The Vidette-Reporter.

THURSDAY EVENING SESSION.

Being黠ive Thursday, Jan. 13, 1882.

C. J. ATKINS, Secretary.

NOTICE.—It takes the S's to pay our printing bills, and in no way could the five hundred subscribers who still owe us for their subscription, make us happier than by forwarding the money at once. To new subscribers The Vidette-Reporter will be furnished for the remainder of the year for fifty cents (money must invariably accompany Order). One subscription is a small amount, but the aggregate pays our bills.

We are perplexed to know, according to what philanthropic idea it is, that the snow is allowed to accumulate and form ice on the main walks and steps, and there remain till melted by the sun, or worn away by the weary, stiff-joined tread of students, whose thoughts are snatched from those lofty heights where they are wont to soar, and fixed more securely on the icy walk than are the feet of sad students.

It is to be feared that many do not fully appreciate the superior advantages offered by icy walks, while the disadvantages are sufficiently obvious. They see a waste of precious time, fear the loss of their reputation for grace, and feel that both brains and beauty are in constant danger of detriment, if not destruction, from falling. It is also somewhat humiliating, even if no accidents befell them, for they have supposed that "slippery places" were reserved for the wicked only. But do they not gain in the thoroughness of the performance, while they lose in the reputation for grace? If a person falls, it may serve as a warning and prevent more serious calamities in the future; and if he succeeds in maintaining his equilibrium, he is strengthened by the conquest. And if he should incur some personal injury, could he, in his selfsight, lose sight of the fact that it might be the occasion of rejoicing in the family of a poor doctor who had not received his share of vaccination victims? Then, too, this walking on ice is a pretty good substitute for a gymnasium, having an advantage over the latter, in that all the participants enter enthusiastically into the exercises, which are so variable that they never grow monotonous. The vigor of the exercise can be attested by those who have chosen to come in reach of some of the fly-extremities of the performers. Whether these advantages, here alluded to, form any part in the considerations which lead the authorities to leave the ice to the dispensation of time, the elements and the students, or whether, with an implicit faith in the survival of the fittest, they watch the battle that is raging, we cannot say; but that there is some good reason, there can be no doubt.

The following startling intelligence from the Davenport Gazette is making Iowa sticklers for Congregational sectarianism clutch for creeds and pocket-books:

When Iowa College assembled on the first day of the present term, the President, Rev. George F. Magoun, after remarking on the progress of education, the growing liberality of school regulation, announced the abolition of all the cumbersome rules which have hitherto retarded the College, and the adoption of the Amherst system of government. This does away with all marks, compulsory attendance on church and chapel, and the repressive regulation on personal character.

O, tempora! O, mores! What is a denominational school for, anyhow? It surely can not be true. Perhaps soundness on the Atlantic was too much for despotism, and after their worthy President has resumed his usual rations he will want the old whip with the sharp crack. Truth is stronger than fiction; but to suppose that a denominational school, founded for the purpose of perpetuating popular education, could have creed, rack and shackles behind and plunge wildly into a liberty, which even a wicked (I) State University does not grant its Ancients, is simply lying.

The rules have been "cumber-some," and have "retarded the college" as the Gazette says,—at least it is so rumored, over the State; and the school may be con­ cluded on their abandonment. But to a student of an irreligious, non-sectarian, and therefore infidelistic, State University, the abandonment of "the restrictive regulations on personal conduct" seems a little questionable. To do away with compulsory atten­ dance on church and chapel is all right; that is the way we have it here, and its beneficial results are well attested. But as to personal conduct, we have one or two "restrictions" which have not been removed yet, viz., good citizenship, and faithful University work.

Perhaps the students up there have been so well trained by the system, in the way they should go, that these restrictions are not needed; but we fear that such a sudden and complete revolution in government is only another illustration of the rush from despotism to license so free, that it tends toward anarchy. We, therefore, in all kindness, submit to them the propriety of adopting the University system as to general personal conduct, so that, when a drunken student is again found to be keeping a private drinking den for his fellow-students, they may have some alternative for a reprimand. Will the News Letter be strangled to death again, as it was last year, by the faculty? We suppose not, and so hasten to extend our congratulations, at least to our editorial friends, on the freedom of the press—a fond principle of American government not known to them before—and with the excited friend of denominational instruction, grasping for creeds and pocket-books, we will anxiously wait for the denial or confirmation of the rumor.

Married, in Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, Jan. 9, 1882, Mr. Levi Leon­ard and Miss Sarah Beers.

Levi is well and favorably known in this city as a young man with the elements of success in him. He is the eldest son of Professor Leonard, went West two or three years ago, and has since been engaged as surveyor, part of the time in Montana, during a part of the time making his headquarters at Cheyenne, it would seem. The Vidette-Reporter extends congratulations and best wishes for his happiness and prosperity.

In Herbert Spencer's "First Principles of Philosophy" the following passage occurs:

A human being should remember that, while he is a descendant of the past, he is also a parent of the future; and that his thoughts are as children born to him, which he may not mercilessly let die. If, like every other man, may properly con­ sider himself as one of the myriad agents through whom works the Unknown Cause; and when the Unknown Cause produces in him a certain belief, he is thereby authorized to profess and act out that belief.

The terrible application with which this principle has so recently met, in the conceived and ex­ cuted assassination of President Garfield, was of course never even remotely anticipated by its author; yet such an application may well cause us to seriously question the legitimacy of any philosophical system of which it forms a part.

Superintendent C.W. VosCello makes the following mention of the University in his School Report for 1881 and 1882:

The State University is making constant progress, and if sustained by the people as it ought to be, will be looked upon in a few years as a monument of the people's pride. Michigan University is to-day the pride, not only of that State, but of all the West, and its success is largely owing to the munificence of the people in endowing and sustaining it. Former legislatures have done well, but the increased demand for new buildings must be met, and the call for additional aid needed to make good the loss from interest on the endowment fund should be favorably received and promptly responded to. The ever increasing wealth of this promising State should feel proud to sustain within our borders at least one institution which will give an opportunity for the best academic and professional education to be obtained anywhere. The report of the University will show a gratifying increase of popularity and success, and an absolute necessity for new buildings and means to carry forward the actual wants of the institution.

THE BLESSING.

"As dew distills upon the flowers, In summer evening's placid hours, When with the night winds measured slow So o'er my ardent longing soul, With silent, soothing, soft control, Thy blessing comes now."

"It breathes a weird, restless spell, Like music from a fairy dell, That floats at summer even; It steals across my throbbing brain, Like echoes o'er the v'y main, Or sacred thoughts from heaven."

"It cometh like some gentle dream That doth upon the senses gleam When rapt in tranquil slumber,— And drives away all thoughts of gloom That shadow forth predestined doom, And oft our souls encumber."

"It gilds the future like some star That guideth the mariner afar Upon the surging wave; It whispers words of hope and joy That shine through the azure blue, But on my heart engrave."

"It thrill's me like some benison An angel hand hath cast upon A votary at her shrine, And brings a joy like that which lives Within the soul when faith forgiven, And whispers peace divine."

THE BIBLE AND HUMAN REASON.

BY EZRA B. ROGGE.

Although not so much insisted upon as formerly, perhaps, it is still favored amongst many prominent theists, that it is reasonable to suppose that the distinction which exists between the Divine and the human intellect is such that the truth may be clearly discerned by the former, in that which, to the latter, is nothing but falsehood. It follows, therefore, that, if the legitimacy of this conclusion be admitted, the inspiration of the Sacred Writs must be determined exclusively by evidences extrinsic to those implied in the nature of their subject matter. This is necessarily human error and Divine truth, when considered merely as such, we have, by this conclusion, just been pronounced wholly incapable of discriminating.

A practical application of the preceding argument will probably afford the most complete refutation of it which can be given.

Accordingly, let us suppose—but remember that it is merely a supposition—that the Bible does, in reality, contain some statement which, in the estimation of mankind, is utterly absurd; for instance, that reason is absolutely unworthy of confidence. Having already committed ourselves to the proposition that we are wholly incapable of distinguishing between this, we would of course be precluded from entertaining any opinion concerning the inspired character of this supposed statement, excepting that derived from a careful examination of those extrinsic evidences adducible in its favor. It is manifest, however, that in this case at least, the result of an exclusive reliance upon extrinsic evidences in determining the question of inspiration, would be nothing less than palpable contradiction. For evidence itself is merely applied reason; and yet, according to our hypothesis, one of those very Biblical statements, in the inspiration of which we may have been led to believe exclusively by the extrinsic evidences adducible in its favor, emphatically declares reason (of these evidences are but the application) to be unworthy of confidence. The inference seems to be irresistible, therefore, that, in view of the dilemma in which we have thus been found, we are compelled to constitute the principle that it is reasonable to suppose that we are wholly incapable of distinguishing between human error and Divine truth, when considered merely as such,—this principle certainly ought to be pronounced untrue.

Still it may be contended, that, even admitting the legitimacy of this inference in the one instance which we have given, there are doubtless many others in which it could not properly be drawn. For, while it is, indeed, plain that an explicit rejection of reason in toto, on the part of the Bible, would necessarily imply a rejection of all those evidences adducible in its support, it does not follow that the rejection of a particular conclusion of reason would imply a rejection of every other conclusion of reason likewise. Thus, should the particular conclusion of reason—"A God all merciful is a God unjust"—be rejected by the Scriptures, the inference could not hence be drawn that, in this specific case of rejection, was also included the well established principle, that "Where law ends tyranny begins," by which there might not have been the remotest allusion.

It should be remembered, however, that, according to our hypothesis, the only ground upon which the rejection of any or all conclusions of reason, on the part of the Bible, could possibly be justified, would be that some Divine matter was thereby disclosed, which, when considered merely in itself, was incapable of being distinguished from human error. It follows, therefore, that, inasmuch as the sole ground of the rejection of any particular conclusion of reason, on the part of the Bible, must also be that of the rejection of every other, the actual rejection of any one conclusion of reason would be equivalent to the actual rejection of every other.

But, it may be asked, Must we then, in view of the absurd consequences of any such rejection of reason in toto, consent to regard all distinction between the Divine and the human intellect as a negatived presumption, and make for the mind of man the arrogant claim of equality with the mind of God? Evidently the assertion of such doctrine is warranted by the necessary implications of our argument. For, although we maintain that it is un-reasonable to suppose that the Deity can reconcile the palpable contradictions of human logic, we do not maintain that it is unreasonable to suppose that the Deity can make plain to us by the demonstrations of reason. Thus directly revealed by our criterion of certainty.

We do not mean to imply that humanity, although, from the nature of the case, compelled to constitute itself sole judge of the extent and quality of its knowledge, feels morally and more deeply that there is not only much which it does not know, but which, perhaps, it may never understand.

The following is said of the Swedish Quartette and Emilie Gavin's entertainment in Kansas City. "We doubt very much whether a more entirely pleasing concert has ever before been given in Kansas City. Not only does each member of the Quartette possess a phenomenal voice, but all the voices blend most beautifully, producing the sweetest harmonies. In time and unity they are perfect. Each member was encored, and when at last the vocalists appeared in native costume, the large audience ordered not ecstatically. Miss Gavin's recitations proved a pleasant feature of the programme. The lady has a fine commanding presence, a handsome face, and a rich, deep expressive voice. Her selections were varied, introducing the tragic, narrative, and humorous, in the delineation of each of which the most marvellous powers were exhibited.

Seniors who have hitherto been model specimens of happiness, contentment, and self-satisfied composure, have for the last few days looked anxious, nervous, and pale, and might be heard asking one another, "Which among us will be most likely to receive that agonizing message 'Did not pass,' unless, alas, we start to think." Sidley Smith says, "I could give a lady two and twenty receipts against melancholy." We fully appreciate Sidley Smith's talent and ability, and know he was most competent to give receipts; but had the lady come to us, we could have given her just as much comfort and self-assuredness.

It has been intimated that the medical ladies fully indorse the idea held out by Dr. Middleton, that every man is a cell (sell); and we cannot say it nay.

That a tincture of Darwinism pervades the minds of many medical students is not wonderful when that theory is dispensed to them with so much care by some of its advocates.

The possession of a mind capable of absorbing all the dropings from the "arm of knowledge" is that high state of mental perfection which many desire, yet none ever attain.

After all these years of paying tribute to the memory of the illustrious Franklin for the discovery of the law of universal gravitation, we are at last compelled to transfer these wasted honors to an unpretentious little worm in a rotten apple.

Would that the medical poet might again grasp the inspired pen and let his thoughts soar unhindered above the commonplaces of every-day existence into the realm of poetical fancy, and thereby weave a literary gem for the gratification of the many admirers of his rare talent.

Much interest is being taken in the preparations for the Contest next Wednesday evening. Ten orators have already signified their intention of participating, and others are expected. Many conjectures are being indulged in as to who will be the successful contestant.

Now that everyone who attends the contest may have the words of the orators before him on those next cards, let all sing heartily. We can hardly dispense with the choir, because some reliable voices are required to lead the singing, but all can join in the choruses with good effect.

The Des Moines Register in referring to the off-hand speeches in the speakers’ contest, commends the speech of Maj. Pickler, an alumnus of the University, and says: “There are some brilliant young men in the House, and it is clear already that the boys’ side of the House is going to be heard from.”

At the invitation of Miss Prof. Smith several of the Sophomore class met at her home, on Tuesday evening, to begin a study of the best productions of American poets. Miss Smith very nicely stated the object of the meeting, the work to be done, and the preparations to be made for the succeeding meetings. By those interested in this work one evening a week may be spent pleasantly.

EXCHANGES.

The usual New Year's resolutions have been made and are already on the road to oblivion. The departure of the Old Year is a kind of solemnity which paus for a moment and look back over the past, and speculate as to the probabilities of the future. These fleeting days have variously affected our contemporaries. The Norte Dame Scholastic is softened. The Boone takes up its task with a benignant countenance, and makes the world a happy New Year. The Archangel blows a blast from the Pacific slope in which is heard "peace and good will to brother and sister exchanges."

The Students' Journal drops a tear upon the grave of the old year and strives to forget the "might have been." The Ex. man of the University Press swings his disconsolate quill and squeaks for "blood." All to a greater or less degree have felt the change. We are silent. We allow no regrets for the past and make no promises for the future, conscious that if we make none we shall break none.

The Campus, from the University of Wisconsin, has changed its name, and now calls under the handy eumenid of The Bogey. We place The Bogey among our best exchanges. It is a weekly, and gives evidence of grit and enterprise coupled with brains.

The January number of the Rockford Semi- nary Magazine is up to its usual standard of excellence. We detect in it an occasional sigh for the "might have been." Fig, girl, you shouldn't think of such things!

The holiday number of the Colby Echo made its appearance in a very neat dress. The article on the "Dramas of England and France" is of considerable merit.

The Portfolio, from Fairfield, Iowa, is a new venture in college journalism. Volume I, No. 1, is on our table. It presents a creditable appearance and we gladly place it on our exchange list.

Volume I, No. 2, of the "Blackburn Centre," from Blackburn University, III, comes to us with the modest request "Please ext." We will do so.

A year ago Hanover College, Ind., admitted ladies to its halls for the first time, and now the Hanoverian tells us that the first fruits of co-education have been reaped. One of the editors of the Hanoverian, a hot-headed Kentuckian, fell in love with a Senior Prep, and in spite of the Prx, the faciltiy, and the devil, married her. The amusing couple took a red-stockinet, low-legged Freshman by the name of Allibanks, and hied away to the faciltiy town where the knot was tied. Allibanks swore that the couple were of proper age, and they returned to the college as if nothing unseemly had happened. In a few days, how­ ever, the affair leaked out, and the culprits were immediately summoned before the facility. "Stand up, Mr. Jen­nings," thundered the Prx to the fleeing bridegroom. "Tell us what you know about this most disgraceful affair." Mr. Jennings turned pale, his hair stood up, and great drops of perspiration rolled down his face. He looked around him. In front were the stern visages of the faculty with the hope form of the Prx towering in awful grandeur above them. At his side was his weeping bride, and on his left sat the bawling Freshman. For a moment he felt like sinking under the load of responsibility, and then with a terrible desperation he leaped to his feet and yelled: "Whose business is it if I wanted to get married?" Loved the girl and loved me. God intended that we should be one, and no faculty can prevent it. Here Mr. Jennings raised his fist threateningly toward the Prx, and in a highly dramatic tone continued: "Come on; do your worst. I will protect her from the consequences." Then he sank exhausted in his seat and the stern voice of the Prx was again heard: "Edgar O. Allibanks, what was your motive for taking part in this affair?" The poor freshman stood up. He was the picture of despair. Great tears rolled down his cheeks and glistered from the tip of his red nose. He trembled from head to foot and his knees would have knocked together had it not been for the crotch shape of his legs. He began in a faltering voice: "I didn't know I was wrong; I thought that if they wanted to get married it was right they should see now that it was very wrong for me to do as I did. I'll never do so again, and I'll always be good." We need go no further into details, suffice it to say that the three were "bounced." Jennings took his fair bride and skipped for the blue grass regions of old Ken­ tucky, and the Freshman after much pleading was reinstated in school. Now all this fuss occurred because a boy and girl wanted to pass the remainder of life together, which is the object of many among the young in the world. It is no wonder that in a college like Hanover, where the most ex­acting rules are in force and where a girl is considered almost a crime for the sexes to associate together, elopements and clandestine marriages occur.

YOUNG MEN and LADIES.

Choosing a good college, and receiving a good education, are the chief duties of young men and women. An education is the foundation of all that is valuable in life. Rugby School is located near the city of Rugby, which is a kind of way station for the 8temer generation, and is built for the exclusive training of the city. The school is well known in the United States, and its name is one of the most influential in the country. The school is conducted by the Rugby School Company, and is under the management of the Rugby School Board of Directors. The school is well equipped with all the necessary apparatus, and is under the direction of experienced and competent teachers. The school is open to all students of good character and ability, and is conducted on the strictest principles of high moral and intellectual discipline. The school is well known for its excellent results, and is open to all students of good character and ability. The school is well equipped with all the necessary apparatus, and is under the direction of experienced and competent teachers. Law Department.

E. B. Pardee, Editor.

Ventilate—ventilate the Law rooms!

No books will be loaned from the Library except for moot and club court trials.

Don't fail to put in a prompt appearance at the Legal Literary, Thursday night.

Professor McClain went down among the political Philistines at Des Moines, Tuesday.

The Hon. W. O. Schmidt, Law of '76, is a member of the House Committee on Banking.

Sound sense—"Because a man is a lawyer is no reason why he should be a barbarian."

J. C. Elwell, '72, of Waterloo, Iowa, has recently flung his shingle to the breeze at Pueblo, Colo.

Mr. C. M. Ross is a recent addition to the Law class, Mr. R. is a son of our worthy Chancellor.

Judge Thompson has assumed the position of "mainstay" on the editorial corps of the Western Jurist.

J. A. Miller, Academic, now residing in Idaho, visited the class recently, and made the "Star" speech of the season.

One of the boys says that if he doesn't succeed in forming a select life partnership, he'll assert his divine right and—incorporate.

Remember that the Law Literary Society will hereafter begin its exercises promptly at half-past seven. Show your amiable phiz at that time!

Frank E. Crew, who spent part of the year with class '81, is now at Minneapolis. Has a "good place," is train dispatcher on the Chicago, St. Paul & Minneapolis Railway.

J. H. McConlogue was called home by telegram announcing the sad news of his father's death on the 9th inst. He has the profound sympathy of the class in this affliction.

Mr. Cummings retires from the editorial staff of the Western Jurist, and enters the law firm of Wright & Wright, at Des Moines, of which firm Judge Wright is an honorable member.

We feel compelled to say that some one is very careless about returning books to their proper places on the shelves, especially this so with the Iowa Reports. A little care in this respect will save valuable time.

We are pleased to chronicle the appointment of Mr. N. B. Raymond, graduate of the Law class of '81, to the position of local editor of the Western Jurist. Like many young men, Mr. Raymond spent his school days struggling with poverty and battling with ideas. In this case honor comes unsought to one who merits it. Mr. Raymond was the successful contestant for the Chancellor's prize. The subject, "The burden of proof of contributory negligence in actions for personal injury," was ably handled, evincing thorough research and considerable legal acumen. The article was published in the December number of the Western Jurist, 1881, and attracted the attention of the managers of that periodical. The result was a tender and acceptance of the above responsible position.

"Honor and shame from no condition come.

Act well your part—there all the honor lies.
