DENTISTS EXPRESS VIEWS ON "DUTIES" "What is the most important duty that the dentist owes his patient?" was the question asked several of the practitioners attending the annual dental clinic yesterday. The following responses were given:

Dr. C. W. Orton, a Toilet—Dr. Orton was asked what was the highest quality of service that he recommended for his patients in order to keep them well and healthy on all fronts. He said there is no particular order in which to give the two basic duties, as one cannot vitiate the other.

Dr. John M. Top—Dr. Top, a Toilet—Dr. Top, while in his own office practice, foretold the future of the profession and the responsibilities that will be placed upon him by the public. He mentioned the importance of the profession to the public and recommended that the dental profession should be made more aware of the responsibilities that come with being a dentist.

Dr. Albert W. Cook, a Toilet—Dr. Cook, while in his own office practice, spoke of the importance of the profession to the public and the duties that go along with being a dentist. He mentioned the importance of the profession to the public and the responsibilities that will be placed upon him by the public. The pride of the College of Dentistry.

The students of today, housed in modern buildings, especially equipped for the special courses of study designed to be given in the advanced dental curriculum of today, are well prepared in every way to carry on the successful professional lives that the students of today and tomorrow, housed in modern facilities, carried out especially equipped for the special courses of study designed to be given in the advanced dental curriculum of today. The nucleus of successful professional men that time and that best, as we know it today, must have led to making operations that have stood the test of time. If these conditions produced the nucleus of successful professional men in the past, it is a well-recognized fact that the nucleus of successful professional men have been the basis for the establishment of professional schools and modern clinics. A high school course of study is prepared for those who wish to enter professional schools, and three years of nine months each of dental study with courses of study—didactic, technical, and clinical—are planned so that each course dovetails into the other so that the completed course of study means a rounding out of a student in all the sciences and methods of the present time. He should be a scientific, practical man.

Certainly the advantages in dental education of today are much more than a hundred fold greater than we had less than twenty years ago.

SUCCESS OF CLINICS BEYOND EXPECTATIONS

DOCTOR HENRY MOWREY WRITES OF THEIR GREAT PROGRESS

Clinics have succeeded beyond hopes of originators—Sixth Annual Clinic Largest

(From Dr. Henry Mowrey)

When the faculty of the College of Dentistry of the University decided to hold an annual clinic in February, 1902, the most optimistic did not believe at that time that it would prove to be so much of a success.

Prior to this time the graduates of the college had held in regular reunion. They had gathered together at the various dental meetings, such as the state society, etc., to renew old acquaintances. It is a fact that quite a number always return in June to attend commencement as do other members of other colleges, but when offered an opportunity to attend a reunion and clinic all their own, at the old college, they responded with enthusiasm far beyond the expectations of the originators.

There are three factors that have tended to make these meetings a success.

First, the enthusiasm and loyalty of the alumni for the university as a whole and the College of Dentistry in particular.

Second, the fact that they can hear of the progress the profession is making by watching some of the best men operate and by examining the exhibits of the large manufacturing houses.

Third, the energy and push displayed by the Dental faculty.

All these things have made and are making this one of the best dental meetings held west of the Mississippi. The sixth annual clinic will be the largest ever held by this association and it is expected that the same movement will continue to increase in the future as they have in the past we will be compelled to have an overflow meeting in the new science building or have a new and adequate building of our own.

MAX CUMBER VELLO
of Early Dental College

A few days ago Dean A. N. Cummings, in an interview with a law associate, told of the early days of the College of Dentistry. When asked to compare the Dental College of today with that of twenty years ago, he replied, "It is almost impossible to rank a department of the little, struggling department of the same capacity with our helpful, up-to-date College of the present time."

In the latter part of the seventies, dental work was done in connexion with the College of Medicine. For a while a chair of dentistry was maintained in the College of Medicine, but the situation to industry as dentistry was very slight indeed. On July 15, 1893, the Board of Regents established in the University a College of Dentistry. The department was to be self-supporting except for clothing and a residence room, which was given to it in 1894. The first floor of the southeast corner of the old Medical building which stood just north of the present engineering workshops and over the Liberal Arts building. This department existed in the University in the spring of 1897.

In the latter part of the year 1898, the department was moved to the second story of the new building just south of the Dental Department, and the Dental College is now building the second floor of this building. The second story was used by the Dental College until such time as conditions, the fees having the north and the living the north half. The Dental College was originally formed for the dental and nursing purposes. It has the reputation of the firm which makes it. We know that College Brand and Stein Bloch Tailors will not turn out a garment that is not a credit to an artistic workman. It will be made of the carefully selected patterns and will fit perfectly or it won't be branded.

Additional and said: "Well, in some respects, conditions resemble those of the present. I remember the importance of the trained and untrained efforts were sent out, taking attention to the excellent facilities offered for dental research. I had the same diff'ry that the legislators called our attention to our state when we asked for money. The fire burned us on both sides. We wanted students and we wanted money. All the instruments and apparatus were furnished by members of the faculty. The Library, medical and otherwise, was furnished in the same manner. There was a medical museum, large of course, which was donated by drug houses and members of the faculty. The focus for anatomical study was in the basement, and to start with, the entire material for study consisted of the bones of the skull of an infant dug up in a paper cellar box."

"As to the requirements for entrance, they were few. In fact, anyone who could read and write was admitted to the college. To graduate a person had to be twenty-five years of age. I entered in school two years, taking two courses of lectures of six months each. The term usually lasted from October 1 to March 5. On spending the winter of D. R. B., any one might receive the appropriate diploma from the College of Medicine by attending in the same faculty's course of lectures, and vice versa."

"In regard to the faculty, they like the buildings, are not in service now. None of these are connected with the University at the present time, although Prof. Clapp still lives here. Most of the students of those early days are still living, but are scattered far and wide. The first class graduated last but eight members, which is a striking contrast to the large class now sent forth from this school."

"In reply to a question about what they prided he said, "They scraped off for the first time--then as now, except that there was less of it, and we serious minded professors know more about it."" the private colleges can rarely, it is said, supply the superior education which our students in pursue courses in the College of Medicine. This we require of all students, and their success is in large part due to the influence of the faculty. We are able tuUon to own tuition. The professor, as has been repeatedly said, is a real gain. The general University library, too, is accessible, and a number of our strongest students avail themselves of the opportunity to study outside the necessary textbook branches of the Dental course, these Liberal Arts studies that stand for general health and culture.

Horlick's Malted Milk Company - Racine, Wis.

The prospective member of any professional college should not forget that the permanence of an institution is a thing of importance. The University's College of Dentistry is permanent and its diploma is authoritative, so long as the practitioner has need of it. The search for certain private institutions in our own state that have opened their doors one day and closed them the next, is enough to excite a reasonable person of the advantage our college has in this respect.

A consideration which seems to me of vital concern to the dental student is his chance for personal supervision, on the part of the faculty, of his daily work. Above all, the student must be taught carefully. I have yet to see the dental colleges were in our largest universities, that gives more personal attention, either in the instruction or in the technical courses, to the progress of the individual student. To be true, we have not reached the ideal stage in this respect, but we are in sight of it.

The man who is looking toward the college of his large city needs to bear in mind the fact I have just emphasized. Furthermore, we should notice that in a community like Iowa City we secure a more desirable class of patients for choice, the cases themselves being so less interesting. The patient, too, is likely to select a practitioner by personal influence and as a practicing dentist, no slight circumstance in his preparation for his profession. When it comes to material, for student practice, we ask nothing of the large city, far from Iowa at the Dental College we have patients and to spare.

Before the points already mentioned, I would lay stress on what is too often neglected, the clinical side of the work. In certain of our courses this gets the attention it by right deserves. I am told that college In a failure whose instructional staff does not make a real effort to graduate men who are not only skillful dentists, but also physicians whose first purpose is to become helpful members of their communities where they live and their clientele, and we are making this effort at Iowa.

DENTAL STUDENT HAS MANY GOOD OUTSIDE ADVANTAGES

Can Obtain Inspiration in Other Departments.

The Department of Dentistry is one of the group of colleges which make up the University of Iowa. The Dentistry building itself is located on the campus with the other colleges, but an advantage is given the student who desires to interest himself in other departments and the use of the library for study, in the whole University. A better adjustment among the colleges, as well as a strongly defined unity, is evident among the student and faculty as a result of this close association, the University in every sense is an institution of the whole, not parts.

The course in Dentistry extends through three years of thirty-six weeks each, the parts are divided in consistent of eighteen weeks each semester into quarters of three weeks. The instruction in the Dental Office includes lectures, demonstrations, and recitations, and the actual performance of both laboratory and clinical work by the student under the supervision of the instructor.

Treat 25,000 Cases Annually.

The length of the course in the specialty of Dentistry leading to the degrees of D. D. S. is three years. The department is housed in its own building. In the operating rooms, which are well lighted and equipped, each student is provided with chair and cabinet. In the course of 15,000 cases have been treated successfully, with clinical mater- nal abundant and of a superior quality.
