The Vidette-Reporter,

WOL. XIV. IOWA CITY, IOWA, SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1882. NO. 32.

TheVFedette-Reporter,

The shining affair between a Professor and a student of the University of Minnesota, so far as we are correctly apprised of the facts, only proves the inexperience of Professors acting the role of policemen. It takes away a student's respect for his instructor, or, if he knows that the instructor is continually tracking him. The sooner universities leave the student's obligations as a citizen to regular police officers, the better for the universities. Do away with spies, and put the boys on their own honor.

One of the noticeable features of the last meeting of the Inter-State Oratorical Association was the organization of an association of the western college press. The exaltation of the oratorical talents of students has hitherto occupied almost exclusively the attention of our colleges. A style of writing has, consequently, become prevalent, wherein clear statement and well-tempered expression are subordinated to effect. The object is not so much the logical development of a theme, as an exaggerated and striking presentation of it. The writer feels that he must either confide his production with rhetoric, or have it bristling with annoyance. These, it seems to us, are some of the obvious faults of too exclusive cultivation of the oratorical manner.

Now, by affording an opportunity, through the columns of the various college journals of the Northwest, for students to compete with one another on a distinctively literary basis, we think great good may be accomplished. The exhibition may be given to that style of composition which will carry conviction to the minds of men, with whom accurate thinking far outweighs rhetorical flights and balanced periods.

Some people allow their prejudices to carry them so far that they are unable to see any good in that which is not their own, no matter how deserving it may be. The editor of the Moonshine Courier seems to be one of this class. In his report of the Inter-State Contest, after criticizing all the other speeches, he states: "The real orator of the evening was the Illinois man, F. G. Hanchett." And afterward, speaking of the decision of the Judges, he says: "The audience seemed well satisfied with the result. Certainly no one questioned the right of Illinois to the first position, which position must be taken by her, as she has occupied four times in the eight contests of the association. Now the editor of the Courier is one of those who, having eyes, see not, and ears hear not, or else his memory is very poor. The dissatisfaction with the award of the prize is the fault of the Courier, and universal. Before the announcement of the decision, Mr. Hanchett was not looked upon as having the shadow of a chance for first prize, and a murmur of surprise ran round the house when the President announced the results. Probably two-thirds of the audience seemed well satisfied with the fact of her loss. The Queen Victoria's Ministers. In the course of conversation the Minister said that the Queen had been pleased to grant Carlyle a pension of £200 a year, adding, "As you, Mr. Hunt, are a near neighbor of his, it will perhaps be an agreeable task to be the first to announce the compliments to him."

MRS. CARLYLE AND LEIGH HUNT.

While Leigh Hunt was strolli ng one morning in the private grounds of Holland House, he was met by Lord John Russell, then the Queen Victoria's Ministers. In the course of conversation the Minister said that the Queen had been pleased to grant Carlyle a pension of £200 a year, adding, "As you, Mr. Hunt, are a near neighbor of his, it will perhaps be an agreeable task to be the first to announce the compliments to him."

The Iowa City Republican has made a new venture in journalism, by undertaking a "State edition." In this the mass of local matter and advertisements is omitted, and only the choice literary and political matter, of State interest, presented. Among its contributors we notice our esteemed University friends, Professors Parker and Eggert, aid ing the literary department, and Professor Hinrichs, who lends his valuable experience to the Weather Service. The need of such a paper insures its future success.
"MIRABEAU."

BY WALTER M. WALKER.

The toils of serfdom have been the birth-pains of liberty; the freedom of slaves the outgrowth of tyranny. In the darkest epochs of history, when virtue had decayed, when truth and justice seemed asleep, liberty has made its greatest efforts, has produced its grandest heroes. By the conflicts of opposing armies, by the discord of warring factions creed have been formulated, "Magna Charta" have been written. The car of civilization, sweeping down the great pathways of time, has buried its wheels deep in the rut's of error and the grooves of doubt. And it has only been when, by the sovereign power of a new idea, its path was cleared, that thought advised that its delaying wheels moved on.

Great convulsions have at times been necessary. Take away their part from the long history of the past, and you remove one great factor in the world's advancement. Blot from the page of the future its revolutions and rebellions, and you rob the patriot of his weapon, the tyrant of his fears. In the crises of history, when, con- servation has chained the wheels of progress, when religion has crys- talized into creeds and governments have become tyrannical, from the silence of centuries, Revolu- tion awakes, and gathering up the scattered shreds of national glory, leads onward in the great march of civilization. Reform,—the glad messenger of liberty,—kneeling at the feet of royalty, and pleading the cause of the beggared multitude, is rejected and despised, until, upon the battle-fields of re- belling, the nation becomes her army. To arouse resistance to tyranny, to subject the subjects of despotism in their efforts for free- dom, has claimed the noblest energies of the race. This is the cause which has given to history its martyrs and to humanity its greatest benefactors. The breezes of the morning, in their swift flight from the orient, chant a ceaseless requiem to the heroes of the past. On the heathered hills of Scotland the peasant bows in reverence to the name of Wal- lace; and, as the winds whisper to the memory of the triune who, in the darkest hours of their suffering, proclaimed himself the champion of theirs.

In the history of governments no question has more dangerously threatened the foundations of society than the issues sprung from the wealth of the noble and the poverty of the peasant. When the iron hand of power robs the farmer and ravages his fields, he is happy and contented pauperly— the safeguard of a nation—be- comes impossible. Let the gaunt form of famine crouch at the door, let the cries of starving children ring in their ears, and mung to madness, men bare their breasts to danger. To voice, by the thunders of his eloquence, the rising murmurs of the people was the mission of Mirabeau to France. The people had been chained by the wheel of corruption; the guardian of the nation became the champion of the home.

Mirabeau was a noble, but in the the great conflict for their rights he became the champion of the home- less, breadless throng, which toiled in the valleys and starved in the cities of France. Scourged by wealth and despised by power, the Genius of Liberty found him, and inspiring in his heart a passion, he set forth, bearing the torch of liberty. He had proclaimed the freedom of their thoughts and the in­ tegrity of their homes. But from the tombs of the capital, torn from the graves of the dead issues of the past, there rose a specter, which, brooding over the proud thrones of the capital, stirred the dregs of the nation and scattered the suspicion in the hearts of its rulers.

Against the license which threatened the state, Mirabeau struggled in vain. In the gather­ ing shadows of the coming storm, his strength gave way, and his voice was silenced in the darkness of the tomb. Had he lived, he might have been able to control the passions which he had aroused. But in his grave were buried the hopes of emancipated freedom in France. Turn the pages of his­ tory, and you search in vain to find a picture sadder than the fate of France presents. She had weathered the storms of revolu­tion, and she had secured liberty and justice for her people. But when danger threatened "and the night was rushing on" no Mirabeau stood forth. And with his almost in sight, with the harbor of safety almost gained, she floated away into the horrors of anarchy and the madness of atheism.

HISTORY OF JOHNSON CO.

A History of Johnson County is now in course of preparation by the Johnson County Historical Company. It will comprise a volume of about one thousand octavo pages, printed from large clear type, and bound in full morocco with gilt back and sides, and illustrated with portraits and views.

It will contain, first, a con­ cise history of the State from its organization as a Territory to the present time, covering less than one-third of its pages, which will be followed by a complete history of Johnson County, including a detailed account of its Name, Location, Surface, Climate, Natu­ ral History, Geology, Botany and Zoology. The red man, the pion­ eers, their settlements and careers, first settled States land entries, County Organization, Early Courts and Judges, Township organiza­ tions, Political Records from Pres­ ent to 1860, and other topics from the first to the last election, with the vote each candidate received. Financial re­ view, showing amount of revenues and their distribution each year. Agricultural Interest, including a history of the Agricultural Society; Swamp, Slime, and other Public Lands, Railroads, the Newspaper Press, Educational Progress; Religious Advance­ ment; Secret Societies; The Temp­ erance Cause; Criminal History; War Record, including the names of every soldier in the late war, with an account of promotions, casualties, engagements, etc. Township and Towns, their first settlers and growth, including a history of Iowa City from its incorporation to the present time, compr­ eending the early State institu­ tions organized here, as well as those remaining. It is the purpose of the authors to make a thoro­ough, complete and correct his­ tory of this old Capitol County and present educational center of the State which will commend itself to the generous patronage of­ of her people, and recognized as its standard history.

The work will be sold by sub­cription only, and a corps of ef­ ficient and reliable men will call upon the early settlers and prom­ inent citizens of the county to subscription for the work. The edition of the work will be limited to the subscriptions taken.

D. W. Wood, has charge of the canvass in Johnson County. For notices, address him at Iowa City, Iowa, or call on him in pers­ on at the Auditor's office.

EMERSOUND, PLATO, GOETHE.

In the delightful volume, Representative Men, the lamented Emerson sketched the character and genius of the greatest of philosophers, the verities, among the ancient chiefly Plato, and among the moderns, Shakespeare and Goethe. Along with these are treated to the mystic Swedenborg, and the conquer Napoleon. Perhaps the most notable of these essays is the one on Goethe. To Plato, Emerson affords much more than praise that what small men and women are to have a common way of life, such as we have described.—common education and common children; they are to guard together and hunt together like days; and always in similar women are to share with the men?

"And you agree then, I said that what small men and women are to have a common way of life, such as we have described,—common education and common children; they are to guard together and hunt together like days; and always in similar women are to share with the men?"

"I agree with you," he said.

That the brave man is to have more wives than others, has been already determined, and he is to have first choice in such matters more than others."

WORTHY OF MARRIAGE.

When Justice Hutton was made Justice of the C. P. in England, Lord Chancellor Ellesmere gave him the following advice:

"Draw your learning out of your books and not out of your library; Mix well the freedom of your own opinion with the reverence of the opinions of your fellow; Contemplate the study of your books and do not spend upon the old stock.

Fear no man's face, yet turn not stoutness into bravery. Be a light to jurors to open their eyes, not a guide to lead them by their noses. Affect not the opinion of pregnancy and expediency by an impatient and clashing hearing of the counselors at the bar. Let your speech be with gravity, as one of the voices of the law, and not talkative nor impertinent flying out to show learning.

Contain the jurisdiction of your court within the ancient mere-stones, without removing the mark.

What about a class picture? The boys are telling what they don't know about equity.

Prof. McChlun is now delivering to the class some interesting lectures on constitutional law. A large supply of eloquence will be for sale cheap, by quite a number of Laws, in about five weeks.

Four more weeks closes the time of actual recitations, and the classes are now undergoing a general review.

Rev. Folsom called on the class Wednesday, and entertained the boys awhile by imparting some very wholesome advice. One of the members, who is of a political turn of mind, said as soon as he graduated he was going to "run" for notary public.

Messrs. L. C. Dennis and H. H. Arts, class '81, have formed a co-partnership for the practice of law at Gravity, Taylor county, Iowa.

The second nine whitewashed the first nine two successive innings on last Wednesday. The second nine had better look to its laurels.

It is rather amusing to hear the average person who calls and makes a few remarks, commence by saying that the common masses look upon all lawyers as rascals. We do not see why this should be, especially if the present class is anything from which to judge. Here we have 10 bright, beautiful and honest-looking young men, whose mothers had hard work to decide whether they should send them to a law or a theological school. It is sad, indeed, to think, that when these young men go out into the world, bright monuments of all that is noble and good, they should be shaping as villains, all because they are lawyers.

It is about time that the Botany class should have the excursion and holiday which was promised. Who'll be the one to start the scheme?

F. E. Breed, an old student of the Academy has been in Jasper county this spring. He will probably be in Iowa City during commencement.

The Academy and High School have had another game of ball. The challenge said for a ball and bat, but the High Schoolers failed to come to time with their players, and filled the place with another. The score stood 30 to 14, closing during the last half of the fourth. This does not show very scientific playing on either side.

D. M. Reynolds, class ’81, has formed a partnership at Atlantic, and is prepared to attend to any legal business intrusted to him. Success, Dan.

Prof. Currier left Wednesday evening for Chicago, to be present as one of the examining committee at the graduating exercises of Morgan Park Theological Seminary.

Harvey Hostetler has left the Theological Seminary of New York, and is now pastor of a church in St. Andrews, New Brunswick. He will probably return to Iowa in the fall.

It now seems likely that Johnson county would have a relaitive history, as a party with capital and brains has been found which will be outside the petty jealousies of local politicians. Mr. D. W. Wood, of this city, is the authorized agent for the same.

Mr. John P. Blair, who at one time published the University Reporter now of the State Journal, of Des Moines, was in the city the fore part of the week, looking after the interest of the History of Johnson county. A notice of the history appears in another column.

It was our pleasure while in Indianapolis to meet John L. Griffith, an alumnus of the State University. We take this opportunity to thank him for his kindness while in that city, and hope his flattering prospects in business will continue to grow with his years.

Leonidas A. Call, A. B. ’90, who is teaching Greek in the Des Moines University during the present year, has been elected Professor of the Greek Language and Literature and instructor in French, in Central University, Pella, Ia. It is understood that she will accept. Central University is to be congratulated on having secured the services of a lady so worthy in every respect. Miss Call will win her way into the confidence and esteem of pupils, faculty, trustees and patrons of that University, and retain all she acquires. But how many professors of Greek is that family to furnish Iowa? Prof. D. C. Field here, Prof. L. A. Call, in the city, and Miss Call would make the question of the University of the present a good one.

An Oil City young man was reading about recent deeds in the Arctic regions, and his best girl was sitting near by, watching the wagging of his mustache as the words rolled out. She was evidently more deeply absorbed in the mustache than in the story. He continued:

"She arrived at the mouth of the river Lena about three months ago. The Jeanette was crushed..."

"What?" asked the girl, quickly standing up.

"Jeanette was crushed by..."

"Oh! but wasn’t that just lovely! Only think to be completely crushed!"

"What are you thinking about, dearest?" asked the young man in surprise.

"I was saying how grand it would be crushed. Did you say it was Lena or Jeanette that was crushed?"

"Jeanette, of course."

"Oh! I wish I had been in Jeanette’s place..."

Then the press of business necessitated turning down the gas.—Ed.

The pathos of my prose-equinorated friend has affected me so deeply that I would be disposed to assume the authorship of Lebeur d’Amour, could I do without the entire loss of my own self-respect. Like the small boy who said to his grandmother that he hoped she would die first, for he could not stand trouble better than she could, I would be willing to exonerate Dannun O’Injuria of any connection in the matter, "purifying myself like a gentleman," were it not for recent and unexpected developments that make the question one of personal honesty, instead of merely a violation of all the accepted rules of art and construction. As it is, I feel forced to make an explanation as to the facts in the case, without regard to who may suffer in consequence.

That Dannun O’Injuria sent the poet, Mr. W. A. Van Velt, no doubt can exist in any reason...

reliable, the contribution being received and published under his own name by responsible editors, will acquit himself of blame and immutability of chronology. The contributing, however, most unfortunately, does not settle the question of its being a ship. Of this I had doubts from the first. It was not in his usual style of poetic construction, it lacked the spirituality, the graceful sentiment, the Miltonic imagery, in which he, more than any other living poet, excels; and while I hesitated to accuse him, even in my own mind, of plagiarism, the conclusion was at last forced upon me by the discovery of the original.

I saw the close of the controversy, for there can be no reply to this with the assertion that the lines appearing in The Vidette-Reporter entitled "Leaver of America" may be found in Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass, edition of 1881, page 159, under the title "Love in Youth," two changes only being made in the transcription, and these of slight importance.

None can regret the aspect which the discussion has taken more than myself, and I sincerely hope that the public will look up to the the conduct of Dammm O'Leary simply as an indiscretion of youth, rather than as anything more serious. That he is capable of original thought, the letters that he quotes in his last communication fully demonstrate; and I can but consider the disparaging action of which he has been guilty, if not attributing to lack of knowledge in literary matters, as one of the idiosyncrasies of genius, for which there is no accounting. That he keenly feels the equivocal position in which he has placed himself, his last contribution shows, in his attempt to entirely disown any connection with the poem. Let us leave him to the reproaches of his own conscience. H. L. W.
