BEkker Men Can Develop Strong Personality

Makes Many Allusions

Speaks of the value of personality as recognized in the past and necessary to development

That man's personality is the highest individuality. It was only one of the many striking statements of the day. Dr. U. B. Beaver, who is University professor of the subject and gave the address last Thursday, said:

"The student is interested in wars, the stock market, the weather. The student is interested in personalities. Each personality is an individuality. With the individuality, with personality, comes the person of the world."
