Let us take stock and see if we have any particular reason to feel justified and jubilant in basking with their young welps and women who are engaged in industrial occupations, a majority of less than 10 per cent. In the first place, men are of us an enervate an amount of even more than 10 per cent and this grave and without effort. There are few of us at least ten hours per day. Furthermore we are engaged in pleasant work, our efforts are in this life work which will be intensely interesting and will at least give us a better remuneration than that of our teachers in industry. Then, too, we are in one of the best satisfactions of the country and work one of us is an integral part of the finest class of work and win the field.

Surely, no one can fully comprehend these blessings and satisfactorily feel both or pessimistic. We have our little personal troubles but when we stop to compare our advantages and with those of the great majority of our own sex, we ought to offer thanks that we have privileges of being citizens.
