RRAILROADS MAY BE PROHIBITED FROM CARRYING LIQUOR

WHY NOT?

Railroad companies should be barred from handling liquor. The proposal is designed to prevent the transportation of intoxicating beverages. The plan would also help to reduce crime and public drunkenness. The measure has been introduced into Congress by Representative John B. Anderson of Illinois.

TWO PROMINENT—ONE MOVIE
ONE MEMORIAL—ONE MORAL

Once upon a time two lieutenants attended a musical given by a university organization. All through the program they talked and flirted—internally.
When it was over and they were going home—respectfully, they said to each other that on the mirror they would write something different.

When the evening of the next day arrived they met an arranged and called forth in the search of diversion.
The furtive passages of a brand attired them—"him" said there: "Who is it that we will go—this is just the place that we have been looking for—"

So they entered and seated themselves upon a front seat. From the "back show" threw the bright light on his arms and the show began. Charlie Chaplin diddled bridge—sometimes successfully and sometimes unsuccessfully.

Annette Kellermans did the Jack Halle stunt from a 200 foot cliff. Douglas Fairbanks leaped from a three-story building into a street, cutting as usual, an unknown gap jumped vitality from a speeding pas senger train into the rear of an automobile which was going at least ninety-five miles an hour, and a little girl acrobat danced a tango upon a railroad switch. Too many such notices were shown forth upon that screen.

When the show was over the fresh new words with leaning colloquistic
"We will never attend immoral or lectures again"—they said, "It is love that we will cut—our isn't the same—"

CADETS OFFICERED FIRST ARMS FOR ENGLAND—METH

(Continued from page 15) Of these already appointed who were considered the men themselves took care of by refusing to follow them. Many of these poorer officers came from the same class as social rank and men themselves, and the latter would not tolerate having one of their own in their office. "It isn't uncommon to see men following an eight-year-old officer, and the men in the rear predict a younger officer or one of their own class," Captain Smith said.

The result of this attitude is the placing of the commissions in most instances in the hands of men from the higher social classes, many of whom are only thirty or thirty-five years of age. Captain Smith believes that this would be less discouraging if one kind of man could be found to fill any kind of office. Captain Smith has used the slogan "Join the Army" as the beginning of a campaign to fill these gaps. The officers and men are known, says Captain Smith, in the bond of friendship formed in the war that is to believe that he will put an end to the existing question of the bond. The situation is mutual respect and understanding formed in the trenches will bring the different kinds of men together and make possible agreements never before thought of and with which they will come England's industrial peace.
