Many Posters at Oakdale

At present there are 111 patients at the Oakdale sanitarium, which is the largest in the history of that institution. This does not mean that the prevalence of tuberculosis is greater but that the enlarged facilities of the sanitarium have facilitated a larger number of patients. It also means that the public is coming to recognize that last, but not least, the treatment of tuberculosis is the most successful.
STATE TUBERCULOSIS EXPERT TALKS TO ECONOMIC CLASSES

Dr. Kerfey Gives Some Assembling
Paris About Housing

Yesterday morning Dr. A. B. Kerfey, the tuberculosis expert, gave several talks before the students of the department of economics, also talking to the freshmen and the press in commercial geography. He emphasized throughout his lectures the great economic loss of the people that far and also emphasized the social incentive that these people that have the dread disease and are a burden on the community or on their relatives.

In regard to the kind of environment that was beneficial to the recovery of tuberculosis he said that there is not the climate as was popularly supposed but the altitude that brought the good to the sufferer. In the higher altitude, whether here in Iowa or in the mountains of Colorado, the same benefit was obtained; the pure air of the altitudes in terms of the wasted tissues that the victim of the white plague would be saved.

A great line to the people in general, although they do not, as a rule, recognize it, is the amount that a person who dies from inheritance might have earned had he lived. He showed that all of those who die of tuberculosis, the average life that was day that individuals was 28.15 years. If we were compendious, the amount that a man would earn if he had lived those thirty years longer would bring an astronomical total. In 1919 the economic loss through this very matter was $3,440,000.

The most successful treatment of this disease is the open-air treatment. This is that which is followed entirely at Oakdale. The climate is not hereditary but the tendency to the disease is passed from generation to generation. It is the environment and not the parentage that control the communities of tuberculosis.

He views it with patronization, daughter of Arthur Ballough, who married the twin sister of Hamilton's wife.

The setting of the play are hop staged near Anadale in Indiana, near the Indians muster, made famous to the "House of a Thousand Candles." In fact, the play is described as "a near neighbor to "The House of a Thousand Candles."

"Beautied at Redgate" in book form has been awarded one of the largest sales given any work of re- cent fiction, and as a play is proving the popular success of the present season.

"The Gambler" is "The Gambler," which comes to the Cedar Rapids, March 21, Charles Klein achieved his greatest success. The play gives the audience every variety until the final fall of the curtain. Mr. Klein has handled an everyday financial incident with strength and originality and there is surely a superb word spoken in the entire drama. But, in ad- dition to its excellence of construction and the vivaciously the plot, it is presented by an unusually strong company.
