SHARING BLOOD is one of our metropolitan family's editorial writer points out the inequities suffered by great many of our country because of our popular custom of shaking hands. Outlining this point, he tells of George Washington's refusal to shake hands with the multitude, and the criticism aimed at him because of his stand. Since the time of our first chief executive, all presidents have braved the critical Bible and as a consequence, many have had to carry their right hand in a sling for days after the operation.

During those opening days of the University, filled with introductions and greeting of old friends, the handling of the clad hand is much in evidence. What will the faculty members do without the chance to have the brothers group their prospecs warmly by the hand? Because of the brevity of the reaching season, judgment of many men rests on the manner of their handshake. A week or firm grip seems to imply similar qualities of character.

Although campus politics is not quite as strenuous as that of the country at large, handshaking is an important part of its play. Candidates that have the largest number of handshaking acquaintances seem to have the biggest chance for election to office. What would the student politicians do without the charm of the handshake?

When returning to the University, the time a fellow-student says he's glad to get back in when he makes a grab for an old friend's hand. What an enervy and opipions place the University would seem if we came back to find not a soul with whom we could shake hands.

So in spite of the inconvenience, the custom of shaking hands from our daily life would be removing one of the greatest promoters of unions and good feeling—Ohio State Lantern.

"It is not always what a man knows, but what he knows where to get, that makes him an intellectual."
—Sitting Moravia.

For Instance Henry Ford.

Now that all the securities and institutions have received an affirmative answer in their bids, that makes it unanimous.

Some one has suggested that the liberal arts man wear Derby, the foreman below to cover round heads.

Did anyone ever hear of professional student going on a strike?

MEN REPORTING FOR CROSS COUNTRY WORK

Coach Watson believes Hawkeyes Will Have Creek Squad After Season Opens.

That the Hawkeyes are to have a cross country team is in the opinion of Jack Watson, the veteran trainer, who will have charge of that department of athletics this year. Ten men reported to the trainer Thursday and he hopes to have a few more purchasers to train and outline the course.

Several candidates are on the football squad and will be available until after the season closes. Kruse, the engineering team.
