DR. SHAMBAUGH'S LECTURE.

"THEOLOGY IN ITS RELATION TO LAW AND GOVERNMENT."

The Sunday evening lectures given at the Unitarian Church have gained a rightful popularity with the student body of the University. One of the very best of the course was given last Sunday evening by Dr. Shambaugh, his subject being "Theology in Its Relation to Law and Government."

After defining his terms, and explaining that theology in such a discussion must be considered in its broadest and most liberal sense, he proceeded to a discussion of the relation of church and state historically and philosophically.

That any relation exists here has been denied from many and various sources. It is denied by public opinion, especially American opinion. American thought and intellectual progress and development is unqualifiedly antagonistic to any such theory. This consensus arrived at by public opinion is furthermore affirmed and ratified by every tenet of the philosophy of politics and liberty—here too the union of church and state is opposed

Another and potent force that controverts this theory is the past history of its operation. The record of the Middle Ages is replete with the dismal failures of this experiment at uniting these two uncongenial organizations. That age has taught man the imperishable truth that law can not and never can regulate and control private morals.

The last great influence combative to the theory is found in the recent tendencies of science. This is an age of specialization, and naturally enough, in the separation of the sciences and parts of sciences, politics was soon alienated from religion. This estrangement was hastened all the more by the differences that were so long erroneously supposed to exist between science and religion.

Although these forces are accountable for this separation, and one whose justice can not be denied, still it is an overstatement to maintain that theology has naught to do with politics.

From the remotest antiquity politics and religion have been inseparably bound together. In our own unthinking consideration of the last few centuries as indicia of historical evolution, we are led to forget this fact. Religion, on the whole, has been the dominant force in human history. To primeval man religion was everything; his gods were everywhere; in short he lived in a world of gods. Primitive political organization was wholly dependent on religion, and it was well that this was so, for without such dependence a political status would have been impossible. But modern life is vastly different. Religion and law, by common consent, are now separated. Obedience to law is now placed upon a rational basis, not a religious one. But from this it does not follow that no relation whatever exists between them. To understand their correlation we must understand first the relation of theology and ethics, for it is through ethics that theology is related to politics, and through ethics it must act.

Theology has to do with the doctrine of good conduct, actual and permanent; it treats of ideal phenomena. Ethics, in turn, deals with misconduct, it is shifting and temporary in its deductions and conclusions, and considers the real rather than the ideal. Ethics has been aptly termed, applied theology. The one is the complement of the other.

Having then seen the relation of theology to ethics, it only remains to consider the relation of ethics to politics. Government is dependent in its administration for its morale, in fact for everything, upon the tone or state of public morality—in other words upon public ethics. It is this that moulds the policy of government and shapes its destiny. Granting this proposition, which is in itself undeniable, and the true relation of theology to government and politics stands revealed. Theology is the determinant of ethics; ethics the determinant of public morality, and public morality is the fountain head of law.

International Chess.

The challenge of the American Universities, Columbia, Harvard, Princeton and Yale, for a cable match with the Oxford and Cambridge University representatives has been accepted, and April 20th decided upon as the date for the contest. E. S. Southard, Harvard; A. S. Meyer, Columbia; E. B. Seymour, Princeton; and W. M. Murdock, Yale, are named as members of the American team. Two additional players and substitutes will be chosen very shortly. The match will be played under the rules proposed by the Manhattan Chess Club, except that students will be allowed to compete five years after matriculation instead of three, as originally intended.

Illinois expects to have a dual track and field meet with California in case the latter sends a team to compete at the Western Intercollegiate Meet.

The Harvard Student's Co-operative Society supplies practically all the books and stationery used in that institution. Its sales for the year '96-7 amounted to nearly $120,000.

Two hundred and nineteen courses are offered in the liberal arts and sciences at Harvard. President Elliot has calculated that it will take forty-four years to complete the whole number.

Cornell College has a competition in military drill covering the work of seven or eight weeks. Regularity of attendance at drill and the percentage of uniformed men are among the points on which the companies are graded.

The War Department of the United States has ordered the return of one of the breech-loading field pieces, as it may be necessary to use it in the regular service. This is the first war tendency that has struck the school. Major Dinwiddie has already tendered his services to the government. —Normal Eyte.

INTERNATIONAL LAW AND WAR.

CHANCELLOR M'CLAIN TALKS OF WAR.

Chancellor McClain, at the request of some of the members of the Senior Law class, gave a talk to them of the threatened war with Spain, last Friday morning.

He spoke of the wisdom of the provision of our constitution, which vests control over international relations in the President of the United States rather than in Congress.

The policy of this government initiated by Washington, reiterated by Adams and Jefferson, and all her leading statesmen, down to the present time, has been that of non-intervention in the affairs of other countries.

The recognition of the independence of the Cuban insurgent government would not necessarily be an act of war, but if the circumstances are not such as to justify such recognition then Spain might properly treat it as an act of hostility.

The United States was the first to recognize the independence of the South American republics, but did not do so until such independence had been practically established.

While from time to time expressing sympathy with the efforts towards independence in the colonies, the various presidents advised against the recognition of independence, and were supported by Congress, although for years so great an advocate as Clay pleaded for recognition.

In the case of Cuba there should not be recognition of independence until there is an established government maintaining law and order over a considerable territory, and which is capable of protecting the lives and property of American citizens who may see fit to reside there.

In the case of our Civil War the Southern Confederacy had a better established government than that of the Cubans, and one which for several years was exercising undisputed jurisdiction over a very considerable scope of country, and yet not a single nation recognized, or seemed to seriously contemplate the recognition, of the Southern Confederacy. The Monroe doctrine does not require any action on the part of the government of the United States with reference to Cuba.

The destruction of the Maine has not been shown to be the direct act of the Spanish government. Undoubtedly Spain may properly be held answerable for this loss, and compelled to pay indemnity to the United States.

Philomathean.

The first meeting of the term was held before a fair sized audience Friday evening.

Mr. Vaughan opened the program with an inaugural address in a most pleasing manner.

Next followed the Freshman debate, which was upon the subject: "Resolved, that protection is more beneficial to the United States than free trade."

The question was upheld by Messrs. C. W. Soesbe, F. S. Bailey, E. P. Barnes, P. A. Bond and J. E. Jorgenson; denied by J. A. Fesenbeck, O. W. Hagander, C. H. Anthony, Otto Bieckett and T. H. Hickenlooper.

The question is always of interest, and the members all acquitted themselves with credit. The entire debate was close, and was decided two to one for the affirmative.

The last number was a declamation, "The Last Charge of Ney," rendered in a most forcible manner by E. J. Louis.

The music was rather novel, and hence pleasing—being furnished by a graphophone.

Freshman Erodelphian Special.

The Freshman Erodelphians presented an entertainment Saturday evening which proved conclusively their ability to preserve the reputation of the organization which they represent.

The farces were well selected and well delivered, each player seeming peculiarly adapted for his or her part.

The first farce was "A Mouse Trap." The cast of characters was follows:

Willis Campbell ..... Will Loomis
Mr. Somers ..... Ethel Hathway
Mrs. Curwen ..... Selma Daum
Mrs. Roberts ..... Loulu Mann
Mrs. Miller ..... Alice Howard
Mrs. Bemis ..... Rita Kelley
Jane—a maid ..... Helen Carder

The device was ingenious, and the situations ridiculous. The hostess, callers and maid, terrified at the supposed presence of a mouse, take refuge upon chairs and tables, making a scene which provoked continuous laughter from the audience.

Miss Hathway and Mr. Loomis deserve special commendation. Their parts were skillfully interpreted, and reproduced with naturalness.

"Mistaken Kindness," with the following cast, proved the favorite of the evening:

Frank Glynn ..... M. L. Curtis
Alice Glynn ..... Lena McCurdy
Newly married.
Mrs. Glynn ..... Edith Cushing
Frank's mother.
Stella Glynn ..... Mildred Hershire
Frank's sister.
Gertie ..... Dorothy Schlutz
Frank's cousin.

Nora ..... Florence Spurgeon
A maid.
Ed Asbury ..... F. C. McCutchen
A friend.

The troubles of poor Mr. Glynn were humorously pitiable; and the quick-tempered wife, the well-meaning mother and sister and cousin, Ed. Asbury's amusement and consternation, and the servant girl with her inimitable Irish brogue, were all naturally and laughably depicted.

Attractive music was furnished during the evening by Misses Berry and Swisher.

At Sanford University the women have an athletic association of their own, with its board of directors. They are to have a basket ball field, a track and tennis court this year. The materials, such as balls, racquets, nets etc., are furnished the contestants by the association. Match games are arranged with the neighboring colleges and high schools.

Student Soldierly.

A recent Spanish paper gave several columns to a comparison of the character of the American and Spanish soldiers. The conclusions were that their own men fought for "patriotism, loyalty and earnestness of conviction," while "the mercenary Yankees fought merely for the salary they received." Truly such ignorance is deplorable. The idea that the patriotic outbursts from press and pulpit were prompted by the thought of thirteen dollars a month, hard tack and beans, is preposterous in the extreme. Especially true is this of the various student bodies from all over the land, who have offered to give up school work, all their hopes and ambition—perhaps life itself—for their country.

From nearly all the colleges and Universities the students have volunteered their services if needed. In some of the schools there have been the most radical and uncalled for demonstrations of Spanish hatred,—a pseudo-patriotism that is to be regretted. The burning of the Spanish flag and the effigy of Weyler are acts of unjustified jingoism. But they nevertheless show the spirit of the American youth, the determination to defend the stars and stripes at any sacrifice.

The Junior Prom.

There are so few social functions of the nature of the Junior Prom., that all of the society goes look forward with anticipation to this event. Especially true is it this year, for there have been less dances than usual this season. Heretofore there has usually been a military ball, and last year there was a Pan-Hellenic.

It is probable that the Prom. will be more highly patronized than ever before, and we understand that no pains have been spared, by the committee in charge, to make it a grand success. The class of '99 has made an enviable record in athletics and other lines, and will endeavor to sustain its reputation in the social line.

The only objection, is that the event is not semi-annual instead of annual. It is seldom before the Senior year that all the members of a class get acquainted; simply because there are no social functions where they can meet one another. The classes usually hold a reception or give a social once a year, but one evening out of the nine months of school is too short a time to become acquainted. Everyone recognizes the need of general social gatherings, and undoubtedly one of the reasons for the lack of spirit and enthusiasm in the University is that the students seldom get together except at the class-room or literary halls. May the Prom. be a success, and future years witness more of such functions.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free. Sold by druggists, price 75c. per bottle. Hall's Family Pills are the best.
