The University of Iowa Homecoming Executive Council on Tuesday hosted a focus group aiming to make Homecoming more inclusive for the entire community. The council invited members of the UI community to engage in a conversation about Homecoming 2017, which will take place the week of Oct. 1-7, and to give perspectives and feedback on how the council could do a better job of engaging with all members of the community.

Halfway through their walk, a bystander spewed profanity at the protesters, but they persisted to complete their march around the block.

“The idea came to do a series of focus groups starting off early [in the year] to hear what people think about Homecoming and to build that up so that the actual week of Homecoming is that manifestation of what we want it to be and what everyone else wants as well,” said Devin Francis, the multicultural initiatives director for the Homecoming Council.

The council plans to host more focus groups to continue the conversation on how to make Homecoming more inclusive for all.

“Homecoming is seen as very greek, and while we don’t want to diminish that greek life is very important on our campus, we also want to be more inclusive of other groups,” said Rachel Green, the marketing director for Homecoming Council.

The goal of Homecoming is to have a week in which the campus and community celebrate being Hawkeyes.

A variety of activities are planned for the week including an outdoor movie, the Shout dance event, the Homecoming parade, and a concert.

“Homecoming is so large that it can sometimes seem like an abstract idea to people, when really, if you think about Homecoming, it should be the most inclusive thing happening on campus because not only are we reaching out to students, we are reaching out community members, we’re reaching out to alumni,” Francis said.

Some ideas discussed at the focus group included inclusion in Homecoming activities such as the “Shout” dance event, which is currently dominated by the greek community, reaching out to different student organizations and minority groups on campus, and making people aware of what Homecoming is.

UI student Apoorva Raikwar, who attended the focus group, said she thought Homecoming was a great event that is meant to bring together all Hawkeyes, and the purpose of the focus group was to find ways to include communities that normally aren’t as invited to participate.

“I really wanted to have a voice in what we can do to be inclusive to underrepresented minority groups on campus,” Raikwar said. “Diversity and inclusiveness is not just beneficial for, quote-on-quote, “diverse” groups, it’s beneficial for everyone.”

Francis said the focus group provided good insight and takeaways.

“[The takeaway I have from tonight’s focus group is] that the problem does not lie in people wanting to participate,” Francis said. “It’s about getting information out, and how we are getting it out there most efficiently, [and] how do we just let people know that they are wanted and make them feel wanted.”

of domestic violence, relationship violence, and sexual abuse.

After the march, the group reunited on the Pentacrest, where survivors of abuse were invited to publicly speak about their experiences.

Since 1979, Take Back the Night has been an annual event for the Iowa City community.

This year, several university organizations collaborated to organize the event, including the UI Student Government, the Women’s Resource and Action Center, the Rape Victim Advocacy Program, the Antiviolence Coalition, and Ulowa Feminist Union.

UI junior Madi Hoffman, one of the event organizers, said attending Take Back the Night meant a great deal to her.

“Sexual violence is such a huge problem all over the nation,” she said. “It is a problem on our campus and to give a space that is safe and letting survivors speak up over their experience is such an empowering and important thing to do. It helps counteract the silencing of the violence that often happens after the event has occurred. It gives people a place where they can come and talk about it.”

RVAP Director Adam Robinson said the event is a crucial for his organization because it sheds on the issue of sexual abuse.

“Sexual violence happens far too frequently to all populations,” he said. “Sexual violence is about power and control, so events like Take Back the Night are about re-establishing our power, and that we honor everyone’s safety and the right to never experience [sexual assault.]”

UISG Sen. Jessica Owens, an organizer of the event, said she felt the need to contribute after spectating what assault survivors have gone through at a previous rally.

“The most emotionally impacting part is the audience testimonials,” she said. “It’s definitely very hard to sit through, but I think it’s an essential experience to go there one time and hear the incredible bravery of all of the people. Just experiencing it really changes your perspective on things.”

After completing her third year in Take Back the Night, Hoffman said, she looks back fondly participating in the previous rallies.

“I’m very grateful that I get to take part of this event every year, it’s something that I always look forward to because I know how important it is and how beneficial it is for our campus to have this,” Hoffman said. “I want survivors to know that it’s OK to speak out, and people are here for you. We believe you, and we’ll listen to you.”

April titled “The Scientific Reason Men Think You’re Into Them When You’re Not.”

In an Iowa Now press release published in October 2016, Treat said she looked into this type of behavior because of the ongoing sexual aggression on college campuses.

“Sexual aggression is a serious problem on college campuses across the country,” she said in the release. “Researchers have shown that misperception of a woman’s sexual-interest cues plays a role in sexual aggression; this research takes the novel step of trying to modify what people focus on when judging a woman’s sexual interest.”

Treat declined to comment on the study beyond the release.

According to the OZY article, the researchers took a sample of 220 men and 276 women who were undergraduate students. They were shown 130 full-body photos of women and asked to rate how sexually interested the woman looked. These could range from “extremely rejecting” to “extremely sexually interested.”

During the study, half of the students were instructed to focus on emotional cues, which included facial expressions and body language. They were also told to ignore physical attractiveness and style of clothing.

The results of the study showed both genders rating sexual interest in a close percentage. However, the study appeared to find that male participants were more likely to rate based on physical appearance.

UI senior Jill Oberhart, a volunteer facilitator for the Women’s Resource & Action Center, said her fellow students need to understand nonverbal cues, such as body language and facial expressions.

“When students understand nonverbal cues while socializing, they can be active bystanders,” she said. “This means that if they see someone who is visibly uncomfortable, they can help get that person out of that situation.”

Rape Victim Advocacy Program Director Adam Robinson said he sees the importance of this type of research directed at a college setting.

“On one hand, trying to figure out any research to prevent sexual assault is valuable,” he said. “Certainly, there are cases where people wouldn’t identify as a perpetrator.”

Robinson said the gender differentiation of the research results was a crucial part of the study.

“We tend to teach male-identified individuals that they need to have lots of sex, while we teach female-identified individuals that need to be sexy, but not sexual, and that they can’t be assertive,” he said.

RVAP prevention-education coordinator Susan Junis said she was enthusiastic about the UI research.

“It is fantastic that this happening; we’re always looking at prevention at sexual assault and changing societal norms,” she said. “Often, survivors don’t know the intent behind the perpetrator.”

However, Junis stressed the importance of prioritizing verbal consent during these types of scenarios.

“We need to teach people how to utilize verbal cues and verbal consent,” she said. “People can’t always rely on nonverbal cues.”

Robinson said the research could possibly progress the sexual-prevention campaign.

“My hope is this inspires more questions to be asked,” he said. “The answer is going to be a difficult one to find. It will take a lot of discussion.”

Faculty tackles high-risk drinking on campus

By JASON ESTRADA
jason-estrada@uiowa.edu

The University of Iowa Faculty Senate provided an update on the 2016-2019 Alcohol Harm Reduction Plan on Tuesday.

The plan was developed to address high-risk drinking, a "serious public health issue on every college campus across the county," according to the plan.

Susan Assouline, a UI professor and the director of the Belin-Blank Center, said the Senate wanted to provide an update about the third version of the 2016-2019 Alcohol Harm Reduction Plan.

"The only way for us to reach an impact is by increasing awareness," she said.

The Senate passed out copies of the plan for everyone and wanted each faculty member to keep it where students could see it, like in their office.

The Alcohol Harm Reduction Advisory Committee accomplished significant improvements from 2009 to 2015 in many aspects of drinking. These accomplishments ranged from percentage of students engaged in high-risk drinking in the past two weeks, average number of drinks per occasion, and percent of students drinking 10 or more days per month.

Tanya Villhauer, the associate director for Student Wellness & Harm Reduction Initiatives, provided long-term trends regarding the students' use of alcohol at the UI.

"Probably one of the things for our whole campus to understand is perceptions versus the reality," she said. "And this is something that we need to be all aware of."

Villhauer said students believe two-thirds of their peers drink alcohol, but really only fewer than a quarter of peers actually drink.

With that understanding, she said, there will be good conversations and appropriate messages on these issues.

Although there is a significant decrease in students drinking, there is still a 51 percent rate of students who participate in high-risk drinking. Villhauer said there is a lot of work yet to accomplish.

An important goal the plan seeks is to help students succeed and to fulfill their goals and dreams.

"Less than 60 percent of students say they have had at least one negative consequence from alcohol last year," she said.

To reduce these consequences, Villhauer said, students should change their outcomes from drinking such as being with "stable" friends or having a designated driver.

For academic issues, the top impediments for student's learning were stress, anxiety, sleep difficulties, and depression.

"The top three [impediments] pretty much stay the same every year," she said. "Which is pretty common in a college setting."

However, at the bottom of the chart, alcohol use ranked at No. 7 as a learning impediment. Villhauer said she knows students are now starting to understand how the use of alcohol is connected not only to their academics, but in different ways as well.

Resmiye Oral, a clinical professor of pediatrics and director of the Child Protection Program, said she appreciated the committee's plan and believed it was phenomenal. She said she wondered if there is a mental-health advisory council with dedicated staff members that are designated to dealing with mental health issues.

"Is there a mental-health advisory council on our campus with a dedicated staff like you bringing together all state folders, so that we can work on this as well without diminishing this work which is extremely important," she asked.

Faculty choose new leaders for nexy year

By MARISSA PAYNE
marissa-payne@uiowa.edu

The lame-duck period began for the 2016-2017 University of Iowa Faculty Senate officers Tuesday.

Faculty Senate members elected a new group of officers for the coming school year at their last meeting of the semester in the of the Old Capitol Senate Chamber on Tuesday.

Current Faculty Senate Vice President Peter Snyder, a professor of cardiology, will be at the helm of the organization as president in the next academic year. He said he is humbled to serve as the Faculty Senate president.

"I can think of no more impactful way for me to serve the University of Iowa," he said.

Outgoing Faculty Senate President Tom Vaughn, an associate professor of public health, will replace Ed Dove, an associate professor of biomedical engineering, to serve as the past president, another position.

Some of the major obstacles these faculty leaders have addressed while serving in their current positions include lifting the sanction of the American Association of University Professors placed on the UI after the hiring of UI President Bruce Harreld, handling the new process of submitting strategic initiatives, undergoing the academic organizational structure study, and working with the administration's new approach to budgeting.

Vaughn expressed confidence in Snyder and the newly elected officers. Vaughn said something he wishes he could have done while in office is find more ways to encourage faculty communication.

"We can only be a community reaching our full potential as a university if we continue to strive to reach our full potential in shared governance," Vaughn said.

The incoming officers highlighted shared governance as a priority of theirs in serving as Faculty Senate officers.

Snyder said he didn't fully appreciate shared governance until becoming a Faculty Senate officer.

"You have a seat at the table to express what is important to us — our values — and also to express our concerns," he said. "It doesn't mean we get to make the final decisions; that rests with the president and the Board of Regents ..."

Additionally, Snyder said, shared governance means shared responsibility and being willing to engage with Harreld and other administrators to work collaboratively.

"If we don't do this, we give up our seat at the table and the ability to influence the direction of the university," he said.

Rachel Williams, the head of the Gender, Women's, and Sexuality Studies Department, will replace Ed Gillan, an associate professor of chemistry, as Faculty Senate secretary. She said she supports transparency, open dialogue, and collaboration with other shared governance leaders — Student Government, Staff Council, university administration, and the regents — in facing the challenges ahead of faculty.

"We face great challenges in this time of diminishing resources, leadership transitions, and expanding demands on faculty and staff," she said in a statement distributed to the meeting's attendees.

Serving as vice president will be Russ Ganim, a professor of French and the director of the Division of World Languages, Literatures, and Cultures. He said his dual roles as an administrator and faculty member position him uniquely to advocate for faculty and collaborate with people across the university.

"Faculty input and shared governance are the cornerstones of all academic institutions," he said in a statement distributed to the meeting's attendees. "The values of collegiality, transparency, and professionalism are essential to maintaining our identity as a university when facing the challenges ahead of us."

Work to address the university's challenges will begin over the summer, Snyder said.

"We need to find new ways to reach out to citizens of our state and our nation to reinforce the value of higher education in a public way," he said.

Stand Your Ground bad

ISABELLA ROSARIO
isabella-rosario@uiowa.edu

Earlier this month, Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad signed a bill that foresees major changes to the state's firearm laws — including a new Stand Your Ground provision. Following the bill's signing, Rep. Matt Windschitl, R-Missouri Valley, declared "Iowans got their freedoms back today." But studies showing the ugly truth of Stand Your Ground laws may reflect the exact opposite.

Since Florida passed the first Stand Your Ground law in 2005, the controversial law has been adopted in more than 20 states. The provision authorizes a person to use lethal force in self-defense of any perceived threat. Specifically, the Iowa law states, "A person may be wrong in the estimation of danger or the force necessary ... as long as there is a reasonable basis for the belief."

When George Zimmerman saw a black kid in a hoodie walking around his Sanford, Florida, neighborhood, he wrongly perceived 17-year-old Trayvon Martin as a threat. Zimmerman shot and killed him in "self-defense," and a jury found him not guilty of murder under Florida's Stand Your Ground law. This verdict incited heated protests nationwide; activists argued that Martin's blackness was directly correlated to Zimmerman being found not guilty. And unfortunately, statistics don't indicate they were wrong.

An in-depth report from an American Bar Association task force found Stand Your Ground laws have done nothing to decrease violent crime rates — in fact, they incentivize people to shoot because they believe they will be legally protected. And if they're a white person shooting a black person, they probably will be. A study from the Urban Institute found white-on-black homicides were 281 percent more likely to be justified by courts than black-on-white homicides. In states with Stand Your Ground laws, this gap only increases.

This data become even more troubling when you consider how black people, especially black men, are often dehumanized by society. The shooting of black teenager Mike Brown by white police Officer Darren Wilson is a prime example of this. Despite the fact that Wilson and Brown were of comparable size, Wilson described himself as "a 5-year-old holding onto Hulk Hogan." One study included in the task-force report determined that just showing a person a black face made that person more likely to believe that person had a weapon. Furthermore, the report indicated this biased fear of African Americans becomes more dangerous when there is no legal provision to "constrain the use of force." Stand Your Ground laws only enable this reckless, deadly behavior.

The NRA likes to tout the phrase "The only way to stop a bad guy with a gun is a good guy with a gun." But the problem with Stand Your Ground laws is that they enable good guys to shoot "bad" guys before even determining if their target is a real threat. If the "bad" guy they end up killing turns out to be an unarmed civilian such as Martin, especially if the unarmed civilian is black like Martin, they can escape a guilty verdict claiming they had "reasonable basis." Stand Your Ground laws aren't about legalizing self-defense in life-threatening situations. They're about people — especially white people — having the right to take an innocent person's life, then get away with it by claiming self-defense.

Stand Your Ground laws have been statistically proven to encourage impulsive shooting, fuel racial bias, and not actually make anyone safer. The provisions granted in the Iowa law will only incentivize more violence, especially against communities of color. Branstad may be proud that this legislation "makes Iowa one of the most pro-Second Amendment states in the country," but he shouldn't be proud that he has signed a bill that will inevitably jeopardize the safety of Iowans.

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Solar benefits Iowa

The energy landscape is continually evolving across the country and the world at an unprecedented rate. No longer is our energy generation dependent on one or two fuel sources; instead, the possibilities continue to expand. Central Iowa Power Cooperative has been at the forefront of evolving energy for more than a decade. As we entered 2016, our generation capacity was 60 percent emission and carbon-free and consisted of wind, hydro, landfill gas, nuclear, natural gas, and coal. This "all of the above" approach ensures the cooperative's balanced generation provides safe, reliable, and cost-effective energy for our members. To further enhance our portfolio, we added solar in 2016. Our 5.5 MW utility-scale system is currently the largest in the state of Iowa.

Our member-owned cooperative takes pride in providing options that meet the needs and goals of our members. As solar energy becomes more cost-effective, our members chose to enter the arena. Solar increases our emission and carbon-free portfolio and further diversifies our generation assets, which enhances the cooperative's ability to maintain stable rates in a market in which energy costs can vary greatly. Choosing to utilize utility-scale solar versus community solar was a well-researched endeavor to develop the best option for delivering energy across our 58-county territory. As a cooperative, it is our job, even our mandate, to serve all members equally. We recognize installing a residential solar system can be costly and often out of reach for a large portion of the public. Utility-scale solar benefits everyone, regardless of income level, not just those who can purchase a residential system or afford to buy into a community solar farm.

While renewable-energy sources are a critical component in providing environmentally friendly energy, they cannot yet sustain the entire electric load of our members. We live in a 24/7 world, and reliable electricity is an important component. Our members expect the lights to come on whenever the switch is flipped. If the wind isn't blowing or the Sun isn't shining, solar and wind are unable to support the electrical needs of our members. Until the capacity exists to store large scale amounts of electricity in a way that does not increase costs to our members, we are dependent on numerous forms of fuel sources to continue providing safe, reliable, and cost-effective electricity. That's where the "all of the above" strategy comes into play. Without the use of fuel sources that can sus-tain generation at any point in the day, we risk an electrical system incapable of meeting today's demands. Nuclear, coal, and natural gas are an important part of the equation.

The cooperative maintains our commitment to a diverse generation portfolio that ensures all members can rest assured the lights will come on when the switch is flipped. To that end, we look forward to investigating emerging technologies that allow the cooperative to provide safe, reliable, environmentally friendly and cost-effective electricity for our members across the state.

We are Iowa's largest cooperative energy provider, serving 13 electric cooperatives and associations spanning 58 of Iowa's 99 counties. We are a generation and transmission cooperative supplying power to its member distribution cooperatives covering a territory that stretches 300 miles diagonally across the state from the Mississippi River on the east to Shenandoah in the southwest. The Central Iowa Cooperative supplies all power requirements for its member cooperatives, and as their power provider, we are dedicated to delivering quality, safe, and reliable service at the lowest possible cost.

Join us to celebrate Phil at the UI all this week

Each year, thousands of University of Iowa alumni and friends give back to Iowa, and their donations help make our university remarkable.

That's why we host our annual philanthropy events — to honor those who give and celebrate the effect donors have on our campus and our people. I hope you enjoy celebrating

Phil with us this week.

Today, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., be sure to stop by the T. Anne Cleary Walkway for the Faces of Phil event. You can sign a postcard for a donor, take a Polaroid picture, and enjoy a delicious lunch.

I hope you also will join us for the annual Life With Phil talk at 3:30 p.m. Thursday C20 Pomerantz Center. This year, UI alumna and media powerhouse Sheri Salata will be our guest speaker. The former executive producer of "The Oprah Winfrey Show" and former president of Harpo Studios and the Oprah Winfrey Network will join me for a Q&A about her career, her philanthropic passions, and her new venture.

Salata, who has been named one of Fast Company's 100 Most Creative People in Business and one of the Hollywood Reporter's Women in Entertainment Power 100, earned a Bachelor of Business Administration degree from the University of Iowa in 1980. We're delighted to welcome her back to campus.

Despite her busy schedule, she remains a dedicated and engaged alumna — she's active on the Tippi Advisory Board, has spoken on campus, and has supported diversity and women's leadership initiatives in the UI Tippie College of Business. Salata speaks very thoughtfully about what it means to live a meaning-filled and purposeful life. And those who attend her talk also will learn about her favorite Iowa memories, her philanthropic passions, and her fascinating professional journey.

Please join us to celebrate all things Phil.

$21 million and countless hours of UI Phil

Last fall, I attended a "Life With Phil" lecture, hosted by the University Lecture Committee and the University of Iowa Foundation, that featured Ted Waitt, the founder of Gateway 2000 Inc. and the Waitt Foundation. Addressing a crowd of primarily students filling the IMU Main Lounge, Waitt identified philanthropy as the giving of your time or money to a cause that matters to you.

For the thousands of University of Iowa students who participate in UI Dance Marathon, that cause is the fight against pediatric cancer — and the amount of time they dedicate to the organization is invaluable. Their hard work on behalf of Dance Marathon is not the result of a financial incentive but rather, a byproduct of genuine passion. Whether it's on the dance floor during the 24 hour "Big Event" or in the UI Dance Marathon Pediatric Cancer Center, located on the 11th floor of the brand-new University of Iowa Stead Family Children's Hospital, UI students find immense joy in giving back to the community.

Our mission is to provide emotional and financial support to pediatric oncology patients, and we live out this mission 365 days a year. We could stop fundraising and give up at any time, but the children we serve cannot stop fighting. Because we acknowledge this reality, and because we are inspired by their resilience and courage, we remain diligent, and we keep challenging ourselves to do more, too. For the kids.

After 23 years of embracing challenges, UI Dance Marathon has raised more than $21 million "for the kids." Last year alone, we raised nearly $2.6 million, and we will not stop there. Dance Marathon 24 has already begun, and the opportunities are endless. To many, it is unfathomable that a group of college students can raise that much money. It doesn't surprise me, though. All it takes is a group of hard-working and good-hearted students willing to give up their time. That's philanthropy.

Cleary Walkway turns into 'Treasure Island'

By CHARLES PECKMAN
charles-peckman@uiowa.edu

The T. Anne Cleary Walkway transformed into a thrift shop Tuesday for Treasure Trade, an opportunity for students to donate gently used clothing items in return for new items.

The Earth Month event, which was sponsored by the Office of Sustainability and UI Environmental Coalition, aimed to give clothing items students no longer wear a new home.

According to Environmental Protection Agency data, Americans throw out 13 million tons of clothing every year. This staggering number accounts for 9 percent of all non-recycled waste.

The EPA also estimates that the average American throws out 70 pounds of textiles a year.

Although clothing excess is a problem, events such as Treasure Trade promote giving clothes a new home.

For students who did not get the opportunity to donate items to Treasure Trade, another event, "Donate, Don't Dump," at the end of the academic year will give students the opportunity to donate items and volunteer with item sorting during move out from the residence halls.

Eden DeWald, who works in the Office of Sustainability as an intern and helped organize the event, said the treasure trade is an opportunity for students to engage in sustainable clothing practices.

"[Treasure Trade] reaffirms the culture of sustainability," DeWald said. "The Office of Sustainability set out boxes in our office and the residence halls at the beginning of April, and have emptied the boxes a few times throughout the month."

She said the Treasure Trade helps alleviate the amount of material students choose to donate at the end of the year during the move out process.

UI student Sara Lettieri, who visited the "thrift store," said she was impressed with the selection, and always tries to donate items rather than dispose them.

"There is a cycle of donating and buying new items," Lettieri said. "That's wasteful, and that's why I always try to donate my clothing."

As Lettieri went over the tables of T-shirts, pants, dresses, and accessories, her focus was drawn towards a gray Juicy Couture hoodie.

George McCrory, a communication specialist in the Sustainability Office, said

People look at items during the UI Environmental Coalition's Treasure Trade on the T. Anne Cleary Walkway on Tuesday, April 25, 2017. Shoppers can both donate and shop through the gently used clothing for free, in celebration of Earth Month. (The Daily Iowan/Lily Smith) he is always excited about the Treasure Trade.

McCrory complimented DeWald's contributions to the event and praised the collaboration of the Sustainability Office and the UI Environmental Coalition.

"It's fun for students to come and search through the donated items," he said. "I like [Treasure Trade] because it's another opportunity for items to stay out of the landfill — encouraging the reuse of items is an important part of sustainability."

Life from a different angle through students' eyes

By JASON ESTRADA

A local center teaches students to look at the world differently through photography, and photos taken by students at the Transition Services Center will be on display throughout Iowa City.

The exhibition, called Unique Angles: A Photo Exhibit, will be available for the public to enjoy until May 30.

Lisa Ortega, a co-teacher at the center, said the program teaches life, job, and educational skills to students. It offers special-education students ages 18-21 with skills to increase their independence.

"My thought is that having a creative life and a way to express yourself creatively is a great life skill to have," she said.

The inspiration of the exhibition came from her passion of being a photographer. Ortega said she believed students would enjoy learning about photography in a different way than occasionally snapping a photo with a phone.

"I gave them a workshop about how you can use photography to express yourself and how you can take pictures from interesting angles, show part of something instead of all of something," she said.

The students went around town with their phones, tablets, and borrowed cameras and took pictures seeing things in a different way, she said. The students sent Ortega their photos, which added up to 1,700 pictures. Ortega chose one from each student to display for the exhibit.

Tenisha Robinson, a Transitions Services Center student, said she attended the workshop because she loved seeing photos of people and nature and has been taking photos since she graduated from high school in 2014.

"I love taking pictures of nature, and it's just something that calms me and brings me to peace, I guess," she said.

Photography is a hobby for her, so she found the workshop to be eye-opening to the world around her, she said.

Center Student Sarah Benson said she wanted to attend the workshop because she likes taking photos and has a creative mind.

"I started taking photos a lot when I was little about 6 or 7, and I got ahold of my mom's digital camera," she said.

Benson said she takes photos only for fun because she thinks she's not the best at photography, and she has never taken any photography classes.

She said she tries to take photos of things people see every day from odd angles to make them unique.

Exhibit locations: Iowa City Public Library — April 25 to May 1, MidWestOne Bank, 1906 Keokuk St. — May 2 to May 8, MidWestOne Bank, 110 First Ave., Coralville — May 9 to May 15, Old Capitol Town Center — May 16 to May 23, Transition Services Center Graduation Ceremony on May 24 at the main office of the Iowa City School District and the second floor of Eastdale Plaza from May 25 to May 30.

Trump's Ag cuts worry Iowans

The Trump administration recently released a budget proposal which would cut USDA discretionary spending by 21 percent. Iowa's producers and agriculture researchers rely on the data-gathering and agricultural support services that would be cut.

By MOLLY HUNTER | molly-hunter@uiowa.edu

Center for Agricultural Safety/Health at the University of Iowa, said the center relies on county-level service centers to distribute information on their research.

"If there was a reduction in [Farm Service Agency] offices, we would lose the ability to connect with farmers," Janssen said.

The Iowa Center's research focuses on agricultural safety. Reductions to the USDA's data-gathering services would make it harder for it to affect policies.

"When the funding for [data-gathering] goes away, it affects our ability to say to policymakers, 'Here's the burden of injury on your state, so you maybe should support the work that we do,'" Janssen said.

And, Lehman said, the cutbacks will contribute to existing strains on producers.

"It comes at a very bad time for our farmers," he said. "It's estimated that farm income will be down for the fourth-straight year and that will be a 50 percent drop in farm income. Farmers are already in a situation where they are tightening their belts and finding ways to innovate and be efficient."

Aside from county-level service centers, extension offices run by ISU, Iowa's land-grant university — which receives federal funding to do agriculture research and education — also bridge the gap between researchers and producers.

"Extension plays the role of interpreting — following the science but putting it in layman's terms," said John Lawrence, the acting vice pres-

The Trump administration's position in the budget proposal is that the marketplace and private sector can be depended upon to fill the gaps left behind by the USDA programs that get cut.

We are certainly trying to do as much as we can without [USDA] support . . . There are always strings attached . . .
— Earl Canfield, farmer in northeast Iowa

"[Trump] is definitely one who believes the marketplace will help determine the best way to approach and alleviate a problem and that regulations can get in the way of that," Hart said. "Even with the states, they're saying, 'OK, we're going to let the marketplace figure it out. Let producers and individual consumers figure it out.'"

But Janssen said public agriculture research may cease to be public if government funding for data-gathering is lost.

"Maybe the most important thing is that farmers lose unbiased sources of information," Janssen said. "If you eliminate funding . . . if anybody is going to pick that up, it is likely to be a corporate interest."

Janssen said the profit-seeking motives typical of corporate and private sector interests aren't inherently bad, but they do go against the mission of land-grant institutes, which is to keep farming profitable and sustainable for producers.

But some producers, such as Earl Canfield, the owner and operator of Canfield Family Farm in Dunkerton, Iowa, have found alternative resources outside of the ones provided or funded by the USDA.

"Three years ago, we joined up with Practical Farmers of Iowa," he said. "They have been a great resource for us in terms of information and networking us with other farmers."

In recent years, Canfield's operation has been steadily moving away from the practice of growing bulk commodities to sell in the wholesale market. Practical Farmers of Iowa has helped connect him to like-minded producers.

While Canfield said his goals are similar to the USDA's in terms of conservation, he has found the agency's services to be restrictive in the past.

"We are certainly trying to do as much as we can without [the USDA's] support," he said. "It's important for us to have the freedom to do things that might conflict with some of the rules and regulations it has with some of its programs."

The $4.7 billion cut to the U.S. Agriculture Department included in President Trump's 2018 budget proposal could jeopardize the agriculture support and data-gathering services on which Iowa's farmers and agriculture researchers depend.

"Agricultural support is waning," said Chad Hart, an associate economics professor at Iowa State University. "We're not putting research money into the areas where we do have problems and concerns within our agricultural production system."

The proposal would drop the USDA's discretionary spending budget from $25 billion to $17.9 billion.

The proposal makes reductions to county-level agriculture service centers run by the USDA's Rural Development agency, Farm Service Agency, and Natural Resources Conservation Service. Cuts to the USDA's data-gathering capabilities are also proposed.

"The idea is that to get those size cuts out of the USDA budget, you'd have to close some county offices, consolidate area offices," Hart said. "Instead of each county having its own USDA office . . . we'd have to move to regional centers."

The budget proposal also completely eliminates the Rural Business-Cooperative Service's discretionary budget, which makes up two-thirds of its $223 million national budget. The Cooperative Service administers various USDA rural-economic programs. It uses some of its discretionary money to pay for salaries and expenses to keep its offices running. Salaries and expenses for Iowa cost $5 million alone.

Aaron Lehman, the president of the Iowa Farmer's Union and a farmer himself, said the cuts would make it harder for farmers to get information offered by the USDA.

"We rely on [the Farm Service Agency] and the other USDA agencies for us to get the most current and up-to-date information on a whole host of issues, whether it be farm safety, information dealing with markets, what we buy and use as farm inputs, or conservation and water quality," he said.

Brandi Janssen, the director of the Iowa ident of ISU Extension and Outreach. "We talk about science with practice — how do we put it into practice? We'll have education for adults and professionals based on the best research available."

While extension offices are funded using county tax dollars, they still face financial pressure.

"They simply can't raise taxes locally if they want to hire more people, or if rent went up on their building, or just salary increases over time," Lawrence said. "So locally, they may still face budget pressures."

Some extension offices receive grants, but if a grant ends, staff or resources tied to that money may also disappear.

To offset the loss of in-person contact, producers may find themselves needing to source more information online. Hart said the USDA has been trying to beef up its online presence in recent years, but with the proposed cuts to its data-gathering services, that might not matter.

"A lot of the discussion here, with some of the cuts being proposed, would be that we would get less information out of USDA, that it would do fewer reports, that we would get less background information," Hart said. "We'll be missing some numbers."

Baseball hits when it counts to earn win

By ADAM HENSLEY
adam-hensley@uiowa.edu

Iowa won with a walk-off single, but with a tie game heading to the eighth inning, 1 run for Milwaukee could have proved to be a game-winner.

Thanks to Drake Robison's clutch performance in back-to-back innings, the Hawkeyes held the Panthers scoreless in the game's closing sequences.

"I was just concentrating on hitting my spots," he said. "I knew Milwaukee's hitters had done a good job on barreling up balls. I knew that with the pitch calling, if I did what they wanted we were going to have a good outcome."

Robison struck out his first batter after taking over for Zach Daniels. Milwaukee's Ben Chally grounded out to third base, but Mike Jordahl reached first on an error the next at-bat.

A passed ball sent Mike Ferri, who pinch ran for Jordahl, to third base, putting Milwaukee in prime scoring position.

Robison pitched three consecutive strikes to retire the Panther's last batter of the inning while also erasing their best chance at adding a run late in the game.

"Drake was really good late," head coach Rick Heller said. "I think it might have been as good as he's been all season long. He had good life on his fast ball, he had good command on all his pitches."

Milwaukee had one more chance to take the lead, however.

After the Hawkeyes failed to score in the bottom of the eighth, Robison needed his A-game to keep the Panthers off the scoreboard.

With Hawkeye fans on the edge of their seats, the senior delivered.

Milwaukee's Ian Ross struck out looking and Robison followed up with his second strikeout, a swing on a 2-2 count.

Robison needed just three pitches to end the final batter's bid for a score.

Billy Quirke grounded out, giving Iowa a chance to win without extra innings.

"It was exactly what we needed in the situation we were in," Heller said.

No Norman, Whelan, no problem

Ben Norman and Chris Whelan did not play in Iowa's win against Milwaukee.

Whelan, Iowa's lead-off man, suffered an injury in the Hawkeyes' 13-5 loss against Rutgers on April 23.

"That's a big blow to us," Heller said. "He's been one of our best players all season, and the last 10 games he's been our best offensive player."

The Naperville, Illinois, native leads Iowa in on-base percentage, at .439. He also holds the 14th-best batting average in the conference (.326, good for fourth on Iowa's roster) and ties for third for the Hawkeyes in home runs (4) and ranks fourth in hits (44).

Heller said he's "keeping his fingers crossed" that Whelan will play against Penn State this weekend,

Iowa's Drake Robison pitches in the eighth against Milwaukee on Tuesday at Banks Field. Robison pitched two shutout innings to end the game, and the Hawkeyes won, 4-3. (The Daily Iowan/Nick Rohlman) starting on Friday.

Unlike Whelan, Norman was a healthy scratch.

"Ben has been scratching a bit offensively," Heller said. "We thought we'd give him the night off and let him clear his head."

Justin Jenkins, who filled in for Norman, finished 1-for-3 at the plate, giving Iowa a boost toward the bottom of its lineup.

Rallying from an early deficit

In Iowa's 8-run loss to Rutgers, the Hawkeyes gave up 8 runs through the game's first three innings. The Scarlet Knights added 2 more before the Hawkeyes answered.

Milwaukee's homer in the first put Iowa in an early hole, but the Black and Gold recovered, scoring 2 runs in the bottom of the first and another in the third, answering the Panther's score in the second.

"We struggled a little bit — I mean, we've struggled in the last couple games — [but] we started off pretty good," Jake Adams said.

His home run (his 15th on the season) gave Iowa a 3-2 advantage in the third.

ror and really see what I wanted to be as a pitcher, so I came out with a lot more confidence and a lot better attitude today," Robison said.

No matter what the final score was at the end, the game was concerning.

It isn't a good sign when a team loses the final two games of a series against an opponent that sits lower in the conference.

It also isn't a good sign when the team has such a tightly contested game against a team that has been swept by Northern Kentucky, Wright State, and Illinois-Chicago.

However, there is still a bright side. A win is a win, no matter who it's against.

While it might have experienced turbulence earlier on, the pitching staff battled back with an impressive performance in a much-needed win.

In addition to the pitching taking a big step, the offense clinched the game when it mattered most — the game's final inning.

"We've been on a little bit of a skid these last five games, pitching and offensively," McCoy said. "It was good to grind one out and give us a little confidence back."

Starkenburg went back to retiring batters three at a time to secure the win for Iowa.

Now that the Hawkeyes got a much-needed win, they can focus on Ohio State.

"These midweek games are challenging," Loop-er said. "They're not easy. Our instate rivals are challenging, our border rivals are challenging, and these teams are not games that we take lightly on the schedule. They held in there, and it allows us to gain a little confidence to see what we really need to work on before we head into Ohio State."

falls in love with him, and he likely won't last past the third round.

George Kittle will no doubt get drafted as well. He is too good a blocker and pass catcher not to. His workout at the NFL Combine raised a lot of eyebrows, and teams are a lot more excited about him than they were when he was fighting through injuries all season.

After those three, it gets a little shaky, but I believe two more Hawkeyes will get drafted — quarterback C.J. Beathard and offensive tackle Cole Croston.

Beathard has the toughness to play quarterback in the NFL. He has an arm that will play. He commands a huddle as well as any other quarterback in the draft. He has the pedigree — his grandfather was a general manager for the Redskins for many years. Some team will take a chance on developing Beathard.

Croston will benefit from the reputation of past Iowa offensive linemen. His senior season didn't scream "NFL prospect," but he has the size and five years of experience under Kirk and Brian Ferentz. NFL teams don't overlook that fact. Besides, he does have some good tape when you look at it. If he gets drafted, it will likely be in the seventh round.

— Blake Dowson

Four

Draft week is upon us, and five Hawkeyes may be lucky enough to hear their name called.

Those five Hawkeyes are Desmond King, George Kittle, Jaleel Johnson, C.J. Beathard, and Riley McCarron. While none of these five are likely to be drafted on Thursday, at least four should have a new home come Saturday night.

Last year King was a sure-fire first-round pick had he chosen to leave early. However, after a "mediocre" senior year, late third round or early fourth seems to be where King will end up. Concerns about his speed will most likely force him to play safety at the next level.

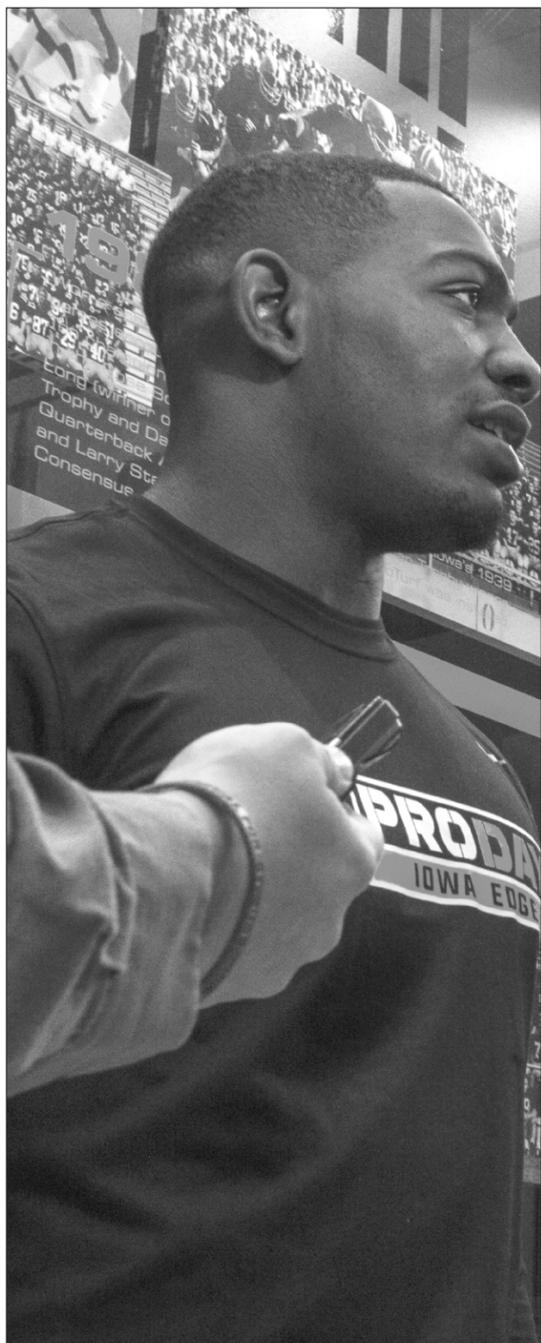

The fourth round should be a busy one for Hawkeyes — Kittle and Johnson are likely to find themselves new teams in the fourth. Johnson has a chance to be a solid NFL starter, especially if he continues to make big-time plays as he did against Michigan. Iowa is known to produce solid tight ends (i.e., Dallas Clark) and one NFL team is sure to find another solid one in Kittle. Though more of a blocking tight end, Kittle has shown some ability as a receiver as well.

Beathard and McCarron are the two fringe draft prospects for the Hawkeyes; if they get drafted, it will probably be in the seventh round. I fully expect a team to pick up Beathard sometime in the seventh because quarterbacks are at a premium in today's NFL game, and some team is likely to give him a shot. McCarron impressed many people with his Pro Day, and many think he could be a good fit for the Patriots' system, but we will have to wait and see until after the draft. Iowa will have four players drafted.

Clutch hitting, pitching lead Iowa in walk-off win

It was going to happen at some point. Going up against 13-25 Milwaukee, there was a high probability that Iowa (24-15) was going to win. On paper, the Hawkeyes had every reason to pull it off.

That moment came in a 3-3 game in the bottom of the ninth inning when Mason McCoy came to the plate.

After a slow offensive performance in which Iowa mustered up just 5 hits in the first eight innings, it loaded the bases to prepare McCoy for another clutch moment that he took advantage of.

“He’s one of our best players and he’s been there a lot of times before,” head coach Rick Heller said. “I knew he wasn’t going to be nervous or anything like that, so I did expect him for sure to get the run in.”

It was a win, but it was also a game that could help the Hawkeyes grow and figure out what they need to do to increase production.

After a series loss to Rutgers, it was important for the Hawkeyes to get back to its winning ways. They needed consistency, and they’re hoping this will point them in the right direction.

“It’ll help a lot,” McCoy said. “This was one of those games where it kind of tested us. Milwaukee’s been struggling a little bit, too, so it really tested our mindset ... I think it’ll help us in the long run definitely.”

Pitching will play a big role in the critical series against Penn State this upcoming weekend, starting on Friday. Iowa needs to rattle off some wins against Big Ten foes to stay in contention for the conference tournament.

The pitching against Rutgers in Sunday’s game was shaky, and it looked like it might be more of the same in the early innings.

But after allowing 2 runs in the first two innings, the Hawkeye pitching staff allowed just 1 more, while Drake Robison closed out the game with two hitless innings to go along with 4 strikeouts en route to earning the win.

“After Sunday, I had to take a look in the mir-

Softball subdues Leathernecks

By JESS WESTENDORF

The Iowa softball (16-27) team used a midweek nonconference matchup against Western Illinois (19-27) to bounce back after being swept by No. 5 Minnesota this past weekend.

The Hawkeyes took care of the Leathernecks, 3-1, to extend its midweek winning streak to five in a row and gain some confidence in front of more than 500 fans at Pearl Field.

The game had been slated for tonight, but with the chance of rain, the teams decided to move the game to Tuesday.

The chance of bad weather didn’t slow down the Hawkeyes, it lit a fire in them.

Senior Shayla Starkenburg took the mound for the Hawkeyes and she took care of business, too.

She allowed only 2 hits and had a no-hitter going into the top of the fifth inning. Holly Hoelting broke that up with a single.

“The defense behind me was doing a great job,” Starkenburg said. “That made it really easy on the mound, just pitching some nice pitches for them to get easy ground balls.”

The Leatherneck batters couldn’t figure out Starkenburg’s changeup or her fastball, and she psyched out batters left and right.

Iowa didn’t just destroy Western Illinois on the mound but also at the plate, at least in the first inning.

In the bottom of the first, Iowa scored 3 runs after going through the first eight batters.

Junior Cheyenne Pratt started the night off with a single up the middle to get Iowa on base with no outs.

Then catcher Taylor Messer was called for interference at the plate, which allowed Pratt to go to second and senior Kaitlyn Mullarkey to head to first.

Freshman Devin Cantu opened up the game for Iowa, hitting a double to left that scoring Pratt and Mullarkey. Cantu ended the night 1-for-3 and 2 RBIs.

“I had two strikes, and you’re thinking close swinging,” Cantu said. “I had two strikes, and if it was close, swing hard. That’s my motto.”

nior Claire Fritsch also reached base but couldn’t do much after junior Katy Taylor chopped the ball straight to third base for an easy out.

“It’s nice when we can get on the board early,” head coach Marla Looper said. “We attacked early and got the runs up. Devin had a long at-bat and finally squared one up, and they had a miscue out in the outfield, so we were able to score 2 runs. I wish we could have continued to build on that a little bit longer, but we got the 3 runs early. That was the difference in the ball game.”

After the first inning, Iowa did a good job of keeping Western Illinois quiet until the top of the fifth.

Hoelting and sophomore Hailey Duwa got on base, giving the Leathernecks a chance to score.

Sophomore Deep Center then hit a sacrifice fly to ally center allowing Hoelting to score and Duwa to go to third.

But the umpire called Duwa out, saying that she left second base too early. The crucial call ended Western Illinois’ only productive inning on offense.

The rest of the game was history —

NFL Draft looms for Hawks

How many Iowa football players will get drafted?

Five

There wasn’t much action for Iowa fans during last year’s NFL Draft. In fact, Iowa almost got shut out. Austin Blythe was the only Hawkeye taken, and he had to wait until the last half of the seventh round to hear his name called.

That will change this year, however. Although, according to all of the draft experts, it’s unlikely an Iowa player will hear his name called on the first night of the draft, plenty will get drafted after that.

Desmond King will get drafted. Can you imagine a former Jim Thorpe Award winner not getting drafted? Although his stock isn’t as high as it might have been last year, King is still a top defensive-back prospect, and he will make a good amount of money in the NFL at this point next season. He might be the first Hawkeye off the board.

The guy who might challenge King as the first Hawkeye drafted would be Jaleel Johnson. Johnson has benefited from a superb senior season in which his draft stock soared. He could be a second-round pick if an organization
