support for the president and his actions. While one supporter said he had experienced some physical aggression at the rally, another supporter, Frederic Hayer, said those present were polite. He wanted to publicly show his opinion, knowing he would be in the minority as someone who supports both Trump and the ban. "I get these refugees welcome kind of things, but this is just echoing what has happened in Europe," he said. "It's a very nice sentiment, but [those against the ban have] been kind of tricked, and a lot of refugees aren't who they say they are." Iowa City Mayor Jim Throgmorton said while he respects the office of the presidency, he sees Trump's actions as a threat to Iowa City's values of openness, diversity, and inclusivity. "This president and his policies pose a clear and present danger to the values that have made our city such a great place to live," he said. "... As a prominent writer recently observed, we are living through the most dangerous chapter to the free government of the United States that anyone alive has experienced. What happens next is up to you and me." Aside from physical displays of solidarity, such as holding hands, creative expression was a prominent way of demonstrating support for the movement against the ban. Musician Iris DeMent led a group in singing "America the Beautiful" and a couple other songs on the rally stage, keeping it light with a few jokes between performances. The posters made for the rally served as a visual statement, and Tonya Kehoe, a local artist and professor of art at Kirkwood Community College, made custom signs for people attending the rally in support of the event. She said she plans to take these signs to create an installation at a currently unknown venue in Iowa City to document the time through words and images where thousands came together. Additionally, showing up to a rally such as this — even in chilly weather — matters to those with family members in the seven countries affected by the ban, Kehoe said. "I think one thing that's super important is that the people within the marginalized communities with the most marginalized voices absolutely ... need to see us here outside in the 38-degree weather," she said.

scans done on children per year. However, lowering the dosage could prevent 43 percent of these cancers. The new CT scanner was provided to the Children's Hospital by Siemens Medical Solutions USA Inc. One of four of its kind in the world, it has advanced technology and design that past scanners do not, which helps with pediatric medicine. Among the advantages of the new system include its lower dose of radiation. UI Professor Colin Derdeyn, the head of the Radiology Department, pointed out that while X-rays are very safe, it's always safer to use less because of the potential risk of cancer it has with children. Another benefit is the speed it takes to film the pictures. The device is able to scan children in less than a second. "The speed buys you several things for [pediatric medicine]," Derdeyn said. The shorter examination period means the children don't have to be sedated to keep them still. In addition, neither of these assets affects the quality of the pictures, allowing doctors to get high-definition photos. The valuable features don't stop there. "It also has lighting that can be used as a distraction," said Christine Ziemba-Landon, a product manager for Siemens. "Kids are fascinated by that [lighting]," said Jeff Buckley, a senior manager for Siemens Media Relations. He said the company introduced the lighting feature in mammography systems. Another key feature of the scanner was designed to help make the patient feel safe and secure. "It has a touch panel on each side of the table," Ziemba-Landon said. This is to help keep the technician in the room with the child as long as possible, only stepping out when the actual photo is being taken. The Children's Hospital was chosen to receive this scanner for various reasons. "The product introduction came at the right time," Ziemba-Landon said. She said the timing of when Siemens could deliver the product was in sync with when the hospital was ready for it.

"We have had a very long, strong relationship with Siemens," Derdeyn said. "We have often been at the front of the line to get some of their new technologies." He said the UI has worked with it in the past to develop and test other technologies. Both Derdeyn and Ziemba-Landon agree that this new technology will be a trend in CT scanners. Derdeyn compared it to new technology we see in iPhones, computers, and cars, because every time new technology is developed, it is used in the next model. Ziemba-Landon emphasized the importance of the lower dosage of radiation, saying that it's definitely a trend. The scanner will debut when the new hospital opens, on Feb. 26.

Valentines with some bite

By EMI BENDLER
emilia-bendler@uiowa.edu

A group of feminists gathered to write Valentine's Day cards — but not for significant others or friends. Bluestockings, a feminist organization, held an event on Sunday called "Valentines for Politicians" to create valentines to send to elected government officials. Members of the community were able to voice their concerns or feelings about their lawmakers on valentines. "We're a feminist art collective based in Iowa City and Cedar Rapids," said Jillian Moore, a member of Bluestockings and an organizer of the event. Bluestockings is made up of women and people who identify as queer and transgender; it is a nonprofit organization. The group's focus is on the art community.

They advocate for any group that feels excluded from the art community, such as women or members of the LGBTQ+ community. They also concentrate on artists' place in politics. However, women's rights are not the only issues that the event advocated. Attendees and organizers cite rights for minorities, the environment, closed USDA records, health care, and the immigration ban as other reasons they attended. Vero Smith, another member and organizer, emphasized the organization of the event was a group effort. Moore said Bluestockings chose to use valentines to stray away from the normal sentiment and be a little "more ornery." The members want the action of sending them to be a little more tongue and cheek. The timing of "Valentines for Politicians" fell in line with a solidarity rally against President Trump's immigration ban. "We advertise this as a stop before or after the protest," Smith said. There are many reasons both organizers of this event and attendees believe that this event was important. "I want people to feel less intimidated by talking to our elected officials," Smith said. Vicki Bellmore also believes in the importance of the event. "I just feel it's real important we reach out and discuss to our representatives our feelings," she said. Other attendees also said they attended the event because lawmakers need to realize that there are stakes that go along with their actions. Although many attendees expressed anger about officials, Moore made it clear that this event did not inhabit either side of the political spectrum. It was more about creating an environment for conversation to occur. Moore said she would be sending good valentines, as well as "anti-valentines," and said the event wasn't meant just to bash politicians. She encouraged people to send valentines to lawmakers they liked as well as those they didn't. The event got a lot of community attention as well. "The local businesses surrounding us have been very supportive," Smith said. Banditos, 327 E. Market St., offered 20 percent discount for participants the day the event was held. While Bluestockings doesn't currently have any more events planned, the members will work toward planning and organizing some around the Iowa City area.

Expanding the bottom line with sustainability

Business leaders and M.B.A. students gathered for the annual Sustainability Summit 2017 to discuss how companies are integrating sustainable strategies.

By ISABELLA SENNO
isabella-senno@uiowa.edu

Organic honey, hand-made blankets, and tiny houses have more in common than meets the eye.

According to a recent study by the Pew Research Institute, over the past decade, Americans have been trying to live cleaner by buying greener, as shown by soaring growth across the board in industries from locally sourced produce, fair trade products, and eco-friendly housing.

In order to help M.B.A. students keep up with these shifts in consumer interest, the Net Impact Sustainability Summit 2017 was held on Feb. 3 in Old Brick, 26 E. Market St.

During the annual summit, business experts from a broad range of industries spoke with graduate students from the Tippie College of Business about how they could integrate a variety of sustainable practices into their business methods and models.

"I would like for our future business environment as well as the natural environment to be in a better position going forward," said Casey Spoden, the president of the graduate chapter of Net Impact at Tippie. "It's important for students to hear because a lot of time we're focused on the bottom line, and while that's important because we need money to run a business, it's not the only thing."

Speakers responded to questions over the course of four hours, emphasizing the necessity for businesses to be sustainable in today's changing market and noting that new graduates needed to be prepared to listen to their demographics in order to succeed.

"Consumer trends for sustainability have only intensified; customers expect companies and employees to live up to their goals and expectations," said Jesse Singerman, the operator of private investment fund Prairie Ventures and one of the panelists. "The most important thing you do is start understanding what happens because you're doing business. [Sustainability] is not something you hang onto the business, but something that becomes who you are."

Panelists also discussed the roadblocks that businesses could experience on the path to more sustainable practices, advising students to remain tenacious.

"Not everything is solvable right within the business; not everything is going to be within the business' direct control, but the advocacy part is," said Nancy Bird, the executive director of the Iowa City Downtown District and a panelist. "There's definitely obstacles, but that doesn't mean the work can't be done."

Students were also encouraged to consider sustainability not just as environmentally healthy but also better for the long-term outlook of their companies.

"Sustainability in business, you can especially think of in a broader way. There are companies whose main goal is not to be a sustainable company necessarily, like a bank, but sustainability can also be integrated into businesses in terms of a social responsibility aspect," Spoden said. "You have to have sustainable business practices, and you have to be fair and embody the ethics of the customers you're serving in order for your business to be sustainable in terms of longevity."

It's a delicate process to strike a balance between the responsibility that businesses have to their customers and community to be environmentally conscious, while at the same time keeping themselves in the black, but it can be done.

"The easiest way to say it is that we live a triple bottom line — people, profit, planet," Singerman said.

Health-care group petitions during Big Event

Organizing for Action reaches out for signatures at Dance Marathon.

By SARAH STORTZ
sarah-stortz@uiowa.edu

While hundreds of University of Iowa Dance Marathon volunteers danced for 24-hours straight this past weekend to help raise money for kids with cancer, another group of people on the outskirts of the event aimed to support another cause.

During the weekend, a group of volunteers from Organizing for Action took it upon themselves to stand near the entrance of the IMU and asked Dance Marathon participants to sign their petition for saving the Affordable Care Act. The petition was a part of the National Weekend for Action, with a goal this year to avoid the act being repealed by Congress.

The course of action was taken after Donald Trump became president and his plan to repeal or defund ObamaCare was enacted.

The volunteers were all residents of Iowa City, and many of them were UI students.

UI sophomore Zak Nelson, one of the students who volunteered on Feb. 3, believes it was important to stand up to the health-care cause given the similarities to Dance Marathon.

"If the Affordable Care Act was repealed, then millions of people would lose their health care," he said. "Majority of whom would be similar to the children that we're dancing for tonight."

The group didn't have a clear goal of the number of signatures to garner; the members wanted to receive as many signatures as possible so they could show that Iowans want to keep the act funded.

UI sophomore Kevin Protzmann said he would see a great deal of misfortune for the country if this act were repealed.

"We would be back at square one if the repeal occurred; we would be back to where we were before President Barack Obama took office," he said. "The Republicans have been saying repeal and replace this whole time, but for six years, they've had a chance to build a plan to actually replace the Affordable Care Act; they have not done so."

"By all appearances, they're going to use the budget reconciliation to defund ObamaCare, but have no replacement at all," Protzmann said. "It's going to require bipartisan work; it's going to require them to pay attention to the public and what they want, which is why we're doing this petition."

Mallory Hellman, director of the Iowa Youth Writing Project, said the repeal of ObamaCare would cause great devastation for Americans, especially those who need it the most.

"That's people with pre-existing conditions, people who can't afford to pay the high premiums that they would have if health care was privatized," she said. "This particularly affects those in poverty and even middle-class citizens. Once they skyrocket, they'll have to choose between food and medication, which I think is something that's a shame for a developed country to face."

Two local beacons of civil rights receive federal grant

The Tate Arms rooming house and Iowa Federation Home Dormitory are two significant historical locations gaining attention for their part in the Civil Rights Movement.

By KAYLI REESE
kayli-reese@uiowa.edu

In today's society, the heavy topic of racism still persists, and Iowa City is no stranger to the fight against exclusion and bias.

Two Iowa City properties, the Tate Arms rooming house and Iowa Federation Home Dormitory, have gained attention from the National Park Service. The organization gave Iowa City a grant of $16,000 for being an important part of the Civil Rights Movement and African-American culture.

Robert Miklo, an Iowa City senior planner, said the National Park Service requested applicants nationally for the grant. He said 169 applicants applied for the grant, and 39 received awards.

Richard Carlson, architectural historian with the Iowa Office of the State Archeologist, said Miklo knew of his work and study on African-American history in the area and asked him to cowrite the grant application.

Both housing areas, he said, were brought to life after African-American students asked for housing while attending the University of Iowa.

"They took matters into their own hands," Carlson said.

Miklo said the UI had admitted African-American students fairly early on in history compared with other universities, but there was no housing for students of any race. Shortly after, he said, the university started building dormitories such as Currier Hall for white students only.

The African-American student population grew, he said, and a lack of housing started to become an issue. Students stayed in private homes; professors and females worked as maids while attending school, but the number of students was becoming too large for these housing options to be realistic, Miklo said.

A group of female African-American students, the Iowa Federation of Colored Women's Club, approached the UI to secure a separate dorm, he said. The university promoted the cause, he said, and the Iowa Federation Home Dormitory was created for African-American female UI students; the Tate Arms rooming house followed a similar path for African-American male students.

"They were meant to provide safe and quality housing," Miklo said.

With the grant, Miklo said Iowa City is hoping to prepare a National Register nomination for both properties to show their importance in history.

"They're an excellent representation of civil-rights advancement," Miklo said.

In addition to a nomination, he continued, the grant will be used to further research the properties to create a booklet of information to spread awareness, as well as creating plaques to place in front of both homes, which are now privately owned.

Ginalie Swaim, the head of the Iowa City Historic Preservation Commission, said the two properties exemplify how Iowa City helps us better understand history.

"These two houses were critically important to black UI students who needed housing before the dorms were integrated," she said. "Today, they are important reminders to us that a community must continue to work hard to be inclusive and open its doors to all people."

New bills to penalize protesters go off the mark

By DOT ARMSTRONG
dorothy-armstrong@uiowa.edu

Protests — plural manifestations of dissent — are the new normal. Events of late necessitate, it seems, crowds shouting and waving signs. As Iowa City has discovered, such embodied acts are simultaneously affirming, alarming, and infuriating. I argued last week for increased sensitivity to the numerous meanings expressed through protest, as well as higher artistic standards for demonstrations. Organizing an effective protest is no easy task. But no matter how artless, embodied action is proof that certain constitutional rights continue to function. Certain folks, however, don't share my view. Numerous states are beginning a legislative battle against inconvenient demonstrations. Protests, fraught yet necessary, are under siege.

Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Michigan, and Washington state have drafted bills aimed at penalizing certain types of protests. Most of these pieces of legislation focus on the hazards posed by protesters; in most bills, demonstrations on highways receive the strictest punishments. For example, Sen. Jake Chapman, R-Adel, created a bill that, according to NPR, would apply to "people blocking highways with speeds posted above 55 mph. Violators could get a felony and spend five years in prison, plus a fine of up to $7,500." That's a Class-D felony in Iowa. This putative suggestion seems rather severe, considering the protester in question did not commit any acts of moral depravity or violence.

Speaking of violence, North Dakota is another story entirely. The same NPR broadcast notes a bill from an unnamed lawmaker "that would allow motorists to run over and kill any protester obstructing a highway as long as the driver did not do it intentionally." Seriously? I hesitate to call such a measure savage, but I'm not sure what other word would do it justice. The hilarious mandate for non-intentional collision doesn't even redeem the bill for comedic purposes.

I would simply dismiss these bills, blackball the authors, and redouble my efforts to champion embodied action nationwide. But, of course, it's more complicated than that. These legislative efforts to prevent large, defiant crowds from swarming onto busy roadways is not misguided. Yes, demonstrations present a hazard to motorists; yes, masses and throngs block the thoroughfare for emergency vehicles. I credit the lawmakers for considering the civic adjustments necessary in a new era of normalized demonstrations.

The methods proposed, however, are pretty far off the mark. There's a vindictive one-upmanship at work here, fueled by an atmosphere of animosity. This is not utilitarian lawmaking. A current of vengeful fervor surges beneath these new bills. As I indicated in my previous article, knee-jerk retaliation is exactly the wrong approach. Moreover, these proposed actions are a dark forecast of further restrictions on free speech. I'll voice the natural, if paranoid, conclusion: Suppression of highway protests leads to suppression of protests elsewhere.

Protesters are people, with inalienable rights. Their actions and tactics, though ideologically challenging, do not justify lengthy prison sentences and vehicular manslaughter.

Honoring 23 years of a dance for life

During my first year as an undergraduate student at the University of Iowa 23 years ago, I had the good fortune to be part of a historical moment — the inaugural UI Dance Marathon. Though we were not sure at the time how many would participate in the event or how much money we could raise, we were crystal clear on our mission: to make an impact on the lives of pediatric cancer patients and families served by our Children's Hospital.

This past weekend, thousands of UI students spent 24 hours in the IMU, dancing and raising more than $2.5 million for children who are fighting cancer. And although their Big Event is over, the students aren't done — they volunteer and raise money throughout the year through a variety of activities. These students are extraordinary, and they are steadily — without question—making an impact on the lives of patients and families at UI Stead Family Children's Hospital.

This year, UI Dance Marathon celebrated its 23rd year of providing vital emotional and financial support to patients and families facing childhood cancer. As the largest student-run philanthropic organization on campus, it has raised more than $21.5 million throughout the last 23 years, and it recently made a significant gift to the University of Iowa Foundation for UI Health Care: an investment of $2.2 million to establish a targeted therapies and clinical trials program for pediatric cancer patients. Last fall, involved students helped us celebrate the dedication of our new UI Stead Family Children's Hospital and the UI Dance Marathon Pediatric Cancer Center, named in recognition of a $5 million gift from the organization used to help build our new hospital.

As vice president for health sciences development at the UI Foundation, I have the privilege to interact with student leaders of UI Dance Marathon. I am in awe of what these students have accomplished — SO much more than we could have expected 23 years ago.

It is deeply moving to witness the dedication of the dancers, as well as the courage and grace of the patients and families who receive their support.

On behalf of everyone at the UI Foundation, I would like to congratulate this year's Dance Marathon participants, the leadership team, and all those who support them in their remarkable fight against cancer. I'm grateful for all you do ...For the Kids.

Facebook politics wends it way down a dangerous path

By MARSTHERA POPE
thera-pope@uiowa.edu

Facebook. A fruitful and chaotic platform for all passionate and dull thoughts to find their way to numerous peoples screens. Whether it be a picture of a delicious avocado sandwich or a two-paragraph essay about how people feel they were wronged by their best friends, the network has seeped its way into the daily lives of millions. Checking Facebook has replaced reading the newspaper. No longer does the cartoon page of the Sunday paper makes its way around the table during breakfast. Instead, a post is shared on Facebook of the particular cartoon that is found most funny by particular user. This narrows how much the Facebook friends of said user get to see. This can be easily applied to the new trend, Facebook politics. Instead of reading the New York Times or turning on the TV to CNN, Facebook easily pops up on a phone screen and because it's all selected information, there are no "bad cartoons" to sift through. What users see on their Facebook is only being circulated through their bubble of people. No new opinion comes in, and no old opinion goes out.

One of the main reasons watching the news is so important is because it keeps people aware. How can an opinion be completely valid unless it's formed on its own, knowing all pieces of the puzzle and not just the pieces that show up on the Facebook news feed?

Recently, journalism has lost the people's trust. After President Trump's accusation of numerous journalism outlets being "fake news," some people feel they can dismiss headlines by saying they must be fabricated. The irony is that an individual's Facebook feed is much more likely to be fake news than any CNN, CBS, or MSNBC segment. Although Facebook may present links to articles written by a news organization, only that particular article is presented, and the news source may not even be legitimate. It is no secret that underground websites and magazines will make up outrageous stories about celebrities in order to gain views. Those same websites and magazines can and will do the same when it comes to politics. These websites are not CNN or Fox, controversial but credible news outlets. These are websites and magazines whose popularity is probably equivalent to a 13-year-old girl's blog.

The appeal of being able to stay aware of what's going on in the world and look at pictures of a friend's new dog on the same site is understandable, it's just not possible. Credible news should not be expected when it comes to social media, and this includes the numerous rants from any "older, wiser" friends. Social media will never be more credible than investigative journalism.

News will always play a crucial part in American democracy. It is the duty of this country's citizens to read it, watch it, and continue to be correctly informed. Facebook is not needed to shape a valid informed opinion, just stay educated. Work to get rid of this venomous phenomenon, Facebook politics, and replace it with the factual news that's always been here for both political parties in this country.

Marathon graduation.

Be the Match, a UI student organization, put on a drive for bone-marrow donors during the event in hopes of attracting new people to the program.

It attracted a lot of donors for various reasons. For dancer Alexandria Feldmeier, becoming a donor was about having the potential to save someone's life.

"They said that only one in 500 people [who register to donate] get chosen, and just one of those lucky people could save someone's life," Feldmeier said. "It's not often that you find someone whose an exact match, so the fact that I could be that match to that one person to save someone's life is really meaningful."

Another event that was also put on to serve others was the "short hair, don't care" event, in which people could cut and donate their hair to people going through chemotherapy or shave their heads to show support for those battling cancer.

"Hair grows back. With these kids, some of them don't have the ability to grow hair because of chemo, and if I can give that to them, I'm going to," said dancer Caley O'Brien, who both donated her hair and shaved her head.

An exciting event that is a milestone for many of Dance Marathon's families was the Dance Marathon graduation, in which kids who have been cancer-free for five years graduate and celebrate being cured.

This year, 20 children graduated.

"I feel like this is the best graduation I could ever attend in my life. I don't see this as a graduation, I see this as a parade of 20 victorious soldiers who did not pick the fight but won," said Arun Modi, a UI clinical assistant professor of oncology who spoke at the graduation. "Childhood cancer is rare; no family thinks about it, prepares for it, or has any idea how to deal with it."

Along with various events throughout the 24 hours, a variety of initiatives took place.

This year, the organization partnered with the UI Office of Sustainability to make the Big Event more environmentally friendly.

"It's an awesome partnership," said Sustainability Committee head Matt Hoffman. "We all just want to help the environment while helping our kiddos and their families."

As always, the Dance Marathon kids and "Dancing in Our Hearts" kids, who have passed away, were honored in various ways.

At the Big Event, the IMU Main Lounge was decorated with pillowcases along the walls, each bearing the name of a Dance Marathon child. In the back of the room on the balcony, three quilts were hung, bearing the names of the Dancing in Our Hearts children as well.

"It's important to us that every kid feels that love and they all know that all of us are behind them, so every single one of them has their name on the wall, and they can say 'That's me, everyone is dancing for me,'" said Christie Crossman, the Dance Marathon hospital director.

There was also a room dedicated to the Dancing in Our Hearts families where dancers could go to honor those who have passed away.

The money raised from this year's Dance Marathon will be used to support families who are dealing with pediatric cancer as well as research and many other things that play a part in the battle against pediatric cancer.

"Dance Marathon 23 is not defined by a number, it is defined by an army of college students with the will to fight against pediatric cancer and put an end to it," Kennedy said.

When cancer is cured, we will dance for joy.
Until then, we will dance for life.

To everyone who is part of UI Dance Marathon, thank you. FTK always!

Men's gymnastics goes Bear hunting

By JESS WESTENDORF
jessica-westendorf@uiowa.edu

The No. 12 Iowa men's gymnastics team will compete against No. 9 Cal today at 9 p.m. in Berkeley, California, at the Haas Pavilion in an important top-15 matchup.

"We are not going to put on the brakes at all," junior Dylan Ellsworth said. "We are going to get back in the gym, we are going to push ourselves harder than we did last week and take the time to get better."

The Hawkeyes are coming off of a 404.100-374.300 win against Illinois-Chicago on Jan. 22. During that meet, 12 Hawkeyes earned 29 season-bests, and the team won every event in dominating fashion.

Ellsworth won titles on rings, vault, parallel bars, and all-around. He earned season bests in all of those events — all-around (80.300), vault (14.650), parallel bars (13.850), and rings (13.700).

Junior Austin Hodges and senior Mark Springett both also had big days for the Hawkeyes against Illinois-Chicago. Hodges took home two titles, on pommel horse (14.000) and high bar (13.850), while recording season bests on both. Springett followed with an event title win on floor with a season best of 14.300.

The impressive performance moved Iowa up in the polls as well. The Hawkeyes are now ranked No. 12 in the Road to Nationals Poll and No. 11 in the Jan. 30 coaches' poll.

In individual events, Iowa stands tall nationally: No. 7 on parallel bars, No. 8 on vault, and No. 10 on high bar.

Cal has a season record of 1-2. It lost to No. 2 Stanford 418.100-403.150 on Jan. 15, then on Jan. 21 placed second above No. 19 Washington and just barely fell to Stanford in the Stanford Open.

The Bears have bounced back from the two losses to Stanford, however. They are coming off of a 407.300 win at the SC United Open, beating three top-20 teams, including No. 13 Arizona State, No. 19 Temple, and No. 20 SC United.

"They came in still very motivated to improve upon what we did and correct the details that will take the entire regular season to get really good at," head coach JD Reive said. "The focus has been there, the determination has been there. They are working hard."

The Hawkeyes have had a two-week break to prepare for the competition against the Golden Bears. During their break, Reive and his squad wanted to sharpen up and focus on getting better in each event.

Iowa specifically wanted to get better on pommel horse, which is famously one of the hardest events in men's gymnastics. But the squad stays positive and motivated for the meet and wants to show what the Hawkeyes are made of.

Austin Hodges, who has been recovering from a hand injury, posted a 14.500 on the pommel horse on Feb. 27, 2016. The Hawkeyes, ranked No. 7, beat the No. 6 Nebraska and No. 8 Penn State in the Field House. (The Daily Iowan/File Photo)

"We are out in Berkeley, which is great," Reive said. "It's a different location, and it is going to be a fairly evenly matched competition. Being able to focus within the program, within our team, and putting our work that we are doing on the floor as well as staying consistent will lead to great things happening over time."

Men's tennis takes 2 of 3

The Iowa men's tennis team picked up two wins this past weekend, but fell to Drake, 4-3, on Feb. 3.

The weekend started strongly for the Hawkeyes, cruising to a 6-1 win over Omaha, with Iowa capturing singles points in five out of the six matches. The Hawkeyes also won the doubles point against the Mavericks to help them secure their fourth win of the season.

The early match was a memorable one for Jason Kerst, who won his first spring match as a Hawkeye (3-6, 7-5, 10-6).

That momentum continued into the night matchup with Drake, as Iowa jumped out to a 2-0 lead. However, the match shifted in Drake's favor, and it rallied to take four-straight singles matches before Robin Haden stopped the bleeding, winning his singles match (6-2, 4-6, 7-6 [5]).

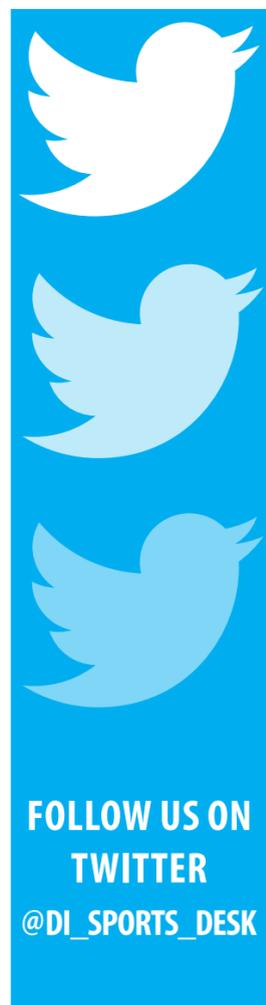

"It was a long, tough day playing two in a row, finishing with a great Drake team, which has been a top-50 team six years in a row," Iowa head coach Ross Wilson said in a release.

The weekend ended on a high note for the Hawkeyes, returning to the win column by defeating Dartmouth (4-3) in an early Sunday match. Wilson was encouraged by the Hawkeyes' play.

"The guys competed well, and I'm proud of the product that we put out on the court," Wilson said.

The Hawkeyes will end February with two road matches, traveling to Oregon on Saturday before playing at Denver on Feb. 19.

Hawkeye track has some success

This past weekend, the Iowa track and field team competed in the Moyo Invitational in South Bend, Indiana. It was the first time the Hawkeyes have traveled on the road this season.

The Moyo Invitational gave the Hawkeyes an opportunity to face a plethora of competition, with 39 women's teams and 33 men's team competing.

Overall, the Hawkeyes had some success, with four event titles in the men's 400-meter, 600-meter, 4x400-meter relay, and women's 60-meter. Many athletes broke personal records, and they continue to improve as the season progresses.

This was the first time this season the Hawkeyes ran on an oversized indoor track, which favors distance runners more than the sprinters, and the distance runners did not disappoint anyone.

"To have all those freshmen run as well as they did this weekend in the 600 and 800, those are big time marks," said Joey Woody, the Hawkeye director of track and field in a release. "A lot of those guys ran faster in the 600 than I ever did as a freshman. We have some great things ahead."

The highlight of the weekend was from junior Carter Lilly on the second day. Lilly set the school record in the 800 with a time of 1:47.33 and finished second. The time is third in the Big Ten and fifth in the nation. Another bright spot was junior Brittany Brown, who won the women's 60 meters with a time of 7.39, a personal best.

GymHawks come up a little short

The No. 22 Iowa women's gymnastics team fell to No. 20 Nebraska, 196.825-195.725, Sunday afternoon in Lincoln.

"I was very pleased with the effort from our entire team today," head coach Larissa Libby said in a release. "Top to bottom, we are a better team this week than we were last week, so I am very encouraged that we are moving in the right direction."

The loss to Nebraska is the GymHawks' first in the Big Ten.

The Hawkeyes had previously defeated Michigan State, Ohio State, and Maryland.

In the Sunday meet, three GymHawks earned career-high scores: sophomore Nicole Chow, junior Lanie Snyder, and senior Savannah Borman.

Senior Mollie Drenth led Iowa with a score of 39.175 for fourth in the all-around, and senior Angel Metcalf followed in sixth with a 38.250.

On the floor, the Hawkeyes recorded their highest score of the competition as well as a season high with a 49.125. Snyder and freshman Clair Kaji led with scores of 9.850 to tie for fourth.

Junior Melissa Zurawski also recorded a 9.850 for fourth place. Metcalf followed in sixth place with a 9.825, giving the GymHawks a team score of 49.050.

On the vault, sophomore Rose Piorowski and Drenth tied for third place with scores of 9.825, with sophomore Maria Ortiz following at 9.725.

The GymHawks ended their night on beam with a 48.775. Senior Lexi Mura led Iowa in the event and finished in third at 9.825. Borman came in with a career-high 9.800 to give her fourth.

The competition was close, and even though the Hawkeyes fell short, they have to go back in the gym and focus on what's coming next.

On Saturday, the GymHawks will return to Carver-Hawkeye to take on No. 21 Illinois and Illinois-Chicago at 4 p.m.

Hawkeye swimmers dominate meet

By CARTER MELROSE
carter-melrose@uiowa.edu

In front of a nearly packed house in the Campus Recreation & Wellness Center, the regular-season finale for the Iowa men's and women's swimming and diving teams went according to plan.

"We knew that we were going to win," sophomore Jack Smith said after the meet against Western Illinois on Feb. 3.

The men's team won handily in a contest that Iowa head coach Marc Long described as serious but also fun. The men's team won, 145-58, giving the team a bit of confidence going into the Big Ten Championships on Feb. 22.

In Smith's first race, the 200 freestyle, he beat the closest Western Illinois swimmer by more than 6 seconds. The trend continued as the men's team won nine of 10 races. The only loss of the night came in the 200-freestyle relay.

Freshman Sam Dumford raced a 20.0 in his leg of the 200-freestyle relay, which pleased all of his teammates.

"We were pretty happy about that," Smith said.

On the women's side, the domination continued. The women, however, had two opponents in Western Illinois and Northern Iowa. They beat Western Illinois, 161-49, and UNI, 147-73.

Senior Emma Sougstad won all three of her events.

"I love to swim meets like this, because you turn off upstairs and just do what you have been practicing," she said. The women's team only lost two of 12 events all night. Those losses came in the 100 freestyle and 200 freestyle relay. In both races, Long placed swimmers who weren't necessarily in their comfort zone.

The lead that Iowa built allowed both the men and women to have a little fun with the last event. They both chose to do a 200-freestyle relay divided into class year.

In the women's relay, the juniors took first, followed by the seniors in second. Both the freshman and sophomore teams were disqualified for early exchanges. The decision by the referee was followed by much outrage from many Iowa teammates and fans.

"There is a lot of pride between the classes," Long said about the relay.

During the men's relay the excitement was palpable. In a surprise victory, the freshmen edged the seniors.

"[It was] great to see the young kids step up," Long said.

After both teams took care of business on Feb. 3, all the attention shifted to the impending Big Ten Championships.

"We certainly shoot for this time of the season: championship time.

We want to move up in the Big Ten," Long said. "We started all the way back in September. I see tremendous development."

The women's Big Ten competition will take place in West Lafayette, Indiana, on Feb. 15-18. The men's competition is in Colum-

as Jok fit into an offense that produced 84 points per game without him.

Iowa ended up assisting on 22 of its 27 baskets and committed only 11 turnovers, four on charging calls.

The unselfishness and attention to detail have the Hawkeyes rolling and in sole possession of sixth place in the Big Ten.

"Personally, I think this is the best [ball movement] we've had," Cook said. "We're unselfish. From one to 15, we're unselfish, we're moving the ball from side to side and finding open guys.

So it's been fun to watch and play with."

The Hawkeyes will need to be clicking on all cylinders in order to come away victorious and add a huge win to boost their tournament résumé.

"Obviously, we're going to have to bring a big defensive game; they're scoring 80 points per game and they're 11-0 on their home court," Bluder said. "They've got three outstanding scorers. They have a 6-5 center, but Megan doesn't shy away from that, but they are shooting the 3-ball very, very well, and we are going to need great 3-point defense against them at their place."

can pick up the slack in other places with bonus points and whatnot," Brands said. "Giving these guys a little bit of R&R, without the R. A little bit of rest, without maybe the recreation."

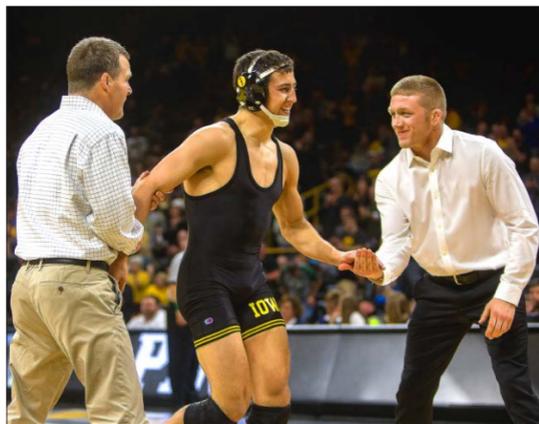

After losing three-straight matches, 141-pounder Topher Carton got back on the right track with a 9-1 major decision over Cole Martin.

With the three previous losses all being winnable, Carton needed some encouragement, and he got it in the form of a quote from his sister's favorite author.

"I actually saw something come across my Facebook timeline that kind of spoke to me a little bit," Carton said. "It was an F. Scott Fitzgerald quote that said 'Never confuse a single loss with a final loss.' That's the gist of it, and I've kind of been thinking about that all week."

Two days later, Iowa beat the No. 13 Gophers, 27-11.

Winning seven matches, Iowa got out to a quick 19-0 lead that it didn't surrender. After Mitch Bowman lost by tech fall and Steven Holloway lost by decision, Minnesota cut the lead to 19-8 and threatened to beat No. 1 Thomas Gilman for the first time this season.

No. 6 Ethan Lizak scored 8 quick points on Gilman to go up 8-0 and went into the third period up 9-4.

But with just over a minute left in the final period, Gilman got into a position where he was able to pin Lizak in a crazy comeback.

"I welcome the challenge," Gilman said in a release. "He came out there to beat me, and I really appreciate that. I genuinely mean that, too. He came out there to beat me. Not a lot of guys do that. They wrestle to keep it close. It was a good match."

Coming off of two-straight losses against the country's top-two teams, Iowa now has three-consecutive wins over ranked teams. The Hawkeyes bounced back. Give credit where credit is due."

Lonzo Ball is the other, and he'll likely be a lottery pick in the upcoming NBA draft).

Ellingson, coming off the bench, scored 11, but his timely buckets ignited a frenzy in the Carver crowd.

"We're not necessarily keying into Pete all the time," Nicholas Baer said. "We're scoring from a variety of people. I have to credit Ellingson. He's really elevated his game."

Ellingson isn't a guy who's looking for a shot every single time he touches the ball; he'll facilitate and set screens.

"I know guys are going to be flying at me, so I can make more plays off the dribble or create shots for others," he said.

He also hammered the final nail in Nebraska's coffin, knocking down his third triple of the game with fewer two minutes remaining.

Hawkeye fans can't point to who will lead the team in scoring each night, but that's a good thing.

Because over these last three games, opposing defenses haven't figured it out, either.

second half.

Because Gustafson bullied the Wolverines down low in the first half, they keyed in on her for the last 20 minutes, and no one was able to step up for the Hawkeyes. Michigan played zone on defense and in the fourth quarter, the Hawkeyes were unable to hit the open 3s.

"We did a lot of good things," Bluder said in the release. "Offensively, we rebounded, and we took care of the ball, but we just couldn't score enough points in the fourth quarter."

Another reason that the Hawkeyes struggled offensively in the fourth quarter was their starting point guard; Davis left the game with an injury, giving the reins of the offense to freshman Kathleen Doyle. With the game on the line and the stakes high, Doyle fouled out with 1:57 left remaining, which made coming away with a victory more difficult.

Word is not out yet on the status of the injury and whether Davis will be ready for Iowa's next contest, Thursday at 6 p.m. against Michigan State in Carver-Hawkeye. The Hawkeyes now sit at 14-9, 5-5 in the Big Ten.

"Hopefully, we'll come back against Michigan State on Thursday and get a split with the Michigan schools," Bluder said in the release.

Jok returns, Hawks keep winning

Nebraska forward Jack McVeigh (10) passes over Iowa's Brady Ellingson (24) and Peter Jok (14) during the second half on Sunday. (Associate Press/Charlie Neibergall)

By BLAKE DOWSON | blake-dowson@uiowa.edu

Peter Jok took the opportunity in his return to Iowa's starting lineup to blend in as just one of the guys, and a balanced scoring effort led the Hawkeyes (14-10, 6-5 Big Ten) to a win over Nebraska, 81-70, on Sunday afternoon in front of 13,000 in Carver-Hawkeye.

Jok received a warm welcome back — a loud ovation when he was announced in the starting lineup and an even louder cheer when he made his first basket, almost 14 minutes into the first half. The senior's first game back was productive — though unspectacular — with 12 points, 8 coming from the line.

"I am so proud of him," Iowa head coach Fran McCaffery said. "Five assists, 5 rebounds, made his free throws down the stretch. They're top blocking him, chasing him everywhere. He had a couple looks, I'm sure he's frustrated they didn't go in. But I thought his shot selection was really terrific, really efficient."

Brady Ellingson took no backseat to Jok; he had another exceptional game coming off the bench.

The junior from Menomonee Falls, Wisconsin, has become a go-to player over the past three games for the Hawkeyes, averaging almost 12 points and shooting 63 percent from the field (12-19) and 71 percent from behind the 3-point line (10-14).

He's also dished out 13 assists in that stretch without turning the ball over.

"He's smart. He's tough. He's cerebral," McCaffery said. "He can play any one of three spots. He knows exactly where to go, where to line up every time. He's a much underrated defender."

Ellingson has undoubtedly shown up on more scouting reports in the past two weeks than ever in his career, and he said after the game he could tell a difference.

"Every time I walk down by their bench, they're always yelling 'shooter' and whatnot," Ellingson said. "That's expected now. I just have to stay patient and hunt for my shot."

Freshmen Tyler Cook and Jordan Bohannon joined Jok and Ellingson in double figures for Iowa. Cook's left-handed hook shot got hot at the beginning of the second half, and he ended up with 13 points. Bohannon led Iowa with 15.

"I just came out more aggressive in the second half," Cook said. "I noticed they were kind of [relaxed] off the ball, so I just tried to take advantage of that."

Ahmad Wagner and Cordell Pemsil added 6 points each, and Dom Uhl and Nicholas Baer both knocked down 7 points.

It was the same balanced scoring effort that has happened throughout the three-game winning streak, though Jok became a part of it against Nebraska.

There were moments of uncertainty in the first half, when the ball wasn't moving well and ended up in Jok's hands at the end of the shot clock. The second half was a different story, however,

Balanced scoring keys Hawkeyes

By ADAM HENSLEY
adam-hensley@uiowa.edu

Three games ago, the Hawkeyes had fallen victim to a three-game losing streak. Peter Jok, the team's leading scorer — and one of the best in the country, for that matter — sat out two games to rest his injured back.

Thanks to balanced scoring, Iowa (14-10, 6-5 Big Ten) has won three-straight games and now sits at sixth in the conference.

"When [Jok's] out there and teams pay the attention to him, it opens things up for Jordan [Bohannon], for Brady [Ellingson], for Tyler Cook, and everybody else on our team," head coach Fran McCaffery said.

Jok

A balanced scoring effort kept Nebraska guessing on defense for most of the game, especially in the second half, in which Husker coach Tim Miles said Iowa "finished [them] off."

Eleven Hawkeyes played against Nebraska, and 10 scored.

It hasn't always been this way, but balanced scoring is the main reason Iowa has won three straight and in a position to move up in the Big Ten standings.

"[There's] a sense of togetherness," Ellingson said.

Early on this season, Jok commanded the offense and questions arose about who would step up to assist the senior in the scoring column.

It's been a team effort; no one player has carried the team during Jok's absence and in his return from injury on Sunday.

Cook scored 13 points. He, along with Ahmad Wagner, Dom Uhl, and Cordell Pemsil, kept the Nebraska bigs in foul trouble early and often with his post presence.

"I think we just found what works best for us," Cook said.

Those four combined to score 32 points.

Jok had a poor shooting outing in his return, but he didn't shoot excessively. His damage came at the line, where he went 8-of-8.

Meanwhile, Bohannon and Ellingson let it fly from deep.

Bohannon drained his 54th 3-pointer of the season, setting an Iowa record for the most made shots from downtown by a freshman.

He entered the game as one of two freshmen to make more than 50 3-pointers and dish out more than 100 assists on the season (UCLA's

Wrestling rips off two wins

By PETER RUDEN

Give credit where credit is due. That was Tom Brands' message after the No. 3 Iowa wrestling team defeated No. 16 Wisconsin, 33-8 on Feb. 3. The Hawkeyes then took down No. 13 Minnesota on Sunday.

"I think sometimes you got to give yourself a little credit, so give our guys credit," Brands said after the win over the Badgers.

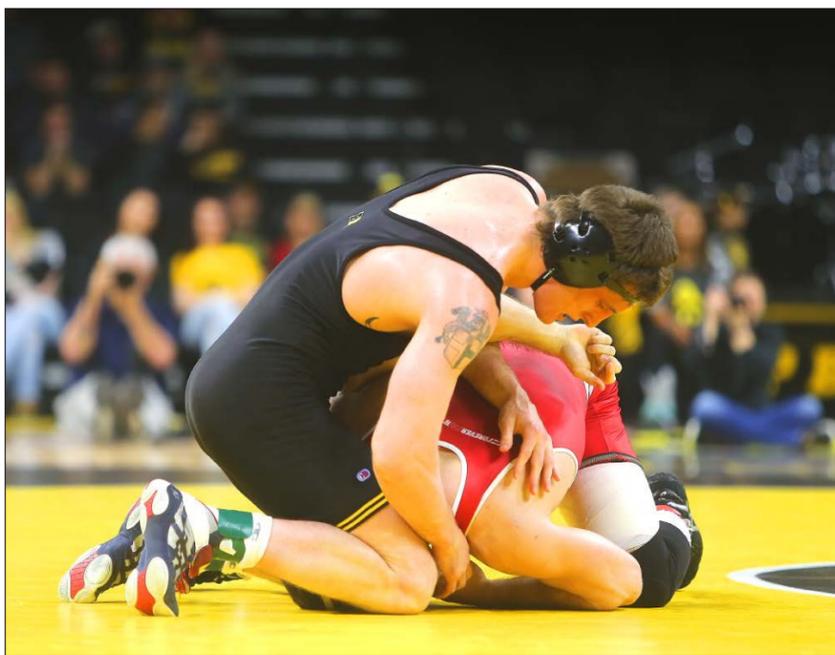

The night started off the same way it ended for Iowa: with wins.

After Wisconsin drew to start at 184 pounds, No. 5 Sammy Brooks made them pay. Brooks pinned Wisconsin's Hunter Ritter with 6.9 seconds left in the second period to let Iowa jump out to a 6-0 lead.

With Cory Clark and Steven Holloway both sitting out, bonus points were at a premium for the Hawkeyes, but they were able to pick them up throughout the night.

"You always want to get bonus points anytime you step on the mat, right?" 184-pounder Sammy Brooks said. "Maybe there's a little more motivation when you're starting the guys off."

After Brooks got Iowa going with six quick team points, the Hawkeyes never looked back. Iowa, which had its second-straight win, went on to win eight of the 10 matches, scoring bonus points in five.

Things got interesting when junior Faraan Brantley, who had never wrestled in a dual in his Iowa career and is listed on Iowa's roster as a 174-pounder, got the nod at heavyweight. He took on No. 2 Connor Medbery but lost by tech fall, 18-1.

But with another dual on Sunday against Minnesota, Brands thought resting Holloway and Clark was the right thing to do.

"It's just the smart thing to do with these young guys. It's been a gauntlet, and we believe in this team that they

The Iowa women's basketball team has had seven true road games this season. So far, it has won two — Jan. 17 at Rutgers and Nov. 16 at North Dakota.

On Sunday afternoon, it had an opportunity to win its third road game in eight tries and earn a major résumé-booster when it traveled to take on Michigan (19-5).

After leading for 32 minutes of the game, the Hawkeyes became complacent on offense and eventually gave the lead back to the Wolverines. As a result, the Hawkeyes were outscored 20-9 in the fourth quarter and ultimately lost in the final minute, 72-70.

For most of the game, the Hawkeyes played some of their best basketball of the season. At half-time, they led by 12 points, 45-33, because of their focused effort to out-rebound Michigan and get the ball inside to sophomore Megan Gustafson.

"We played three good quarters of basketball, but in the fourth quarter, we struggled scoring against Michigan's zone," Iowa head coach Lisa Bluder said in a release. "We came in here, battled with them, and beat them for most of the game. We did a lot of great things, but unfortunately, a loss is a loss."
