The second football game of the fall season was played at Iowa City on October 30, 1910, between the University of Iowa and Morningside College. The game was marked by a number of serious accidents, with a total of six injuries reported during the course of play.

During the second period, Hyland kicked a field goal from 21 yards out, and the score remained 6-0 until the third quarter ended with a tied game. During the third quarter, however, Murphy, who had been injured in the first half, returned to the game and helped Iowa to a 25-0 victory. Murphy set a new record for touchdowns kicked in one game, with three field goals and four extra points.

The game was marked by good offensive play from both teams, with Hyland demonstrating his ability to throw the ball accurately. The game was a close one, with Iowa winning by a score of 25-0.

After the game, there was much discussion about the safety of college football, with some calling for its abolition. However, the game continued to be played, and the sport remained popular throughout the 20th century.

THE CIVILIAN PIANO

That Anyone Can Play

Yes, anyone can play the Civilian Piano and play it with such bravado and finish of the skilled musician.

No previous musical education or training is necessary; young and old, anybody and everybody can play. The Civilian Piano is a book of music which compiles the whole world of music.

Another beautiful feature of the Civilian Piano is that you can, with it, interpret music as you will, and you can produce the sound you like and as you like it. As your mood dictates the Civilian Piano will breathe for you music as soft and low as on evening air, or give you the clashing, thunderous majesty of a Wagner and Liszt.

Isn't the Civilian the piano for you? Why, you can't help it! You can't resist it! You can't play it, and you can't refuse it.
