HISTORICAL SOCIETY MEETS MAINE MEMORIAL

There has just been placed in the hands of the Maine Historical Society a bronze tablet which bears the inscription of the Pilgrim chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The tablet is a memorial of the United States battleship Maine, which was destroyed in Havana harbor on Feb. 15, 1898, and revered by the government of the United States in 1912. The memorial is cast from metal secured from the ruins of the vessel. From the recovered metal eight hundred tablets of the same design were ordered cast by the department of the navy, and are being distributed to various military organizations throughout the United States. Only two of the tablets have thus far been organized to institutions in Iowa— one to the Pilgrim chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, located in the public library at Fort Madison; the other to the Pilgrim chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution at Des Moines, the city present to the State Historical Society of Iowa. The tablet is one in the series published by Karl Klas, while the engraving is the work of J. H. New York City.

United States having a course in museum building; and this has attracted no little attention from the national association. "To show their appreciation of Professor Dill's unusual work, the association passed the following resolution: "The memory of trained and competent men and women as employees in museum work has long been realized by the American association of museums. "The dentists of the association hear, with great satisfaction, of the establishment of a course in the state university of Iowa for the training of such employees. Therefore, be it resolved: "That the American association of museums, in annual meeting assembled, commends this work and encourages its members, their employment, cooperation and patronage." The class in museum training numbers twenty students. One young man, who was graduated in this work a year ago, now holds the position of director of university exhibits at Seattle, Washington. There are at present, places waiting for these graduates in this new field of work.
