The Master of Man

By SIR HALL CAIN, K. B. E.

For four years Hall Crewe's path was leading him to the center of the drama of the country. For four years he had been considered the equal of the great man who had been called "The Master." But now, he is called the "Master of Men." Hall Crewe's career is complete, and he is now the master of the country. A great literary hokum of 1130 pages in Hearst's 3 March.

Also in Hearst's for March

Two other great stories of April. "Imagery of Dooms" by R. L. Some other exciting and thrilling stories in this month's Hearst's. Ask your newsdealer.

What's This??

IOWA OFFICE EQUIPMENT COMPANY has a shipment of brand new Underwood Typewriters for rent to the students. It is the only place in the State where you can rent new Underwoods. You need not be without a typewriter any longer if you'll drop in and see what we have to rent to our students. It is a wonderful year of the so-called "Junior Prom." Hoping that this statement

Gviol in the department, who has charge of coaching the players, announced that no one would be admitted to the final drill.

"THE HONOR SYSTEM"

The following opinion recently appeared in the Ohio State Lantern in regard to the Honor System at Ohio State University:

"Incapacitated Honor System:"

The Editor of the Lantern, among the vices that reader and manually disagreeable to one another, is its inability to avoid inflicting a personal eccentricity upon others with whom we are associated. To this fact is due our own guilt forthwith and can only beg your indulgence while I go on with a white and bear a few things which I think should be said in regard to the traditional Honor System at the University.

First, it is a lie. It is not necessary to go into a biological discussion of the descent of the race nor to write a psycho-analytical treatise on mental attributes to show beyond question that we, as students, possess an average amount of human frailty, that on the whole we are governed by laws of nature that is no way give predominance to a code of highly developed morals; and that however much we do probe the essence of dishonesty among us, it is certain and all attempts to explore it are direct means of increasing its propagation. An examination is one of the many struggles for existence with which we are constantly engaged; it comes out victory in the ultimate accomplishment, and in accomplishing that end instrument and morality are secondary.

Second, it is not fair to the student at large. There are some students, many students, who have addressed efficiently for into the pages of elegance and falsehood to control a possible instructive impulse to employ means to win, I. e. to cheat. Grades are undoubtedly valued by college. Thus, in a system of grading as that used in our university, the honest student will have a relatively junior standing graded on bases of average, amounting that no student scores a perfect, 100 percent grade, which, I believe, is rare in the particular examination.

Third, it is impossible to carry any business transaction that is not protected by the state's law? Certainly not; business has long ago recognized man's capabilities for dishonesty. The same situation is present in our colleges; I support my own personal observation during the past two years. To be frankly judicious, every student should be considered a suspect. Cheating is the privilege of the clever student who learns the character of his university in favor of the dishonest element of this class.

Fourth, it is based on the maxim, "the end justifies the means." Let the following statement be clearly understood: if a code of examination rules have no exactions in terms which it is not possible to meet students in alternate seats; place a "guard" for every junior who would be able to gather a universal respect for honesty and
