A Great Game.

Iowa Team Plays its Best and Crowds Are Enthusiastic.

Fighting from beginning to end, and thereby conclusively every inch of ground, the Scarlet and Black went in Iowa in defeat before the terrific attack of the Old Gold. A large and enthusiastic crowd of Iowa and Grinnell supporters witnessed the best game of the season. The day was cloudy but a light breeze kept the air cool and crisp.

At 2:30 the Iowa team followed by the cheers of the sellout stadium and loud applause.

Notes on Game.

Today was the first real genuine Iowa sport seen this year.

Grinnell kicked to Iowa 2:41.

Grinnell people know how to give a genuine college support to a team.

We'll romble never falls to stir the blood and urge the team.

The grand grand was nearly full when the game began.

"Hold them, Iowa," was a heard on every side.

Those colors looked fine in grand stand.

The play was all in Grinnell's terri- tory after the kick off until Iowa made a touchdown.

Iowa's line snares were too much for the Grinnellians.

Grinnell cheered hearty when Iowa made only three yards.

Days of Grinnell was the first man out.

When Iowa made gain, reference was given it away again.

The day was ideal, the clouds gave the black of Grinnell while the sea wind weakened them with the Old Gold Iowa.

PROF. HOUER LECTURE.

The second of the course of physical training lectures will be given Tuesday evening, at 7 o'clock, by Prof. Gilbert H. Horn, head of the department of animal biology. These lectures are held in Special lecture hall, Hall of Liberal Arts.

"Dr. House is a highly entertaining speaker, and his subject is one which is of much interest to the average student whose desire is to drop physical exercise as far as possible during his school course.

These weekly lectures are offered at seven o'clock, and last only half an hour, so that they interfere in no way with the rest of the evening.

CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

There will be no meeting of the Y. M. C. A. tomorrow afternoon as the address this meeting is a forcible display of its 64 squares. The day was ideal, the clouds were nearly full armory. DISCOVERED.

The following is the high school paper at Council Bluffs.

"During the time when the students of the Council Bluffs High school were enjoying their vacation a change took place in its principal- ship. Mr. C. E. Rice, our brilliant and versatile principal, received the offer of a most desirable position. After some hesitation this offer was accepted and Mr. Rice moved to Cleveland for a long term during which he so ably served the Council Bluffs High school."

FALLACIES AND ILLUSIONS.

Dr. Dodd Shows How Two Equals One and How the Council Bluffs Board Has 65 Squares.

"Does two equal one, and are things really what they seem? are some of the things Drs. Dodd answered last night. It was at the regular meeting of the Baconian club and the subject was the "Interesting on One Cent and Mathematical Curiosities."

After briefly stating his subject, and commenting on the fact that, to re- treat, the idea of a mathematical fallacy seems amazing, he stated that mathematical fallacies are result of following mathematical rules blind- ly, not comprehending their proper limitations. He then proceeded to a discussion of the interest on one cent for 100 years at four per cent. Several mathematical fallacies were discussed. A checkerboard was displayed with its 64 squares. A box was taken apart and the parts rearranged so that there appeared to be five rows of squares containing 11 squares each or 65 squares. This de- ception was due to a gap along the diagonal.

The algebraical proof that two equals one was presented and its fal- lacy revealed.

Several other cases were presented after which the audience departed impressed with the marvels of mathe- matics.

DO PLANTS FEEL?

An article by G. Clarke Nettal was cited in November "Review of Re- views." The writer, discussing the senses of plants, stated that whether plants feel is a question and that it would be difficult to make a case that does not appear to be one of the most interesting in the literary his­ tory of Norway. The book has been prepared specifically with a view to the needs of the beginners in this language and promises to fill a long felt want.

ABOUT INSPECTOR ENIGN.

The following is the high school paper at Council Bluffs.

"During the time when the stu­dents of the Council Bluffs High school were enjoying their vacation a change took place in its principal- ship. Mr. C. E. Rice, our brilliant and versatile principal, received the offer of a more desirable position. After some hesitation this offer was accepted and Mr. Rice moved to Cleveland for a long term during which he so ably served the Council Bluffs High school."

"The Daily Nebrookans says Nebro- kins is not in good shape to meet Ames next Saturday."

"In the light of these facts it seems impossible to refuse to acknowledge plants as sentient beings, or to deny that we are capable of experiencing sensations."

DISCOVERED THE JOKE "AFTER TAKING."

The innocent freshmen girl picked up a souvenir postal card last week, in the Liberal Arts building and, sup­posing it had been lost, she sent it to the owner. Then she woke up to find herself displaying the legend, "Man Whistled," to a crowd of sopho­ more youths who expressed them- selves ready to be sacrificed.
Handsome decorations.

Original designs for the Science Building will be out of usual order.

Probably one of the most novel, in structure, and at the same time, one of the most artistic pieces of exterior ornamentation in stone in the state of Iowa is that which is now being done on the new hall of natural sciences at the State University of Iowa. The most prominent sides, the south, east, and north fronts of the building will all be decorated by the carving of American animals on several window heads. In contradiction to the conventional designs so common these designs are being taken from nature, and when the work is completed the whole will make favorably the most comprehensive, instructive, and interesting design ever put on an American university building, and at the same time the cost of the work will be no more than would have been necessary to put on the structure the ordinary and conventional designs.

The idea for such a design originated with William T. Hornaday, director of the Zoological Gardens of Bronx Park, New York, and incidentally one of the largest contributors to the Sci. U. I. museum. The plan was first given expression on the buildings in that park, one of the most famous of which is the lion house, one of the most notable architectural designs in America.

On the south front of the building, already in place, appear a carnivore series of three groups. The center piece is the head of a panther, while to the observer's right and left respectively, are two foxes and an eagle. On the left hand appears the bear group with the head of a bear for a center, a raccoon to the left and two mink to the right. To the east is the sea lion group with the walrus for the center and sea lions on either side.

On the east side of the south wing of the building will appear, in three groups, the angulates representing the most characteristic hoofed animals of the north, central and south portions of the American continent. To the north will be the musk ox or the mountain sheep and mountain goat. The central group, representing mammals from the central portion of the continent will present the buffalo with the antelope and deer, while, completing the series on the south will be the llama, the only domestic mammal contributed by the western hemisphere; and the tapir and peccary.

On the same side of the north wing will appear a series of three groups of characteristic American birds. The central group, representing the birds of grey, will present the American hawk with pair of falcons and owls on either side. To one side of this group will be the game bird group having for its center the great American, turkey, the only bird which the American continent has given to domestication. On the sides will appear the grizzly bear and a convey of quals, Iowa's most abundant and characteristic game birds. The third group will be of the water birds with a pair of night herons for a center and wild ducks and sea gulls to the right and left.

Passing on around to the north front of the building, the observer will find as a center piece of three groups the head and front quarters of an alligator, the largest American reptile; while on the right and left respectively will be carved two coiled rattlers, our most deadly snake, and two iguanas, the largest true lizards of the continent. To one side of this group will be placed the turtle with four legs, our most characteristic hoofed animal and sea gulls to the right and left. Completing this series will be the fish group presenting the sting ray, the cod fish and the salmon, the last two representing the two most important food fishes of America.

The general outline for this scheme of ornamentation has been worked out by Professor C. C. Nutting, the director of the museum and head of the department of zoology, to whom the sculptor turned for suggestions. Several of the pieces are already in place and are beautifully done. Great crowds of visitors inspect them every Sunday when work is not in progress. The carving is being done by Mr. James Shearer of Kansas City, who is considered a master in this kind of decoration. In the past he has had charges of some of the finest pieces of ornamentation in this country and abroad, one of his excellent achievements being a bust of the present king of Egypt, done in the colonial secretary's office in Sydney, Australia, while R. E. W. was still the prince of Wales. The work already done has been commended by experts in art work and they pronounce it the best they have ever seen anywhere. The physical, Professor Gilbery contract will be completed early next summer.
