PARLIAMENTARY LAW STUDENTS PREPARE FOR FUTURE

While Congress is deliberating and state legislatures are assembling, future statesmen will have a battle of a course at the University of Iowa. The course is based upon the assumption that these university students will one day lead the people in their legislative and state assembly work. The knowledge obtained in the course will be of a common good and for the prevention of actions of the opposite kind.

The parliamentary law class is an illustration of the tendency of modern education toward instruction which is of direct and practical value at the same time that it is of educational value. Under supervision of the instructor, Dr. O. W. Patten, the students have organized a mock parliament, with majority and minority factions. It has its officers and business is conducted in every meeting according to the rules of procedure laid down in the rules and the manual.'

RAN READING NEARLY AS EFFICIENT AS SLOW

The rapid reader understands and remembers what he reads approximately as well as the slow reader. This is the conclusion that Dr. Vivian King of the college of education reached from tests made upon freshmen university students. The person who reads fast naturally has a distinct advantage over the person who naturally reads slowly.

One must work much more hard and comprehensively as well. Person reading rapidly without regard to their natural tendency are likely to get the best and remember them as well as vision so much.
